2824 bet Mr. Cooper yearing for appear as an western New YOYK. It was not, however, this likeli that Mr. Cooper ventured to appear as an author. Then he produced his "Precaution," which was not well received; but which, being shortly afterwards succeeded by his "Spy," it may be presumed gave him courage to proceed in the style of novel-writing. This second production was a decided success, and led the way to a long list of fictions, which it would occupy to a long list of nectons, when he would occur a considerable space even to name. Among them we may specify his "Pioneers," and his "Pilot," "The Last of the Mohicans," "Lionel Lincoln," "The Red Rover," and "The Water-witch," as sufficiently indicating the characteristics of his genius. B. at Burlington, New Jersey, 1789; B. at Cooperstown, 1851.—Cooper wrote in other paths besides those of the imagiwrote in other pains bestera mose of Distinguished American Naval Officers," "Sketches of Switzerland," "Gleanings in Europe," and several other works. Many of his stories have been translated both into German and French; and it is also affirmed that some of them are to be found even in one or more of the Oriental

Cooper, Thomas Sydney, began life as a scene-painter in the theatre at Canterbury, and, in 1823, went to London to enter the Royal Academy, but he was forced to return to the former town, and there he remained, giving instructions in drawing, till 1827. In that year he went to Holland, and there, under the snimal-painter Verboeckhoven, made that particular branch of art the subject of his ardent study. In 1831 he returned to England, and adopted animal-painting as his special branch. In 1833 he exhibited his first picture branch. In 1853 he exhibited his hirst picture in the gallery of the Society of Bettish Artists, and from that time he steadily advanced in fame and fortune. In 1845 he was chosen an associate of the Royal Academy, and may be pronounced one of the finest cattle-painters. England has produced. B. at Canterbury, Coore, Sir Eyre, koot, an English general, who entered the army at an early age, and fought against the followers of Charles Stuart in 1745. In 1754 he went to India, where he distinguished himself in many important actions, particularly at the siege of Pondicherry. On account of his conduct there, the directors of the Hon. East India Company presented him with a diamond-hilted sword. In 1769 he was made commanderin-chief of the Company's forces; but quitted Madras at the end of the following year, and returned to England, where he was appointed governor of Fort St. George, and made knight governor of Fort St. George, and made knight of the Bath. In 1781 he proceeded again to India as commander-in-chief, and, at the head of 10,000 men, defeated Hyder All, whose force numbered 150,000. n. in Ireland, 1728; p. at Madras, in 1783.—There is a fine monument to his memory in Westminster Abbey.

COPE. Sir John, kope, an English general, best known in connexion with the total defeat the royal army under his command sustained from the rebels under Prince Charles Edward Stuart. at Prestonpans, near Edinburgh, on September 21, 1745. Cope allowed himself to be completely surprised by the Highlanders, and, according to popular tradition, rather prematurely quitted the field, never drawing rein till he reached Berwickupon-Tweed, where he was the first to announce his own defeat. His conduct on the occasion was mercilessly, and perhaps somewhat unfairly, ridiculed by the Jacobite writers of the time.

particularly in the song beginning,
"Hey, Johnny Cope, are ye waking yet?"
Core, Charles West, R.A., an English artist, who, in 1943, was one of the three successwho, in 1845, was one of the infree success-ful competitors for the prizes offered by the Royal Commission of the Fine Arts in cartoons. His subject was "The First Trial by Jury." The freeco competition of the following year brought him forward with "The Meeting of Jacob and Rachel," which caused him to be selected to paint one of the six frescoes for the House of Lords. The subject which he chose for this was "Edward III. conferring the Order of the Garter on the Black Prince." For the or one Garter on the Black Prince." For the same building he afterwards executed "Prince Henry's Submission to the Law," and "Grischlar's First Trial," deemed his masterpiece in fresco. In 1843 he was elected an A.R.A., and in 1843 a R.A. He was a frequent exhibitor at the Royal Academy, and hebb. in fractions of the same and th and in 1848 a R.A. He was a frequent exhibitor at the Royal Academy, and, both in imaginative and historical painting, reached a high standard of excellence. His works are ngn standard of extended. Its works are numerous; among which the principal are— "The Last Days of Cardinal Wolsey," painted for Prince Albert; "Lear and Cordolia;" "Othello relating his Adventures;" and "The Children of Charles I. in Carisbrook Castle." at Leeds, 1811., at Leeds, 1811.

COPERNICUS, COPERNIK, or ZEPERNIC, as he has been differently called, Nicholas, ko-perni-kus, was a famous Prussian astronomer, whose family was noble, and whose uncle was bishop of Warmia. He was educated at Cracow, where he became a doctor of medicine. He afterwards went to Italy, and in 1500 obtained a professorship of mathematics at Rome. He subsequently returned to his native country, where he became a canon in the church of where he became a canon in the church of Framehurg. Here he passed the remainder of his days a quiet and grave man, deeply immersed in astronomical researches, whilst healing the poor by his medical knowledge, and comforting them by his ecclesiastical duties. The result of his solitary vigils appeared in his great work seritide. "De Revolutionibus Orbium Geiestium," which overturned the Ptolemaic system of astronomy, and established for himself an enduring fame. This system makes the sun the "centrum mundi," round which the earth and other planets revolve. The MS. of his great work remained in his possession some years before he would publish it. At length he gave it to the world, and only lived to see a printed copy of it a few hours before his death. B. at Thorn, in Prussia, 1473; p. 1543, and was buried in the cathedral to which he belonged.

Copleston, Edward, D.D., kop'-el-ston, bishop of Llandaff, was the son of the rector of Offwell, Devonshire, and was educated at Oxford, He became fellow of Oriel College in 1795; in 1802 he succeeded Hurdis as professor of poetry; in 1810-11 he vindicated the university from some attacks made upon it in the "Edinfrom some attacks made upon it in the "Edin-burgh Review;" in 1814 he was elected provost of Oriel College; was appointed dean of the ter in 1826; and in 1827 became the successor of in 1826; and in 1827 became the since-ser of Dr. Charles Summer in the see of Llandad. Among other works he was author of an Inquiry into the Doctrines of Necessity and Predestination; "Predectiones Academice;" an "Essay on Agriculture;" all of which are distinguished for learning, elegance of diction, and purity of taste. B. 1776; D. 1849.

Copley

COPLEY, Sir John Singleton, kop'-ley, a dis-tinguished artist, born in America, but claimed by Ireland as a native, from his first "seeing the light" almost immediately after the arrival of his parents, who were from Ireland, in the United States. By natural impulse he became a painter, and rose to camenee in his profession on both sides of the Atlantic, before he had visited either England or Italy. In 1775, however, he arrived in London, and took up his residance in George-street, Hanover-square. During the previous year he had visited both England and Italy, and had now determined to settle in the former. In 1777 he became an associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1783 a member. He devoted much of his artention to illustrations of history, and his "Death of Lord Chatham" is, perhaps, his best work. B. at Boston, United States, 1787; D. 1815.—He was the father of the venerable Lord Lyndhurst. CORAM, Thomas, Captain, Roy-äm, an English philanthropist, who instituted the London Foundling Hospital, an establishment founded he had visited either England or Italy. In 1775, minintriopist, who instituted the London Foundling Hospital an establishment founded for the maintenance and education of exposed and deserted children. He was bred to the sea, in the merchant service, and spent all that he had on this and other benevulent schemes, so that in his old age he was obliged to be supported by the contributions of several noble atrons, among whom was Frederick, prince of Wales. B. 1668; D. in London, 1751, and was buried in the Foundling Hospital, on the gate of which there is a statue of him.

CORBET, Richard, kor'-bet, an English prelate, Conbert, Richard, kor-bet, an English Prelate, but better known for his poems, mostly of a humorous and satirical character, which were first printed in 1647, under the title of "Poelica Stromata," and have since been several times reprinted. Many of them are satires on the Puritans, of whom Corbet was a decided, though not vindictive opponent. He was the son of a rich gardener at Ewell, in Surrey, was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, of which he became dean; was successively hishop of Oxford and Norwich; and was noted in his day for the eccentric but genial tone of his mind, B. 1582; D. 1635.

CORBOULD, Edward Henry, kor'-boold, a skilful artist in water colours, and has also been successful in oil-painting. His themes are been successful in oil-painting. His themes are historical incidents, which he treats more in a mistorical infections, which he treats note in a romantic than in a realistic style. In 1833 he sent in a cartoon for the decoration of the Palace at Westminster, and obtained a prize of £100 under the second award. He was, in earlier life, a successful illustrator of books, and earlier lile, a successful illustrator of books, and also painted well in fresco. The subjects of some of his pictures are—"The Plague of London;" "The Assembling of the Canterbury Pligrims at the Taherd Inn, Southwark; "The Baptism of Ehelbert;" and a seeme from Temyson's "Morte d'Arburt." In 1815.
CORDAY D'AMMANS, Marie Anne Charlotte.

Coriolanus

army, who was denounced by Marat, and caused army, who was denomined by Sharm, and catagore to be assassinated. This event animated Charlotte with a passon for vengeance Marat, whom she regarded as the oppressor of durate, whom her regarded at the oppressor of her country. She hastened to Pars, and on being, after some difficulty, admitted to his pre-sence, stabled him to the heart, July 13, 1793, Far from attempting to escape, she the fact, and was condemned to suffer death and was accordingly guillotined on July 17, 1793. B. near Seez, 1703.—This circumstance was attended by another equally extraordinary. As she was being conducted to the scaffold, a deputy of the city of Mayence, named Adam Lux, was so transported with admiration of her beauty and heroism, that he hastened to the tribunal, and demanded to suffer death in her stead. This, however, was not conceded to him; but he was also condemned and executed with the same instrument.

CORMENIN, Louis-Marie de la Haye, Viscount de, kor'-me-na, a distinguished French political writer, was at the age of twenty-two called by Napoleon I. to the council of state, was made a baron by Louis XVIII., and a viscount by Charles X. He was a member of the chamber from 1828 to 1846, and in all these positions distinguished himself as much by the originality of his genius as by independence of character. Cormenin was by profession an advocate: in commin was by profession an adverage; in politics he was opposed to every party in turn in which egotism, privilege, or administrative rapacity, was to be resisted; but the cause of political and social progress had no more carnest defender than he. He wrote the best treatise on administrative law yet published in France; and under the nom-de-plume of "Timon," puland under the non-ite-plane of "Himon," pull-lished a vast number of pamphlets on almost every political topic of importance that had occupied attention in France during many years. His "Book of Parliamentary Orators" is hold in high esteem by all thinking Fron-men; and great powers of logic, wit, and sound knowledge rendered him one of the most powerful writers of his day. M. Commenin was in 1955 added by imperial ordinance to the In-stitute, as member of the administrative section of the Academy of the Medical Sciences. E. at Paris, 1788.

CORELLY, Arcangelo, ko-rail-le, called by his countrymen "the divine," was an Italian musical countrymen the dware, was a transmission composer, whose greatest work is his "Concerti Grossi," or twelve concertors. E. at Fusignano, 1653, D. at Rome, 1713.—As a violinist, he was unrivalled, and his compositions for that instrument are regarded as of standard excellence.

CORIOLANUS, kor'-i-o-lai'-nus, the surname of C. Marcius, from his victory at Corioli. His story, as given by the Roman historians, is re-garded as a fiction by Niebuhr, who thinks it garded as a fiction by Niebuln, who thinks it ought to be excluded from history. It is stated, however, that the consulship, which he had solicited, was refused him, he having rendered himself distasteful to the people on account of his haughty character. He afterwards proposed measures hostile to the interests of the people, Ellerims at the Tahard Inn, Sonthwark; "The and opposed the grantinus distribution of the Baptism of Ethelbert;" and a seene from the Cornwist of the Cornwist of the Cornwist of Tempson's "Morte d'Arthur." z. 1815. by Gelo, king of Stelly Eager for reasonable, Cornwist of America, Marie Anne Charlotte, Cornianus offered his services to the Volsel, and Earl Cornwist of the Cornwis

Corneille Cornero

Roman territory, and laying siege to the "Eternal daughter of Metellus Scipio, accompanied her City" itself. The inhabitants, terrified, sent husband in his slight after the battle of Pharseveral embassies to him; but he was cleat to all salia, and saw him measured before her cyes in their entreaties. He was about to deliver the the harbour of Alexandria. (See PORFEY.) assault, when Veturia, his mother, followed by assault, when Veturia, his mother, followed by his wife and a train of Roman women, arrived at his camp, to supplicate him to pause. Con-quered by their tears, Coriolanus consented to raise the siege. He was assassimated some little time after, about 488 s.c., by the Volso; although, according to others, he lived to an advanced age.—Shakspeare and other poets have dramatized his life.

Connential, Peter, kop-nai, an eminent
French dramatist, who was brought up to the bar, for which his genius was entirely unsuited. bar, for which his genius was entirely unsurted.

Accordingly, he quitted it, and commenced writing for the stage. His first comedy.

"Melite," was produced in 1629, and was roll-lowed by "Clitandre," "La Veuve," "La Galerie du Palais," and "La Place Royale," when, in 1637, appeared his "Gd," founded on the "Gd" of Grillen de Castro, of Spain. This surfaces are stilled the Deriviews with onthe performance filled the Parisians with enthusiasm. It carried their conceptions into new regions of dramatic history, and its author became "Le Grand Corneille," Whatever gratification this might bring to the vanity of the author, it was not quite universal. He had heen so unfortunate as to offend the Cardinal Richelicu, who had himself some poetical pre-tensions, and who, as the founder of the French Academy, read his tensions, and who, as the former of the Fried Academy, used his influence in endeavouring to abate the public admiration. One of the members of that learned body, therefore, wrote an elaborate critique on the "Cid," hinting at a deficiency of inventive genius in Corneille, seeing that he had borrowed the plan of his drama from a Spaniard. Such an insinuof his drama from a Spaniard. Site an hishid-ation was too damaging to be taken with indif-ference by Corneille, who set to work and produced his "Horace," and his "Cinna," which are in themselves sufficient to establish a claim are in themselves sumeent to establish a claim to ingenious originality. In 1840 appeared his "Polyenete," which was succeeded by "La Morte de Pompée," "Le Menteur," and several others; none of which, however, nearly approached the "Cili." Nay, they betokened an evident declension of genius, and, in 1663, his "Pertharite" decidedly proclaimed him a fallen star. This disgusted him with the stage, and he turned his attention to other kinds of poetical composition. His success in these, however, was not great, and he returned to the drama. In 1659 he produced his "Œdipe," and conti-In 1659 he produced his "Gidpe," and conti-nued to write, but with no steady success. In 1672 his "Pulchéric" appeared, and, in 1674, his "Suréna;" but he had already ceased to be popular. B. at Rouen, 1606; D. at Paris, 1684. -For thirty-seven years he was a member of the Academy.

Cornellle, Thomas, brother of the above, was also a poet, a member of the French Aca-demy, and of that of Inscriptions. He wrote no fewer than forty-two pieces, which, with the exception of "Ariane" and "Le Comte d'Essex," have all passed into oblivion. Of this number. nave au passed into oblivion. Of this number, however, many met with the greatest success in their day. They were published, with those of his brother, in 1738, in 11 vols. 12mo. n. 1262; no. 1702.—Besides his plays, he wrote a "Dictionary of Arts," in 2 vols. folio, and a "Geographical and Historical Dictionary," in 3 vols. folio.

the harbour of Alexandria. (See Pompex.)— The mother of the Gracchi, and daughter of Scipio Africanus. She directed the education of her son, and was greatly admired for her virtues. When a Campanian lady once made a show of her jewels at Cornelia's house, and en-treated her to favour her with a sight of her own, Cornelia produced her two sons, saying, "These are the only jewels of which I can boast." In her lifetime, a statue was raised to her, with this inscription, "To Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi." Lived in the 2nd century B.C. (See GRACCHUS.)—The daughter of Cinna. (See CESAE, JULIUS.)

CORNELIUS, Peter von, kor-nai'-le-oos, an eminent German artist, who became a painter by choice, and who, in his nineteenth year, was enchoice, and who, in his mineteenth year, was engaged to ornament, with figures in chiaroseuro, the eupola of the old church of Neuss, near Dusseldorf. After this, he proceeded to Frankfort, where he executed a series of designs illustrative of the "Pausi" of Goothe, to whom the engravings were dedicated. His reputation was now fast rising, when he proceeded to Rome, where he united himself with several kindred spirits, and commanded studying with a view to conand commenced studying with a view to found a new school of German art. To accomplish this, fresco was the style adopted, and Cornelius was commissioned to paint the walls of the villa of Bartholdy, the Prussian consul-general. The subjects he chose were, "Joseph Recognising his Brethren," and "Joseph Interpreting the Dream of Pharaoh's Chief Butler," which were a decided success, and excited general admira-tion. He now rose higher and higher in his profession, and left Rome, 1819. At Dusseldorf. he remodelled the academy, and then had two spacious halls assigned him to paint, in the Clyptothek at Munich. In one of these—the Hall of Heroes—he represented, in colossal proportions, the leading events of the "Iliad," in the other—the Hall of the Gods—he symbolized the Greeian mythology. These works were not completed till 1830, and are conceived and executed with such a grandeur of effect as to command universal homage. He became director of the Munich Academy, which, under him, rose to be a great school of art. B. at Dusseldorf, 1787. D. 1867. CORNERO, or CORNERO, Louis, kor-nar'-o, a Venetian nobleman, remarkable for protracting regimen. In his youth he lived freely, which brought him into a bad state of health. On this, he formed the resolution of confining himself to twelve ounces of food and fourteen of wine daily; by which means, with exercise, he acquired a vigorous constitution. The system he practised, included spare and simple diet, avoidance of heat and cold, late hours, sexual indulgences, and over-fatigue. It required gen-tle and pleasing excitements, occasional riding on horseback, field sports, and the hearing of music. All violent passions were to be re-strained or repressed, and no indulgence allowed y met with an greatest success in strained or repressed, and no inculgence allowed her were published, with those of to enry, haterd, ambitum, jealonsy, and the like.

to enry, haterd, ambitum, jealonsy, and the like.

The result of his plan was perfect health, cherides his plany, he wrote a "Dio ful spirits, and long like. At an advanced ago its," in 2 vols. folio, and a "Geo-he wrote his popular book on "Health and Long Historical Dioticionary," in 3 vols. Life, "which has been translated into most languages; he also wrote a "Treatise on Waters." kor-ne'-le-c, wife of Pompoy, and particularly the laguness about Venideer. It also the particularly the laguness about Venideer.

CORNEILLE, PETER.

CRABBE, GEORGE.

COWLEY, ABRAHAM.

CROMWELL, OLIVER.

COWPER, WILLIAM.

Venice, 1463; p. at Padua, 1566. His wife, who the presence of Venus," an "Ecce Home," "La survived him, lived to about the same age.— Vierge au Panier," and "Christ's Agony in the The conclusion to be drawn from Cornaro's book on health is, that all men, or most of them, shorten their lives by over-eating and drinking.

CORNWALLIS, Charles Mann, marquis of, korn'wal-lis, entered the army at a very early age, and in 1758 was made a captain in the light inand in 1735 was hade a captain in the light in-fantry. Three years afterwards he was aide-de-camp to the marquis of Granby, whom he accompanied in Germany till the end of the war. In 1761 he was promoted to the rank of lieuteon the death of his father, to the title of Earl Cornwallis. On the breaking out of the American war, he was ordered to embark for that country, where he displayed great military ta-lents, highly distinguishing himself at the battle of Brandywine and the reduction of Charles-He won the battles of Camden and Guildford, but in 1781 was forced to surrender at York Town to the united American and French army, in consequence, he declared, of the inefficient support he received from Sir Henry Clinton. Soon after this, he returned to England. In 1786, the affairs of British India wearing a critical aspect, he was appointed governor of Bengal, where, in December, 1790, he took Bangalore. This success he followed up by defeating Tippoo Saib, who delivered to his lordship his two sons as hostages. Having successfully brought this war to a close, he returned to England, was created a marquis, and ap-pointed master-general of the ordnance. In 1798 he was made lord-lieutenant of Ireland, where he quelled an insurrection, defeated an invading French force, and succeeded in effecting the important measure of a union between ing the important measure of a union between the two kingdoms. In 1801 his lord-lieutenancy expired, when he was employed as minister plenipotentiary in France; in which capacity he signed the preliminary treaty of the peace of Amiens. In 1804 he accepted the governor-generalship of India, where, soon after his arrival, he fell ill of a fever, on his march to join the army at Ghazepore, in the province of Benares. B. 1738; p. 1805.—Napoleon had a high opinion of the abilities and honesty of Cornwallis. He was a good soldier and states. Cornwallis. He was a good soldier and states-man, and a man of undoubted integrity.

Correggio, kor-rai-dje-2, a celebrated Italian painter, whose real name was Antonio Allegri, but called Correggio from having been born in the town of that name. His life is shrouded in obscurity. The little that is known of him seems to be rather the offspring of conjecture, eked out with imaginary probabilities, than facts observed that the control of the tained as the result of ascertained data. not known by whom he was instructed in his art; but Bianchi, Bartolotto, Lombardi, his uncle Lorenzo, and Mantegna, have all been named as his teachers. We believe that he was numer as instements. We collect that he was mostly self-taught, seeing that he seems never to have lived at Rome. His manner, however, combines grandeur of design with sweetness and gracefulness of execution. It is said that he married, in 1520, a lady of a Mantuan family, ne married, in 1820, a lauy of a mandata family, whose name was Girolana Merlini. She is the original in the picture of his Holy Family, "La Zingarella." None have excelled him in the delicacy of his flesh-colouring; and his "Penitent Magdalen" is affirmed to be the most tens angulatin a same to be the most contained as the most contain Garden." The first two, in 1834, were purchased by the British Government from the marquis of by the british tovernment from the marques of Londonderry for £10,000. B. at Correggio, 1494; D. 1534, and was buried in the church of St. Francis, at Correggio.

CORT, Corpelius, kort, a famous engraver, was a native of Holland. In 1500 he went to Italy, and was received into the house of Titian, at Venice, and engraved several of that master's pictures. He ultimately settled in Rome, where he established a school for teaching engraving, and is said to have given lessons to Agostino and is said to have given lessons to Agosino Caracci, which, however, is doubted. Cort engraved upwards of 150 pictures, among which are specimens of Raffaelle, Caravaggio, Correggio, Michael Angelo, and other eminent masters. He was also a designer. B. 1536; p. 1578. Cort, Henry, of Gosport, invented the process by which pig-iron was converted into malleable iron by the flame of pit-coal in the puddling furnace. Before his time, English ironmasters were compelled to employ charcoal for fuel. Having got pig-iron into a malleable condition, he further invented a process for drawing it into bars by means of grooved rollers. In other words, he reduced the labour and cost of producing iron to one-twentieth of what they were before his day, and the iron was of a better quality. In perfecting these inventions, Cort expended a fortune of upwards of £20,000, yet was robbed of the fruits of his discoveries by the villany of an official in a high department of government, and, both cheated and perse-cuted, he was ultimately allowed to starve, by the apathy and selfishness of an ungrateful country. In 1859 a public appeal for the benefit of his family was made, and, looking at the services he rendered to the iron trade and our iron constructions, there can be no hesitation in assigning to the name of Cort a place beside the illustrious names of Watt, Arkwright, and

Wedgwood. B. 1740; D. 1300.
CORTES, Hernando, kor-tais, the conqueror of Mexico, a celebrated Spanish adventurer, whose Mexico, a Celebrated Spanish adventurer, wnose family was respectable, but not opinient. He was bred at salamance, to the law, which he renounced to follow a soldier's life. The gover-nor of Hispaniola was his relation; and Cortos, in 1504, went to St. Domingo, where he was appointed to several valuable posts. In 1511 he accompanied Valsaques in his expedition to Cuba, and displayed so much skill and bravery in the conquest of that island, that he was chosen to conduct a similar enterprise for the conquest of Mexico. Accordingly, in 1519, he set out on his expedition, and first landed at Tabasco, where, after several bloody battles, he compelled the natives to submit to the Spanish yoke. Thence he sailed to St. Juan de Ulloa, in the Bay of Mexico, where he was met by several messengers from the governors of the province. Assuming now the title of ambassador of the king of Castile, he insisted on having an audience with Montezuma, the emperor, and for that purpose gave out that he intended to march on the capital. In the mean time, he founded a settlement on the coast, to which was given the name of Vera Cruz, at the same time declaring himself independent of the governor of Cuba. For some time he had tried in vain to

Corvate Courtois

After various events, on 7th July, 1520, he defeated the Mexicans in the great battle of Otumba, and finally succeeded in establishing himself in their capital. Meanwhile, a commission was sent from Spain to deprive him of his post; but this he contrived to elude, and after-wards obtained from Charles V. the appointment of governor of New Spain. His conduct ment of governor of New Spain. Ins contact to the natives was merciless in the extreme, and a new commission of inquiry arriving, he re-turned to his native country to vindicate his honour, in 1528. Having made his defence to the satisfaction of Charles, he was created marquis of the Valle de Oajaca, and obtained a large grant of land in New Spain, where he proceeded in 1530. After an absence of ten years, he returned, to be treated with cold civility by Charles, and with neglect by his ministers. Disgusted alike with king, court, and courtiers, he after an unfortunate expedition to Algiers, in which he served as a volunteer, retired to a residence in the vicinity of Seville, and there passed the in me vienny or sevule, and there passed the remainder of his days. In at Medellin, a village of Estremadura, 1485; D. near Seville, 1547.—W. H. Prescot, the American historian, has written a full and interesting account of the "Compuest of Mexico," in which full details are given of the life and deeds of Cortex.

CORYAT, Thomas, kor'-i-at, an English tra-veller, who called himself the "Odcombian legveller, who called himself the "Odcombian leg-stretcher." He was the son of the rector of Odcombe, and in 1611 published an account of his travels on the continent, with the singular title of "Coryat's Crudities." In the following year he set out again, with the design of spend-ing ten years in the East. He rambled through Greece, Turkey, Syria, Egypt, and Persia, and died at Surat, in 1617. B. at Odcombe rectory, in 1677.—"Coryat's Crudities" is now a rare book and debtos whonever it is sold a were book, and fetches, whenever it is sold, a very high price. It affords good illustrations of the state of society in the 16th century.

Cose Barts and the fold reducty.

Coses Barts and Charles do, kos brees-sak, a celebrated French marshal, who successfully commanded the French army in Flanders and Fredmont, under Francis I., Henry II., and Charles IX. He acquired so high a reputation, that nobles and princes came to him to learn the art of war. n. 1505; n. 1563.

Cosway, Richard, R.A., tos vai, a distinguished painter, who, by his skill in miniatures, rose to the highest rank in his profession. He took immense sums, and was patronized by the prince of Wales, afterwards George IV., and all the leading members of the aristocracy. He the leading memoers of the anstocracy. He married Maris Hadfield, a leady also of considerable artistic talent, and who, after his death, retired to Lodd, in Italy, where she kept an educational establishment, and acquired research report the present respect in the neighbourhood. Cosway lived in the greatest splendour throughout his currery, and was, in 1771, elected a member of the Royal Academy. B. at Tiverton, in 1740;

as old castles, cathedrals, churches, and other antiquities, was a native of Norwich. He published several volumes of etchings of the antiquities of Yorkshire, Norfolk, Normandy, &c. He was, for a few years, teacher of drawing in King's College, Somerset House; but the greater part of his life was spent in his native county. B. about 1780; D. in London, 1843

Cotta, Bernhard, kott-ta, an eminent German reologist, and author of a variety of works on geologist, and author of a variety of Works on that and cognate sciences, among which may be mentioned: "Geognostic Charts of Saxony and Thuringia;" "Geognostic Wanderings;" "In-troduction to the Study of Geognosy and Geology;" "Inner Structure of Mountains;" "Letters on Humboldt's Kosmos," &c. B. 1803.

Cotton, Sir Robert Bruce, kot'-ton, a cele-

corros, Sir Robert Bruce, Rov-ton, a cele-brated English antiquary, and founder of the famous Cottonian library, now at the British Museum, was educated at Cambridge, and, having acquired a high reputation for talent, learning, and integrity, was the adviser both of the king and the leading statesmen of the time. James I, first knighted him, and subsequently created him a baronet. Sir Robert, however, espoused the views of the reformers of the esponsed the views of the reformers of the period, and joined, though with moderation, in urging redress of grievances. He, in consequence, became obnoxious to the court; a treaquence, pecunic commences to the court; a trea-tise, in manuscript, on a political topic, was surreptitiously obtained from his library; he was east into the Tower, and his whole library seized. His constitution suffered from confinement, and this harsh treatment ultimately led to his death, which occurred in 1631. B. in Huntingdonshire, 1570. His valuable library, now the property of the nation, and full of most precious books and rare MSS., was subsequently enlarged by his son and grandson.

COULOMB, Charles Augustin de, koo'-lomb, a French mathematician, who, in 1779, produced a treatise on the "Theory of Simple Machines," which gained the prize of the Academy. He is regarded as the founder of experimental physics in France, and is the inventor of the torsion balance. There are few to whom the theory of electricity is so much indebted as to this philoelectricity is so much indebted as to this philosopher. B. at Angoulème, 1796; p. 1806.

COURENT, William, Ecor-ten, an ingenious English naturalist, whose collections were purchased for £20,000, and deposited in the British Museum. B. in London, 1642; p. 1702.
COURTOIS, Jacques, Ecor-ten, commonly called

Borgonone, was the son of an obscure painter. Borgonone, was the son of an observe parties, who instructed him in his art. Jacques spent some years in the French army, and made sketches of all the most striking scenes of the camp, the march, and the battle-field. the army after three years' service, and elevated himself to painting battle-pieces, for which he became very famous. At Bologna he studied under Guido and Albani, but finally settled in Rome, where he became a lay brother of the Jesuits, for whose establishment he executed D. 1821.

Coruss, Francis, R.A., kotes, one of the originators of the Royal Academy of London, and distinguished as a drawer of portraits in crayons. There are specimens of Courtois at Elorence, In oil-painting he was regarded by many as superior to Reynolds. His most celebrated works are a full-length portrait of the queen of decorge III., with the princess royal in her lap, and another of the beantiful daughter of Wilton the Soulptor. 2, in London, in 1725; D. 1770.

Cotmany, John Sell, kote-man, an artist famous for his etchings of architectural subjects, such of this artist's paintings have been engraved, and he occasionally etched himself. B. 1629; B. 1814.—Her great wealth attracted many ad-D. at Rome, where he chiefly lived, 1679.

Consin

Cousin, Jean, koo'-sa, an eminent French Courst, Jean, koo'-zi, an ominent French painter, sculptor, and geometrician. At the courts of Henry II., Francis II., Charles IX., and Henry IV., he was the principal favourite, and is the first French artist who excelled as an historical painter. His most celebrated picture is "The Last Judgment," now in the Louvre. His greatest work in sculpture is the monument of Admiral Chabot, in the church of the Calestines. His back on secondary was not the Celestines. His book on geometry was published in 1560. B. at Soucy, near Sens, about 1500; p. about 1590.

Cousin, Victor, a distinguished French inquirer into the systems of mental philosophy, and lecturer on philosophy at the Faculté des Lettres, in Paris. The original idea upon which his own system is based is, that every system is true, but incomplete in itself; but when all systems are united, and suitably, as it were, dovetailed together, a complete system would be obtained. After various vicissitudes, incident to the political changes in France, he became, under Louis Philippe, a councillor of state, an officer of the Legion of Honour, and a peer of France. Consin wrote largely on educational as well as philosophical subjects, and translated the works of Plato, in thirteen volumes. B. at Paris, 1792; p. 1867.

COUTHON, Georges, koo'-tawng, was brought up to the bar, but on the outbreak of the French revolution, he became a member of the National Assembly, and of the Convention, and was one of the most sanguinary of the Mountain party. He strained all his efforts to accomplish, first, the destruction of the monarchy and the death of the king, and, next, to effect the ruin of the Girondists. He was the close friend and asso-Girondists. He was the close friend and associate of Robespierre, and, along with him, initiated the most atroclous measures. He possessed considerable oratorical powers, which he invariably used in support of an extreme policy. He proclaimed death to all tyrants, and expressed a wish that kings might no longer have an earth to support or a sun to enlighten them. He was sent as commissioner to Lyons, where he enacted terrible scenes of bloodshed and proscription. On one occasion, he struck with a hammer the noblest edifices in the city, exclaiming, "Down, ye monuments of pride, I condemn you to destruction!" Like his chief, and other leaders in that terrible epoch, Couthon was of mild features and suave mau-Coutnon was on mind reacures and shave man-ners; and so decrepit in body that he was allowed to sit while speaking in the Convention. He shared in the fall of Robespierre, and was guillotined, July 28, 1794. B. at Orsay, a village in Clermont, 1756.

Courts, Angela Georgina Burdett, koots, a lady possessed of great riches, and the daughter of Sir Francis Burdett, who for many years of Sir Francis Burdett, who for many years represented. Westminster, as a Reformer, in parliament. Her grandfather, Mr. Coutts, the banker, having, at a late period of life, married Miss Mellom, an actress, bequathed to the latter his very large fortune, which acted as a temptation to the duke of St. Albans to marry her. The duchess dying in 1834, without issue, left to Miss Burdett her immense wealth, estimated at 25 cm. mated at £2,500,000, on the condition that she would assume the name and arms of the Coutts family. This she accordingly did, and devoted her life to charitable purposes generally, and the promotion of the English church especially. Norfolk's eldest son and Prince Louis Bour-parte, afterwards Napoleon III.

COVERDALE, Miles, kuv'-tr-dail, a distinguished reforming English divine, who, in 1532, gulshed reforming English divine, who, in 1512, unified with William Tyndale in translating the Scriptures. If 1551 he became bishop of Excter. B. in Yorkshire, 1497; D. in London, 1563. COWDER, Aborham, & Work. 4, an English poet, edicated at Westminster school. After passing through various vicissitudes on account of his Intrough various vicesstraces on account of his loyalty to the Straat dynasty, he, on the death of Cromwell, obtained a lease of a farm at Chert-sey, valued at about 4300 a year. Early in life, however, he produced a small volume of poems, called "Poetical Blossoms," which gained him a considerable reputation. Dr. Johnson places him at the back of these when halls. him at the head of those whom he calls metaphysical poets; but though he is sometimes subphysical poets; but drough it is sometimes sun-line, always moral, and frequently witty, yet he is both tedious and affected. His Anacreontics are reckoned his best productions. He also wrote a comedy called "Cutter of Coleman Street," and some pieces in prose, particularly a "Discourse on the Government of Cromwell," and a "Proposition for the Advancement of Experimental Philosophy." B. in London, 1618: D. at Chart-Philosophy." B. in London, 1618; D. at Chert-sey, 1667, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, where there is a monument to his memory.

COWDEY, Mrs. Hannah, a poetess, whose effu-sions are perhaps more remarkable for their affectation than their merit. She wrote three marrative poems, called "The Scottish Village," "The Siege of Acre," and "The Maid of Aragon." For these, however, her name is not here pre-served, but on account of her "Belle's Strata-gem," and "A Bold Stroke for a Husband," which are her two best comedies, of the nine which she wrote. B. at Tiverton, 1743; D. at Tiverton, 1809.—Her maiden name was Parkhouse, and her husband a captain in the service of the East India Company.

Cowley, Henry Richard Wellesley, Lord, many years British ambassador at Paris and other courts, was the son of the first Lord Cowley, better known as Sir Henry Wellesley. At an early age, he entered the diplomatic service, and in 1852 succeeded the Marquis of Norvice, and in 1852 successed the Marques or Normanby at the Tulleries. In conjunction with Lord Clarendon, he represented England at the congress of Paris, held in 1856. B. 1804. Cowren, William, kow'per, and sometimes pronounced kov'per, a celebrated English potentials with the son of Dr. Cowper, chaplain to George U. section of Englishman Company and the Company of the Company was me son of Dr. Cowper, chaplant to deorge the record of Berkhampstead in Hertfordshire, and nephew to Lord-Chancellor Cowper. Being designed for the law, William, after finishing his education, was placed under an eminent attorney, and, at the age of 31, was nominated a clerk in the House of Lords. A constitutional timidity the House of Lores. A constitutional timidity of disposition, however, prevented him from accepting it. He was next appointed clerk of the journals, a situation which, it was supposed, would require no personal attendance; but when he found that it would be requisite for the clerk to appear at the bar of the House, it had such an effect on his nerves, that he was had such an effect on his nerves, that he was had such an effect on his nerves, that he was obliged to resign the office. A morbid melan-choly now selzed him, and it was found necessary to place him under the care of Dr. Octson, at St. Albans, where he gradually resourced the use of his faculties. In 1768 he settled at Humbingdon, where he formed an acquaintance with a clergyman of the name of thirds, in whose family he became an inmate. That gentleman being killed by a fall from his horse, in 1767, Cowper and Mrs. Unwin took up their abode at Olney, Buckinghamshire, where they contracted an intimacy with Mr. Newton, then curate of that parish, and where Cowper devoted himself to puetry. To a collection of hymns published by that gentleman, Cowper contributed sixty-cight. In 1782 he published a volume of his powers which did not earlier much attention. poems, which did not excite much attention; but another volume, in 1785, stamped his repu-tation as a true poet. His "Task," "The Sofa," "John Glipin," and other productions, will immediately occur to the reader's mind as works of enduring excellence. He afterwards engaged in translating Homer into Miltonic verse; and though his version is not so pleasing as that of Pope, it renders the original with greater fide-lity. In 1786 he removed, with Mrs. Unwin, to Weston, Northamptonshire, where he continued to cultivate his literary tastes. In 1794 his intellect again gave way, and not even frequent change of scene could rouse him from his despondency, for he was now sunk into a state of complete dejection, from which he never after recovered. B. at Berkhampstead, 1731 p. at Dereham, in Norfolk, 1800, and was buried in the parish church, where a monument is erected to his memory.

Cranmer Cox

Cox, Richard, kox, an English prelate and one of the translators of the "Bishops' Bible," to which he furnished the four Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, and the Epistle to the Romans. He was bishop of Ely, but suffered a good deal of persecution on a charge of heresy, but was ultimately raised to that see by Elizabeth.

B. 1499; D. 1531. Cox, David, a distinguished water-colour

Cox, David, a distinguished water-coronal artist, who unweariedly devoted himself to the study of Nature under her ever-varying aspects, and reaped his reward in the general admiration which was awarded to his pictures. Although the opinion prevailed that they were merely rough sketches, being mostly executed on coarse paper, yet they exhibit a breadth and poetical embodiment, which stamp them with the mark of genius, and as the offspring of a highly vigorous and observing mind. He was one of the earliest members of the Society of Painters in Water-colours, and in the gallery of tint society, in London, his pictures were almost exclusively shown. B. at Birmingham, 1793; b. at Harborne, near Birmingham, 1859.

Coxe, William, archdeacon of Wilts, and author of the following among a great variety of other works:—"Sketches of the Natural, Civil, and Political State of Switzerland," "Tra-Civil, and Folincal state of Switzerland, "Two vols in Poland, Russia, Sweden, and Denmark," "History of the House of Austria," "History of the Bourbon kings of Spain," "Memoirs and Correspondence of John, Duke of Mariborough," "Memoirs of Sir Robert Walpole," "Account of the Russian Discoveries between Asia and Amethe Russian Discoveries between Son and America, "Correspondence of Charles Talbot, duke of Shrewsbury, with William III. and others," &c. B. 1747; D. 1828.

His principal poems are "The Library," "The Village," which was revised by Dr. Johnson; "The Newspaper," "The Parish Register," and the "Tales of the Hall," for which Mr. Murray, the "Tales of the Hall," for which Mr. Murray, the publisher, gave him £3000, with the remain-ing copyright of his previous poems. n. at Ald-borough, in Suffolk, 1754; p. 1832.—The poetry of Crabbe is remarkable for its individuality, and the minuteness with which every picture is and the mindeness with which every picture is painted. Of the higher quality of invention he had none. He could paint what he beheld with pathos, vigour, and originality, although the colours which he sometimes uses have a tendency to repel, rather than invite, readers of deli-cary and taste to the contemplation of his pages.

Chark, George Lillie, kraik, a Scotch litterateur, who, in 1824, went to London, and when the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowthe Society for the Diffusion of Useful Know-ledge commenced its labours, wrote for it a work called "The Pursuit of Knowledge under Diffi-culties." This brought him into notice, and he became a large contributor, in history and blography, to the "Penary Cyclopedia." In 858 he assumed the editorship of the "Pictorial History of England," to which he contributed History of England, "to which he contributed several of its most important chapters. These were subsequently published in an independent form, under the titles of "The History of British Commerce," and "The History of British Commerce," and "The History of British Commerce," and "The History of Literature and Learning in England." He also published a work on "Spenser and his Poetry," and in 1849 became professor of History and England Literature in Queen's College, Belfast. Desides the above works, he produced the "Romance of the Peerage," "Outlines of the History of the Breilish Language." and contributed to ne-Breilish Language.

of the Peerage," "Onlitines of the History of the English Language," and contributed to pe-riodical publications. B. 1799; D. 1898. CERNFORN, LOUG. (See SALISDUNY, Mar. of.) CERNFORN, LOUGS, FORWING, Mar. of.) CENTAGE, LUGSS, FORWING, DIAMES, CONTRIBUTED and eminent of the old German painters, called after the place of his birth, but whose family name was Sunder. He produced a great many works, which are to be seen chiefly in Upper Sevent Ha overlaid in nortraits and after. works, which are to be seen entery in upper Sarony. He excelled in portraits and alter-pices, the principal of these last being the "Crucifixing," in the church of Weimar. He was court painter to three electors of Sarony, Frederick the Wise, John the Constant, and John Frederick the Magnanimons. He was also the friend of Luther, and is said to have been the means of bringing about the marriage of the great reformer with Catharine Bora. B. at Craamegreau reformer with Catharine Bora. B. at Cra-mach, near Bamberg, in 1472: p. at Weimar, in 1553. Calmmen, Thomas, kran-mer, archbishop of Canterbury, whose opinion on the question of the divorce of Henry VIII. recommended him to that monarch, and whose first service, after his appointment, was to pronounce the divorce ins uppointment, was to pronounce free drortee between the king and Katingrad. He zealously furthered the Reformation, and by his means the Ebble was translated and read in churches. On the death of Henry, he was named in the till of that moment on or of the regency of the will off that moment on or of the regency of the best of the season of the season of the season of the season of the Reformation, under this yeuthful indexes, the Reformation, under this yeuthful indexes the Reformation, under the season of the Reformation of the Refor or Shrewsbury, with William III. and others," check n. 1747, D. 1823.

Calber, Rivercand George, Arzb, an English poct, who rose, from very humble circumstances, to hold the rectory of Trowbridge, in Wilshire. He was educated for the medical sion of Mary, he was condemned, first for Durke, the great statesman, for poetical sion of Mary, he was condemned, first for Carbon Forder, and pardoned; but a charge of heresy patronage. The politician took him under his protection, and advanced his forthmes by one potential search of the Cower, whence, with Ridley and protection, and advanced his forthmes by one potential search of the Cower, whence with Ridley and protection, and advanced his forthmes by one potential search of the cower, whence with Ridley and public disputation. The fate of these men Crassus Croke seems, without doubt, to have been already de-termined. The archbishop was tried by the and "Streams," redolent of poetic beauty. In pope's commissioners, and convicted, when, 1843 he became an association in the Royal Acatermined. The archishop was tried by the pope's commissioners, and convicted, when, after enduring great hardships for upwards of three years, he was at length induced to sign his abjuration of the Protestant faith, on the his adjuration of the Processian initin, our incomes of life. For having committed this act, however, he was struck with deep remorse, and when brought into St. Mary's Church, Oxford, to read his recantation in public, he, instead of complying, besought God's forgiveness for the apostasy of which he had been guilty, and expenses of the complete of horted the people against the errors of Rome. This greatly enraged his adversaries, who, de-nouncing him as a hypocrite and heretic, dragged him to the stake, opposite Baliol College. Here he endured the terrible flery trial with patience and fortitude, holding his hand in the fame and often exclaiming. "This un-with patience and fortifude, holding his hand in the flame, and often exclaiming, "This un-worthy hand!" D. at Aslacton, in Nottingham-shire, 1859; burned at Oxford, 1855. Calester, M. Lichinis, kriss-sus, suramed the "rich" a distinguished Roman, who decisively defeated Spartaens, who, at the head of the gladiators, had for some time defled the power of Rome. Afterwards, he formed one of the of Home. Afterwards, he formed one of the triumwirate with Cassar and Pompey, and had the province of Syria sllotted to him. Attempting to possess himself of Parthia, he was defeated by Surena, the Parthian general, who, subsequently, treacherously grot possession of his person, and put him to death, 53 s.c. Castratrs, krid-s-run, one of Alexander the Great's generals, conspicuous for his literary shillites as well as for his valour. He received with schward Alexander's the control of the control of the state of the control o as his share of Alexander's kingdom, Greece and Epirus, and wrote the history of his great commander. Killed in a battle against Eumenes. 321 B.C.

CRATES, krai'-tes, a philosopher of Bœotia, re-markable for his eccentricities. In the summer he would clothe himself as warm as possible, while in the winter his garments were uncommonly thin. B. 324 B.C.

tions, became a dramatic writer. His first popular performance was "Atreus," which was followed by his "Electra" and "Rhadamistus," He next produced some tragedies, which pro-cured for him the name of the French Eschycurea nor min the name of the French Asseny.

Is. For many years he retired into seedinston.

n.at Dijon, 1674; D. in Paris, 1702. By order of Louis XV. a monument was erected to his memory in the church of St. Gervois. His works have been published in 12 vols. 4to.—His son, Claude Protsper Joliot de Orebillon, was also a man of letters, and wrote several esteemed novels, the principal of which is entitled, " Les Egaremens du Cœur et de l'Esprit." B. 1707; D. 1771.

CERECH, Thomas, kreetch, an English poet, who wrote some original pieces, which are now almost forgotten. He is, however, known as a translator, of classical poetry, having executed versions in English verse of Lucretius, Horace, versions in Lagisia verse of Lucretius, Horace, ledge, and have been mir Theocritis, Sc. He was educated at Sherborner translated, and edited, with Grown Lagistan and Lagistan College, Oxford. n. 1869; committed suicide, 1701.

Casswicx, Thomas, R.A., kret-vik, an emi-printed with those of Strinent English landscape-painter, who produced at Chilton, 1859; n. 1841.

1933 He obetime an associato in the koyal Aca-demy, and, in 1847, exhibited his two greatest works, entitled "England," and "The London Boad a Hundred Years ago," nat Sheffield, 1811. Cotternow, James, kri-ton, a celebrated Sottelman, of whom so many wonderful things are related as 6 have procured him the name of the "Admirable Crichion." He was educated at St. Andrews, and, at the age of twenty, visited Paris. Here he acquired great reputation not only as a disputant, but for his skill and activity in games of all sorts, as well as martial exercises. He next went to Rome, and displayed his talents in the presence of the pope and cardinals. Thence he travelled to Venice, where he became intimate with the learned Aldus Manutius, who dedicated to him the Paradoxes of Cicero, in a strain of panegyric which borders on the ridiculous. At Padua he held disputations with the most learned professors on a number of subjects, but particularly on the Aristotelian philosophy. At Mantaa he slew a famous fencing-master in a duel. The duke of Mantua admired him so much, as to appoint him tutor to his son, a licentious young man, by whom, it is said, he was assassinated in the public streets, during the carnival. B. in Perthshire, 1560; assassinated, 1583

CRESUS, kre'-sus, the last king of Lydia, of the race of the Mermnadæ, celebrated for his great riches. His court was the asylum of great rienes. His court was the asylum of learning; and here were to be found Esop and Solon. Showing, with pride, his treasures to the latter, that philosopher said, "Call no man happy before his death;" and, in truth, misfortune soon came upon the rich king. He was conquered by Cyrus, King of Persia, and placed on a burning pile, when, exclaiming "Solon," with great energy, his captor asked him the reason of such an exclamation. Cresus then repeated the conversation he had had with Solon on human happiness. Cyrus, moved at the recollection of the instability of human affairs, ordered Crossus to be taken from the affairs, ordered Crossus to be taken from the burning pile, and became one of his most intimate friends. Mounted the throne, 580 g.c. The manner of his death is unknown.

The manner of his death is unknown.

CROKE, or CROCO, Sir George, kroke, an able and upright English lawyer, sprung from afamily famous for producing men of talent in that profession, was a native of Buckinghamshire, received his education at University College, Oxford, and studied law at the Inner Temple. He was knighted in 1623, and made king's serjeant; he was created one of the justices of the Common Pleas in 1625, in 1628 he succeeded Sir John Doddridge as justice of the King's Bench; in 1636 he took the part of Hampden bentil, in too he core the part of rampuen on the question of ship-money, refusing it concur with the other judges in condemning the patriot for refusing to pay that illegal impo-sition. Sir George gained great popularity for his conduct on this occasion, but, such was his high character for rectitude, he still retained the favour of the king. His law reports obtained a high position for authenticity and impartiality, as well as for sound legal know-ledge, and have been many times reprinted, translated, and edited, with notes, additions, and explanations. His arguments on ship-money, especially, attracted much attention, and were printed with those of Sir Richard Hutton. B.

Cromwell Croker

CROKER, Right Honourable John Wilson, kro'-ker, was educated for the bar, and, in 1800, was entered a student at Lincoln's Inn. He dewas entered a student as Lincolni stim. The de-voted much of his time, however to literature and politics, displaying in the latter field strong Tory tendencies. In 1807 he became member of parliament for Downpatrick, in Ireland, and or parlament for Downpares, in Ireald, and in Isoo scentary to the Admirate. This post he held for twenty years, during which he sat as member in the House for various boroughs. Meanwhile he was almost continually engaged with his pen, and was a ready and versatile writer. His most extensive production is an edition of "Boswell's Life of Johnson," which cdition of "Boswell's Life of Johnson," which Macaulay criticised with great severity in the "Edinburgh Review." He wrote, besides, "Stories from the History of England," and edited "The Suffolk Papers," "Walpole's Let-ters to Lord Hertford," and several other work, in Galway, Ireland, 1790; p. at Hampton, 1954

CROLY, Reverend George, kro'-le, a modern Chorx, Reverend George, kro-ke, a modern poet and inapitative writer, as well as the rector of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, and St. Bener's, London. His principal effusions are "The Angel of the World;" a tragedy entitled "Catiline;" a comedy called "Pride shall have a Fall;" "Salathie!," a romance; and "Marston," with "Tales of the Great St. Bernard; both works of fiction. He has likewise writer as "Life of Darke;" but it was as a popular preacher that his fame was most extended. B. The Nik 1750 x. 1860.

at Dublin, 1780; p. 1860.

CROMPTON, Samuel, krump'-ton, an ingenious mechanic, the inventor of the spinning mule, was born near Bolton-le-Moors, Lancashire, in 1753. Bolton then was really "in the Moors," and only numbered about 5000 inhabitants, which, mainly through the influence of Crompvaries, mainly though the interaction of the broad to up-varies of 70,000. His youth was spent in a large picturesque old house, with quaint timber front, and there the thoughtful young weaver occupied his days with working upon Hargreaves's newly-invented jenny, and solaced his evenings with his violin—the first triumph of his mechanical skill. At the age of twenty-one he commenced the construction of a spinning-machine, which he called a "mule," because it united the features of Arkwright's and Hargreaves' ma-chines. For five years did Crompton perseveringly work, with scarcely any tools except his elashknife, and a few others which he purchased with money carned by playing his violin in the orchestro of the Bolton theatre. Hemade his ma-chine at length, but had to hide it in a garret, lest his ignorant neighbours should destroy it. As secretly as he could, for his house was besieged by the curious, Crompton and his wife worked upon the wheels, and spun yarn of such a fineness that manufacturers saw they would be able to produce in this country material similar to the much-coveted muslins of the East Indies. Being a man of simple habits, of great industry, of unquestioned probity, and of deep religious-ness, one would have supposed that now a career of unexampled success and honour was open to him. Yet such is the singular history of his life, that with the triumph of his mecha nical genius commenced a series of personal and family misfortunes that would have crushed detained by proclamation; but if she had been the spirit of an ordinary man. Efforts were suffered to proceed on her voyage, the head of made to get from Crompton his secret, which chales I would, perhaps, never have been for he gave up with his first-made mule to a number of gentlemen on the promise of a subscripser of subscripser of the commonwealth, nor Oliver Cromwell 302

tion being raised to remunerate him. Only enough money, however, was raised to enable him to replace his mule with one of four more crompton struggled on in poverty, while others with his mule were laying the foundations of colossal fortunes. In the year 1800, when the mule had been given to the public about twenty years, some gentlemen in Manchester promoted a subscription in favour of Crompton, and realized between £400 and £500, with which he increased his little manufactory for spinning and weaving. In 1807, when the nation had been immensely benefited by the increase of trade consequent upon the use of the mule. trade consequent upon the use of the mane, Crompton made some efforts to obtain a na-tional recognition of his services. These efforts being without satisfactory result, four years later they were renewed. When Mr. Perceyal later they were renewed. When Mr. Perceval was shot in the House of Commons, he had a paper in his hand relative to Crompton's claim, and he had said but a few minutes before that and he had said but a few minutes before that it was the intention of the government "to propose £20,000 for Crompton." But Perceval's assassination dashed the cup from val's assassination dashed the cup from Comptor's lips, and the parliamentary proceedings eventuated in a vote of £8000, bardyn sufficient to pay the expenses of the application. Compton was greatly disappointed. After that time he engaged in several businesses, in altime he was pursued by an apparent fatality; he became very shy, and at last fell into power shy, and the altifell into power has the fatality and the second should be sufficiently which he are very shy, and at last fell into power has the second should be sufficiently which he altoyed only the second should be sufficiently which he altoyed only the second should be sufficiently which he altoyed only the second should be sufficiently which he altoyed only the second should be sufficiently which he altoyed only the second should be sufficiently which he altoyed only the second should be sufficiently sufficiently should be sufficiently sufficiently should be sufficien small annuity, which he enjoyed only three years. He died on the 26th of June, 1827, aged seventy-four years, and was buried in the old churchyard, where two slabs of polished gray granite, surmounting a massive block of Langradient administration cover his remains. A monu-ment to his memory was erected in his native town in 1882, and publicly inaugurated on the 24th of August of that year.

24th of August of that year.

CRONWELL, Oliver, krown-well, the great Protoctor, came of a good family on both sides, and after passing about a year at Cambridge, was removed to Lincoln's Inn, with the view of prosecuting his studies for the bar. If has been said that he was much addicted to low pleasures and gaming in his youth; but when we sures and gaming in his youth; but when we find him, in his twenty-first year, marrying the daughter of Sir John Bourchier, and spoken of by religious men as a professor of religion, we are inclined to believe that he has been vilified by malice, rather than spoken of with justice. In 1628 he was elected member of parliament for Huntlagdon, and, in the following year, distinguished himself by his zeal against the bishops. When the parliament was dissolved, he rethere into the country, and took a grazing farm at St. Ives, where he became overseer of the parish, and a zealous member of the relithe parish, and a zealous member of the reli-gious community with which he had connected himself. In 1636 Sir Thomas Stuart, his maternal uncle, died, leaving him property in the "Isle of Ely" worth £500 a year. To this place Isle of thy worth 2000 a year. To case place he now removed his family; but being disgusted with the measures of the government, he in 1637 actually took a passage for himself and family in a ship lying in the Thames, and bound for New England, in America. This vessel was ils Protector. ils Protector. In 1930 ne was returned to parliament for Cambridge, and, by this time, had become a popular leader, being called "Lord of the Fens," for having defended apor-tion of the fen country of Cambridgeshire from being wrested from the people by the grasping hands of certain proprietors who had been draining them for themselves. In 1642, when parliament determined upon hostilities, he went to Cambridge, where he raised a troop of horse, and which he himself so ably commanded, that he soon acquired the rank of colonel, and a great ne soon acquired the rank of coloner, and a great-reputation for military skill and valour. His men were well disciplined, and, under his leadership, at the battle of Marston Moor, in 1614, acquired the name of "Ironsides." Stamford, and in the second battle at Newbury, Cromwell greatly distinguished himself, and cromwen greaty distinguished ministr, and received from his party the title of "Saviour of the nation." This party consisted of the Independents, who had gained so great an influence in parliament as to pass the famous self-denying ordinance, by which all members of cither House were excluded from commands in the army. From this, however, Cromwell, on account of his value to the cause, was excepted; a stroke of policy which preserved his ascen-dancy in the army, and pared the way for his future advancement. He was now made licutenant-general, and by his conduct in 1645, the battle of Naseby, which decided the fate of the battie of Asseby, which decided the fate of the royalists, was won. This victory was followed by a series of successes, for which he was voted a pension of 25200 per annum, and the thanks of the House. When the king was handed over by the Sooth to the parliament, Cromwell determined to get him into his own power. This he effected in 1847, by means of Cornet Joyce, a young and spirited soldier. He now obtained the chief command of the army, and at a conyoung and spirited soldier. Ho now obtained the chief command of the army, and at a conference at Windsor, which he himself opened with prayer, propounded the bold measure of punishing the king by a judicial sentence. Charles was now in the Isle of Wight, when Cromwell was called into the north against the Scots, and into the west against the Welsh. Wherever he fought, success attended him, and returning to London, he purged the parliament house of its members, by means of his troopers, under the direction of Colonel Pride. In the January of 1619 the king's trial commenced. Cromwell was the third to sign the warrant for execution, and the monarch suffered accordingly. Cromwell was now called into Ireland, where he took a terrible vengeance upon the inhabitants of Drogheda, Wexford, and several other places. In 1650 he returned to England, and was sent against the Scots, who had armed to restore Charles II. On September 3, 1650, he gained the battle of Dunbar; and that day twelvemonth he defeated Charles at Worcester. The sovereign power was now within his reach, and he did not hesitate to grasp it. Accordingly, on February 16, 1654, he was invested with the dignity of Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, in the Court of Chancery. In this capacity, he vigor-ously directed the affairs of the kingdom, makousy urrected are states or une surgeom, mas-ing the English flag, borne by men like Blake, respected wherever it was seen. In 1658, how-ever, he became moody and suspicious. In the Angust of that year, his favourite daughter, Mrs. Claypole, died at Hampton Court. This event, with the publication of a pamphlet by Colonel Titos, entitled "Killing no Murder,"

In 1610 he was returned to tending to prove the assassination of a tyrant a tending to prove the assistantion of a symme public duty, produced a slow fever, from which he never rallied. He was, by order of his physician, removed to Whitchall for change of air, but nothing would avail him now. He died on the 3rd of September, 1658, the anniversary of his victories at Dunbar and Worcester, and a day which he was accustomed to consider especially fortunate to himself. B. in the town of eially fortunate to himself. n. in the town of Huntingdon, 1899.—His corps was intered on the 28th of April, in Henry the Seventh's chapel, whence, at the Restoration, its taken and exposed on, and, it is said, buried under, the gallows at Tyburn. It is needless here to enter into the character of Cronwell. That he was one of the greatest statesmen and most valiant warriors England has produced, none will deny; and that he was as good, if not better, than most men would have been under the same circumstances, few will be in-clined to dispute.—Cromwell had six children; viz., Richard, Henry, Bridget, Elizabeth, Mary, and Frances. Richard succeeded him in the protectorate; but when affairs turned, and he found his post no longer tenable, he resigned and went abroad. Richard Cronwell subsequently returned to England, and a story is told of him, to the effect that, while a suitor for the restoration of his property he was met in Westminster Hall by one who mistook him for a countryman viewing the place, and remarked that, perhaps, he had never seen such a grand place before. "No," replied Richard, "not since I sat in that chair," pointing at the same moment to the chair of state which then same moment to the chair of state when then coeupied a prominent place in the justice-hall at Westminster. A portion of his property was restored to him, and he died at Cheshunt, in Hertfordshire, in 1722—Henry went to Ireland, as lord-lieutenant, and bore a good character. It was the general opinion at the time, and has since been fully endorsed, that the Protector made a mistake in naming the mild and gentle Richard as his successor instead of Henry, who Richard as his successor instead of Honry, who possessed more of the vigour, energy, and genius of his great father. D. in 1674—Bridget married first, General Ireton, and afterwards General Fleetwood.—Elizabeth, Cromwell's favourite daughter, married John (Lapple, Esq., of Northamptonshire.—Mary married Lord Fauconberg, and is supposed to have assisted in the restoration of Clarles II. She died in 1742.—Frances married, first, a grandson of the earl of War-married, first, a grandson of the earl of War-wick, and secondly, Sir John Russell of Cam-bridgeshire.—Elizabeth, the wife of Crouwell, was a woman of strong mind, and a constant spur to her husband in his career of ambition. She also governed her household with great address. and died in 1665.

Chotch, William, krotch, doctor of music, whose almost infant performances are said to have rivalled those of Mozart. In 1797, when have rivalled those or Alozart. In 1797, when only twenty-two, he was appointed musical professor at Oxford, and in 1822, principal of the Royal Academy of Music. He composed a large number of pieces, both for the pianoforte and the organ, besides an opera called "Palestine." B. at Norwich, 1775; D. at Taunton, Somersetshire, 1847.

sure, 1847.

Crowns, John, krows, an industrious writer of plays during the reign of chartes II, who was set up by the earl of Rochester as a dramatic rival of Dryden, but whose productions—tragedies and consedies, for he wrote both are of an inferior order, as well as plot, construction, language, and morals. Nevertheless, of his tragedies (two) one called "The Destruction of Jerusalem," was popular when first produced; and his "Sir Courtly Nice," a comedy, was more than once reprinted. He was the son of an Independent minister in Nova Scotia, where he was born, but in what year has not been ascertained. D. about 1703. Chuden, Alexander, kroo-den, a laborious compiler, who, in 1728, went from Aberdeen to Loudon, and settled there as a bookseller. In 1737 he published his "Concordance to the Bible," a book of great merit. D. 1770 .- He was a very pious man, but at times deranged in his mind.

Cruden

CRULESHANE, George, krook'-shank, the son of an artist, and an artist himself, devoted or an arcist, and an arciss named, devoted his time mostly to the humorous or political illustration of works. His "Comic Almanao" was published, with unflagging originality of design, for about twelve years; and some of the fictions of Mr. Charles Dickens were accompanied by sketches from his pencil. Subsequently, he published "The Bottle," a series of quently, he published "The Bottle, a series cight drawings, showing the progressive effects of intemperance upon a family; and then became a professional painter in oil. In this path he executed, among other pictures, "Tan O'Shanter," "Titania and Bottom the Weaver," and a very curious allegorical picture called the "Worship of Bacchus." His excellence, however, lay in comic etchings for woodcuts. B. in London, 1792.

CTESIBIUS, te-sib'-e-us, a mathematician of Alexandria, the inventor of the pump and other hydraulic instruments, also of a clepsydra, or water-clock. Lived in the 2nd century B.C.

CTESTHON, testifon, an Athenian, who counselled his fellow-citizens to present Demosthenes with a golden crown for his probity and virtue. Lived in the 4th century B.C.

Cupworth, Ralph, kud-worth, a learned divine, who wrote upon "The True Intellectual System of the Universe," and whose attainments were of the highest order. His writings set men to think, and gave rise to much contro-tersy. B. at Aller, Somersetshire, 1617; D. at Cambridge, 1688.

CULPEPPER, Nicholas, kull-pep-er, an English astrologer and herbalist. He was the son is natiologer and herbalist. He was the son of a clergynan, was bred an apothecary, and settled in Spitalfields, where he practised physic and astrology with great sacess. In 1651.—He wrote several books, the most celebrated of which is a Herbal, wherein he describes the good and bad qualities of plants according to the sidereal influence.

CHARGELYN, William Alpha of the according to the sidereal influence.

Cumberland, William, duke of, the second son of George II., kum'-ber-land, was, in 1743, with his father, present at the battle of Dettingen, where he was wounded in the leg. He, in 1745, commanded the British at the battle of Fontency, where they were defeated by the French, in consequence of not being properly supported by the Dutch. In 1746, at Culloden, the defeated Charles Stuart, and received the thanks of both houses of parliament. E. 1721; D. 1765. Cumberland pursued the adherents of the Stuarts with such remorseless severity, and broke up the clan system of the Scott'sh highlands with such unflinching determination, as to acquire the title of "The Butcher," by which and miscellaneous writer, was educated for the church, but became secretary to the Board of Trade, and, in 1780, was despatched to Madrid, on a secret and confidential mission. In this office he considerably exceeded the expenditure once he considerably exceeded the expenditure allowed him; and subsequently, on a compensa-tion allowance, retired to Tunbridge Wells, where he entirely devoted himself to literature. From this retreat he poured forth essays, operas, From this retrieu ne poured force essays, operas, comedies, tragedies, poetry, novels, and pamphlets on various subjects. It is as an essayist, however, that he is most favourably known; for, out of npwards of thirty dramas, there is scarcely one which is now remembered. B. at Cambridge, 1732; D. at Tunbridge, 1811.

CUMMING, John, D.D., kum'-ing, a Scottish divine, and minister of the Scotch Church in Crown Court, Covent Garden, London. He published a great many works on religious subjects, chiefly bearing on the fulfilment of the prophecies; and, as secretary to the Protestant Reformation Society, was frequently called upon to take a prominent part in questions of dispute between the Roman Catholics and the Protos tants. B. in Aberdeenshire, 1810.

CUNNINGHAM, Allan, kun'-ning-hăm, a Scottish peasant, who was apprenticed to the trade of a stonemason; but, in his leisure, applied himself to the cultivation of the homely Doric muse of his country, and rose to a considerable eminence as a lyric poet. In 1810 he went to London, where he eked out a subsistence by reporting for the he energy and contributing to periodicals. He subsequently obtained the situation of manager of the extensive studio of Chantrey, which enabled him to pursue his literary tastes in accordance with his own sentiments, and without the usual hazards attending the precariousness of the profession of literature. Considering his education and occupation, his works may be viewed as both numerous and excellent. The principal of them are the novels of "Paul Jones," "Otterburn," and "Sir Michael Scott;" Jones, ""Gitzeburn," and "Sir Michael Scott,"
"Songs of Scotland, with Critical and Historical Notes," "Sir Marmaduke Maxwell," a drama;
"The Lives of the most Eminent British Painters, Sculptors, and Architects;" "The Life of Burns," and "The Life of Wilkie." He was highly appreciated by Sir Walter Scott, much admired by Hogg, and affectionately esteemed by Chantrey, who bequeathed him £2000, and an annuity of £100. In in Dumfriesshire, 1735;
a in London 1848. D. in London, 1842.

CUNNINGHAM, Peter, the eldest son of Allan Cunningham, was educated at a private school, and entered the public service as a clerk in the Audit Office. In 1854 he was promoted to one Audit Office. In 1854 he was promoted to one of the chief clerkships, and gave to the world some of the fruits of his leisure hours. In 1833 he published a "Life of Drummond of Hawthornden;" and, in 1835, "Songs of England and Scotland." In 1841 a new edition of Campanan of the British Poets," and in and Scotland. "In 1841 a new contion of camp-bell's "Specimens of the British Poets," and in 1849 a "Handbook of London." Beside these, he edited Johnson's "Lives of the Poets," Gold-smith's works, and contributed to "Frasers" Magazine," and several other periodicals, articles of light literature. B. in London, 1816.

CUNNINGHAM, William, D.D., late principal of the New (or Free Church) College, Edinburgh, was one of the leaders of the "Non-intrusion" party in the Scottish church, whose struggles nequire the time of the Dutcher, by which party in the coccessa cinters, whose seasons make his memory is still excretated on the hills eventuated in a large proportion of the delray and and in the glons of the Scottish highlands.

COLDENIAND, Richard, an English dramatic is and establishing what is called the "Free

CORDAY, CHARLOTTE.

DANTE, ALIGHIERI.

CUNNINGHAM, ALLAN.

DALE, REV. CANON.

DE STABL, MADAME.

Church." The question in dispute was as to the He now rose to the highest honours, and in right of the people to refuse elergymen appointed | 1814, just before the abdication of Napoleon I., by the patrons of livings, the privilege of vetoing was named a councillor of state, which applicate such appointments being all that was at first ment was confirmed by Louis XVIII. His a st claimed; but the views of the leaders of the anti-advancement was to the chancellorship of the patronage party gradually developed themselves into a claim of the right of election by the people. This was denied by the law courts and the legislature; and the result was that a large portion of the clergy and people repudiated state connexion and control, and set up the "Free Church;" though still maintaining their right to be regarded as the national church. This claim was of course only recognised by themcaum was of course only recognised by themselves; and they now occupy the position of an ordinary dissenting body, though probably the most numerous and influential one in Scotland. Dr. Cunningham, after passing through the ordinary educational curriculum, was appointed assistant to one of the ministers of Greenock, was assistant to one of the ministers of Greenock, was afterwards removed to Trinity Church, Edinburgh; and, having taken a leading part in the coclesiastical discussions which preceded and followed the disruption, on the formation of a denominational hall of divinity, was appointed one of the professors, and on the death of Dr. Chalmers in 1847, succeeded him as principal and professor of divinity in the New College. Dr. Cunningham was more distinguished for intellectual power and learning than for eloquence as a preacher; but his unquestionable talent and high character gave him much influence in the budy to which he believed. ence in the budy to which he belonged Dunse, Berwickshire, October, 1805; D. 1861.
CURIUS DENTATUS, Marcus Annius, ku'-re-us

destails Dentatus, marcus Annius, and the fortifude, and frugality. He was victorious over various nations, and when the Samnites attempted to bribe him, he said, "I prefer my earthen pots to all your vessels of gold and silver, and my desire is to command those who are in possession of money, while I have none, but live in poverty." Lived in the 3rd century B.C.

CURTUS, Marcus, kur-she-us, a Roman, who devoted himself to the infernal gods for the safety of his country. A wide chasm having suddenly appeared in the Forum, the oracle had said that it would nover close until Rome threw into it its most precious possession. Thereupon Curtius, arming himself, mounted his horse, and solemnly threw himself into the abyss, which and somemity threw minison motione anyss, which instantly closed over his head, 300 n.c. Cuvies, Georges Christian Leopold Dagobert, Baron, Koo'-pe-u, a distinguished French natralist, who, at the age of 21, became tutor to the only son of Count d'Hériey in Normandy, the only son of count a nericy in Normandy, where, having a residence by the seacosts, the commenced the study of marine animals. In a short time he sent some papers to the Society of Natural History, and in 1705 received the appointment of assistant to Metrand at Paris, in the Jardin des Plantes. Here he commenced the collection of Commencial and Commencial an his collection of comparative anatomy, and in 1796, when the National Institute was formed, became one of its first members. He now began a series of works illustrative of fossil remains, and in 1800 was appointed professor of natural philosophy at the College of France, but still continued to lecture on comparative anatomy at the Jardin der Plantes. In 1802 he was chosen by the first consul, Bonaparte, one of the inspectors general to establish public schools in France, and became perpetual secretary to the Institute for the department of Natural Sciences.

305 university, which he held till his death. In 1819 he was created a baron; in 1826 tharl < X. conferred on him the decoration of grand office r of the Legion of Honour; and in 1832 Louis of the Legion of Robotic, and in 1822 from a Philippe created him a peer. B. at Montboland, 1769; D. at Paris, 1832. Cuvier creatly advanced the natural sciences, the true object of which is, he declares, "to lead the human mind towards its destination,—a knowledge of truth."

works are very numerous, and, perhaps, h's greatest is his "Theory of the Earth."

greatest is his "Theory of the Earth."
CUVIER, Frederic, was a younger brother of the above, and was also devoted to the purvuit of natural history. His most scientific work is "On the Teeth of Animals," published in 1822. n. at Montbéliard, 1773; p. at Strasburg,

1838.

CUYP. (See KUYP.) CYNEGIRUS, sin-e-ji'-rus, an Athenian, brether of the poet Eschylus. After the battle of Ma-rathon, he pursued the flying Persians to their ships, and seized one of their vessels with right hand, which was immediately cut off by the enemy. Upon this, he gra-ped the vess I with his left hand; and when he had lost that also, retained his hold with his teeth.

CYPRIAN, St., Thaseius Cacilius, sip'-re-an, a CYPEIAN, 51., Thaseus Caenius, sp.-r-ca., a learned father of the Latin church, who, in 216, embraced Christianity, on which he words his book "De Gratia Del," addressed to Do-natus. Persecuted and beheaded at Carthage, 253.—His works were edited by Bishop Fell, at Oxford, in 1632; and routered into English by Orlord, it tols; and tendered not organize by Dr. Marshall, in one vol. follo.

CERTS, si'-rus, king of Persia, son of Cambyses and Mandame, daughter of Astyages, king of the Medes. There are different accounts of his youth. He restored the independence of Persia, which had long been under the domination of the Medes, and caused himself to be proor the menes, and caused immen to be pro-claimed king about 559 n.c. In a short time he extended the limits of his empire, which soon became the greatest in Asia. He decisively the feated Cressis, king of Lydia, invaded Assyria, and took Babylon by turning the channel of and fook isosyon by turning the channel of the Euphrates. He afterwards, however, was beaten by the Scythians, taken prisoner, and put to death by their queen, 529 B.C.—Hi to-put to death by their queen, 859 8.C.—Hi tu-rians do not agree, however, as to the many of his death. (See Crosus). Cyrus, called the "Younger," was the youngest son of Darius Nothus, and brother of Artaeress, king of Persia. When the latter mounted the throne, he was made go-vernor of Asia Minor Lusirous however. vernor of Asia Minor. Desirous, however, of the supreme authority, he levied forces against his sovereign. A great battle was fought between the brothers at Cunaza, 401 nought between the brothers at Canada, wor n.c., where Cyrus was defeated and himself slain by Artaverxes. Cyrus had in his service Clearchus and Xenophon. (See Xenophon.)

D

Dic, or Dach, John, dek, a German painter, who was employed by the emperor Rudolph II., and whose pieces are very excellent. R. at Colorns, in 1868; D. at Vienna, 1860.

Dacuzz, Andrew, det-se-at, a learned French

Dalby

scholar, who, with his wife, produced the "Delthe inventor of the diorama and daguerreo-phin" edition of the Classics for the use of the cs., or sun-pictures, which take from him phin "dition of the Classics for the use of the Gauphin. His translation of Horace appeared the same year; and, in 1691, his translation of the "Reflections of Marces Antoniuns," and the mest year Aristotles "Poetics." For his services to literature, he was appointed perpetual secretary to the Aendemy, rewarded with a pension of 2000 livres, and mad? Keeper of the cabinet of the Louvre. n. at Castras, 1691, p. 1722.—Desides the works above mentioned, he translated Plato into French; the "Lives" of Plutarch, the "Manual" of Epictetus, and several others. several others.

DACTER, Anne, wife of the above, and daugh-DLOTER, Anne, who of the above, and daughter of Le Fevre, professor of Greek at Saumur, received a liberal education. In 1674 she published an edition of Gallinachus, and, in 1681, a translation of Annerson and Sappho, which was followed by versions of some of Plantius's comedies, and of the "Platus" and "Clouds" of Aristophanes. In 1693 she married M. Dacier. and, in 1711, produced her translation of the "Had." Three years after appeared her ver and, in 1711, produced her translation of the "Illadi." Three years after, appeared her version of the "Odyssey;" and this closed her literary labours. D. at Sumur, in 1654; D. 1720.—Madame Dacier was as remarkable for modesty as her crudition. A learned German having paid her a visit, begged that she would write her name and a sentence in his book. She excused hersell as long as she could, but being strongly importuned, she complied, and added to her signature the sentence from Sophocles, "Silence is the ornament of the female sex."

DEDALUS, de'-da-lus, an Athenian, son of Eupalamus, was the most ingenious artist of his To him we are supposed to be indebted for the invention of the wedge and many other mechanical instruments, as also the sails of ships. Having killed, from jealousy, his nephew Talus, Dædalus, with his son Icarus, fled from Athens to Crete, where Minos gave him a cor-dial reception. Here he constructed a famous labyrinth for Minos, in which he himself and his son were subsequently confined; when he made for them wings of feathers and wax for their use, and they took their flight from Crete. The heat of the sun, however, melted the wax on the wings of the sun, however, melted the wax on the wings of Learns, who filew too high, and he fell into that part of the ocean which, from him, has been called the Learian sea. The father alighted at Cumne, in Italy, where he built a temple to Apollo, and thence directed his course to Sielly, where he was kindly received by Cocalas, who reigned over part of the country. He was ultimately put to death by Cocalus, who had been threatened with war by Minos. The flight of Dædalus from Crete, with wings, is explained by observing that he was the inventor of sails, which observing thathe was incinventor of sairs, which is age might pass, at a distance, for wings.

Dagobert I., dog-o-bair, king of France, was recognised as king of Austrasia in 622, and on the death of his father, Clotafre II., in 628, became possessed of Neustria, and in 631 of Aquiting as the death of his bushless (2815bbt). To tania, on the death of his brother Caribort. He subdued the Saxons, Gascons, and Bretons; but tarnished the splendour of his exploits by his cruel and dissolute habits. He founded St. Denis, near Paris, in 632, and was there buried, 638; B. 692.—Dagobert II. succeeded to the kingdom of Austrasia in 656; assassinated 679.

—Dagobert III. succeeded his father, Childebert III. 212.—212. bert III.. 711: D. 715.

es, or sun-pictures, which take from him ir name. He was originally an artist, and became a scene-painter to the opera at Paris, assisting M. Prévost in producing his pano-ramas of the great cities of the world. His ingenuity, however, was continually prompting him to make new efforts in his art; and in 1822, in conjunction with Bouton, he perfected and exhibited the first diorama, which had a great success. For seventeen years he continued in this line, when he discovered the means of de-lineating objects by the chemical action of light. Something similar had been attempted before, by various chemists; but it remained for Daguerre to work out the discovery. To him belongs the merit of producing sun-pictures perfect upon metallic plates. In 1830 he made an exhibition of these pictures, and was named an officer of the Legion of Honour. At the an oncer of the Legion of Honour. At the same time, on condition of publishing his me-thod, an annuity of 6000 francs for life was voted to him by the government, and the provoted to him by the government, and the pro-cess of daguereotyping became generally known. n. at Cormelle, France, 1789, n. at Petit-Brie-sur-Marne, 1831, where a monument has been erected to his memory. DARL, Michael, 2d. A. Swedish portrait pain-ter, who came to England, and met with great success. He had the honour to paint the porsuccess. He had the honour to paint the por-trait of Queen Anne, and was, during her reign and that of George I., the rival of Sir Godfrey Kneller. B. at Stockholm, 1656; D. in London, DAHL, John Christian, a distinguished Nor-wegian landscape-painter, whose views of Italian and Tyrolean scenery were universally admired. In rendering the wild grandeur exhibited by his native country he was equally successful.

nis native country he was equally successful.

B. at Bergen, 1788; D. 1857.

Dahlberg, Eric, dal-bairg, a Swedish general, who, after studying the science of fortification, was, in 1643, appointed an engineer. Gustavus Adolphus sent him to superintend the works for the defence of Thorn, and he attended that monarch in the Polish war. By his advice. that monarch in the Foish war. By his advice, the king undertook the enterprise of marching his army across the Great Belt, when frozen over, in 1857, whereby he extended his conquests to Copenhagen. In 1860 Dahlberg was ento Copenhagen. In 1669 Dahlberg was en-nobled, and in 1669 appointed commandant of Malmo, and superintendent of fortifications. the so greatly improved these, as to be called the Vauban of Sweden. In 1690 he was made governor of Livonia, and died at Stockholm in governor of Livousi, and use at Stockholm in 1703. p. 1925.—He published "Snecia Antiqua et Hodierna," 3 vols. folio, 1700. Dalber, Isaac, dal'-be, a self-taught mathe-matician, who, in 1772, went to London, and received the appointment of usher to Archishop Tenison's grammar-school, then near Charing Cross. Here he got acquainted with many co-lebrated men of science, and subsequently be-came mathematical master of the naval school at Chelsea. He was afterwards engaged in the trigonometrical survey of England, and in 1799 was appointed professor of mathematics in the was appointed processor to mannerman in the senior department of the Royal Military College at High Wycombe. On the removal of that in-stitution to Farnham, Surrey, he accompanied it; butinfirmities were now fast increasing upon him, and he was forced to resign his situation.

B. in Gloucestershire, 1744; D. at Farnham, 1824. Besides other writings of less collective , Louis James Mandé, da-gair, importance he composed for the Military College a "Course of Mathematics," in 2 vols., which representation of Ediaburgh in the House of extended to a sixth edition.

Dale, David, date, an extensive manufacturer and philanthropist, who, having acquired a considerable fortune, devoted it to the encouragement of industry and the improvement of the condition of the labouring classes. this view he creeted the cotton mills at New Lanark. The system he adopted was to give the workpeople an interest in the business by them participators in the profits. They were generally engaged for a specified number were generally rigidated to a specific matter of years, during which they were provided with food, lodging, and clothing, and, at the termination of their engagement, received the share of the surplus profits apportioned to them. Education and the care of their morals also formed prominent features in Mr. Dule's system of treating his workpeople. Mr. Dale likewise of treating his workpropie. Mr. Date his wise attempted, though unsuccessfully, to introduce the cotton manufacture into the county of Sutherland, in the Scottish Highlands. The works at New Lanark were long under the management of the celebrated Robert Owen, who had married Mr. Dale's daughter, and who suceceded to them on the death of his father-inlaw. Mr. Owen further developed the system in operation in accordance with his socialist or community theories, but it did not succeed, and the New Lanark works afterwards passed out of his hands .- (See Owen, Robert.) - Mr. Dale was born at Stewarton, Scotland, in 1738; and died at Glasgow in 1806.

DALE, Rev. Thomas, M.A., canon of St. Paul's, London, was educated at Christ's Hospital and Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, and was or-dained in 1822. He kept a school for some time at Groepwish and also at Dealerth at Greenwich, and also at Beckenham, Kent; and had for his first curacy St. Michael's, Corn-hill. He subsequently held some other church preferments; from 1823 to 1830, was professor of English Language and Literature at the Lon-don University; and from 1836 to 1839 occupied aon cinversity, and from test to test central a similar chair at King's College, London. Sir Robert Peel, in 1835, appointed Mr. Dale rector of St. Bride's, Fleet-street; and, in 1816, promoted him to a canonry in St. Paul's and the rectorship of St. Paneras. He resigned the rectorship of S. Faheras. He resigned the latter post after an incumbency of 14 years, and was appointed to the living of Therfield, Herts. While at Cambridge, Mr. Dele published his "Widow of Nain," "The Outlaw of Taurus," and "Irad and Adah: a Tale of the Flood," Between 1819 and 1822 he published three successive volumes of poems, which, after having passed through several editions separately, were passed through several cultures separately, were in 1338, collected into a single volume. He also gave to the world a translation of Si phoeles, "The Sabbath Companion," "The also gave to the world a transmion of phoeles. "The Sabbath Companion," "The Good Shepherd; a Commentary on the Twenty-third Psalm;" "The Domestic Chaplain and Family Litturg," besides several volumes of sermons preached at St. Hride's, before the university of Cambridge, and on other occasions; and an edition of Cowper, with notes, critical and biographical. B. at Pentonville, August 22, 1797

D'ALEMBERT. (See ALEMBERT, D'.) Dalhousie, James Andrew Broun Ramsay, DILIMOTSTS, James Andrew Broun Ramssy, tenth earl and first marquis of, dai-hoo'se, a modern English statesman, was educated at Harrow, and afterwards entered Christchurch, Oxford, where he graduated M.A. in 1839. In 1832 he became Lord Ramsay, by the death of his elder brothers, and in 1834 contested the Commons, but was unsueres-ful. In 1837, however, he was returned for Haddingtonshire. In the succeeding year, he was called, by the death of his father, to the House of Lords, and in 1943 entered upon official life under the ministry of entered upon official into under the ministry of Sir Robert Peel. His first office was that of vice-president of the Board of Trade, of which he became president in the following year. In this capacity his Lusiness habits were so eminent, and his reforms so judicious, that, on the accession of Lord John Russell to Jower, in accession of Lord sount Russell to Forty in 1840, he was requested to keep his appaintment, which he accordingly did. In 1847, on the recall of Lord Hardinge from India, Lord Dalhousie was appointed governor-general. had now an opportunity of developing those ad-ministrative talents with which he was endowed. On reaching Calcutta, he proclaimed that his policy was to acquire equally direct dominion over the territories of the native princes, as the British already had over those of other parts of India in their possession. Accordingly, on a revolt taking place in Mooltan, he marched a force into the North-western provinces, and, after defeating the Sikhs and Affghans, annexed the Punjab. In two years afterwards, the king of Ava provoked an expedition to be sent against him, when the coast of Burmah was taken by the British, and in 1852 Pegu was incorporated with their dominions, After this, a series of annexations were made, which greatly enlarged the Fritish empire in India. Nagpore, Sattara, Jhansi, Berar, and Oude were successively appropriated, either on account of the tyranay and misrule with which they had been governed, or from the failure of their lawful heirs among the native dynastics. Whilst these events were taking place, the internal resources of the country were being energetically developed and improved. A uniform system of cheap postage was introduced, and a large por-tion of India intersected by railways; the Ganges Canal was cut, and grand trunk roads constructed through various parts. The energy of Lord Dalhousie's administration was apparent in every direction, when, with a broken constitu-tion, he returned to England in 1856. In 1849 he had been created a marguis for his successes in the Punjab; and previous to his return he had, on the death of the duke of Wellington, been appointed to the wardenship of the Cinque Ports, and the East India Company also settled on him a pension of £5000 a year. B. 1812; D. 1860.

Dallas, Sir Robert, dal'-as, a distinguished English lawyer, was the eldest son of Robert Dallas, of Kensington, and after being educated Dails, of heffsington, and after boing edicated at Genera along with his brother George, was entered at the Temple, ealled to the bar, and soon made himself conspicuous by his talent. He was engaged in the defence of Warren fastings, for his editors on which occasion he obtained the edit power of a kings of the control of the constant of the control mons for St. Michael's, Cornwall, in 1802, but, mons for St. Michael's, Cornwall, in 1802, but, being appointed chief-justice of Chester, he vacated his seat, and was subsequently returned for Kirkealdy. He was appointed one of the paisne judges of the Common Pleas in 1813, and succeeded Vienry Gibbs as president of the same court in 1818. In 1823 he resigned his seat on the bench, and died December 25, 1824.

DAILLAS, Sin George, brother of the above, a content of the content of the same at the same at the content of the same at the same a

eminent political writer, began life as a ch

servant of the East India Company, having servint of the East Intal Company, having sailed for Calcutta when only eighteen years o. age. He soon made a name in India, having published at Calcutta, shortly after his arrival a clever poem called "The Indian Guide." Warren Hastings now took him in hand, and warren makings now took him in hand, any chim in pointed superintendent of the collections at Raraeshay, an office a which he filled most satisfactorily for several years. Deing obliged to return to England on account of his health, he was deputed by the residents in Calcult at the research within the the Manager of the collection of Calcutta to present a petition to the House of Commons against Pitt's India Bill. He published a pamphlet in vindication of Warren Hastings in 1789; in 1793 he wrote a work upon the state of affairs and the policy of a war with France, in which he strongly denounced the revolution in that country. This secured the revolution in that country. This secured him the favour of Pitt, who had this piece and others by Pallas reprinted for general distribution. Sir George afterwards wrote a series of letters to Lord Moira on the state of Ireland, which originally appeared in the "Antijacobin." In 1798 he was made a baronet; in the following year he published a pamphlet against concluding year ne puousnea a pampuer against concutaing peace with the "present regicale government of France," and was soon after returned to Parliament for Newport, Isle of Wight. His subsequent publications were "A Letter to Sir W. Pulteney on the Subject of the Trade between India and Europe," "A Defence of the Wars of the Marquis Wellesley in the Decean and Hindrian." And a treat or the Additional Confession of the Marquis Wellesley in the Decean and Hindrian." And a treat or the Additional Confession of the Marquis Wellesley in the Decean and Hindrian." And a treat or the Additional Confession of the Marquis Wellesley in the Decean and Hindrian. and a tract on the religious converdustan."

dustan, and a trace on the Language sion of the Hindus. B. 1758; D. 1833.

Dallas, George Millin, an American lawyer and statesman, was the son of James Alexander Dallas, secretary of the treasury and of war under Jefferson and Madison respectively. The family from which Mr. Dallas sprung has produced several men distinguished in literature. law, statesmanship, &c., in America; while the European branch boasts the names of the above-mentioned Sir Robert and Sir George Dallas; and the sister of the subject of this notice intermarried into the Byron family. George Millin Dallas was bred to the bar, and, after acting as private secretary to Mr. Gallatin in his acting as private secretary or Art. Variant in its mission to St. Petersburg, in 1813, to negotiate peace with England through the mediation of the ezar, returned to America in 1815, and began to practise his profession. He held some legal offices in his native state of Pennsylvania, and in 1831 began his political career as one of the representatives in congress of his own state, attaching himself to the democratic party, and taking an active part in the debates of the house. Mr. Van Buren sent him to St. Petersburg as minister, in 1837, where he remained till 1841, when, on the election of General Harrison to the presidential chair, Mr. Dallas returned home and again devoted himself to the practice of his profession. At the next election he was chosen vice-president, Mr. Polk being the president; and in 1846, as presirolk being the president; and in 1820, as president of the senate, he gave his casting vote against the protective tariff bill which was then the great question of the day. He was minister to the court of St. James under Mr. Buchanan's presidency, and in that capacity had charge of arranging the central American question with arranging me central American question with the British government. He resigned his post on the election of Mr. Lincoln as president. B. at Philadelphia, July 10, 1792. D. 1885. DARRYMPLE, James, dul-rin-pel, first Vis-count Stair, was a native of Ayrshire, and received his education first at the parish school of Mauchline, and afterwards in the university of Glasgow. He served as a captain in Glencairn's regiment during the civil war; was apcarris regiment during the civil war; was appointed professor of philosophy at Glasgow in 1641, and while in this position studied civil law with a view to the bar. He resigned his law with a view to the par. He resigned his chair in 1617, went to Edinburgh, and was ad-mitted an advocate in February, 1618. He was next year chosen secretary to the commission sent by the Scots to negotiate for the return of Charles II., and held the same post again in 1650. Cromwell recommended him to Monk for a seat on the Scottish bench, and in 1657 he was accordingly invested with the judicial ermine. Dal-rymple was knighted at the Restoration, created a baronet in 1664, appointed president of the court of session in 1871, which office he held till 1681, when displeasing the government on the 1881, when displeasing the government on the subject of the Test Act, he was supersaded, and obliged to retire to Holland. He published "Institutions of the Law of Scotland," in 1812, and, while resident at Leyden, transmitted to the Edinburgh press "Decisions of the Court of Session from 1861 to 1881," and published at Leyden in 1868, "Philosophia Nova Experimentalis." He returned to England with the wines of Grane with whom he had become a prince of Orange, with whom he had become a favourite in Holland, and was reinstated in the presidency of the Scottish court. He was made a peer by the title of Viscount Stair in 1690; was reappointed lord advocate; and, in 1691, became one of the principal secretaries of state, an office which he continued to fill till the parliamentary inquiry into the massacre of Glencoa drove him from office in 1695. In the same year he published a work entitled "A Vindica-tion of the Divine Perfections;" and died tion of the Divine Perfections;" and died shortly afterwards. B.1819.

DALBYMEE, David, Lord Hailes, a Scotch judge, who, after finishing his education at Eton and Utrecht, was called, in 1748, to the Scotch bar, and in 1778 appointed a judge, on which cocasion he stock the title of Lord Hailes. In his capacity he was eminently distinguished for the diligence with which he fulfilled his duties; but it is on account of his labours in the field of literature that he is chiefly celebrated. He published a number of books in the form of memoirs and letters, relating to the history of Britain in the reigns of James I. and Charles I.:

pritan in the reigns of James I, and Charles I, "Remarks on the History of Scotland," 12mo, Annals of Scotland," 4to, 2 vols., "Remains of Christian Antiquity," 3 vols.; several Me-noirs intended for a Biographia Scotica; papers in the "World" and "Mirror," and a great many other works, every one of them bearing the stamp of considerable merit. B. at Edin-treph 1794, p. 1209 urgh, 1726; p. 1792.

DALEXMELE, Alexander, an eminent hydro-grapher, who, by the force of his talents, raised himself to considerable eminence in the service of the East India Company. He endeavoured o establish friendly commercial relations be-ween the sultan of Sooloo and the Company, nut was unsuccessful. He returned to England with a like object in view, but failed there also. In 1775 he again went to Madras, where he had been appointed a member of ouncil, and one of the committee of circuit; out in 1777 was, with several others, recalled to lave his conduct investigated regarding some if his proceedings. In 1779 he was appointed hydrographer to the Company, and in 1795, when a similar office was established by the Admiralty, it was given to Dalrymple. This appointment he held till 1908, when he was called upon to resign it on the ground of superannuation. This, however, he refused to do, and was dismissed. B. at New Hailes, Scotland, 1737; D. from vexation, a month after his dismissal from office, 1808.

Dalton, John, dal'-ton, a distinguished mathematician, meteorologist, and natural philosopher, who, from humble circumstances, gradually worked his way into public notice and honourable fame. In his thirteenth year he kept a school at Eaglesfield, Cumberland, and in his fifteenth, removed to Kendal to fill the situation of usher in the school of his cousin, George Bewley. In 1793 he became professor of mathematics and natural philosophy in the New College at Manchester, which he held until the removal of that institution to York in 1799. He continued to reside in Manchester, and gave lessons in private seminaries, and also occupied himself with lecturing upon his favourite subjects. He also filed the appointments of secretary and vice-president to the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, and in 1817 became its president, to which distinction he was elected president, to which distinction he was elected every succeeding year until his death. Meanwhile he had long been known as a contributor to the "Lady's Diary," "The Transactions of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society," and other serials; but it was not bits grand discovery of the atomic theory. In the following year he explained it to Dr. Thomson, and subsequently in some of his more stronger of the writering toward of England. In 1808. lectures, delivered in London and several couer of the principal towns of England. In 1809 appeared the first volume of his "New System of Chemical Philosophy," which, in 1810, was followed by the second volume. In both of these volumes he treated of the atomic theory, which proved one of the most important contri butions that had yet been made to the science of chemistry. By it, the constituents of any article could be regulated with perfect accuracy, and the knowledge of chemical combinations reduced to an amazing degree of simplicity and certainty. It is upon this discovery that his fame rests, as it at once places him amongst the most original inquirers and thinkers of his day. For it the first gold medal of the Royal Society was awarded to him. In 1832 the University of Oxford conferred upon him the title of D.C.L.; Oxiora conferred upon him the dute of D.C.L.; in the following year William IV. gave him a pension of £150 a year, which, in 1836, was raised to £300. In 1834 the University of Edin-burgh conferred on him the degree of LL.D., nourse conterred on nim an eagree of DLD, and in 1833, £2000 was subscribed by his friends in Manchester for a statue to him, to be sculptured by Chantrey, and placed in the entrance-hall of the Royal Institution of that city. In 1821 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, and was also a member of various other learned societies. B. at Eaglesfield, near Cockermouth, Cumberland, 1766; D. at Manchester, 1844.

CHESSET, 1874.

DAMASUS I., POPE, dem-a-sus, was a native of Portugal, and rose to the pontifical chair in 366. He laboured to reform the morals of his time, and extend the discipline of the church. The Arians were opposed by him in several councils. B. 304; D. 384.—Damasus II. was elected pope talents as a sculptor have rendered her name famous, was the daughter of field-marshal Con-way, and was, in 1767, married to the Hon. John Damer. Little felicity, however, followed her union, Mr. Damer having put an end to his own existence in 1776. Mrs. Damer then devoted herself to the gultivation of her taste for the fine arts-a taste which had distinguished her even in youth. She studied under Cerra :chi, the sculptor, and soon became well known for the chaste and classical productions of her chisel. A statue of George III., in the Register Office, Edinburgh; a bust of her mother, the countess of Aylesbury, in Tunbridge Church, Kent; and the bust of Lord Nelson in the council chamber at Guildhall, London, may be named as specimens of her works, of which she produced a great many. B. 1748; D. 1828.

Damocles, dam'-o-klees, a flatterer of Dionysius the tyrant, whom he pronounced the happiest man on earth. This prince, in order to con-vince him of the happiness which a sovereign enjoyed, invited him to a banquet, and caused him to be arrayed and treated as a monarch. During the entertainment, a sword was suspended from the ceiling, over the head of Damocles, by a single horsehair; and thus was cles, by a single noiseman, and typified the happiness of a tyrant.

Damon and Pythias, dav.-non, two Pythagorean philosophers of Syracuse, rendered memorable by their friendship. Dionysias the tyrant having condemned Damon to death, permission was granted him to return to his native place, in order to settle his affairs, Pythias remaining in his stead. The hour fixed for the execution arrived, and Pythias was about to execution arrived, and rydnas was about to suffer the punishment; but Damon returned in time, and a generous contest ensued between them as to who should be the victim. Dionysins was so touched by this faithful friendship, that he pardoned Damon, and asked to be admitted as a third friend. Lived in the 4th century B.C.

Dampier, William, dam'-peer, an English DAMPIER, William, aum peer, an Engissi navigator, who was early sent to sea, and first sailed in a Bristol privateer. After cruising a considerable time on the American coast, and considerable time on the American coase, and taking several prizes, principally from the Spaniards, Dampier went aboard another becausering ship. Not meeting with success, be sailed for the East Indies, where he left the vessel, and proceeded to the English factory at Acheen. Afterwards he became grumer to the other street Personner 1. 100 the became of the content of the conten factory at Bencoolen. In 1691 he embarked for England, and arrived there the same year, when he published his "Voyage round the World," which was well received by the public. He had on a voyage of discovery to the South Seas. In this expedition he explored the north and northtins expectation the exported the north and no the west coasts of Australia, with Shark's Bay. He also explored New Guinea, New Britain, and New Ireland; but, on his return home, was wrecked on Ascension Island. In 1701, howwrecked on Ascension Island. In 1701, however, he arrived in England, and published an account of his vorage. He continued to follow the sea till 1711, after which his life is lost in boscarity. In in Somerateshire, 1652. There is a portrait of Dampler in the Trinity House. His "Vorages" bear the stamp of truth, and are written in a vivid style of narrative.

Days, Richard Henry, daw'-na, an American writer, who was educated at Harvard College, Massachuseffs, with a view his following the

in 1048, and only survived his election twenty. Massachusetts, with a view to his following the legal profession. Delicacy of health, however, DAMES, Hon. Anne Scymour, dai'-mer, whose applied himself to the more congenial pursuits of literature and politics. In 1817 he became a contributor to the "North American Review," and, from the attractive character of his articles, was introduced to a share in its management. This continued till 1820, when his connexton with this periodical ceased. Pra now started "The Idle Man," which lived only through one volume, and in which his "Tom Thornton" published a collection of his poems and prose writings, and another edition in 1850. Mr. Dana, however, principally confined himself to miscellaneous writing, and to occasional lecturing on poetry. D. at Cambridge, near Boston, 1787.

Dinny, Francis, A.R.A., däu'-be, a modern critcit, received his carllest lessons in design at the School of Arts in Dublin, and after equilifing some distinction in that city, he, in 1820, removed to Fajanal, and took up his residence at Bristol, whence he sent his pictures annually to the exhibition of the Royal Academy, but with little success till 1824, when his "Sunset at Sea after a Storm" attracted considerable notice. This picture was purchased by Sir Thomas Lawrence. The following year he sent his "Delivery of Israel out of Egypt," which was highly thought of, and he became an associate of the Academy. He now worked hard, and crhibited several pictures, which increased his reputation. In 1829, on account of some domestic affairs, he left England, and was absent for ten or twelve years, when he returned, and began to exhibit again. He had now attained the summit of his art, and continued to produce a great many first-class paintings. Among these may be named his "Morning at Rhodes," "The Bellage," "A Holy Family," "Caius Marius amid the Rains of Carthage," "The Delvage," "The D Inflace, "and "A will seasmore as Sunsec." In State as the Westford, in Ireland, 1783. In 1861.

Dance, George, jun, dance, an eminent architect, whose first work was the prison of Newgate, begun by him in 1770. He also designed St. Luke's Hospital and the front of Guildhall, which, as an artistic performance, is remarkable only for its absurdity. He was also the architect of the British Institution, formerly the Shakspeare Gallery, Pall Mall, and the theart at Bath. He held the appointment of city surveyor till 1818, when he resigned in favour of Mr. W. Montague, a pupil of his own. B. in London, 1749; n. in 1825; and was buried near Wren and Rennei in S.F. Paul's Cathedral.

Dayson, Buniel, dan-ery an extraordinary English miser who, in 1768, seceeded to a considerable estate. Propriitistanding this, he considerable estate estate in the constant of the large and the makind arose from the ord his hary and he was estlorn the common, or of his other gap of stord from under the bedges. He was frequently and therefore suit up the door of his house, and got in and out by an upper vindow, making use of a ladder, which he drew up after him. His sister, who lived with him many years, left him, at her death a considerable increase to his wealth; and, on this occasion, he bought a second-hand upin to fluids elections to making.

self in decent mourning. This was an article of luxury, for, at other times, Daniel were hay-bands on his legs. D. 1714, hear Harrow, in Middlesex; D. 1795; and left his estates to Lady Tempest, who had been very charitable to both him and his sister, under the notion that they were poor.

DANGOURS, Florence Carton, dang-koop, a French dramatist of the time of Louis XIV, by whom he was patronized. He was originally intended for the church, but preferred the bar, which he in turn abandoned for the profession of actor and author. He was a great favourité with Louis, in whose service he passed thirty-eight years, and then retired to his estate in Berri, where he passed the remainder of his life in retirement. His works, principally faces, the seenes of which are laid in low life, occupy vie volumes, n. at Fontainebleau, 1661;

p. 1726.
Dindolo, Enrico, dan'-do-lo, doge of Venice, to which office he was elected in 1102, being then 83 years old. He raised the Venetian republic to a considerable height by the vigour and wisdom of his government. In 1201 he engaged in the crusade, and conquered Zara, which had revolted against the Venetians. In 1293, though menty 80 years of 2go, he greatly distinguished himself at the slege of Constantinople, on the taking of which he was created despot of Romania. D. in 1203.

Dandolo, Andrea, doge of Vonice, extended the commerce of the republic by a union with Egypt, which produced a war between the Venetians and the Genosee, which lasted several years. He was a man of letters, wrote a "History of Venice," and corresponded with Petrarch. B. about 1907. p. in 1854.

Dantolan, Andrew. (See Philipper, Dantel, Samuel, &da-ley, an English poet and historian, who became groom of the privy

DANIGAN, Andrew. (See PHILIDOR.)
DANIEL, Samuel, dai-vg-i, an English poet and historian, who became groom of the privy chamber to the queen of James I. At the closs of his life he redired to a farm in his native county, where he die in 1610; a. in Somersethire, 1802. His poems and dramatic pieces were collected, and printed in 2 vols. 12mo, 1718. The most important are an hercic poem in six books, on the Wars of York and Lancaster, "Musophilus," a very elegant composition; a trugedy of "Cleopatra;" and the "Complaint of Resamond." Besides these, three are several masques, sonnets, odes, and epistles. He also wrote the "History of England to the End of the Reign of Edward III.," which, according to some authors, is the best of all his works.

Some authors, is the Desk of all alls works.

DANIEL, Gabriel, &d-in-ed, a French historian, who entered among the Jesuits at the age of cighteen, and became historiographer of France under Louis XIV., who gave him a pension of 2000 francs. One of his first productions was a "Voyage to the World of Descartes," which has been translated into several languages. His greatest performance, however, is "The History of France," published at Paris in 3 vols. folio, 1713, but afterwards enlarged to 7 vols. 4to, 1722. This work is said to have little mett as a whole. It is rather a history of the kings than of the people, is feeble in syle, and full of in-accuracies. He also wrote several missellar-mous and theological treatises. B. at Rouen, mous and theological treatises.

of a ladder, which he drow up after him. His 1689; n. at Paris, 1728. At the sister, who lived with him many years, left him. Danker, William, R.A., dist-get, an artist at her death, a considerable increase to his and engrewer, who, at the age of fourteen, went wealth; and, on this occasion, he bought a tith his uncle to India, and commenced sketch-second-hand pair of black stockings to put him ing all that struck them as beautiful or interesting between Cape Comorin and Serinagur, in the Himalaya mountains. They were ten years engaged in this task, and many of their views engaged in this task, and many of their views were subsequently published in a work called "Oriental Scenery," which appeared, completed, in 6 vols. folio in 1808. As an engraver, Mr. Daniell produced several other works of great Daniel produced several other works of great merit, and between 1814 and 1825 was occupied in getting up a work entitled a "Yoyage round Great Britain," for which he spent the summer of every year in making notes and collecting of every year in making notes and collecting drawings. Besides these, he painted in oil many large pictures of scenes in India, and, in conjunction with Mr. Paris, produced, in 1832, a panorama of Madras, and, more recently, "The City of Lucknow." B. 1769; p. 1837. DANBELL, John Frederick, a distinguished chemist and meteocologisk, who commenced life as a sugar-refuter, but, becoming acquainted with Professor Brande, they, togother, stand with Professor Brande, they, togother, stand with Professor Brande, they togother, stand and Art," and supervisional of the first twart volumes of that superintended the first twenty volumes of that serial. In 1820 Daniell published an account of his new hydrometer, an instrument which has been of immense service to meteorology. In 1923 his "Meteorological Essays" appeared, and 1323 ms mercorological assays appeared, and raised him still higher in the rank of men of science. His "Essay on Artificial Climates" appeared in 1824, and in 1831, on the establishment of King's College, he was made professor of chemistry. About this time a description of his new pyrometer was given to the world, and for the invention of this instrument, the Royal Society awarded him the Rumford medal. In 1837 he received the Copley medal for discovering a mode by which a continuous current of voltaic electricity may be maintained. In 1842 he received one of the Royal medals for a paper on the theory of salts. In 1843 the University of Oxford conferred upon him the honorary degree of D.C.L., and in the same year a second edition of an "Introduction to Chemical Phicontinuous an "Introduction to Chemical Fin-losophy" appeared. With his professorship, he held other important appointments, and was for thirty years a member of the Royal Society. nor anny years a memoer or the noyal Society.

310

Dante

B. in London, 1790; D. 1845. Besides the above, he wrote a great many treatises upon subjects connected with his favourite studies.

DANNEGRES, John Henry, dan'ai-ker, a distinguished German sculptor, was born at Stuttgardt of humble parentage, but early evincing a taste for the fine arts, and especially for sculpture, he attracted the notice of Charles Duke of Wurtemberg, who took him under his protection, and procured his admission to the Military Artistic Academy of Stuttgart, where he made such progress, that when only 16 years of age, he obtained a prize for his model of Milo. This was in 1774. He subsequently visited Paris was in 1774. He subsequently visited Paris and Rome, in the latter of which cities he met Canova, and derived much benefit from his con-versation and instruction. Dannecker returned versation and in 1796, and shortly afterwards completed the "Ariadne," one of his finest works. His noblest effort, however, is his statue of Christ, which occupied him eight years, was finished in 1824, and is now in the possession of the Emperor of Russia. Danpossession of the Emperor of Indesaga Particles necker was especially eminent for the beauty of the features, the elegant pose, and the fine proportions of his statues. B. 1753; D. 1841.

DANTIN, Jean Pierre, danta, a French

DANTAN, Jean Pierre, dan'th, a French sculptor, whose father followed the same profession, and in whose studio he first imbibed the principles of his art. He subsequently studied under Bosio, and, when he first essayed m his own account, produced several bust and portrait studies, which excited considerable admiration, and at once brought him prominently muration, and at once brought him prominently into notice. His genius, however, led him into he study of carleature, when, about 1832, he aptivated he humorous inclinations of the Juristians by a series of grotesque statuettes, which he called "Charges," of the principal celebrities of the capital. These were nothing more than exaggerated portraits of the leading more than esaggerated portraits of the realing features of the face, rendered with great in-genuity, yet without being ridiculous. They were new and striking, and "took" with the public amazingly. One of the peculiarities of these "Charges" was, that the heads were disproportionately large, whilst the bodies upon which they were placed were as disproportion-ately diminutive. They were executed with a view to correctness of attitude and expression. in so far as regarded the individuals they were intended to represent, although all about them was either exaggerated or diminished to an amusing degree of absurdity. The consequence to these "celebrities" in the hands of Dantan was great popularity; and as many of them, such as Paganini, Lablache, Thalberz, were men continually before the public, it may be presumed that the genius of the sculptor helped to extend rather than circumscribe their fame. B. at Paris, 1800.

DANTE, or DURANTE, Alighieri, dau'-tai, the most distinguished of Italian poets, in early life served his country both as a soldier and a politician. He became one of the priori or chief magistrates of his native city of Florence about 1300, when the contentions of the two factions of the Bianchi and the Neri were at their height. He joined the former, which, being the weakest, was overcome in the struggic, and Dante fall-ing with his party, was banished, and his pro-perty confiscated. For many years he was doomed to bear the sorrows of an oxile. At length he was taken under the protection of Guido da Polenta, lord of Ravenna, under whose roof he passed the remainder of his days. was during his exile that Dante wrote his poem, of world-wide fame, "La Divina Commedia." It comprises three poems, or distinct acts—Hell, Purgatory, and Paradise. The poet, describing the fate of souls after "shuffling off this mortal coil," places in hell and purgatory all those who are remarkable either for their crimes or vices (especially those who were the authors of his misfortunes), and in paradise those who have done good deeds on paradise those who have done good uccus on carth. He is supposed, in company with Virgil, to descend to the infernal regions, and three describe the various punishments of sin-ners, whilst Beatrice, his first-loved earthly companion, leads him through the delights of paradise. This extraordinary composition is one of the most sublime productions which have ever emanated from the genius of man, although many passages are full of extra-vagances, and others, from their peculiar allusions, are very obscure. "La Commedia" allusions, are very obscure. "La Commedia" was the first poem ever written in the Italian language; before it, the Latin tongue was always employed. The best edition is that of Venice, 1787, 5 vols. 4to. This poem has found in all countries a host of editors, commentators, and translators. Dante also wrote some works in Latin, particularly one on Monarchy, and another, "De Vulgari Eloquentia." It is, however, on his "Divina Commedia" that his fame securely rests. A monument was erected to his memory in the church of Santo Croce, in Florence, and opened to public view on the 21th of March, 1830. This tardy justice to the memory of a great poet, by his countrymen, may have been stimulated by the reproving lines of Byron, in the 4th canto of "Childe Harold," beginning— "Ungrateful Florence! Dante sleeps afar!"

Darnley

DANTE, Jean Baptiste, of the same family as the poet, was remarkable for his mechanias the pock, was remarkable for his mechanical genius, the most noted production of which was a pair of wings, which were so nicely constructed, that he could support himself in the air, and fly across the Thrasiments lake, near Perugia, of which city he was a native. This machine nearly immortalized him in a not very agreeable manner, however, for in an exhibition of its powers before the people, one of the wings broke, Dante fell upon the one of the whigs block, Dame, and severely shattered his thigh. This put an end to his acrial excursions, and he subsequently devoted himself to mathematics, of which he was pro-fessor at Venice. Died towards the end of the 15th century, before he had attained his 40th year.

Danton, George Jacques, dan'-tweng, a leading demagogue in the French revolution, was a lawyer, and attained notoriety in that storm which brought prominently into notice a number of persons who would otherwise have passed their days in obscurity. He displayed extraordinary talents in the National Convention, and was a powerful speaker. He was the leader of the Cordeliers club, was accused of having instigated the massacre of the 2nd of September, and was a man of debauched character in private life. He was mainly instrumental in organizing the opposition to the Prussian invasion after the sanguinary scenes of September, his declaration, in the midst of general terror and confusion, that the "country was in danger, and could only be saved by boldness, incessant boldness, nothing but boldness," having roused the populace to make those efforts which resulted in the defeat of the Duke of Brunswick at Jena, and the commencement of that career of conquest and aggression which closed only on the field of Waterloo. Robes-pierre supplanted him, and he died under the guillotine in 1794. B. at Arcis-sur-Aube, 1759. D'ABBLLY, Madame Frances, dar-blai, was the daughter of Charles Burney, the author of the "History of Music," and, in 1793, married a French emigrant artillery officer, with whom she afterwards went to France, and who, on the restoration of the Bourbons, attained the rank of general. After the termination of the war, they returned to England, and settled at Bath, where her husband died in 1818. She continued to reside at Bath up to the time of her death. B. at Lynn Regis, 1752; D. at Bath, 1940.-Madame D'Arblay's maiden name was Frances Burney, and she gained considerable celebrity by her literary productions. These were mostly in the paths of fiction, in which she produced four novels, "Evelina," "Ceollia," "Camilla," and the "Wanderer." For this last she received £1500, although it is but an indifferent performance. She wrote several other works, among which were Memoirs of her father, which, in 1832, she published in 3 vols.

DARCET, John, dar'-sai, a French chemist and physician, who became professor of che-mistry in the National Institute of Paris. He published several papers on the management of potteries, and the nature of earths fit to be used in those manufactories. He also gave used in those manufactories. He also gave analyses of several minerals, and published the "State of the Pyrenees, and of the Causes of their Wasting." B. at Donazit, Landes, 1725; D. at Paris, 1801. DARCY, Patrick.

DARCY, Patrick. (See ARCY, Patrick d'.) DARIUS THE MEDE, da-ri'-us, the prince mentioned in the Scriptures, is, according to some, the same as Cyaxares, son of Astyages, and maternal uncle to Cyrus. D. at Babylon, about 348 B.C.

DARIUS I., king of Persia, was the son of Hystaspes. He entered into a conspiracy with six others against the usurper Smerdis, whom they slew, and then made an agreement that he should have the crown whose horse should ne should have the crown whose drove should neigh first in the morning. By a plan concerted, by the groom of Darius, a certain spot was fixed upon, and when the candidates came to the place, the horse of Darius suddenly neighed, in consequence of which he was saluted king. He subsequently took Babylon, after a siege of ten months, rebuilt the temple of Jerusalem, and restored the captive Jews to their own country. At Marathon his forces were defeated by the Greeks, on which he resolved to carry on the war in person, but died in the midst of his preparations, 485 B.C.; B. about 550 B.C.
Darrus II. was surnamed Ochus or Nothus

(bastard), because he was an illegitimate son of Artaxerxes. After the murder of Xerxes, he ascended the Persian throne, and espoused Parysatis, his sister, a cruel princess, by whom he had Artaxerxes Mnemon, afterwards king, and

Cyrus the Younger. D. 404 B.C. DARIUS III., surnamed Codomannus, was the last king of Persia. The peace of his kingdom was early disturbed by Alexander, who invaded Persia to avenge the injuries which the Greeks The king of Persia met his adversary in person, at the head of 600,000 men. This army was remarkable, however, more for the splendour of its equipment than its military courage. A battle was fought near the Granicus, in which notice was sought near the Granicus, in which the Persians were easily defeated. Another was soon after fought near Issus, where Alexander left 1,1000 of the enemy dead on the field, and took, among the prisoners of war, the mother, wife, and children of Darius. The darkness of the hight favoured the retreat of Darius, who saved himself by flying in disguise. These losses weakened, but did not discourage. The Persian monarch, who assembled another more powerful army, with which he encountered his enemy at Arbela. The victory was long doubtful; but the intrepdity of Alexander and the superior valour of the Macedonians, ultimately prevailed over the effeminate Persians, and Darius fled towards Media. His misfortunes were now almost at an end. Besus, the governor of Ractria, in hopes of succeeding him on the throne, attempted his life; and Darius was found by the Macedonians, and Darius Macedonians. the Persians were easily defeated. and Darius was found by the Macedonians, in his chariot, expiring, covered with wounds, 330 B.C. In him the empire of Persia was extinguished, 229 years after it had been first founded by Cyrus the Great. (See ALEXANDER THE GREAT.)

DARNLEY. Earl of, darn'-le, son of the Earl of Lennox, the ill-fated husband of Mary queen of Scots, was married to her in 1565, and two years afterwards was blown up by gunpowder in a house where he was lying unwell, in the neighbourhood of Holyrood palace, at

D'Aubiene'

Edinburgh. (See Mark Stuart.)
Darquier, Augustin, dar-ke-ai, a French astronomer, and member of the National Institute, who early discovered a strong inclination for the study of astronomy, which he cultivated with ardour; purchasing instruments, and establishing an observatory in his own house. He also educated pupils, paid the expenses of calculations, and sought for no pecuniary aid from government. His last observations were printed in Lalande's "Histoire Céleste," and printed in Lalanue's Historic Cenesus, and are brought down to March, 1798. B. at Toulouse, 1718; p. 1802.

Dary, Pierre Antoine Noel Bruno, Count, dur-oo, a distinguished poet, historian, and statesman of France, who entered the military service of his country, notwithstanding an ardent attachment which he had to literary pursuits. He rose through a succession of pursuits. The rose united a succession of employments, writing poetry, and assisting in the military organization of the army. He attracted the notice of the first consul, and, in tracted the notice of the first consul, and, in 1802, became a member of the Tribunal. In 1805 he was made a counsellor of state, and general-intendant of the Imperial household. This last office he hesitated to accept. "I have spent my life among books," said he, "and have not had time to study the arts of the courtier."
"Of courtiers I have plenty," said Napoleon I.;
"they will never fail, but I want a minister, at once enlightened, vigilant, and firm." He sub-sequently became the confidential friend of the emperor, and his prime minister. In 1812 he opposed the expedition to Russia, as he did several other of the emperor's schemes. On the abdication of Napoleon, he retired from public life, and, although exiled by the first government of the restored Bourbons, was recalled in 1819, and made a peer of France. He afterwards wrote a "Life of Tully," and a "History of Venice." B. at Montpellier, 1767; D. 1829.

DARWIN, Erasmus, dar'-win, an English physician and poet, who, in 1755, took his bache-lor's degree in medicine at Cambridge, and on that occasion produced a thesis in which he maintained that the movements of the heart and arteries are immediately produced by the stimulus of the blood. From Cambridge he restimulus of the blood. From Campringe ne re-moved to Edinburgh, where he took his dector's degree, after which he practised at Lichfield. In 1757 he married Miss Howard, of that city, who died in 1770; after which he mar-ried the widow of Colonel Pole, who brought has been adjusted. He then removed to ried the widow of Colonel Pole, who brought him a good fortune. He then removed to Derby, where he passed the remainder of his life. Dr. Darwin's literary fame rests upon his "Botanie Garden," with philosophical notes, in two parfse-1, "The Economy of Vegetation." 2. "The Loves of the Plants," 2 vols. 8. "Gonomia, or the Laws of Organie Life," 8vo. 4. "Phytologia, or the Philosophy of Agriculture and Gardening," I vol. 4to. In these works the poet, botanist, and philosopher amener to advantage, although they are now appear to advantage, although they are now little read. Besides these, he was the author of papers in the "Philosophical Transactions," and a tract on "Female Education," 4to. He had also a share in the formation of the "System of Vegetables" of Linnaus, published in the name of the Botanical Society at Lichfield. n. near Newark, Nottinghamshire, 1731; n. at Derby, 1502. Danwrs, Charles, F.R.S., an eminent modern naturalist, who distinguished himself by his discoveries in the paths of zeology and geology. He is also widely known by his work entitled "The Voyage of Naturalists." This is a record of the observations which he made in several of the countries visited by his Majesty's ship Bengle, between the years 1832 and 1836, to which he had been attached as naturalist. He also wrote several other works, which place him high among geologists. His "Origin of Speries by means of Natural Selection," has gone through several editions, and been the occasion of much controversy among the learned. B. at

Shrewsbury, Feb. 12, 1809.

DATAMES, dat'-a-mees, a Persian general under Artaxerxes II., who gained many victories over the enemies of that prince. Being disgraced, however, by the king, to whom cuvious courtiers had misrepresented him, he raised Cappadocia in revolt, and defeated Artabazes, whom the king sent against him. Assassinated by Mithridates, 361 B.C.-Cornelius News has written his life.

Datis, dai'-tis, a general of Darius I., had the command, in conjunction with Artaphernes, of the Persian army which was defeated by Mil-tiades at Marathon, 49) B.c.—He was subse-quently put to death by the Spartans.

DAUBENTON, Louis - Jean - Marie, do-ben'-tawng, a French anatomist and naturalist, who became assistant to Buffon in the royal garden, and keeper of the king's museum. In 1744 he was admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences, and contributed several valuable papers to their memoirs. He had also a considerable share in the production of Buffon's "Natural History," generally furnishing the anatomical descriptions. His "Instructions to Shepherds," 1784, Svo, is an excellent work. He was likewise the author of "A Methodical View of Minerals," and contributed several articles to the "Encyclopædia." Daubenton was the prin-

the "Encyclopacita." Daubenton was the principal means of introducing and successfully propagating the breed of Spanish sheep in France. He was married to the authories of "Zélic dans le Désert," with whom he lived in great happiness. n. at Montbard, Burgundy, 1716; n. et Paris, 1800.

DATERNY, Charles Glies Bridle, M.D., F.R.S., duw be-ne, distinguished himself by his labours in the fields of geology, chemistry, and physiological botany. On these subjects he published a great many papers, whilst performing his duties as professor of botany and chemistry in the University of Oxford. In 1836 he was elected president of the British Association. n. 1785; p. 1867.

tion. B. 1795; D. 1867. D'Aubigne', Jean Henri Merle, do-been'-yai, a Swiss theologian, who, for some time, was the paster of a French church in Hamburg, whence he removed to Brussels, where he acquired great popularity as a preacher. It is, however, on account of his great work, entitled "A History of the Reformation of the 16th Century," that he is here noticed, a performance which has acquired an immense popularity. which has acquired an immense popularity. He also wrote several other works; among which we may name "The Protector (Commell); a Vindication;" and Germany, England, and Scotland." His sympathies leasting greatly towards the evangelical Protestumism of the last-named country, to which he paid frequent visits, and, in 1856, received the freedom of the city of Edinburgh. B, at Genev:

D'Aubigne'

D'Arbigne', Theodore Agrippa. (See Au-BIGNE', D'.)

Daun, Leopold Joseph Maria, Count, down celebrated Austrian general, who served the and glory. He commenced his mulitary career against the Turks; but it was as a commander in the armies which were engaged in the Seven Years' War against the king of Prussia, that he attained the acme of his glory. After a serie of good fortune, however, he mot with a defeat at Torgau, in 1760. p. 1705; p. at Vienna

DAUNOU, Pierre Claude François, dan-noo. a distinguished politician and man of letters, after being a student of divinity at Montmorency, was professor at Troyes, Soissons, and Bou-logne. His first appearance as an author was in 1787, when he published an essay on the influence of Boileau on French literature, which was well received. In 1702 he became a member of the National Convention, in which he voted for the detention of Louis XVI., but opposed his execution. He was subsequently imprisoned by the Jacobins, and escaped the guillotine on the occurrence of the revolution of 9th Thermidor. On resuming his seat in the Convention, he was appointed one of a commission to draw up a new constitution, was for some time reporter, and afterwards secretary of the Convention, in which last office he continued till remon, in which has ounce he continued till the close of its sittings, when he was appointed a member of the Council of Five Hundred. He pronounced, by order of the republic, the calogium on General Hoche in the Champs de Mars; was sent to organize the Roman republic in 1700; and elected president of the Council of Five Hundred on his return. He opposed the proceedings of Napoleon on the 19th Brumaire, and refused several offices tendered to him. He, however, as a member of the Tribunate, pronounced an harangue on the battle of Marengo, and moved the honours decreed to Desaix. He was archivist to the legislative body and the empire from 1804 till the restoration, when he centire from 1894 till the restoration, when he lost his places, and took to journalism, having conducted the "Journal des Savants" till 1838, which position he resigned on being named perpetual secretary of the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres. He was restored to his offices at the revolution of 1830, and was subsequently made a peer of France. He was avoluminous writer, having contributed to the "Biographie Universelle," the "Histoire Litraire," and the "Journal des Savants," upwards of 330 different papers, besides other writhers. n. 1761: n. 1810.

writings. D. 1761; D. 1840.

DAVENANT, Sir William, dav'-nant, an English oct, who, after being some time at Lincoln poot, who, after being some time at Lincoin College, became page to the duchess of Richmond, and then to Lord Brooks. In 1837 he succeeded Ben Jonson as poet laureate; and, having fought for the king during the civil war, received, in 1633, the honour of knighthood. On the decline of the royal cause, he went to France, and formed a plan of carrying out to Vicente in America some artificers: but his France, and formed a plan of carrying out to Virginia, in America, some artificers; but his ship was taken by English cruisers, and he himself would have suffered death, had not Milton interceded on his behalf. This generous act he was enabled, at a future day, similarly to repay to Milton. At the

David Comnenus

Restoration he obtained a patent for creeting a theatre in Lincoln's-Inn Fields, and devoted himself to dramatic composition and poetry. B. at Oxford, 1605; D. in London in 1668, and was interred in Westminster Abbey. His works were published together in 1678.—His son, Charles Davenant, was well versed in politics, and acquired some reputation by his poetic works, as also others connected with political and social economy. His works were published in five volumes 8vo, 1771. B. 1656; D. 1714. DAVID, Sr., da-vid, a British saint, who, in the 5th century, was bishop of Caerleon, and the metropolitan of the Weish church. He subsequently removed his see to Mynyw, which came to be called Ty Dewl, or the house of St. David. There are many churches dedicated to him in Wales; but the notion of his being the patron saint of that country, and his originating its symbol in the leek, are treated as modern inventions. Lived in the 5th century.—The wearing of the leek, in Wales, on St. David's day, wearing of the teck, in water, on St. David's day, probably originated from the custom of "Cym-hortha," or the friendly aid, practised among farmers. In some districts of South Wales, all the neighbours of a small farmer were wont to appoint a day when they attended to plough his land, and the like; and, at such time, it was the custom for each to bring his portion of leeks ouston for each to bring his portion of recess with him for making the broth or soup.

DAVID I., king of Scotland, succeeded his brother Alexander the Fierce, in 1124. He was brother Alexander the Fierce, in 1124. He was reared in England, and married Maud, grand-nieee of William the Conqueror. When called to the Soutish throne, he held the carledom of Northumberland and Huntingdon, and, on the cleath of Henry I., king of England, main-tained the claim of his daughter Maud against Stephen, and seized Caribiae. Ho was, however, decated at the battle of Northallerton, in 1138, The following year a negotiation was entered nto, by which Carlisle was suffered to remain n the possession of David. p. at Carlisle, 153.

DAVID II., king of Scotland, was the son of Robert Bruce, at whose death he was but five years old. On the invasion of his country by years out. On the investor in scenaria years ballo, he was sent to France; but his party revailing, after a bloody contest, he returned a 1342. He made several inroads on England, at was taken prisoner and conveyed to the 'ower, where he was confined till 1357, when, m paying a heavy ransom, he was set free. D.

DAVID OF HIRAZUG, surnamed the Black, a Welsh divine, bard, and grammarian. The literary compositions of the Welsh being affected by their conquest by Edward I., this divine was chosen to modify the grammar and system of prosody of Edeyrn, agreeably to the regulations which took place on that occasion. He also ranslated several copies of a Missal, or the office of the Virgin, into Welsh. Flourished in the 14th century.

DAVID AP GWILYM, a celebrated Welsh bard, the composed a variety of beautiful poems, inder the patronage of Ivor the Generous. he subject of the greater part of these is love. he hundred and forty-seven of them he dedicated to the fair Morvid, his mistress; but she rejected his suit, and married Rhys Gwgan, an fficer in the English army at the battle of ressy. Flourished in the 14th century. His orks were printed in London, in 1789.

DAVID COMMENUS, the last emperor of

David

Davis

Trebizond, usurped the throne on the death of his brother John. In 1461 he relinquished his kingdom to Mahomet II., on condition that the latter should espouse his daughter Anne, and that his own life should be saved. The sultan observed the first of these conditions, but caused David to be put to death, with seven of his sons, 1462.

David, Jacques Louis, da-veed, a celebrated French artist, who, after studying in Paris, went to Rome, where his talents for historical painting rapidly developed themselves. In 1789 he produced his picture representing Lucius Junius Brutus passing sentence of death upon his son Titus, which, to some extent, may be considered to have indicated the tendency of his mind towards democratic political principles. He became a devoted admirer of the cipies. He became a devoted admirer of the monsters Robespierre and Marat, and eagerly accepted office in the bloodiest periods of the great Revolution. He became a member of the National Convention, an adherent of the Jacobins, and imagined he discovered in Robespierre a resemblance to Phocion, and in Collot d'Herbois a reproduction of Marius. He painted pictures of republican heroism, voted for the death of Louis XVI., and escaped guillothing himself only on account of his artistic celebrity. In 1800 Napoleon appointed him painter to the government; and throughout the imperial rule, his influence controlled, to a large extent, the fine arts in France. On the full of the emperor, he was driven into exile. B. at Paris, 1743; D. at Brussels, 1825. The best paintings of David, however excellent in other respects, are deficient in vitality. His figures have the form, but not the breath of life in them; consequently, they can be considered as them; consequently, they can be considered as little more than beautiful sculptures represented on canvas. His best works are the "Oath of the Horatin," the "Rape of the Sabhes," the "Doath of Socrates," and "Napoleon presenting the Imperial Eagles to his Troops." His portrait of Napoleon I. is generally well known.

David, Félicien, a modern French composer, who, after attaining to considerable excellence on the violin, became musical director at the church of Saint-Sauveur, Aix. Here he con-tinued to devote himself to his professional duties; but becoming imbued with the doctrines duties; but becoming imbued with the doctrines of Saint-Simon, he, with some others, paid a visit to Egypt, the Holy Land, and the Desert. He was gone three years, and when he returned, published some "Oriental Melodies," which were not well received. Still devoting himself to study, he adopted loftler themes for the excise of his genius, and in 1844 produced his ode entitled "The Desert," which met with a brilliant success. After this, came his "Moses on the Moont," "Christopher Columbus," for which Louis Phillippe conferred on him the cross of the Legion of Honour; and several other works of great merit. B. at Cadenet, in Vaucluse, 1816.

Davins, Sir John, dai'-vis, an English poet,

12mo. B. at Chisgrove, Wiltshire, 1570: D. 1626.

Davies, Thomas, an intelligent and enter-prising publisher, who was educated at Edinburgh, and becoming an actor, received an engagement at the Haymarket Theatre, London. He subsequently became a bookseller in Russell-He subsequently became a bookseller in Russell-street, Coverlegarder, where he was patronized by Dr. Johnson, and, through him, by other celebrities of his time. In 1750 he published the "Life of Garrick," which had a good sale. He also wrote "Dramatic Miscellanies," the "Life of Henderson the Player," and several fagitive pieces. Dr. Johnson declared that Davies was "learned enough for a clergy-man." The Doctor was first introduced to Bos-well in his hock show and beth he and his well in his back shop; and both he and his well in his back shop; and both he and his wife, distinguished by her beauty, were highly esteemed by the great lexicographer, who lived on as easy an intimacy with them, as with any family he visited. It was the unmerciful ridicule of Churchill in his "Rosciad" which drove Davies from the stage :-

"With him came mighty Davies ;- on my life, That Davies has a very pretty wife!—on my me, Statesman all over—in plots famous grown,
He mouths a sentence as curs mouth a bone!"

в. 1712; р. 1785.

DATLA, Henrico Caterino, da'-ve-la, an Italian historian, whose family was of Spanish extraction, and had furnished several constables to the island of Cyprus. The Turks taking this rie Hand of Cybus. The Turks taking this island, at an early age he was brought from Padua to France, where his father enjoyed the favour of Henry III, and Catharine de Medici. In compliment to these royal friends, he re-ceived his baptismal names; and, at first a page, he afterwards took service under Henry IV. and was present, during the civil war in 1597, at Honfieur and Amiens. He afterwards re-turned to Padua, and then fixed his residence at turned to Padua, and then fixed his residence at Venice, where he again took up arms and rendered great services to the republic. He now set about writing, in Italian, a "History ride Civil Wars in France, from the Death of Henry II. to the Peace of Vervins," which was published at Venice, 1859. His history is universally esteemed for the exacences of its facts and the excellence of its style, although the author has been reproached with showing some partiality for Catharine de Medici. It has been translated into French several times, and also into English. P. near Padua, 1876; assassinated near Verona, 1631.

DAYIS, John deliveis, an English navierator.

Davis, John, dai-vis, an English navigator, who, in 1585, had the command of an expedition to discover a N.W. passage to America. In this voyage he discovered the strait called by his name. The year following he sailed on the same design, and having explored the coasts of Greenland and Iceland, proceeded as far as lat. the atount," "Christopher Columbus," for Greenland and Iceland, proceeded as far as lat. which Louis Philippe conferred on him the cross of the Legion of Honour; and several other works of great merit. B. at Cadenet, in Vaucus, 1810. The late of the Seas, 1810 in his vorage to the South works of great merit. B. at Cadenet, in Vaucus, 1810 in his vorage to the South works of great merit. B. at Cadenet, in Vaucus, 1810 in he last of these lawyer, and political writer, who, on the accession of James I., had the honour of knighthood conferred on him, and was made attorney the conferred on him, and was made attorney ageneral for Ircland. In 1826 he was appointed the sume year. Sir John wrote a valuable book on the state of Ircland. His poetical works, of death of the Carpender of the King's Bench, but died in the same year. Sir John wrote a valuable book on the state of Ircland. His poetical works, of death of the Carpender of the C viously resided, to the state of Mississippi. Young Davis received an academical education, and was sent at the usual age to Transylvania College, Kentucky, which he left in 1824 to enter the United States Military Academy at West Point, where he graduated in 1823, and was appointed Drevet second lieutenant. He remained in the army seven years, and served in wars with several Indian tribes, acquitting himself in a satisfactory manner. It ersigned his commission, June 30, 1835, returned to Mississippi, and became a cotton planter, living in retirement till 1833, when he began to take an active part in politics on the democratic side, and in 1844 was chosen one of the president of the control of the president of the and was sent at the usual age to Transylvania an active part in points on the democratic side, and in 1844 was chosen one of the presidential electors of Mississippi to vote for Polk and Dallas. In November, 1845, he was elected a representative in Congress, and took his seat in December of that year. He bore a conspicuous part in the discussions of the session on the tariff, on the Oregon question, on mili-tary affairs, and particularly on the preparations for war against Mexico, and on the organization of volunteer militia when called into the service of the United States. On the breaking out of of the United States. On the Breaking Garon the war with Mexico in 1846, Mr. Davis was elected colonel of the 1st Regiment of Mississippi volunteers, and led it to reinforce the army of General Taylor on the Rio Grande. He was actively engaged in the attack and storming of Montrey, inbeptember, 18-59; was one of the cammissioners for arranging the terms of the camtissioners for arranging the terms of the capitulation of that city; and highly distinction of the capitulation of that city and highly distinction of the capitulation of the complex of the commission of the commission of the capitulation of t was actively engaged in the attack and storming states respectively the appointment of the offi-cers of militia, and that consequently the appointment by the Federal Executive is a violation of the rights of the states. In August, 1847, he again took his seat in the senate as one of the representatives of Mississippi, and was chosen chairman of the committee on military affairs, and took a prominent part in the debates on the slavery question in defence of the institutions and policy of the slave states, and was a zealous advocate of the doctrine of state rights. In 1851 he was a candidate for the governorship of his state, but was defeated, and remained in retirement until the presidential contest of 1852. when he took an active part in securing the election of General Pierce, who, on forming his cabinet in 1833, appointed Colonel Davis score-tary of war, which post he held till the accession of President Buchanan in 1857. His administration was conspicuous for energy and ability, and for the numerous reforms which he introduced into the department of war, and into the discipline and organization of the army. Colonel Davis was once more elected to Congress, and would have continued a member of that body till March 4, 1863, had nothing occurred to interfere with the ordinary course of events; but the election of Mr. Lincoln to the presidential chair in 1860, and the secession of the Southern States which followed, induced him to withdraw from Congress. On the con-solidation of the seceded states in a definite government, Mr. Davis was chosen president, At the fall of the Confederacy in 1805, he was taken prisoner, and was kept in close confinement until 1867, when he was released, on bail, to appear for trial when called on. However, a simily pardoned in 1869. B. in Kentucky, 1808.

many parameter mose. It is kentucky, itely, DAYTSON, William, dai-elson, a Scotchiman, or of Scotch extraction, who rose through various grades to be secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth. He was employed in missions to Scotland and to Holland, and was the negotiation of the treaty between Elizabeth and the United Provinces when the latter determined to throw off their allegiance to Spain. After his return he was raised to the privy council, and hamed secretary of state along with Walsimpham. He was ultimately sacrificed to clear his mistress of complicity in the death of Mary Queen of Scots, whose execution at Fotheringay he was accused of having unduly hestened, contrary to Elizabeth's wish. For this he was condemned to 10,000 marks fine, and imprisonment during pleasure, and the conviction used to justify the virgin queen to the son of her victim. The fact seems to be, however, as Camden states, that Davison only acted in the matter in accordance with Elizabeth's vertex, and the day to the conviction of the transaction from the name of his mistress. Wisingham either was, or affected to be, siok, and the duty of presenting the warrant for Mary's execution to the queen for signature devolved upon Davison, and hence the trouble which came upon him. His subsequent history is involved in obscurity.

DAVOUST. or DAVOUT, Louis Nicholas, da'voost, a celebrated French marshal, began life with Bonaparte as a student at Brienne. In 1785 he entered the army, and, taking the side of the revolutionists, fought under Dumouriez at Jemappes, on November 8, 1792. In 1793 he was made a general; but being of a noble family, he was forced to resign his command, on account of the decree which forbade such to enter upon active service. The downfall of Robespierre, however, enabled him to recover his rank in the nowever, challed limit to recover ins rank in the army, with which he fought on the Rhine, under Piehegru. In the Italian compaigns he procured the friendship of Napoleon L, and alterwards accompanied him to Egypt. On his return, he was made a general of division, and commanded the cavalry of the army of Italy, He contributed to the victory of Marengo, and became a marshal under the imperial dynasty. the commanded the right wing at Austerlitz, and, on October 14, 1806, defeated the duke of Brunswick at Auerstadt. For this he was created duke of Auerstadt. For his services at Eckmuhl he was created rince of Eckmuhl, and at Wagram once more commanded the right wing. He was with the Russian expedition, and was wounded in the battle of Borodino. After the retreat from Moscow, he held Hamburg, where he had his head-quarters, against all the forces of the allies, and only, after the proces of 1814, surrendered to General Gérard, who was the bearer of the commands of Louis XVIII. On the return of Napoleon from Elba, he became minister of war. After Water-loo, he lived in retirement till 1819, when he re-entered the Chamber of Pcers. B. at Annoux.

in the Yonne, 1770; n. 1823.

Davr, Sir Humphry, dav-ve, a distinguished modern chemist, who was intended for the medical profession, but who relinquished that design, and became superintendent of the Pneumatic Institution at Bristol. While fulfilling his duties in this capacity, he published in "Chemical and Philosophical Researches," which obtained for him the professorship of chemistry in the Royal Institution of London. In the April of 1801 he gave his first lecture, and, from that time, his popularity extended to all parts of the country. In the following year he was made professor to the Board of Agriculture, and, in 1818, had a baronetey conferred on him. In 1820 he was cleeted president of the Royal Society, to whose "Transactions" he coutinued to contribute papers, on subjects of the times to continuic papers, on subjects of the greatest interest, for several years. In at Penzance, Cornwall, in 1778; D. at Geneva, Switzerland, 1820. The exertions of Davy in the fields of science have given his name an imperishable fame. He discovered the metallic bases of the earths and alkalies, the principles of electro-chemistry, and invented the miners' safety-lamp. In reference to his discovery of the composition of the fixed alkalies, Dr. Paris says, "Since the account given by Newton of says, "Since the account given by Newton of his first discoveries in optics, it may be questioned whether so happy and successful an instance of philosophical induction has been afforded as that of Davy." The same writer says of him, that "he was endued with the spirit, and was a master of the practice of the inductive logic; and that he has left us some of the noblest examples of the efficacy of that on the noncess examples of the efficiency of that great instrument of human reason in the discovery of truth." Besides his philosophical works, he work "Salmonia, or, Days of Flyfishing," and "Consolations in Travel."—His brother and biographer, John Dany, M.D., Fax, was also on eminent chemist, physiologist, and readourist. It has not not have been applied to the property of the geologist. He entered the army as a surgeon, and became inspector-general of army hospitals, on half pay. He wrote largely on general subjects, as well as on those connected with the natural sciences.

DAYS, John, a singularly precocious musi-cal genius, who, when only four or five years of age, could play an easy tune after hearing it once, and who, when ix years old, con-structed an instrument with eight horse-shoes and an iron rod, with which he imitated the Crediton chimes very successfully. He was subsequently placed under the charge of the organist of Exeter cathedral, and having learned all he could from him, went to London, where he was engaged in composing music for operas and other works at Covent Garden Theatre. Some song-music of his was much admired at the time, and is still sung—for instance, his "Just like Love is yonder Rose," which he composed to Strangford's translation of that piece from Camoens. B. at Upton Helion, near Exeter;

D.wrs. Richard, daus, a learned critic, who, in 1786, published proposals for a Greek translation of "Paradise Lost," which was never completed. In 1783 he was appointed master of the gramma-school at Newcastle-upon-Tyne; and, in 1745, published his "Miscellanea Critica; or, a Collection of Remarks on various Ancient Authors," a work of high value. In 1749 Daws resigned the mastership of his school, and died at Haworth, near Newcastle, 1768, a. at Markel-Dosworth 1709. Dawes, Richard, daws, a learned critic, who, 1749 Daws resigned the mastership of his where he and his army, attacked by the enemy, school, and died at Haworth, near Newcastle, perished, 251 A.D.

DAT, Thomas, dai, on English writer, the author of "Sandford and Merton," whose satisfact him in his "Pockaster," ander author of "Sandford and Merton," whose satisfact him in his "Pockaster," ander and "Pockaster," and " while he was an infant, leaving Thomas £1200 white he was an initiant, leaving friends at 1400 a year. His manners were eccentric, and his opinions romantic. He and a friend of his, called Bicknell, took two orphan children from the workhouse at Shrewsbury, to educate them the workhouse at Shrewsbury, to cancate mem in the ancient Roman manner, and afterwards to marry them. The project, however, failed, and Mr. 90 y married, in 175, a Miss Milnes, of Yorkshire. He wode several works; but the one by which his name will be perspetuated is "The History of Sandford and Merton," a ro-

antic tale for young persons, pleasing, but anciful, and of much the same stamp as Rouseau's "Emilius," B. in London, 1748; D. 789

DE CANDOLLE, Augustin Pyramus, kan dol, French botanist, who, in 1807, was made proessor of botany in the University of Montcellier. A chair was subsequently specially stablished for him in Geneva, when he designed o produce a work which should comprehend a description of all known plants. Such an undertaking was of too great magnitude for one dertaing was of too great magnitude of one man; consequently, he was obliged to abandon his design. He, however, wrote largely on his lavourite science, besides contributing papers to the Transactions of almost every scientific society in Europe. B. at Geneva, 1778; D. 1841.

DECATUR, Stephen, de-ka'-tur, an officer of he United States navy, who distinguished himself in several encounters with the ships of the British. When in command of the Chesupeaks he captured the Macedonian of inferior power, he captured the Macedonian of inherior power, on the 35th of Outbor, 1812. On this occasion, he declined to accord Capt. Carden's sword, saying that he could not think of taking the sword of so brave an officer. He was subsequently, while in command of the Macedonian and the Tuited States, blockaded in the port of New London; and, in 1815, when in command of the President, attempted to get to sea, but after fighting the Endymion, was captured by three other English vessels. He served at a later period against the Algerine lates pringste, and compelled the Algerine a large frigate, and compelled the Algerine receiver to conclude a terst avarantageous regency to conclude a treaty advantageous to his country. After his return to America, Decatur was appointed one of the commissioners of the navy board; but in 1820, was killed in a duel with Commodore Barron, in consequence of the censures he had passed upon that officer for surrendering the Chesapeake to the Shannon. B. in Maryland, 1779.

E. In Maryiand, 1/18.

Borus Mus, de'-she-us mus, a celebrated

Roman consul, who, after many glorious exploits, devoted himself to the internal gods for the safety of his country, in a battle against the Latins, throwing himself into the midst of the ranks of the enemy, and dying, covered with wounds, 339 B.C.—His son and grandson also imitated his devotedness in the same manner; the first in a battle with the Gauls and Samnites. 295 B.c. : the second, in the war against Pyrrhus,

280 в.с.

DECUS, a Roman emperor, who distinguished himself by an expedition against the Persians, and by persecuting the Christians. In his march against the Goths, he entered a morass,

De Foe Dee

"Satyromastix; or, Untrussing of a Humorous Poet." He wrote several plays, some of which "Satyromastry or, untrussing of a flumnoring Poet." He wrote several plays, some of which possess merit. D. about 1641.—The best-known drama of Decker is "Fortunatus, or the Wishing-cap," and his best-known tract is "The Gull's Horn-book." From this, Sir Walter Scott, in his "Fortunes of Nigel," draws largely for his description of London life. It was first winted in 1960 and gives a new Munica and printed in 1609, and gives a very minute and curious picture of the manners and customs of the middle classes of society in the seventeenth century. century.

DES, John, dee, an English mathematician and philosopher, who, on the founding of Trainty College, Cambridge, was chosen one of ts fellows. Becoming, however, suspected of practising magic, he went to Louvain, where he took his doctor's degree in civil law. He there read lectures in the mathematics, and also at Paris, where he was offered a mathematical worksorschip in the university. matical professorship in the university. In 1551 he returned to England, and obtained the rectory of Upton-upon-Severn; but his devotion to mathematical studies again brought him into trouble, by causing him to be accused of practising magical incantations. He was also accused of preaching against the life of Queen Mary, for which he suffered imprisonment. On Mary, lot which are success imprisonment. On the death of Mary, he rose into favour with Queen Elizabeth, who visited him at Mortlake, where he resided, and collected a library, as the people would have him a magician, he seems, at length, to have believed that he was one, and in 1551, with Edward Kelly, began wagied conceptions which lasted two areas. In one, and in Joss, which lasted two years. In these they were joined by a Polish nobleman, called Laski, who persuaded Dee to go to Poland, where they remained some time, holding communication with spirits. He subsequently returned, by order of the queen, and, in 1595, was made warden of Manchester College. B. in London, 1527; p. at Mortlake, 1609.—He published several mathematical works in Latin and lished several matnematical works in Latin and English, and wrote many more which were never printed; but in 1659 Dr. Casauhon published "A true and faithful Relation of what passed for many years between Dr. John Dee and some Spirits," & The genius of Dee was compre-hensive, and seems to have been misunderstood in the age in which he lived, in the age in which he lived.

De Fox, Daniel, de-fv', the author of "Robinson Crusee," was the son of James Foe, a butcher, of St. Giles, Cripplegate. He himself prefixed the De to his name, but for what reason we have no intrinstation. In 1888 our author kept a hosier's shop in Cornhill; but hecoming a bankrupt, had recourse to his pen for a subsistence. He subsequently received the appointment of accountant to the commissioners of the ment of accountant to the commissioners of the glass duty, which office he held till that impost was taken off. In 1701 he produced his "True-bort Englishman," and in the following year appeared his "Shortest Way with the Dissor-ters," a pamplet which drew upon him to renge ance of the government. Beholding the danger with which he was threatmed, he ab-soomded, when, on the 10th January, 1703, the following interesting descriptive advertisement appeared in the "London Gazette";—"Whereas, Daniel De Foc. sides De Foce, is charged with appeared in the "London vazerte :— whereas, Daniel De Foe, aliaz De Foe, is charged with writing a scandalous and seditions pamphlet, entitled, 'The Shortest Way with the Dissenters,' He is a middle-sized spare man, about nose, a sharp chin, grey eyes, and a large mole near his mouth; was born in London, and for many years was a hose-factor in Freeman's Yard, in Cornhill, and now is owner of the brick and pantile works near Tilbury Fort, in Essex. Whoever will discover the said Daniel De Foe Whoever will discover the said Daniel De Foc to one of her majestry synthenial secretaries of state, or any of her majestry's justices of the speace, so that he may be apprehended, shall have the reward of £50, which her majestry has ordered immediately to be poid upon such bis-covery." The luckless author was discovered, brought to trial, and sentenced to be pilloried, fined, and imprisoned. In the "Gazetta" of the state of the state of the state of the state of the "on the 29th instant Daniel Foe, alias De Foe, stood in the nillow before the Royal Exchange stood in the pillory before the Royal Exchange smooth the planty before the Royal Exchange in Cornhill, as he did yesterday near the Conduit in Cheapside, and this day at Temple Bar, in pursuance of his sentence, given against him at the last sessions at the Old Balley, for writing and publishing a seditious libel, entitled, 'The Shortest Way with the Dissenters.' By which Shortess way wind the Dissenters. By which sentence he is also fined 200 marks, to find sureties for his good behaviour for seven years, and to remain in prison till all be performed."

However crule had been the design of the government in passing sentence on De Foe, the vernment in passing sentence on the rot, the punishment itself was complete failure. Such a pillory exhibition had seldom been seen in England; for exulting thousands accompanied him each day from Newgate to the pillory, to protect him from hurt or insult, and greeted him, also, with shouts of triumph on his return to Newgate. The very pillory itself was said to have been decorated with garlands; for it was the height of summer, when there was an abundance of flowers; and not only this, but re-freshments were provided for him. On regaining his liberty, he retired to Bury St. Edmunds, where he continued to exercise his pen, and was instrumental in promoting the union of Eng-and and Scotland. While in Edinburgh on this business, he was mobbed by the populace, the feeling being at the time very strong against the union and all who were supposed to be en-gaged in promoting it. In 1713 he was again committed to prison for some political pamphlets, but Lord Oxford procured his pardon. In 1715 he published the "Family Instructor," a reline published the "Family Instructor," a reli-gious performance of merit; and in 1719 ap-peared his greatest work, the romance of "Robinson Crusoe," supposed to have been founded on the story of Alexander Selkirk's being left on the island of Juan Fernandez. De Foe wrote a number of other fictions of considerable merit. B. in London, 1961; D. 1731.

—In concluding this brief sketch of one of the greatest and most original of England's fiction-writers, we cannot resist the temptation to insert the following record of what were his entiments regarding the opinions of mankind, and what had been his own experience of life. The above advertisement describes the outward man. The inward shall be described by himself. "I am a Stole," says he, "im whatever may be the event of things. I'll do and say what I think is a debt of justice and truth, without the least regard to clamour and reproach; and as I am utterly unconcerned at human pinion, the people that throw away their breath of freely in censuring me, may consider of some setter improvement to make of their passions, than to waste them on a man that is both above 40 years old, of a brown complexion, and dark than to waste them on a man that is both above brown-coloured hair, but wears a wig; a hooked and below the reach of them. I know too much of the world to expect good in it, and have as a sim of its being differently executed from learned to value it too little to be concerned at the style of French art then in vector, as well the evil. I have gone through a life of wonders, and am the subject of a vast variety of providences. I have been fed more by miracle than Elijah when the ravens were his purveyors. have, some time ago, summed up the scenes of my life in this distich:—

No man has tasted different fortunes more: And thirteen times, I have been rich and poor. In the school of affliction I have learned more In the sensor of anneron I have learned and philosophy than at the academy, and more divinity than from the pulpit. In prison, I have learned that liberty does not consist in open doors and the egrees and ingress of lecopen doors and the egress and ingress of loco-motion. I have seen the rough side of the world as well as the smooth, and have, in less than half a year, tasted the difference between the closet of a king and the dungeon of Newgate. I have suffered deeply for cleaving to principles." Such is the experience of the author of "Robinson Crusoe," one of the most delightful romances that ever emanated from a human brain. "Was there ever anything writnuman oram. Was there ever anything writ-ten by mere man," asks Dr. Johnson, "that the reader wished longer, except 'Robinson Crusoe," 'Don Quixote,' and the 'Pilgrim's Progress'?"

Denorates, dei-old-rug, a tetrarch of Galatia, who was created, by the Romans, king of that country, with the addition of Lesser Armenia. He joined the party of Pompey, but, on the defeat of that general, submitted himself to Casar, who dethroned him, but soon after-wards restored his estates. Lived in the 1st century B.C.

Century B.C.

DE LA BECHE, Sir Henry Thomas, baish, an eminent geologist, who first imbled a tasts for that science whilst residing at Charmouth and Lyme Regis, previous to his being sent to the military school at Great Marlow, since removed to Sandhurst. In 1814 he entered the army, and in 1817 became a fellow of the Geological Society. Of this society he subsequently became secretary, foreign secretary, and finally president in 1847. Throughout the whole of his life he ardently devoted himself to his favourite science. reporting on the geology of Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, Dorset, Wales, and other parts; and was, by his map of Cornwall, the cause of sugwas, by his map of commant, the cause of sug-gesting to the government the geological sur-vey. He founded the Museum of Practical Geology, and succeeded in establishing the School of Mines. His mind was of an emimently practical character. In 1819 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1848 was knighted. In 1853 he was elected a corresponding member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris; but by this time his career was drawing to a close. B. near London, 1796; D. 1855 .-Sir Henry wrote largely on geology, and published several excellent manuals for the young student. His "How to Observe," first published in 1835, has been pronounced a truly Ba-conian volume—a sort of "Novum Organum" of DELACROIX, Ferdinand Victor Eugène, del'-a-krwaw, a distinguished French painter. His father passed through the sternest scenes of the great revolution, and, in 1805, died prefect of the Mouths of the Rhone and the Gironde. Young Delacroix was well educated, and entered the Academy of Arts in his 18th year. His first the academy of arts in his latin year. Alls first exhibited picture represented "Dante and Virgil sailing round the Infernal City," and excited a great deal of controversy; which may be taken as of its indicating proofs of genius. It was succeeded by the "Massacre of Scio," which placed him at the head of a school designated the "Romantie." Both of these pictures now Both of these pictures now the Romantic. Both it make pictures now belong to the national collection, and hang on the walls of the Luxemloure. His position was now in a measure fixed, and he continued to work with unremitting as-iduity. Among his earlier performances, we may notice his "Christ in the Garden," "Miltin detailing

"Chrise in the carden, "Little in detailing 'Paradise Lost' to his Daughters," and 'phistopheles appearing to Faust." The revo-lution of 1830 supplied him with other themes; but having become an attaché of the govern-ment mission to Marocco, the scenes of the ment mission to marcero, the scenes of the East suggested new subjects. On his return, he exhibited, in 1834, "Women of Algiers;" a work which Parisian judges declared placed him on a parity with Rubens as a colorist. M. Thiers, who had from the first been his admirer, Iniers, who had from the first occur has counter, being now Minister of the Interior, gave him the walls of the Salon du Roi, at the Pala's Bourbon, to paint; which he accomplished by symbolically illustrating the arts, winning for the pala's and the pala's party could be a supported by the palayers. symonically intertainty the arts, winning his himself still greater faine. He was now called upon to adorn other public buildings, at which he laboured, willist at intervals he produced other important gallery and cabinet plantings. Among these may be named "Hamflet with the Skull of Yorlek," "Jeleka," "Cicopatra," "Christ at the Tomb," and he "Resurrection of Lazarus." His works, as a whole, are nuof Lazards. Its works, as a whose, are merous, and marked by great energy of style and originality of invention. His admires place him on the same pedestal with Paul Veronese. n. at Charenton-Saint-Maurice, near

Paris, 1799; D. 1863.

DELAMBRE, Jean Baptiste Joseph, del-ambr', a distinguished modern French astronomer, who was first taught by the poet helisle, at Amiens, and who afterwards entered the astronomical class under Lalande, in the College of France, class under Lalande, in the College of France, at Paris. This teacher, as did Delise, became the friend of Delambre; and many of the calculations of the master were performed by the pupil. Up to this period, Delambre had supported himself by translating foreign works for publishers, and by giving instructions as a professor of languages; when he became tuttor to the two sons of a person of the name of Deser This centleman fitted up a small ob-Dassy. This gentleman fitted up a small ob-servatory for his use, and Delambre soon became an adept in the use of the instruments, and resolved to devote himself to the study of astronomy and its history. Persevering by nature, and devoted to whatever he engaged in, he surmounted every obstacle that came in his way, and, in 1781, formed the table of the mo-tion of Herschel's newly-discovered planet, which procured him the prize awarded by the Academy of Sciences. He now entered upon the construction of his solar tables and those of other planets; in 1792 completed his calculations, and received another prize, which the lations, and received another prize, which the Academy had offered in the preceding year. He was now deputed, with Mechain, to measure the arc from Dunkirk to Barcelona, which, from the death of his assistant, he had to complete himself. The result of the measurements taken in the performance of his duty, farmished the data for his work entitled. "Base du Système Métriques Decimal," for which the finitistical mane degreed him a prize. He had now attained what may reasonably be supposed to be sions are his "Messeniennes," which refer to the summit of a philosopher's ambition, and was the restoration of the Bourbons in 1815. He chown an associate of almost every learned body also wrote several dramas, which enjoyed an in Europe. In his own country honours were showered upon him, and in 1817 he was made a chevalier of the order of St. Michael. His scientific works are very numerous. In at Amiens, 1719; p. at Paris, 1822. 2

DELANY, Patrick, do-law-ne, an eminent Irish divine, who by his learning and ability raised himself from a humble origin to be chancellor of Christ Church, tuter of Trinity College, Dublin, and ultimately to the deanery of Down, where he was educated. He married for his second wife the daughter of Barnard Granville, Lord Lansdowne, a woman of superior intellect Lord Lansdowne, a woman of superior intellect and acquirements, Dr. Delany's principal works are—"Revelation Examined with Candour," a vols.; "Reflections upon Polygamy;" An Historical Account of the Life of David, King of Ismel," 3 vols.; "Sermons on the Social Duties and Vices," 2 vols.; beatles "Essays on the Origin of Tithes," "Critiques on Lord Orrery's Life of Swift," with whom Delany was long on terms of intimacy. B. about 1686; D.

1768.

DELANY, Mary Granville, second wife of the DELIARY, BARY GRAPHIC, SECOND WHE Of The preeding, when seventeen years of ago married Alexander Pendarves, Esq., but in 1724 was left a widow, and after remaining in that condition for nineteen years, married Dr. Delany. She lived for several years with the Duchess of Portland, at Dulstrode; and on the latter's death was asat Buistrode; and on the latter's death was signed a house in Windson, with a pension of $200 a year, by George III., which she enjoyed till her death. Her correspondence with many of the wits and learned men of the day, which is distinguished for elegance and spirit, has made her well known to the reading public; but she was especially distinguished for her skill in drawing and painting. When 70 years of age she in-vented a beautiful and ingenious Flora, con-structed of coloured paper, skilfully cut out with seissors, and arranged on a black ground, which was so tastefully executed as almost to equal nature. In this amusement Mrs. Delany spent her time till her 83rd year, when failing sight compelled her to relinquish the pursuit, p. 1700; p. 1788.

DELAROCHE, Paul, del-a-rosh', an eminent French painter, who early became devoted to his art. At first he applied himself to landscape, but by degrees entered upon historical subjects, and became the head of the "Eclectic" school. His style and pictures are so generally familiar, that it is hardly necessary to do more than enumerate the names of some of them, to than enumerate the names of some of them, to recall them to mind, and prove his claim to the crainence he attained. "Joan of Arc in Prison with Cardinal Beaufort," the "Death of Queen Vikabeth," "The Children of Edward IV. in he Tower," "Crouwell contemplating the Dead Body of Charles I.," "Execution of Lady Jane Grey," "Charles I. insulted by the Parlia-mentary Sodiers in the Guard-room," "Strafmentary Soldiers in the cuard-room, "Strainford receiving the Blessing of Laud, on his Way to the Scaffold," "The Death of the Duke of Guise," "Napoleon Crossing the Alps," "Napoleon at Fontainebleau," and many more. Most of these, if not all, have been engraved; and may be said to be almost universally known. In 1834 Delaroche was created an officer of the Legion of Honour. n. at Paris, 1797; n. 1856. Delavione, Jean François Casimir, de-la-stons are his messentennes, which refer to the restoration of the Bourbons in 1815. He also wrote several dramas, which enjoyed an ephemeral success. B. at Havre, 1793; D. at Lyons, 1843. DELILLE, Jacques, de-leel, a modern Franch poet of considerable eminence. He translated the "Georgies" of Virgil, which obtained for him admission to the French Academy. He be-came professor of Latin Poetry at the College of France, and of the Belles-lettres in the Paris University. Having twice withdrawn from the unsettled social condition of his country, he came to London, where he translated Milton's "Paradise Lost." On his roturn he produced his poem entitled "Conversation;" but shortly afterwards became blind, and died. Besides atterwards became blind, and their Bestdes the works already mentioned, he produced the "Three Kingdoms of Nature," "Misfortune and Pity," and "Imagination." The chief charac-teristics of his effusions are sweetness of versification, true pathos, and purity of moral sen-timent. B. at Aigues-Perse, Auvergne, in 1733: D. 1813.

DELISLE, Joseph Nicholas, de-leel, an eminent French mathematician and astronomer, who had for his pupil the celebrated Lalande. Being invited to Russia, he there held the appointment of astronomer-royal for upwards of twenty years. On returning to Paris, he was appointed professor in the Royal College. In 1724 he paid a visit to England, and there Le-came acquainted with both Newton and Halley.

в. 1688; р. 1768

DELISLE, Guillaume, a French geographer of distinction, who, after studying under the di-rection of his father, also a geographer, con-ceived the notion of remodelling the existing system of geography, and accordingly, in 1700, published maps of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, and also constructed globes of both the terrestrial and celestial spheres. He was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences in 1702, and was subsequently appointed teacher of geo-graphy to Louis XV., who named him, in 1718, his first geographer, and allowed him a pension of 1200 livres a year. Peter the Great invited him to St. Petersburg, where his brother Jo-eph was already settled; but this invitation he declined, and died of apoplexy in 1726. B. at Paris in 1675.

DELOLME, Jean Louis, de-lolm', a political writer, who first practised as a lawyer in his native Switzerland, and afterwards travelled to gain a knowledge of the constitutions of va-rious countries. He fixed his abode in England, where he remained until near the close of his life, composing political essays, and writing in the journals. In spite of considerable talents, he led a miserable existence, having an unfortunate passion for gaming. Delome's best known's by his "History of the Constitution of England," written in French, but translated into English, and often reprinted. "It is the best ind," written in French, but translated into English, and often reprinted. "It is the best work to consult on the government of Eng-land," says a foreign writer, "and proves its superiority over all other existing governments." B. at Geneva, about 1749; D. 1808. DELORING, Philibert, &-lorm, a celebrated French architect, who first studied in Italy and was attracted to Paris by the Cardinal du Bel-law, who introduced him to the court of Wellar, who introduced him to the court of Henry II. Delorme was commissioned to execute the plans of the chateaux of Anet and Mendon, and veen', a modern French poet, whose best effu- subsequently, for Catharine de Medici, those of the Valois court at St. Denis, and of the palace their help. He then slew Alexander, the son of of the Tuileries, of which he was created governor. He left some writings on architectural art; amongst which is a treatise entitled "New Inventions, in order to build better and at small Cost." B. at Lyons, 1518; D. 1577.

Del

Demidor

DELIAMARIA, Domenico, del'-la-ma-re-a, a musical composer of some distinction, who was born in Marseilles, but of Italian parents. He had composed a grand opera when only eighteen years of age, which was well received on its reyears of age, which was well received on as re-presentation in his native city. He afterwards studied in Italy, where he wrote six comic operas, all of which were received with applause. In 1796 he returned to France, and within two years produced four operas and several other works, all exhibiting talent of a superior order. works, all exhibiting talent of a superior order. His best opers are—"Ill Maestro di Capella." (comic), "Le Prisomier," "L'Oncle Valet," "Le Vieux Château," and "L'Opera Comique." B. 1764; D. suddenly at Paris, 1800.
DERUC, John Andrew, de-look, a modern philosopher, who principally devoted himself to the study of physics and geology, extending his observations to all parts of Europe, and endea-vouring to make his discoveries tally with the text of the book of Genesis. He passed a portion of his life in England, and was there aption of his life in England, and was there appointed queen's reader. His principal works are, "Theory of Barometers and Thermometers," New Notions on Meteorology," "Letters to the Queen of England on the Mountains and History of the Earth," and "Geological Journeys." In 1802 he published "An Account of the Philosophy of Bacon," with a view of opposing Lasalle, a French infidel translator of the Singlish philosopher; but the work was not much esteemed. To Delice we owe many important improvements in the barometer there. into fuen esteemed. 10 Detail no one man, important improvements in the barometer, thermometer, and hydrometer. B. at Geneva, 1727; D. at Windsor, 1817.

DEMADES, dem'-a-dees, an Athenian, who, important the man of the state o

from being a mariner, became a distinguished orator, and rose to high station in the republic. orator, and rose to high station in the republic. He was made prisoner by Philip of Macedon at the battle of Charonea, 339 n.c., and succeeded, by his frankness, in gaining the esteem of his captor, and was set at liberty. He remained some time attached to Macedon, and used his influence in favour of the Macedonian party at Athens. When on an embassy to Antipater in 318 B.c., he fell into the hands of Cassander, the son of Antipater, who put him to death for having used disrespectful expressions towards his father in a letter he had written to Perdiccas.

DEMETRIUS, de-me'-tre-us. Many of this name are mentioned in ancient history, the most celebrated of whom are the following :-DEMETRIUS, king of Macedon, surnamed Polioreetes, on account of the many places which he destroyed, was the son of Antigonus, one of Alexander the Great's generals and successors. At the age of twenty-two, he was sent with an army against Ptolemy, by whom he with an army against Projemy, by whom he was defeated near Gaza; he soon, knowerer, repaired his losses, and, with a fleet of 250 ships, sailed to Athens, which he conquered from Demetrius Phalereus. He afterwards defeated Cassander at Thermopyles, but was subsequently himself overthrown at the battle of Ipsus, fought 301 B.c., when he fled to Ephesus, the Athenians refusing to receive him. Notwithstanding this ingratitude, he of Ipsus, fought 301. B.C., when he nee nouse or isomanous in 1010. to Ephesus, the Athenians refusing to receive Destroy, of Destroy, dem'-i-dq/, a wealthy him. Notwithstanding this ingratitude, he raised another army, and when the groad as skillow blacksmith of Tula. This Demidoff under the power of a foreign enemy, came to was intrusted by Peter the Great with the control of the power of the property of the control of the power of the power Cassander, and seated himself on the throne of Macedon. At the end of seven years he was obliged to quit his kingd m and retire into Asia, where, being reduced to great distress, he went to the court of Sciencus, his son-inlaw; but a difference breaking out between them, war ensued, in which he was d.f. ated. Seleucus then confined him in a castle, but allowed him to take the diversion of hunting. D. of excessive drinking, 253 B.C.—His posterity reigned till the time of Perseus, who was yanquished by the Romans.

DEMETRIUS I., king of Syria, surnamed Soter, was the son of Seleucus Philopator. He was for some time deprived by usurpers of his rightful inheritance; but the Syrians, recog-nising him as their lawful sovereirn, placed him on the throne. He then declared war against the Jews, in which conflict Judas Mac-cabeus lost his life, bravely fighting for the liberties of his country. A confederacy of the neutrus of ins country. A confideracy of the neighbouring kings was subsequently formed against Demetrius, and he was slain, 150 n.C.

DEMTRIES II., surnamed Nicator, the son of the preceding, was placed on the throne by Ptolemy Philomator, king of Egypt, after expelling the usurper Alexander Balas, 148 n.c. He married Cleopatra, the wife of the same Alexander, and daughter of Ptolemy, but gave himself up to dissipation; when, after various reliasting to dissipation; when, the transitions viciositudes, his reign became so intolerable, that his subjects solicited the king of Egypt to grant them another sovereign. Demetrius fled, and was killed by the governor of Tyre, 126

DEMETRIUS PHALEREUS, a celebrated orator DEMENSION PHARERERS, a celeorated orator and statesman of Athens, attached to the Macedonian party, and elected archon, by their influence, 317 n.c. He governed wisely; and the Athenians, charmed by his cloquence, erected 360 bronze statues in his honour. He afterwards fell into disgrace, and Demetrius Poliorcetes took possession of the city, and pro-claimed the liberty of the Athenians to throw off the yoke of the Macedonians. His life being threatened, he fled to the court of Ptolemy being chreatened, as need to the court of Follows, Lagus, king of Egypt, whose son banished him from his dominions. D. by the bite of an asp, 233 B.C.—He wrote several books, and it is said that the library of Alexandria was com-menced by his advice, and that he contributed to it 200,000 volumes. There is a treatise on rhetoric ascribed to him; but it is of more modern date. (See Demetrius Poliorcetes.)
Demetrius, the son of Ivan IV., czar of Russia, was still in his cradle at the death of his father. He was the brother and sole heir of Fedor. The ambitious Boris Godonov caused him to be assassinated in 1591, thus hoping to pave his own way to the throne. B. ab 1551 .- The disappearance of Demetrius furnished an opportunity for a crowd of impostors to assert their right to the crown. One of to assert their right to the crown. One of these, a mont, and whose real name was Gregory Otrepieff, caused himself to be re-cognised as ear in 1805, and, after a reign of a few months, was assassinated in Moscow, 1806. The false Demetriuses ceased not to make their appearance until the rise of the house of Romanoff in 1613.

business of casting the cannon for that prince's numerous warlike expeditions. He actively seconded all the exertions of the czar, and in 1725 discovered the mines of Kolyvan, the work-ing of which speedily cariehed him.—He left a son, Nitika, and several grandsons, who dis-tinguished themselves in the same career as tinguisies themselves in the same career as their progenitor, and amassed colossal fortunes. The best-known of these are Procop Demidoff, who worked with great profit the iron, copper, and gold mines of the Ural Mountains. B. at Moscow about 1730.—Nicolas Nikitich, a zealous philanthropist, who introduced into his country several branches of industry, founded establishments of public utility, and carried to a great state of perfection the working of mines. He had an annual income of a quarter of a million sterling. His last years he passed in France and Italy, enjoying the society of learned men, and heaping benefits on all around him. In near St. Petersburg, 1773; D. at Florence, 1528.—He left two sons, Paul and Anatol, who, as well as inheriting his fortune, had also the same high taste and benevolence. Of these Count Anatol allied himself to the Of these count Anaton amen ninsen to the Bonaparte family, by marrying, in 1840, one of Napoleon's nicess, the princess Mathilde, daughter of Jerome, and sister of Prince Napoleon. In 1845, however, a separation took place between them.

took place between them.

DEMOCEDES, fem'-o-se'-dees, a physician of Crotona, who went to Athens, and resided at the court of Polycrates, the tyrant of Samos. On the death of that prince, he and his family became captives to the Persians, and were carried to, Susa, where he worked with other saves. Happening to cure Darius from the effects of a wound received whilst hunting, he was liberally rewarded, admitted to the royal table, and requested by the monarch to remain at his court. He returned, however, to his own country, and married the daughter of Milo the wrestler. Lived in the 6th century B.C.

DEMOCRITUS, de-mok'-ri-tus, a famous Greek philosopher, whose father was a man of wealth; but Democritus, preferring philosophy to riches, spent his patrimony in travelling to acquire knowledge. There was a law in his country, knowledge. There was a law in his country, that whoever reduced himself to poverty should that whoever reduced ministric to porcery should be deprived of sepulture. Democritus had incurred this fate; but his talents were such, that the magistrates decreed he should be buried at the public expense. He was con-stantly laughing at the follies of mankind, and therein had the advantage of Heraclitus, who was always weeping over them. None of his writings have come down to us. He was the author of the atomical philosophy, and the pre-cursor of Epicurus. B. at Abdera, in Thrace, about 460; D. 357 B.C.

DEMOUVER, Abraham, dem'-ouvr, a clever mathematician, was a native of Vitri, Cham-pagne, France, but on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, he was compelled to leave his country, and came to England, where he devoted himself to the study of the positive sciences, his favourite work being the "Principia" of Newton, gaining a livelihood in the meanwhile by lecturing on mathematics in Lon-don. He became a member of the British Royal Society and of the Academics of Paris and Berlin. The rival claims of Leibnitz and New-Berlin. The rival claims of Leibniz and nor ton to the merit of inventing the method of talents and learning were held. His principal works are—"Miscellanea Analytica," "A Treatise on Annuities;" "The Doctrine of Chances," the latter being his greatest effort, and which, dedicated to Newton, was first published in 4to, in 1719, and three times reprinted, z. 1667; p. in London, 1754.

Dr Morgan, Augustus, de mor'-gan, was pro-fessor of mathematics in University College, London, from its foundation, in 1828, till 1831, when he resigned. In 1836, however, he returned to the same post. He wrote a great many works on arithmetic, trigonometry, mathematics, and the kindred sciences. n. in the island of Madura, East Indies, 1806.

DEMOSTHENES, de-mos'-the-nees, the greatest of Grecian orators, was the son of an Athenian. or Gream orators, was the son of an Atheman, a wealthy armourer. Losing his father when a child, his guardians embezzled a considerable portion of his estate, and, at the age of seventeen, he pleaded his cause against them, in which he was successful. His first attempts at oratory, however, in the public assembly, were not so happy; for his lungs were weak, his pronot so happy; for his links were weak, his pro-nunciation inarticulate, and his gestures awk-ward. He now retired for some years from public life, and by great perseverance overcame his defects. He would declaim as he walked up the side of steep hills, and by the seashore when the waves were roaring, and accustom himself to speak with pebbles in his mouth. nimser to spak with pebbies in his mouth. To acquire a good gesture, he would practise before a mirror; and to correct a habit he had of shrugging up one of his shoulders, he placed a sharp-pointed sword just over it, in the place where he stood. The principles of his art he had acquired under Issues, and he had also attended the lectures of Plato. Not being ready in speaking extemporaneously, he studied orations with great care in a cave, on which account his detractors declared that they smelt of the lamp. He read and re-read, too, all the great writers of antiquity, especially the history of Thucydides, which he transcribed, it is said, some eight or ten times. Having thus gained confidence that he had overcome his faults of manner and style, he returned to public affairs at the age of twenty-seven, and after passing at the age of twenty-seven, and after passing some years at the bar, entered the government, and filled the highest offices of state. The encroachments of Philip of Macedon at this period alarmed all the Grecian states, particu-larly Athens. Demosthenes was foremost in rousing his countrymen to a sense of their danger. He depicted the ambitious designs of Philip in glowing colours in his celebrated orations called Philippics. When Philip was about to invade Attica, Demosthenes was sent ass ambassador to prevail on the Bootians to assist them; in which mission he succeeded. He was also at the battle of Chæronea, where the orator, however, played the coward, and fled, and for his conduct there, several accusations were preferred against him; but he was acquitted. Philip dying, Demosthenes thought this a favourable opportunity to crush the Macedonian power, and by his exertions a new confederacy was formed among the Grecian states, and the Persians were solicited to commence hostilities against Philip's son, Alexander. The vigorous activity of this prince, however, and the dreadful chastisement he inflicted on Thebes, soon had the effect of breaking up the confederacy. The Athenians found it expedient to divert the fluxions, was referred to Demoivre for decision Athenians found it expedient to divert the

—a proof of the high estimation in which his victor's wrath by sending to him an embassy, of which Demosthenes formed one; but his apprehensions induced him to turn back on the road. He was one of the orators whom Alexander required to be delivered up ; but Demades pacified the king without this sacrifice. influence of Demosthenes being now on the decline, Æschines took advantage of it, to bring an accusation against him on the subject of his conduct at Cheronea, and his having had a crown of gold awarded him; but the orator so well defended himself in his celebrated oration "De Corona," that he was honourably acquitted, and his adversary sent into exile. Shortly after, however, Demosthenes was convicted of receiving a golden cup and twenty talents from Harpalus, one of Alexander's generals, who had narpans, one of Alexander, and instigated the Athenians to rise against his authority. To avoid punishment Domosthenes field to Ægina, where he remained till the death of Alexander, when he was recalled by his countrymen, and when he was recalled by his counterfued, and brought home in triumph. Dut this change of fortune was of short duration. Declaring war against Antipater, Alexander's successor, and that general defeating the Athenians, he rethat general deteating the Attentions, he required the citizens to deliver up Denosthenes, who fled to the temple of Neptune, at Calauria, where he poisoned himself, 292 n.c. n. at Athens, 384 n.c. The Athenians exceeds a statue to his memory, and maintained his eldest child at the public expense. Majesty and energy are the characteristics of the cloquence of Demosthenes. To convince the understanding, Demostrates. To convince the interstanting, rather than to exert a power over the passions of his hearers, was the object of this speaker's oratory; and, as Cicero said, this is the ideal model of true eloquence. Of the orations of Demosthenes which are extant, the text of Bekker is now regarded as the standard, and many of his orations have been translated into the

Demoster

of his orations have been translated into the English and other languages. Of the former, the work of Loland is the best. DEMPSERS, Thomas, demp'ster, a Scotch writer, who studied at Cambridge, whence he removed to Paris, and afterwards became pro-fessor of philology at Pisa. He wrote several books, the most curious of which are a "Martyr-ology of Scotland," a" List of Scotlish Writers," and a "History of the Etruscans;" but, either from carclessness, indolence, or ignorance, none of them are to be relied upon. B. at Muiresk, Aberdeenshire, 1579; D. near Bologna, 1025.

DEMPSTER, Goorge, a native of Dundee, Scotland, who was bred to the Scottish bar, but land, who was bred to the Scottish bar, but only practised for a short time, and then de-voted himself to politics, having been elected for his native town in 1762. He became a memfor ms manye town in 1922. In electmen a mem-ber of the Rockingham party, and supported Pitt till the regency question came under con-sideration, when he joined Fox. He retired from Parliament in 1790, and directed his atten-tion to the improvement of the Scottish highlands, by developing the resources of those dis-tricts in agriculture and the fisheries. He tricts in agriculture and the fisheries. He published several essays on agricultural and other subjects, together with a volume of speeches in Parliament. B. 1738; p. 1818.

DENHAM, Sir John, den'ham, an English poet, whose father was baron of the Court of Exchequer. In 1831 he was sent to Trinity College, Oxford, whence he went to Lincolags Inn, with the view of following the law, but in which the sent that the sent t this he made little or no progress. In 1641 his tragedy of "The Sophi" appeared; and soon after he was made governor of Fareham Castle for Charles I. In 1613 he "Cooper's Hill," the lest of all his works. It is in this poem that the celebrated couplet, so "Though daep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;

Strong, without rage; without o'erflowing, full."

It relates to the Thames. After the decapitation of Charles II, he attended Charles II, in his exile, and was appointed by him ambassador to exhip, and was appointed by him ambassador to Poland. At the Restoration he was appointed surveyor-general of the royal buildings, and created knight of the Bath. n. at Dudlin, 1615; n. in London, 1668; and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Denham's "Cooper's Hill" is a

on him the compliment of the "majestic

DENINA, Carlo Giovanni Maria, dui-ne'-na, an Italian professor and writer of history, who held chairs at Pignerol and Turin, but was deprived of the latter appointment, and banished to Verof the latter appointment, and tenished to vir-celli. He was shortly afterwards pardoned, however, recalled to Turin, and appointed, liberatin to the king. He visited Berlin in 17-2, on the invitation of the Pressian kinz, and in 134 was introduced at Mayeneo to Napoleon, who made him his illuration, and he then setting in Paris, where he died in 1813. B. at Revello, Piedmont, 1731 .- His writings are very numerous, but the following may be considered the most important :—"Revolutions of Literature" (1760), which drew upon the author the resent-(170), which drew upon the author the resent-ment of Voltaire, and which has been translated into English; "Revolutions of Italy," 5 vols. (1769); "Discorso sull'Impiego delle Persone," (1777), which was the occasion of his losing the rhetoric chair at Turin; "Observations on the &c., &c.

DENISON, the Rt. Hon. John Evelyn, den'-c-son, entered parliament as member for Newcostleentered parliament and the Newcostl entered parament as member for reverens; under-Lyme in 1823, and served as one of the Lords of the Admiralty under Mr. Cauning, the succeeded Mr. Shaw Leferre (now Vis-count Eversley) as Speaker of the House of Commons in 1857, and was unanimously re-elected to that office in 1850, 1805, and 1868.

в. 1900. DENMAN, Thomas, Lord, den'-man, received the rudiments of his education at Diss, under the celebrated Mr. and Mrs. Barbauld. He subsequently entered St. John's College, Cambridge, and, in 1806, was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn. In 1818 he was returned member of Parliament for Wareham, Dorset, and in 1820, for Not-tingham. In the House of Commons he leagued with Brougham and Burdett, and in 1920, became solicitor-general to queen Caroline. His conduct in behalf of that unfortunate lady was so highly in Definit of that unfortunate lady was so highly approved by the London clitzens, that they presented him with the freedom of their city. In 1830 he was appointed attorney-general, and in 1832, chief justice of the King's Bench. In 1834 he was raised to the peerage, and till 1830, presided over the court of Queen's Bench, when he retired on account of failing health. B. in London 1720, and $500kb Albary Noretherns. London, 1779; D. at Stoke Albany, Northamptonshire, 1854.

DENNER. Balthazar, denner, a celebrated Y 2

Dennie D'Eon

German portrait painter, distinguished for the excessively elaborate finish of his works: their extraordinary finish, however, being their chief merit. Little is known of Denner's early life. He was a native of Altona, and after living for some time with a painter at Dantzic, and dis-tinguishing himself at the courts of some of the minor princes of Germany, he came to England on the invitation of George I. Here he spent a 1728. He subsequently travelled over the north of Europe for some years, and died rich, either at Rostock in 1749, or at Hamburg in 1747. B. 1685.-Though Denner bestowed more labour upon his pi tures than probably any other artist ever did, he still contrived to paint a consi lerable number, which are scattered over the galleries of Germany, some being at Vienna, tome at Munich, and others elsewhere. All his pieces are not finished in the same high degree, but some are so to such an extent as, it is said, to require the aid of the microscope to discover all the minute details of the execution. Denner painted nearly all the German princes of his day, besides two kings and one emperor, namely, Frederick IV. of Denmark, Augustus II. of Poland, and Peter III. of Russia.

Dunnie, William Henry, den-ne, a brave and skilful British officer, who won a prominent place among those who have made their country's arms famous in the East. He entered the army in 1800; became lieutenant in 1801, captain in 1810, and lieutenant-colonel in 1832. After taking part in the Indian campaign under Lord Lake, in 1805-6, and being present at the capture of the Isle of France, in 1810, he won marked distinction by his services in the Bur-mese war of 1826-27. In the Affghan war, in 1839, he led the assault on Ghuznee, and was the first man who made his way within the the lifet man who made his way wadmi die wal's. In September, 1810, Colonel Dennie was sent to watch the Wullce of Khooloom, who was then in the field at the head of 10,000 men, in aid of Dost Mohammed, and succeeded, on the 15th of September, after some difficult and able manœuvres in the Hindu Koosh defiles, in forcing the enemy to accept battle at Bameean, where, with only 1000 men, he dispersed the enemy's 10,000. The result of this action was the termination of the campaign and the sur-render of Dost Mohammed. When the Khyber Pass was forced by the British troops, April 5, 1842, Colonel Dennie was at first in command of the rear-guard, and on Sir Robert Sale being disabled by his wound, the charge of the whole force devolved on Dennie, which he continued to hold during the greater portion of the siege of Jellalabad, where he was killed on the stege of Jenalanda, where he was kined on one of the siege. He generally rode a white charger, and the colonel and his horse were ever conspicuous objects in the midst of danger, and indeed this circumstance is said to have caused his death by making him an easily-distinguished mark for the enemy's riflemen, who, after many attempts, at last succeeded in hitting him. The queen had named him one of her aides-de-camp, but hefore the intelligence of the appointment reached Jellalabad, Colonel Dennie was no more.

DENNIS, John, dew-nis, an English author battles of Blenheim and Ramilies, procured him the favour of the duke of Mariborough, who gave him £100 and placed him in the Custom-house. In 1704 appeared his tragedy of "Liberty Asserted," which, as an invective against the French nation, became popular. This was followed by his "Orpheus and Eurydice," "The Comical Gallant," an alteration of "The Merry Wives of Windsor;" "The Iuvader of his Country," which was also an alteration of "Coriolanus." When the treaty of Utrecht was negotiating, he imagined himself of so much consequence, that he went to the duke of Marl-borough, and begged that he would use his inborough, that begged that he would use his in-terest that he might not be delivered up to the French king. The duke gravely told him that "he had made no provision for himself, though he could not help thinking that he had done the French almost as much mischief as Mr. Dennis. In 1712 he made a merciless attack on the "Cato" of Addison, and his reflections on Pope's "Easo" of Addison, and his renections on rope s

"Essay on Criticism" secured him a place in the "Dunciad." His attack on "Cato" drew forth a whimsical pamphlet, called "The Narrative of Dr. Robert Norris, concerning the strange and deplorable Frenzy of Mr. John Dennis."

B. in London, 1657; D. 1734.

DENON, Dominique Vivant, Baron de, den-

awng', was appointed to the office of a gentle-man about the person of Louis XV., and afterwards, as secretary to an embassy, resided several years in Italy. Here he studied the arts, and subsequently, after passing through the horrors of the French revolution, attracted the notice of Bonaparte. With him he went to Egypt, and on returning to Paris, received the appointment of general director of the museums, with the superintendence of the medallic mint, and such works of art as were executed in honour of the works of are as were executed in honour of the victories of France. On the abdication of the emperor, he was still allowed to retain his office, but in 1816, having rejoined Napoleon on his escape from Elba, was deprived of it. He now retired from public life, and occupied his leisure with preparing a general history of art. In this performance he was assisted by eminent artists; performance as was assisted by entiment arrans; but he did not live to complete it. n. at Chalons-sur-Saone, 1747; D. at Paris, 1825.—He wrote "Travels in Egypt," which is considered a great work, a comedy, and several other productions of considerable merit.

DENTATUS, Lucius Sicinius, den-tai'-tus, a Roman tribune, who had been engaged in 120 conflicts, and was 45 times wounded. He was murdered by the soldiers of Appius Claudius but not until he had slain 15 of them and wounded 30 more.

D'Eon DE BEAUMONT, Chas. Genevieve Lou-ise Auguste André Timothée, Chevalier, dawng, was a native of Tonnerre, and played the parts of equerry to Louis XV., doctor of law, parliamentary advocate, officer in the army, ambassador, royal censor, &c., during a long life; but the most singular affair in connexion with him is, that his sex was long a complete mystery. He came to England in attendance on the duke de Nivernois in 1761, and was appointed pleni-potentiary on the departure of the duke after the conclusion of peace in that year. An affront subsequently put upon him by the appointment of the count de Guarchy to the post of ambas-sador, and the order to himself to act as secre-DESCRIS, South, electric, an empirical analogo saudo, and one creer to missed to act as secre-and critic, who, in 1693, wrote a Pindario cde tary, induced D'Eon to publish some severe com-om King William, after which he published ments on de Guerchy, and to disclose certain several other poems, two of which, on the state secrets. For this he was prosecuted in changes, and was chief secretary for Ireland, and subsequently, colonial minister under Lord Grey's administration, from 1-30 to 1-304. In the discussion on the Reform Bill of that period, he resolutely defended its provisions with great warmth and talent, and also carried the Lill for national education in Ireland. He was likewise a principal instrument in the was likewise a principal instrument in the success of the measure for the ename pation, in 1833, of the West-India slaves. Now came, however, the crisis upon which he separated, for the remainder of his political life, from the Liberal party. Alarmed at the intend d per-ject to reduce still further the Irish Church establishment, he, with other members of the cabinet resigned his office. He was one grant establishment, he, with other members of the cabinet, resigned his office. He was once more, under Sir Robert Peel, colonial minister, and, in 1844, he was called to the House of Loris, in his father's lifetime, as Baron Stanley. About 1845, when Sir Robert declared for free trade, Lord Stanley headed the protectionist opposition, and from that time became the leader of the Conservative party. In 1851, his father dying, he succeeded to the carldom of Derby. The year following, he was enabled to form an administration to succeed Lord John form an administration to succeed Lord John Russell's, but he had only a few months' tenure of power. In 1858, on the fall of the Palmerston administration, he again had the formation of a ministry intrusted to him, which lasted un:il 1859. In 1866 he again became premier, but resigned, in favour of Mr. Disraeli, early in 1869, in consequence of ill health, and retired from active political life. The eloquence of Lord Derby was remarkable for the purity and fire of its style, and earned him the title of the "Rupert of debate." B. at Knowsley Park, Lancashire, 1799.

321

Park, Laneashire, 1799.

Derextlidas, der-sil'-li-däs, a Lacedamonian general, who, about 404 s.c., entered Asia Minor, defeated the Persians, and took several of their cities; thus preserving the Greek colunies, which had been threatened by their neighbours. He also built a wall between Thrace bours. He also built a wall between Thrace and the Chersonesus, to prevent the incursions of the people of the former country.

Derham, William, deer-hum, an English scholar and divine, who devoted himself to philosophical pursuits, became a member of the Royal Society, and contributed largely to the "Philosophical Transactions." In 1713 he published his "Physico-Theology," being the substance of his Boyle's Lectures, with curious notes; and in 1714 appeared his "Astro-Theology," which was also delivered at the same lecture. In 1716 he was made canon of Windsor, and in 1730, the University of Oxford conferred on him the degree of D.D. The last thing he printed of his own was "Christo-Theology, or a Demonstration of the Divine Authority of the Christian Religion," 1730. In his younger days he published a treatise Authority of the Caristian Rengion, 1730, In his younger days he published a treatise entitled "The Artificial Clockmaker," in 12mo, which has been several times reprinted. Ite was rector of Upminster, where he died, 1735, B. near Worcester, 1657.

DERING, Sir Edward, deer'-ing, an English pentleman, who distinguished himself, in the reign of Charles I., by his zeal for the reform of aluses. He brought in a bill for the abolition of bishops, deans, and chapters. Notwithstanding these revolutionary tendencies, he after-wards espoused the king's cause, which he supported with a regiment of horse equipped at his own expense. He was a great suiterer in the civil war, and died before the Restoration lis speeches in parliament are in 1 volume Deemody, Thomas, der'-mo-de, an Irish poet, was the son of a schoolmaster, who is said to have employed his son as Greek and Latin assistant when only nine years of age. He ran away to Dublin when ten years old, and after leading a somewhat questionable life for severa years, enlisted, and went abroad under the com-mand of the earl of Moira, who, for his good conduct, made him a second lieutenant in the waggon corps. By intemperance, however, he forfeited his position, and the earl's favour, and ultimately died in utter poverty. He published a small volume of poems in 1792, which had been written in his thirteenth year; another volume of poems appeared in 1800, and a third volume of poems appeared in 1800, and a third in 1801; ho subsequently issued a poem called the "Eatthe of the Bards," and likewise wrote a pumpilet on the French Revolution, annexed to which was a poem entitled the "Reform." B. at Ennis, 1775; D. at Sydenham, 1902.

Dr.Sactures, Jean Theophile, dus'sa.goo'. Leaf, a French philosopher, who cause to London with his father, who was a minister, on the of Building Chimneys, so as to prevent their smoking." He also translated into English smoking." He also translated into English "Gravesande's Mathematical Elements of Natural Philosophy." He was an active member of the Royal Society, and contributed several papers to its "Transactions." B. at Rochelle, 1083; D. 1749.

DESAIX, Louis Charles Anthony, des-ai', a French general, who early entered the military service of his country, and rose to the rank of licutenant. In the early part of the Revolution he became aide-de-camp to Prince de Broglie, and was severely wounded at the battle of Lauter-berg, but kept the field, and rallied the bat-talions after they had been thrown into disorder. Named successively general of brigade and of division, he contributed greatly, by his talents, to the success of the famous retreat of Moreau from Germany, the left wing of the army being commanded by him on that occasion. He afterwards defended the bridge and fort of Kehl, for two months, against the Austrian army, with great bravery, and was wounded; but subsequently joined Bonaparte at Milan, when it was announced that "the brave General Desaix had come to visit the army of Italy." He served with Bonaparte in army of thay. He served with Bonapare in Begypt, where he distinguished himself greatly, and was appointed governor of the upper part of the country. It was here he achieved his greatest glory. He completely subdued Upper Egypt, and received, as a testimony of admiraEgypte!" He was obliged, however, in 1800, to sign the unfavourable treaty of El Arish with the Turks and English, and, on his way to France, was captured and detained by Lord Koith as prisoner of war. He afterwards obneum as prisoner of war. He atterwards ob-tained his parole, and went to France. He once more fought under the banner of Bonaparte in Italy, but was killed at the battle of Marengo, to which victory he principally contributed, June 14, 1800. r. at St. Hilairo-d'Ayat, in Avignon, 1788.—A statue was erected to this

Avignon, 1763.—A Statue was creeted to this general, in the Place-Dauphiné, in Paris. Desauta, Pierre Joseph, des'-otte, a French surgeon, who, in his twentieth year, went to Paris, and soon became popular as a lecturer on anatomy and surgery. In 1776 he was admitted a member of the corporation of surgeons, and in 1782 was appointed surgeon-major to the Hospital of Charity, after which he became head Hospital of characy, after which he became near surgeon of the Hotel-Dieu. In 1701 he com-menced his "Journal de Chirurgie," a work of high reputation. During the violence of the lievolution he was confined some time in the licrolution he was confined some time in the Luxembourg prison; but his usefulness saved his life. He died while attending the dauphin, June 1, 1795, which induced a suspicion that he was despatched because he would not poison that unfortunate prince. In near Macon, 1744. He left a work entitled "Traité des Maladies Chirurgicales," &c., 2 vois, 8vo.
Desbarraux, Jacques Vallée, Count, dairo, a Frenci nobleman, who became counsellor in the Parliament of Paris, but which he provided the provided of the provided provided the provided provided the provided provided the provided provided provided the provided pr position he resigned, in order to devote himself more fully to the enjoyment of good cheer and the pursuit of pleasure. He changed his abode and climate according to the seasons, and was intimately associated with all the fine wits of the day; Balzac, Chapelle, Descartes, and others. the cap; 181126, Canpelle, Descrites, and others. It composed several songs and fugitive pieces; but the only production of his which is preserved is the beautiful sonnet, "Grand Dieu, tes jugements sont remplis d'équité," éc. Voltaire, however, denies the authorship to Desbarreaux, and gives it to the Abb Lavau. B. at Paris, in 1803; D. 1847.

DESCRIVENT PROPAGE LOSEN TURNESS dei.

as Faris, in 1602; D. 1637.
DESPILLONS, Français Joseph Terrasse, daibell-yawng, a French Jesuit, who wrote 2 vols. of fables resembling those of La Fontaine, and some Latin poems. He also published an edition of Phedrus, with notes n. at Châteauneuf, in 1711; p. at Mannheim, 1788.

DESCRIES, René, dai-kart, a celebrated French philosopher, who received his education at the Jesuits' college at La Flèche. Here he acquired a considerable knowledge of the Greek and Latin languages; but on leaving that seminary, removed to Paris, applying him-self to the study of mathematics. In 1616 he self to the study of mathematics. In 1616 he entered the array of the prince of Orange, and afterwards served under the duke of Bavaria, and want as erver into run or more or briving, and want as the protection of the product of the time, in Latin, a treatise on music, and pro-jected some other works. After this, he quitted he military life, and travelled into Holland, Switzerland, France, and Italy, where, although it has been said that he saw Galileo, at Florence, tion from Bonaparte, a sword, with this in-scription on its blade, "Conqueto de la Haute" he settled at Amsterdam, and applied himself assiduously to the mathematical sciences, particularly dioptrics, in which he made some important discoveries. About this time he visited England, where he made observations on the declination of the magnetic needle. His philosophy now became the subject of much discussion, meeting with an extensive reception, though with considerable opposition. Gi'bert Woot, rector of the University of Utreeht, wrote against it, and Descartes replied with a virulence unbecoming a philosopher. To escape relence unbecoming a phinosopher. To escape re-ligious persecution, he accepted an invitation from Christina, queen of Sweden, to go to Stockholm, where he obtained a pension and an Stockholm, where he obtained a pension and an estate. By this queen he was treated with great distinction, although she pursued her studies under his direction at five o'clock in the morning, notwithstanding that his health was far from being rigorous. B. at La Haye, in Touraine. 1596; D. at Stockholm, 1650, when his remains were conveyed to Paris, and interred with great pomp in the church of St. Geneviève, Descartes was a man of great parts, and of a vigorous imagination. He was the first to remathematics. His principal works are, 1, Principal philosophia; 2, "Di-stratio de Methodo recte regendæ Rationis," &c.; 3, "Di-optice," 4, "Meditationes," 5, "Geometry," 6, "Letters." duce the science of optics to the command of

6. "Letters."

Despondances, Pierre François Guyot, daifon'-toin, a French critic, who studied under the Jesuits, and in 1724 went to Paris, where he Jesuits, and in 1/21 work to Fairs, where no contributed to several periodical papers, especially to the "Journal des Savants," which he greatly aided by the cleverness of his articles. Offending Voltaire by the freedom of his criticisms and censures, a bitter literary warfare was the consequence. Besides other works, he published a prose translation of Virgil. B. 1633; D. 1745.—There was also a French botanist of this name, who published several works on flowers and plants. B. 1751; D. 1833.

DESHOULIERES, Antoinette, dai-shool'-e-air, a distinguished French poetess of the reign of Louis XIV., who was intimate with all the literary celebrities of that sparkling age, and appears to have borne herself, throughout many difficult circumstances, with a propriety much to be commended. Her contemporaries called her the "Tenth Muse" and the "French Calliope." She attempted poesy in all its various forms, from the song to tragedy; but the idyl and cologue were those in which she most excelled. One of the most admired of her compositions is "Les Moutons," a charming allegory, in which she deplores, in beautiful verses, the sad lot of children who have lost their father. She married, in 1651, the Seigneur Deshoulières, but who died leaving her without fortune. B. 1633;

DESIDERIUS, OF DIDIER, des'-i-deer-e-us, the last king of Lombardy, succeeded Astolphus in 756. His daughters were married to the two sons of Popin, king of France, Carloman and Charlemagne. Desiderius invading the papal territories, the pope called in Charlemagne to his aid, who marched into Lombardy, took his father-in-law prisoner, and sent him with his family to France, where they died. Dethroned in the year 777.

DESMANS, JOSEPH François Edouard, de-ma-he', a French dramatic poet, was the friend of Voltaire, and the associate of the leading wits of the time in Paris. He was a man of singularly anishle manners and discolling and used to remark that "If licentry new were only acreed they would, though seen in master, rates the world, though seen in much r, rates the world;" and that, "If my friend laughs, he ought to tall me the cause of his joy; but if he weeps, it is my dury to find out the sources of his grief." Dissumals was the author of a play called the "Important," which was received with great applicate; and of miscellaneous works in versa. In at Sullysur-Lore 1729, a 154. Loire, 1722; p. 1761.

Desmatzeaux, Pierre, dai'-mai-zo, a French DESTAIRATE, FIGTE, act -man; 20, a Feman biographical writer, who came to England, and became fellow of the Brigal Sectety. He translated into English "Bayle's Dictionary," and wrote the lives of Chillingworth and John Hales. He had also a concern in the great Historical Dictionary, 10 vols. folio. B. at Auvergne, 1666;

D. in London, 1745.

DESMARETS, François Seraphin Regnier, daimar-ai, a French poet and critic, who trans-lated the odes of Anaercon into Italian, and was the author of poems in Latin, French, Italian, and Spanish, besides an excellent French grammar. He was perpetual secretary to the French Academy, and was at one time secretary to the French embassy at Rome, B. in Paris, 1632: p. 1713.

DISMOETS, Pierre Nicholas, dai'-mo-lai, a French ecclesiastic, who continued Sallengre's "Memoirs of Literature," 11 vols, 12mo, and edited several of Lami's treatises. B. at 'laris, in 1677: p. 1760.

Desnothins, Camille, dai'-moo-ld, a fellow-student of Robespierre, who, in 1759, was the favourite orator with the people of Paris, and made his idea of liberty the idel of his worship. made his idea of liberty the 1001 of his worman. He had the greatest contempt for everything that were the appearance of religion; and that were considerable, they although his talents were considerable, they seem only to have hastened his downfall. In seem only to have hastened his downfall. In the heat of the great revolution, his colleagues conspired against him, and brought him to the scaffold. n. at Guise, 1702; guillotined, 1704.

DESPARD, Edward Marcus, Zeel-pard, an Irishman, who early entered upon a military life, and became an able engineer. At the close of the American war he served in the West Indies, where he distinguished himself by an expedition on the Spanish main, in which had for a condjutor Captain, afterwards Lord, Nelson. For his services there, he was made literant-colonel. In 1784he was appointed Engtenant-colonel. In 1784he was appointed Eng-lish superintendent at Honduras; buthis conduct causing him to be suspended, he demanded an investigation. This, however, was refused him, when he became violent against the government, and was sent to Coldbath Fields prison. whence he was removed to the House of Inwhence he was removed to the flower of Al-dustry at Shrewsburr, and next to Tothill Fields Bridewell. On his liberation, he endeavoured to seduce the soldiery, and having collected some followers, held meetings at alchouses, to which no persons were admitted without taking a treasonable oath. At these assemblies, it is said that various plans were devised for the murder of the king; and, at last, it was deter-mined to make the attack when his majesty. went to the Parliament House. The plot being discovered, he and several other persons were arrested, and, being found guilty, suffered on the scaffold, in 1808.

Dessatines, Jacques, dai-sa-leen, a negro, who, from being a slave, was made the first king of St, Domingo. He was carried in early life from the Gold Coast of Africa, of which he was a native, to St. Domingo, and joined the negro chief Toussaint L'Ouverture on the outbreak of the negro insurrection in the island after the French revolution, became Toussaint's first lieutenant, and, after his capture, headed the rebellion against General Rochambeau, whom he mainly contributed to defeat in the pattle of St. Mare. He was proclaimed emperor of Hayti on the 8th of October, 1:04; but his cruelty and avarice making him obnoxious, Christophe and Pethion raised an insurrection, and Dessalines was killed by a musket shot on the 17th of October, 1806, and was succeeded by Christophe, under the title of Henry I. Though of low stature, Dessalines was firmly built, and his eyes were possessed of uncommon brilliancy. He was were possessed of uncommon brilliancy. He was utterly unclusted. B. about 1700.

DESCOURTS, Philip Néricault, dai-toosit, a French dramatic writer, who was attached to a political mission to England, and resided in London for a number of years. On his return to his own country, he refused the office of ambasedur to Russia, and retired into the country, where he devoted himself to agriculture and the belles-lettres. D. at Tours, 1889; D. 1751—Illis principal pieces are "Le Philosophe mantis" and "Le Glorjanzy," the last of which marié," and "Le Glorieux;" the last of which is esteemed one of the best comedies in the French language. His works were printed at the Louvre, in 4 vols. 4to, 1757, and since in 10

vols, 12mo.

DEVIS, Arthur William, de'-vis, an English painter, who received, when very young, a silver medal from the hands of Sir Joshua Reynolds, then president of the Royal Academy, for profi-ciency in the arts. He was employed by the East India Company, when only twenty years of age, as draughtsman on a voyage of discovery; but the ship despatched on the expedition was wrecked on the Pellew Islands, and Devis, atter much privation, succeeded in reaching Bengal, where hir William Jones and other Benglat, where Sir William Jones and other distinguished individuals received him kindly, and warmly patronized him. He returned to England in 1795, and successfully practised his art for many years. His most important pictures are — "King John Signing Magna Charta," "Lord Cornwallis receiving the Sons of Tippoo Sahib as Hostages," and the "Battle of Tratalgar." Before executing the last-named work, Devis went on board the Victory, and made a sketch of the cockpit where Nelson died, and likewise took portraits of the officers and others who surrounded the hero in his last moments. B. Aug. 10, 1762; D. Feb. 11, 1822.

D'Ewes, Sir Symonds, duse, an English anti-D'EWES, SIT SYMONUS, AUSS, AN LUGHON AND quary, who employed a considerable part of his time in collecting materials for a history of Great Britain, and had the honour of knight-hood conferred upon him by Charles I. In 1641 heod conferred upon him by Charles I. In 1641 he was made a baronet, and, on the breaking out of the Civil War, accepted the Solemn League and Covenant. He compiled the "Journals of all the Parliaments during the Reign of Queen Elizabeth," published in 1682, folio, and wrote his own life, which is in Peck's "Desiderata Curiosa." The "Journals of Parliament" are an authority for the parliamentary transactions of the reign of Queen Elizabeth. B. at Coxden, Dorsetshire, 1602; D. 1650.
DE Witt, John, de wit, a distinguished Dutch

captain-general, and high-admiral in one and the same person. In 1854 he negotiated the peace with Cromwell, in which it was arranged that no member of the house of Orange should be made high-admiral or stadtholder. B. at Dort, 1625; murdered, with his brother, at the Hague, 1672. He had gone in his carriage to receive his brother as he came out of prison, having been unjustly confined, when he was set upon by the populace and killed.

D'HILLIERS, BARAGUAY. (See BARAGUAY.)
DIAGORAS, di-ag'-o-ras, a Greek philosopher of Melos, and a disciple of Democritus, who, having been the victim of a perjury which remained unpunished, passed from superstition to atheism, and was generally called the Atheist. He was driven from Athens on the charge of having turned into ridicule the Eleusinian mysteries, and perished by shipwreek, about

412 B.C.

DIAZ, Bartolomeo, de'-az, a Portuguese navigator, who discovered the Cape of Good Hope, to which he gave the name of the Cape Hope, to which he gave are hains of the Cape of Tempests; but on his reporting this, in 1456, to John II., king of Portugal, he commanded it to be called Cabo de Buena Esperanza, or the Cape of Good Hope. Said to have been lost in a storm in 1500.

DIBDIN, Charles, dib'-din, an English actor, dramatist, and distinguished sea-song writer, was educated at Winchester, and originally intended for the church; but going to London, at the early age of sixteen he produced an opera, called "The Shepherd's Artifice," which was brought out at Covent Garden. In 1778 he was appointed musical manager at Covent Gar den. Subsequently he built the "Circus," afterwards called the "Surrey," and in 1738 published his "Musical Tour." In the following year he gave his entertainment called "The Whim of the Moment," of which he was sole author, composer, and performer. In this piece he sung his ballad of "Poor Jack," which completely won the ear of the public; and, from that time, his reputation as a balladist was established. He wrote no fewer than 900 songs, according to some, and 1200 according to others. Whichever number is correct, does not much signify; as a soil so prolific must have produced many weeds. Many of his lyrics, however, have great merit. They have solaced the seaman during long voyages, sustained him in the storm, and inspired him in battle; and they have been quoted to restore the mutinous to order and discipline. In 1805 he retired from public life, and received a government pension of £200 per annum. B. at Southampton, 1745; b. 1814. "Poor Tom Bowling" was written upon a brother of his, who had been the captain of an East Indiaman, and was twenty-nine years older than the author.—Thomas, a son of Charles, was long connected with the London stage, as on actor and dramatist. He wrote and adapted a vast number of pieces; but none of them are distinguished by much original merit. He also wrote a work of amusing "Reminiscences," B. 1771; D. in Pentonville, 1841.

DIDDLY, Rev. Thomas Frognall, was the son of the brother of Charles Dibdin's celebrated "Poor Tom Bowling, the darling of our crew.

Du Wirr, John, de wit, a distinguished Dutch He lost his parents when only in his fourth statesman, who isboured to retreach the power year, and was designed for the law, but ulti-of the house of Orange by endeavouring to pre-mately became a cleryman, and an emiment vent the union of the offices of stadtholder, bibliographer. In 1809 appeared his "Biblio-

DICKENS, CHARLES.

DAVY, SIR HUMPHRY.

D'ARBLAY, MADAME.

De Foe, Daniel.

Dibbin, Charles.

Dicearchus

Diderot

mania," and an enlarged edition in 1911. The work was well received, and brought him £200 of profit, and considerable reputation. After it, came his edition of Ames's "Typographical Ancame his edition of Ames's "Typographical Antiquities," the "Bibliotheca Spenceriana," the "Bibliographical Decameron," and several "Antiquarian Tours." He was the founder of the Roxburghe Club, a literary association, instituted for the purpose of reprinting books. He also wrote "Reminiscences of a Literary and several theological works.

Calcutta, 1776; p. 1847.
DICEARCITES, di-se-ar-leus, 4 peripatetic philosopher of Messina, in Sicily, whose treatise on the "Geography of Greece" was published by H. Stephens, in 1589, and by Hudson in his "Collection of Writers on Geography," in 1709. this principal philosophical work was one "On the Soul," which he divided into three dialogues, and which argued against its existence.

Lived in the 3rd century B.C.

Dick, Sir Alexander, dik, a Scottish physician, who studied at Edinburgh, and at Leyden cian, who studied at Lumourgu, and under Boerhaave; and having taken his degree of M.D., returned to his own country. He afterwards made the tour of Europe, and when he came back settled in Pembrokeshire, where he practised with success. On the death of his he practised with success. On the death of his brother, he succeeded to the family estate of Prestonfield, where he resided the remainder of the College of Physicians at Edinburgh, to which he was a benefactor. In at Prestonfield, in 1703; b. 1785.—He was the first who paid attention to the culture of the true prubabe in Britain; for which he received, in 1774, the gold medal from the London Society for Promoting Arts and Commerce.

Diox, Sir Robert Henry, major-general, en-tered the army as ensign in the 75th foot in 1800; obtained a company in the 78th, in 1804; was in the expedition to Sicily, and was wounded in the battle of Maida; was present in the battle of Alexandria, under Abercromby, and again wounded at Rosetta. He was attached to the 42nd Highlanders in 1803, and went to the Peninsula with the 2nd battalion, where he was present, in command of his battalion, at Busaco, Ciudad-Rodrigo, the storming of Fort St. Michael, and the siege of Burgos. He again joined Wellington in the campaign of 1815, and was a third time wounded at Quatre-Bras, while was a tilric time vocanice as conclusion of the war he retired to Tullimet, his paternal estate in Perthshire; but, having lost his wife, he once more sought active service, obtained a command in India, and was killed in the battle of Sobraon, on the 10th of February, 1846, while in the act, as Lord Gough in his dewhite in the act, as nord Googn in his de-spatches expressed it, of "personally animating, by his dauntless example, the soldiers of her Majesty's 80th regiment in their career of noble daring.

Dick, Thomas, LL.D., the "Christian philosopher," was educated at the university of Edinburgh, and afterwards entered the ministry of the Secession Church. Much of his time was passed in teaching and lecturing on scientific subjects. He also contributed to many periodisubjects. He substitute that the following more per-manent works:—"The Christian Philosopher," torios in the met "The Philosophy of Religion," "Philosophy of her to retire in a Future State," "On the Mental Illumination she died in 1833. and Moral Improvement of Mankind," "Christian Beneficence contrasted with Covetousness," "Celestial Scenes," "The Solar System," "The Constant Scenes, "The Solar Pystum," The Atmosphere and Atmosphere and Atmosphere, and the foliation and "The Telescope and Microscope," Some of these works have been translated into the languages, and the "Solar System" into the Chinese. All his works have received the highest commendation, and merit a place in every Christian library. Towards the close of his life a small pension was granted to him by the government, B. near Dundee, Scotland, 1772.

D. 1857.

Dickens, Charles, dik'-ens, one of the mos-DICKENS, Charles, aw-ess, one on the most successful of modern novelests, was intended for the profession of the law, but became a reporter for the newspapers. His first encurement was in the office of "The True Stan," and his next in that of the "Morning Chronicle," in the evening edition of which paper first appeared his "Sketches of Life and Character." These were subsequently collected These were subsequently collected and given to the world under the title of "Sketches by Boz." Their success induced an enterprizing publisher to engage Mr. Dickens and Mr. Seymour, the comie draughtsman, and Mr. Seymour, the come dramgingaria, "the one to write, and the other to illustrate, a book which should exhibit the adventures of a party of cockiney sportsmen." The result was the "Pickwick Papers," a performance which at once placed Mr. Dickens in the foremost property of the pro rank as a popular writer of fiction. After it, came his "Nicholas Nickleby," "Oliver Twist," the "Old Curiosity-Shop," "Barnaby Rudre," and many more, teeming with original wit, humour, and sentiment, besides abounding with vivid descriptions of human life and character. In 1341 he paid a visit to America, where his fame had preceded him, and where he received a hearty welcome. On his return, he published a work recording the impressions made by his wist. In 1845 he was appointed principal editor of the "Daily News," a paper of liberal polities; but he did not long hold this position. To its columns he contributed "Pletures of Italy." On his retirement from that paper he resumed the pen of fiction, and produced "Dombey and Son," "David Copperfield," Bleak House," several "Christmas tales," the "Child's History of England," "Little Dorrit," and edited the "Memoirs of Grinaldi." Lie, and edited the "Memoirs or Grinaudi. 11c, besides, till 1859, conducted the periodical called "Household Words," and was a constant contributor to its pages. In that year he relinquished his connexion with that serial, to establish another on a similar plan, and cutified "All the Year Round," of which the first series was completed and the second commenced in December, 1863. In 1867-8, he visited the United States for the purpose of giving readings in the principal towns, and, on his return from America, commenced a series of farewell rendings in the principal towns of the United Kingdom. B. at Landport, Portsmouth, 1812.

DICKONS, Mrs., dik-ons, whose maiden name was Poole, a celebrated singer, sustained the same range of characters as Mrs. Billington, to whom, however, she was inferior as a vocalist. She began her career at Covent Garden, in 1793. after having been the pupil of Rauzzini, the teacher of Braham, and from that time till 1818 was constantly engaged at the operas and ora-torios in the metropolis. Ill-health compelled her to retire in the year last-mentioned; and for the profession of the law: but, from sheer in for the profession of the law, but, from sheer in delenee and the love of reading, he relinquished this intention, and gave himself up to literature and philosophy. His this work, entitled "Phil lesophical Musines," was published in 1746 and was afterwards reprinted under another title. In 1747 he was concerned in a Medical share in this work was large, and the whole or the articles on arts and trade were furnished by him. His own opinion of it, however, is not very flattering. "In its execution," said he, "I had neither time nor the power to be particular in the choice of my contributors, who were mostly very inferior men, badly paid, and, consequently, careless in their work." While errared in the "Encyclopedie," he wrote some other books; such as a Recutious novel, called "Eigors Indiscrets," and two consedies, the "Fils Nature" and the "Pere de Familie." In 1730 appeared his "Lectors on the Blind," that free sentiments in which occasioned his being imprisoned six mouths at Vincennes. On recovering his liberty, he word "Letters on the Dad and Dumb." His other works are, "Principles of Moral Philosophy," "Indiections on the Interpretation of Nature," "The Code of Nature," "The Eight Sense," Of Public Education," "Puncyrico on Richardson, "Life of Senecat." Dédacot was an ingenious, rather ticular in the choice of my contributors, who Seneca." Diderot was an ingenious, rather than a useful writer. His works are fanciful, and full of prejudices against religion; but he made himself rich by them, if that is of consequence when a man comes to his death-bed. The last remark he was heard to make by hed. The hast remark he was must to make by his daughter, shortly before his death, was, that "the first step towards philosophy is in-eredulity." n. at Langres, in Champagne, 1713: p. in Paris, 1784.

DIDEROT, Denis, de'-de-ro, a French writer was the son of a master cutler, and was intended

DIDIUS JULIANES, M. Salvius Severus, did'-e-us ju-li-u'-nus, a Roman emperer, who was consul in 179 A.D. He purchased the imperial diadem from the soldiers at an enormous rate, in 193; but did not pay the sum agreed upon, and made himself odious by his luxurious and extravagant habits. Shortly afterwards, however, Severus was declared emperor by the practorian bands, and Didius was slain, having reigned only sixty-six days. n. at Milan, about 133. Droo, or Eurssa, di-do, queen and founder of Carthage, was the daughter of Belus, king of Tyre. She married Sicheus, priest of Hercules, Tyre. She married stements, priess of nervanes, who, for the sake of his riches, was murdered by Pygmalton, the successor of Belus. Dido, disconsolate at the loss of her husband, sailed with a number of Tyrians, and settled on the coast of A frica, where she purchased a trace of land, on which she built a citadel, called Byrsa. This place soon increased, and her dominions extended. Jarbas, king of Mauritania, wood her; but she rejected his suit; when he threatened to invade her territories. She requested three months to reconsider her refusal, and, in the interval caused a funeral pile to be erected unjects, about 953 n.c. Virgil and Ovid have represented this action as the effect of grief, occasioned by the departure of Æncas, of whom she was enamoured.

DIDOT, François Ambrose, de-do, a celebrated printer, who invented stereotyping, ascribed also to a Scotchman named Ged, and executed several works with beauty. He also improved the construction of paper-mills, and invented many useful machines relative to the typo-graphic art. At the age of 73 he read over tive times, and carefully corrected, every sheet of the stereotyped edition of Montaigne, printed by his sons. He had likewise projected, and partly executed, an index to that writer. p. 1730; p. at Paris, 1804.—His brother, Pierre François, and his sous (particularly François) and a nephew, also did much to improve the arts of printing and type-easting in France.

Didnon, Adolphe Napoleon, de'-drawing, one of the greatest modern French students of medicaval Christian art, who made himself familiar with all the remarkable medieval mo-numents in France and Greece. In 1848 he numents in France and Greece. In 1819 no lectured on Christian iconography in Paris, and afterwards became editor of the "Annales Archéologiques." His principal work, however, is his "Leonographic Chrétienne," a portion of which has been translated into English by Mrs.

Millington. B. at Hanteville, 1806.

Diebitsch, Sabalkanski Hans Karl Frederich Anton, de'itish, a Prussian, who entered the military service of Russia, and in 1805 was wounded at Austerlitz. After the battle of Friedland, he rose to the runk of carptain, and subsequently became major-general. He fought at the battle of Lutzen, and was at that of Dresden. In 1814 he oppose! the hesitation of the allies to march on Paris, for which the emperor Alexander bestowed on him the order emperor Alexander Destowed on limit the order of St. Alexander Newski. In 1820, he became chief of the imperial staff of Alexander, whom he attended on his death-bed at Taganrog. In the war with Turkey in 1829-9, he took Varna, and greatly extended his reputation by making the passage of the Balkan. He advanced to Adrianople, when the trenty of that name was signed, and which saved his army. In 1931 he was sent to quell the insurrection in Poland. and fought the battle of Ostrolenka. Thence he transferred his head-quarters to near Pultusk, where he died of cholera, in 1831. B. at Gross-leippe, in Silesia, 1785. Dieffenback, Johann Frederich, de' fen-bak, esteemed one of the most skilful operating surgeons that ever lived, originally studied for the hurch, participated in the war of liberation in Jermany, and did not commence the study of surgery and medicine till after the fall of Bonaarte in 1815. He attended the classes at arte in 1815. He attended the classes at femn and Wurtzburg, and then settled at Berlin, where he was appointed to the chair of urgery. He published several useful works, but his fame mainly rests on the skill with which he performed the most difficult operation. ions, among others, those of making artificial oses, cheeks, eyelids, &c. He also invented he valuable method of curing squinting which ; now generally practised by the faculty. B. 795; D. 1848.

DIEMEN, Anthony van, de'-men, governor of he Dutch East India possessions, first went to india as an accountant, in the employ of his government. In 1825 he became a member of he supreme council, and in 1831 returned to Tolland as commander of the Indian fleet; but nothing as commander of the andian need, sha he year following, went out again as director-eneral. Subsequently becoming governor-eneral, he greatly extended the Dutch interest a the East. In 1842 he sent Abel Tasman on a oyage to the south; the consequence of which ras the discovery of that large island which was alled after him Van Diemen's Land; but which name was changed, at the desire of the colonists, to Tasmania. B. at Kuilenberg; D. 1645.

Dieneces

Dieneces, di-en'-e-sees, a Spartan, who, hearing, before the battle of Thermopyle, that the Persians were so numerous that their arrows would darken the light of the sun. observed. that it would be a great convenience, for the Spartans would then fight in the shade.

DIEERNBECK, Abraham van, de'-po:-bele, an eminent Dutch painter, of the Flemish school, was a fellow-pupil of Vandyke in the studio of Rubens, at Antwerp. He was one of the best scholars of his great master, and acquired best scholars of his great master, and acquired a high reputation. In 161 he was elected director of the Antwerp Academy, an office which be held as long as he lived. He designed chiedly for the booksellers, and his works on camvas are very scarce. In the churches of Autwerp there are several painted windows by him. B. at Dois-le-Duc, about 1606; D. 1673.

DIES, Albert, dees, a German, landscape.

DIES, Albort, dees, a German landscape painter and engraver, who acquired consider-able reputation in his art. After gaining a slight knowledge of this in Hanover, he pro-ceeded to Dusseldorf, and thence to Rome, where he took up his abode in the neighbourhood of Tivoli and Albano. Here he devoted himself to the study of the ever-varying aspects of nature; and, in Rome, published, in conjunction with several German artists, a set of Juneton with several derimin artists, a set of landscape-etchings. He now married a Roman lady, and, in 1796, returned to Germany, taking up his residence in Vienna. Here he rose into fame; but from having accidentally taken some sagar of lead, by mistake, for a medicine, he was afflicted with a nervous debility, which forced him to resign the use of his pendil. He now applied himself to poetry, in the study of which he had always been more or less occupied, and to musical composition. We are not aware that his excellence was great in either of these pursuits. B. in Hanover, 1755; D. at Vienna, 1823.

DIETRICH, Johann Wilhelm Ernst, de'-treesh, an eminent German artist, whose father was court-painter at Weimar, and from whom he received his first instructions in art. In his 12th year he was sent to study at Dresden, and there, in his 18th, was presented to Augustus II, king of Poland, whose court-painter he became. He obtained other patrons, and now rose rapidly. In 1741 he was appointed court-painter to Augustus III. In 1763 he became one of the professors in the Academy of Arts at Dresden, and director of the school of painting in the porcelain manufactory at Meissen. Dietrich was a persovering artist, but with little original power. His excellence lay with fittle original power. All sexcended as chiefly in landscape pointing. D. at Wedmar, 1712; D. at Dresden, 1774.

Diez, Juan Martin, de'aith, known as the "Empeeinado," the celebrated guerilla chief who made himself famous, and gained great renown, during the Peninsular War, was the renown, during the Peninsular War, was the son of a peasant of Valladolid, and entered the army of his country as a dragoon. With a bend of about fifty followers, he, in 1803, commenced a career of guestila warfare which greatly harassed the French, and was of material value in adding in their expulsion from Spain. The Duke of Wellington, to whom he was of great use, fully appreciated his services, and he was at length made a brigadier general of cavalry. He attended the Duke in his triumphant entry into Madrid, and was 331 or level by Min to join the army at Torton, in commun 1 of 5 90 men. Bigg gave offered to the government of Ferdinand VII., by address-ing to the king in 1815 a singular letter, and by the independence of his conduct; and, as is not anusual with kings, all his services were forcotten, and he was charged with conspiracy, tried, condemned, and executed in 1:45. B.

Diger, Sir Everard, d'q'-le, en English gentleman, who was visited by James I at Belvoir Castle, and knighted by that sovereizn, when on his way from Scotlan I to ascend the when on his way from scottant to assent the theone of England. He became a partisan in the gunpowder plot, for which he was executed in 1606. p. 1581.—He pleaded guilty at his trial, and endexoured to extenuate his erine by alleging conscience as his motive.

DIGBY, Sir Kencha, son of the above, was brought up in the Prote-tant religion, and educated at Gloucester Hall, Oxford, where he endrated at Gradester Han, Oxford, where he studied philosophy; after which he made the tour of Europe, and was absent two years in France, Spain, and Italy. On his return, he received the honour of knighthood at Hinchinbrook, near Huntingdon, the house of Lord Montague. In the reign of Charles I. he was appointed to several posts, and on occasion of some difference between England and the Venetians, was dispatched with a fleet into the Mediterranean, and gained considerable re-putation by his conduct. About 1636 he quitted the Church of England for that of Rome, and vindicated this change in a composition entitled A Conference with a Lady about the Choice of Religion." At the commencement of the civil war, he was imprisoned by the Parliament in war, he was imprisoned by the Fariament in Winchester House, during which time he wrote a redutation of Brown's "Religio Medici." In 1628 he regaled his liberty, went to Frame, and, soon after, travelled into Holland to visit Descartes, with whom he established an in-timate friendship. When Cromwell assumed the sovermenact, he ventured to visit his native country, and was frequent in his attendance at the court of the Protector. He also became at member of the Royal Society, and was one of the council. D. 1603; D. in London, 1605, and was buried in Christ Church, Newgate-street. With hisson the males of that branch of the Digby With inssort themales of that drane not the Digry family became extinct. Sir Kenelm wrote "A Treatise on the nature of Bodies;" "On the Operations and Nature of Man's Soul;" "institutionum Peripateticarum Libri quinque, cum Appendice Theological do Origina Jundi;" and several other works. Sir Kenelm's wife and several other works. Sir Keneln's wife was Venelia Anastasia Stanley distinguished for her beauty, which he tasked his ingenuity to preserve, by the invention of cosmetics for her use. There is a portrait of her, by Van-dyke, in Windsor Cartle.

Digny, John, an English nobleman, who was appointed gentleman of the bedchamber to James I., and by whom he was sentambassador to Spain. In 1618 he was made Lord Digby, and in 1621 sent ambassador to the emperor of Germany. In 1622 he was again sent to Spain to negotiate a marriage between Prince Charles and the Infanta, and, the same year, was created earl of Bristol. On his return, he and Buckingham preferred charges against each other in parliament, which, however, did not lead to a trial. When the civil war broke out, he went abroad, and died of Paris, 1853. B. at Coleshill, Warwickshire, 1850. He wrote some poems.

Diger, George, Earl of Bristol, an English rolleman, the sen of the above, received his education at Oxford. He became a member of the Long Parliament, wherein he, at first, opposed the court, but afterwards joined the royal party, and was expelled. He exerted himself in the service of Charles I., and when that monarch was put to death, his lordship was exempted from parden, when he went abroad. At the Restoration he was made knight of the Garter. In 1663 he impeached Lord Clarendon in the House. B. at Madrid. Spain, 1612; D. at Chelsea, 1676.—He wrote a play called "Elvira, or the Worst not always True," which was printed in 1667.

Diggrs, Thomas, digs, was educated at Ox-ford, after which he became muster-mastergeneral of the forces sent by Queen Elizabeth to assist the oppressed Netherlanders. He wrote,-1. "Ala, sive Scala Mathematica, wrote.—1. "Alar, sive Scales Mathematics," containing demonstrations for finding the parallax of any comet, or other celestial body, 4to. 2. An arithmetical treatise, named "Stratiotices," requisite for the perfection of Soldiers, 4to. 3. "Perfect Pescriptions of the Celestial Orbs," 4to. 4. "Humble Motives for As-ociations to maintain the Religion estab-lished," Svo. 5. "Eng and's Defence," a treatise concerning invasion, folio. B. in Kent; D. 1595.
DIGGES, Sir Dudley, the eldest son of the above, was educated at University College, Oxford. He was knighted by James I., who sent him ambassador to Russia; but in the parliament of 1621 he resisted the court measures, and so continued to do in the next reign, for which he was sent to the Tower. reign, for which he was sent to the Tower. In 1850 he was slought over by the grant of the mastership of the Rolls. He wrote.—1. "A Defence of Trade," 1015, 450. 2. "A Discourse converning the Rights and Privileges of the Sulject," 10. 3. "Speeches," in Rushworth's Callections. 4. A collection of letters, which appeared after his death, under the title of the "Complete Ambassalors". p. 1533, p. 1539. DILER. Charles Westworth dilk a mubileist

DILER, Charles Wentworth, dilk, a publicist, closely connected with the literature of his day. Receiving, at an early age, an appointment in the Navy Pay-office, he found lei-ure to contribute papers to various magazines and reviews, and to edit a collection of old English plays, in 6 vols. This work appeared in 1914. 6 vols. This work appeared in 1814. He sub-sequently became connected with the "Athenaum," a literary journal, and by skilful management raised it to an influential position in agreement raised is to an initiatinal position in periodical literature. In 1789; p. 1884. Ultra, Sircharles Wentworth, sonof the above, was one of the most active promoters of the Green Industrial Exhibition of 1851, and to his un-wearded industry in working out its details, its success was greatly attributable. He was also one of the Royal Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1862, and took the most active part in its organisation and superintendence. He was made a baronet in 1862, and entered parliament in 1865. B. 1810.

DILLENIUS, Johann James, dil-le'-ne-us, an eminent German botanist, who, in 1721, accompanied Dr. Sherrard to England, where he spent the remainder of his days. Soon after his arrival he undertook a new edition of Ray's "Synopsis Stirpium Britannicarum," and was appointed the first botanical professor at appointed the first boundari processor as Oxford, on Dr. Sherrard's foundation. In 1735 the university admitted him to the degree of M.D. He published a work, entitled "Hortus Elthamensis," and a "History of Mosses." D. at Darmstadt, 1897; D. 1747.

Dissparat, Thomas, dims'-dail, a celebrated physician, who accompanied the duke of Cumberland in his expedition against the army of Prince Charles Stuart, as assistant-surgeon, and continued in that capacity till the surgeon, and continued in that capacity till the surgeon of Studies when he artiment to Surgeon of Capital Surge render of Carlisle, when he returned to Hert-ford. In 1761 he commenced practice, and ford. In 1761 he commenced practice, and became celebrated by his successful mode of inoculating for the small-pox. In 1763, ac-companied by his son, he went to Russia, and inoculated the empress and grand-duke, for which he was created a baron of the empire. physician to her majesty, and counsellor of state. A gratuity of £12,000 was given him for his journey, and a pension of £500 a year. In 1781 he again visited Russia, to inoculate the two sons of the grand-duke. The year preceding, he was elected member of parliament for Hertford, and again in 1784, on which he quitted practice. About this time he had the misfortune to lose the sight of both eyes by cataract, from which he was relieved by Baron Wenzell. In 1790 he retired from par-liament. He wrote "Tracts on Inoculation," 8vo, 1781, in which is an account of his first journey to Russia. n. in Essex, 1712; p. 1800.

DINARCHUS, di-nar'-kus, a native of Corinth, who established himself at Athens, and there received large sums of money for the composition of orations, which he prepared by order for those who wanted them. Accused of taking bribes from the enemies of Athens, he went into involuntary exile about 307 B.C., but was recalled after an absence of fifteen years. Three of his crations only have come down to us, a...a are in Stephens's Collection, 1575.

DINOCEATES, di-nok'-ra-tees, an architect of Macedonia, who rebuilt the temple of Dianast Ephesus, burnt down, 356 B.c., by Eratostratus; extended and beautified Alexandria, at the command of Alexander the Great; and was called into Egypt by Ptolemy Philadelphus. as well as to others, has been ascribed the gi-gantic project of cutting Mount Athos in the form of a statue, holding a city in one hand, and in the other a basin, into which all the waters of the mountain could empty themselves. Lived in the 4th century.

DIOCLETIAN, Caius Valerius, di-c-kle'-she-an, a Roman emperor, born of an obscure family and raised from a common soldier to the rank of general. On the death of Numerian, in 284, he was chosen emperor. He took Maximian to be his colleague, and created two subordinate emperors, Constantius and Galerius, whom he styled Casars. He was a great commander, and a patron of learning; but, in 303, stained his reign by a persecution of the Christians. He renounced the crown in 304, and retired to Salona, where he died, 313. B. at Dioclea, in Dal-matia, about 245.—This was one of the most distinguished of the Roman emperors.

DIODATI, Giovanni, de'-o-da'-te, a distinguished divine, descended from a noble family of Lucea, was educated as a Catholic, but embraced Pro-testantism, became professor of Hebrow at Ge-neva, was the friend of Milton, and at one time visited England. He made a translation of the Nils tire Italian Evaluation to the Fible into Italian, for which his name has become famous. B. 1876; D. 1879.

DIODORUS SICULUS (of Sicily) di-o-dor-us sik-u-lus, an historian, who produced an "Historic Library," or "Universal History," in 40

OF BIOGRAPHY.

Diogenes

books, which contained the history of the commended him to notice, leading him, at leagth, world from the creation to 60 n.c. Unforted to the office of consul. He wrote in the 4 the nately, of this work only 15 books and a few fragments remain. Though his chronology is erroneous, and there are many great defects in his writings, they are, nevertheless, extremely valuable, containing, as they do, facts to be met with in no other collection. He flourished about 44 B.C. B. in Sicily. The best edition of his work is that of Wesseling, in 2 vols. folio, Amsterdam, 1745.

DIOGENES, di-odj-e-nees, a Cynic philosopher, who being forced to leave his native country for coining false money, went to Athens, and applied himself to the study of philosophy under Antis-thenes, the founder of the Cynics. He carried the austrilies of his sect to a great extreme, wearing a coarse ragged cloak, living on the meanest food, and lodging under portices and other public places. It is said that he also took up his residence in a tub, and that this became his favourite abode. At Corinth he used to harangue in the Crancum; where he was visited Cynic." The monarch then asked him if he could render him any service. "Yes," said he; "stand out between me and the sun." The "stand out between the and the sun." The independence of mind shown by the philosopher struck the king, and he said, "If I was not Alexander, I would be Diogenes." He is supposed to have died at Corinth, and a public funeral was decreed him by the Athenians. The people of Sinope erected statues to his memory. B. at Sinope, a city of Pontus, 414 B c.

Diogenes, surnamed the Babylonian, a Stoic

Philosopher, a disciple of Chrysippus, and the successor of Zeno as teacher of philosophy. He accompanied Carneades and Critolaus on an embassy from Athens to Rome. Lived about 200 B.C. His works are lost.

200 B.C. HIS WORKS AT 1981. DIOGRAPS LATETITS, la-er'-she-us, a Greek historian, who wrote the "Lives of the Philosophers," in ten books. The best edition of Laertius is that of Amsterdam, 1602, 2 vols. 4to. The most convenient edition is that of H. G. Hillium, Leipsic, 1831, 2 vols. 8vo. B. at Laertes, and C. L. Childer and C. L. Childer and C. Children and C. Childer and C. Children and C. Childre in Cilicia. Lived during the reign of Severus or Caracalla.

Diogenes, a Cretan philosopher, who suc-ceeded his master, Anaximenes, in his school of philosophy at Miletus, about 430 B.C.

Diox, di'-on, a celebrated patriot of Syracuse; who was the disciple and friend of Plato, when that philosopher was at the court of Dionvsius, whose daughter, Arete, he married. Being afterwards ill-treated and banished his country Being atterwards Hi-treated and banished his country by Dionysius, he resolved upon revence, and with a small force landed in Sicily during the absence of Dionysius, and entered Syracuse in tinumh. The tyrant, informed of this, hastened to Sicily, and made a violent assaulten the si-tiation of the state of the size of the size of the del, in defending which Dion was wounded. Being supplanted by Heraclides, the commander of the Syracusan fleet, who had defeated that of Dionysius, Dion retreated to Leontium, whence he was recalled when the city was besieged by another force sent against it by Heraclides. He relieved the place, pardoned his enemies, and retired to a private station. In a subsequent "History of Rome," from the building of the city to the reign of Alexander Severus, the greatest part of which, however, is lost. That greatest part of when, however, is est. I may which remains was printed by follow thephone, it Paris, in 651s, and afterwards by follow themar, with a Latin translation. Hudded, in this native country, it is said, about the age of 70. n. at Niena, in Bithynia, about 155.

DIONYSUS II, di-onisi-onus, king or tyrant of Syracuse, who, from being a plain citizen, became commander of the forces, overthrew the government, and assumed the title of king, 405 While he was engaged in an expedition against Carthage, a body of his forces deserted. and returning, took possession of the citadel plundered his riches, and offered violence to his wife. Dionysius hastened back, and having feated his enemies, took upon them a severe revenge. He now concluded a peace with the Carthaginians, and employed himself in defend-ing the city. Having defeated another insurrestion, he disarmed all his subjects. He conquered several cities, and, after a long war with the Carthaginians, succeeded in driving them from Sicily. I ionysius affected a taste for polite literathe temples, and committed dreadful cruelt'es. Being of a suspicious disposition, he caused a subterraneous prison to be so constructed as to carry, by tubes to his private apartment, every sound or speech uttered by his prisoners. He invited Plate to his court; but being displeased with his moral discourses, he sent him away in disgrace, and ordered the master of the ship to sell him for a slave. B. at Syracuse, 430;

D. 367 B.C. (See DAMOCLES.)
DIONYSIUS II., the younger, the son and successor of the above, whom he exceeded in cruelty, but whose equal he was not in policy. Healso sent for Plato to his court, profiting little, however, by the conversation of that philoso-pher. He banished his brother-in-law, Dion, and obliged his wife to marry again, which so enraged Dion, that he gathered an army, and drove the tyrant from Syracuse, B.C. 356. Dionysius returned about ten years afterwards, and was expelled by Timoleon; on which he fled to Corinth, where he supported himself as a schoolmaster. p. 313 p.c.

Droxysius, an historian and critic of Halicarnassas, in Cara, was invited to Rome about 30 B.C., and there wrote his "Roman Antiquities," only eleven books of which are extant. He is esteemed for his impartiality, and particularly for his chronological accuracy. Besides this work, we have one written by him, entitled a "Companion" of some ancient historians, and another on the "Structure of Language." The best edition of his works is that of Reiske, Leipsic, 1774, 6 vols. 8vo. Lived in the 1st century B.C

DIONYSIN, called the Tyrant of Heraclea, in Pontus, married the niece of Darius, and greatly enlarged his territories. He was, it is said, of a most corpulent and somnolent habit, so that it was impossible to awake him without piercing his flesh with pins. B. 359; D. 304 B.C.

Dioxystus (the Arcopagite), a native of Athens, and a member of the Arcopagus, where he sat when St. Paul was brought before it conspiracy, he full by assassimation, 35±10. On the full by assassimation, 35±10. Doorxsus (the Arcopagilo), a native of the Arcopagilo), a native of the Arcopagilo, a na

"unknown God," which was the means of the conversion of Dionysius. According to some conversion of Dionysias. According to some accounts, he was consecrated bishop of Athens, and suffered martyrdom. There were printed at Antwerp, in 1631, 2 vols. purporting to be his works; but their authenticity is questionable.

DIONNSIUS, surnamed the Little, a Romish monk, who drew up a body of canons, called "Collectio, sive Codex Canonum Feelesiasticorum," translated from the Greek; he also compiled a body of decretals. To him is attributed the invention of the Victorian period, or chronological mode of computing the time of Easter. Lived in the 5th century.

DIOPHANTUS, di-o-fin'-tus, a mathematician of Alexandria, to whom is attributed the invention of algebra. When he lived is not settled; some placing him before the Christian era, and others afterwards. A Latin translation of his works was published by Holtzman, at Basle, in 1575, in 1 vol. folio.

DIOSCORIDES, Pedanius, di-os-kor'-i-dees, a physician and botanist, of Greece, who wrote five books on the Materia Medica, containing the medical virtues of plants. These are the most abundant source from which we can draw a knowledge of the botanical attainments of the are nowledge of the potantien attainments of the ancients; the best edition of these is that of Sarraceaus, folio, Frankfort, 1793. B. at Anazarba, Cilicia. Lived in the 1st century.

DIPPEL, John Conrad, dip'-ncl, a tierman physician, who, at first, studied theology at diessen, and afterwards read medical lectures at Strasburg. He asserted that he had discovered the philosopher's stone, and other wonderful secrets. After rambling from place to place, he settled at Hamburg; but was given up to the Danish government for some freedoms he had taken in regard to the government of that country, and sentenced to perpetual imprison-ment in the island of Bornholm. After seven years' confinement, he was set at liberty, and, about the same time, was invited to Sweden, to influence of the elergy, however, procured his expulsion in 1727. He then went to German and in 1733 gave out that he would not die the state of the and in 1735 gave out that he would not use ______ 1808; but the year following, he was found dead in his bed. n. at Darmstadt, 1672.—He wrote a number of enthusiastic books, under the name of "Christianus Democritus." In the midst of his extravagances, however. Dippel

the name of "Christianus Democritus." did some good. He made several useful dis-coveries; amongst others, those of the animal oil which goes by his name, and of Prussian blue.

DISEALLI, Isaac, dis-rat-le, was the descendant of a family of Spanish Jews, who, in the 15th century, fied from the religious persecu-tions in the Peninsula, and settled in Venice, where they assumed the name of Disraeli, "which was never borne before or since by any other family." The father of Isaac came to England in the middle of the 18th century, and made a fortune by commerce; and he, himself, was the only child by a mother of the same race was are only enter by a mother of the pursuits of commerce, but having a strong aversion to that line of life, he was suffered to apply himself to literature, and, after some performances in the region of poetry and romance, published, in 1790, a small volume citibled "Curiosities of Literature." The success of this volume same path, and, by 1839, the one volume had same path, and, by 1839, the one volume had become six, full of interesting matter. In 1705 appeared his "Essay on the Literary Character," which was succeeded, at various periods, "by "Calamities of Authors," "Quarrels of Authors," an "Inquiry into the Political Character of James I.," "Literary Miscellanies," "Life and Reign of Charles I.," and a few other works, In 1841 he published his "Amenities of Litera-

In 1841 he published his "Amenities of Literature," and, afterwards, amused the remainder of his days with revising what he had before written. n. at Enfeld, 1766; p. at Bradenham, Buckinghamshire, 1843.

DISBAELT, the Right Honourable Benjamin, the son of the proceding, at an early age discovered such precodity of talent as seemed to prognosticate future success in the paths of literature; but, as he was intended for the logal profession, he was placed in an attorney's office, where he continued for some time. In 1830 he became a contributor to a unpure started in the became a contributor to a unpure started in the became a contributor to a paper started in the Tory interest, and called "The Representative." This paper lived only five months; but it seems to have had some effect upon the mind of Mr. Disraeli, in so far as to give it a political bias. In 1928 appeared his novel of "Vivian Grey," In 1928 appeared his novel of "Vivian Grey," which wes, at various times, succeeded by "Contain! Fleming," "The Young Duke," "The Wondrous Tale of Alroy," "The Risc of Is. Kunder," "Henrictia Temple," "Venetia," "Coningsby," "Split," and "Tancred." Esides these, he produced, in 1834, a quarto poem, cutitled "The Revolutionary Epic," and, in 1830, "Alertos, a Tragedy." He also wrote some pamphlets, and a biography of Lord George Bentinet. Whilst thus actively engaged in the world of letters, he was continually before the public eyes as politician. In this character, however, he did not at first figures o satisfactorily as in that of a writer of fiction. After travelling as in that of a writer of fiction. as in that of a writer of fiction. After travelling as in that of a writer of neuton. After travening on the continent between the years 1829 and 1831, he returned, and stood for the representation of the borough of Wycombe, in Buckinghamshire, in the interest of the radical reforming party. He was unsuccessful, but nothing daunted; and, in 1833, he came forward in the same interest as a candidate for Marylebone. Here he was again unsuccessful, not with standing that he declared himself the friend of triennial parliaments and of vote by ballot. Having failed as a Radical, he, in 1935, came forward as a Conservative candidate for the borough of Taunton. He was still unsuccessful; but, in 1837, as a Conservative, he was returned member for Maidstone. His first speech in the House was, like his first endeavours to obtain a seat there, a complete failure. The oration was laughed at throughout, and he was compelled to sit down before it was finished. This, how-ever, he did not do until he had said, "I have begun, several times, many things, and have often succeeded at last. I shall sit down now: often succeeded no miss. I small se cown now, but the time will come when you will hear me. These words proved prophetic. The time did come when he was listened to, and that too, with the most anxious cagerness. By 1841 he was recognized as the leader of "the Young England party." Between that year and 1846 his attacks upon Sir Robert Peel were as frequent, as they were often brilliant and severe. He was then member for Shrewsbury, and, in 1847, was elected member for Buckinghamshire. In 1848 his friend Lord George Bentinck died, when he became leader of the old Tory or Prostimulated him to pursue his researches in the tectionist party in the House of Commons, In 1852 he became chancellor of the Exchanger under Lord Derby, and again in 1858 and in 1866. On the retirement of Lord Derby from the premiership in January, 1868, Mr. Disraeli succeeded him, and held office until after the general election in that year, when, in consequence of the majority against him in the House of Commons, he resigned. B. 1805.

DITTON, Humphrey, dit'-on, a learned mathe-Dirron, Humphrey, are on, hearned manne-matician and master of Christ's Hospital, who wrote various articles in the "Philosophical Transactions," but is best known for his work, "The Institution of Fluxions," etc. B. at Salisbury, 1675; p. 1715.

bury, 1675; D. 1715. de-re'-ne, an Italian, who distinguished himself by his skill in grinding telescope glasses. In this, however, he was soon outstripped by Huygen; who introduced such improvements as enabled him to discover Saturn's ring. Divini contested the truth of this, Huygens replying and Divini rejoining.

D. about 1664.

DIXON, W. Mepworth, dix'-on, a modern English writer, who first brought himself into no-News," "On the Literature of the Lower Orders." He wrote another series on "London Prisons," and then produced several biographical works of considerable merit. Among these we may notice that of "William Penn," in which he undertakes the defence of his subject against several charges made by Lord Macaulay in his "History of England." To the arguments and rica," and "Spiritual Wives"; and, in 1909, produced his latest work, "Her Majesty's Tower." n. 1821.

Dobson, William, dob'-son, an English pain-Dobson, William, and son, an angular ter, who imitated the manner of Vandyck, by whom he was introduced to Charles I.

whom no was introduced to Charles I. Pepainted both historical subjects and portraits with great excellence. B. 1810; p. 1848. DougLt, Sydner, do-Jed, an English poet, the author of the "Roman," "Baider," "England in Time of War," and, in conjunction with Alexander Smith, of "Sonnets of the War." B. at Theibens Dec. 1

Peckham Rye, London, 1824.

Donn, William, dod, an unfortunate English divine, who, in 1753, entered into orders, and divine, who, in 1783, entered into orders, and became a popular preacher in the metropolis. In 1766 he took the degree of LL.D., at which time he was chaplain to the king; in 1771, he published "Sernons to Young Men," and the year following, obtained the living of Ilockloif, in Bucking, and the control of the Control of St. George, Hanover Square, becoming vacant in 1774, he sent an anonymous letter to the chancellor's Being discovered as the writer of this letter, King George III. caused him to be struck out of the list of chaplains. On this he went abroad, and meeting his pupil, the earl of Chesterfield, and energy that nolleman presented him with the living of Winge, in Buckinghamshire. This generosity he ill requited; for, being of an ex-travagant disposition, and more expensive in his habits than his incomewould allow, he forged Lord Chesterfield's name to a bond for £4200. in the hope of being able to take it up before it was due; but the fraud was discovered, and he was tried and condemned to the gibbet. B. at Burne, Lincolashire, 172); hana, lat Tylern, 1777. Dodd published a translation of the Hymns of Callimachus; four redumes of "Sermons on the Miracles and Parables;" "A Collection of Peers," "Reflections on Letth," large, "Comfort for the Afflicted," See and after his death appear his "Thoughts in Prison," with his life prefixed. He also selected the "Learties of Shakespeare," which he internast with critishms throughout the Lofe of the values. volume.

Donn, Ralph, a civil engineer, and the crizi-nator of several public works of importune, such as Vauxhall Bridge, the South Lambeth Waterworks, and a paject for a tunnel at

His son, George Dodd, was also an engineer, and planned, and for a time superintended, the erection of Waterloo Bridge. D. 1527.

Doddenogs, or Doddenings, Sir John, dod'-

Doddenoge, or Doddenoge, bir soom, 4 or wid, an English Indge, and author of various works on legal science, among which are—"The Lawyer's Light," "The English Law, et al. (2015) and Peerage," "The The Law of Nobility and Peeraga," The Complete Parson," &c. B. 1555; D. 1628.

Doddridge, Philip, an eminent dissenting

divine, who, after several preferments, sattled at Northampton, as minister and tutor, and acquired a great and merited reputation by his learning, candour, and piety. Many eminent persons were educated under him, and he held statements of Mr. Dixon, Macaulay never re-triendly relationships and correspondence with plied. He also wrote lives of Blake and of the greatest dignitaries of the established the greatest algoritaries of the established church. Being of a consumptive habit, he went to Bristol, to endeavour to improve his health; but finding little or no benefit from the change, he went to Lishon, where he died, 1751, B. in London, 1702.—He published a number of excellent works, the principal of which are, his "Family Expositor on the New Testanent," 6 vols. 4to; the Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul," of which numerous editions have been printed; the "Life of Colonel Gardiner;" and "Sermons on the Evidences of Christianity." His single sermons and tracts were collected in 3 vols. 12mo, after his death; also his "hymns," "Lectures on Pneumatology, Ethics, and Di-vinity;" and a volume of his letters, was issued by Mr. Stedman, of Shrewsbury, after the author's death.

DODDINGTON, George Bubb, Lord Melcomb-Regis, dod'-ing-ton, a British statesman, remark-able alike for his talent and for the subtle subserviency of his character, came into Parliament in viency of his character, came into Parliament in 1715 for Winchelsen; was shortly afterwards sent envoy to Spain; was a lord of the treasury in 55 Robert Walpole's government; and ob-tained as the reward of his political subservi-ency and intrigue, the title of Lord Melcomb-legis. He associated much with the wits and liegis. He associated much with the wits and learned men of the time, some of whom—such as Churchill and Pope—ridiculal and satirized him, while Hogarth introduced him and his wig into his picture called the "Orders of Periwigs." His "Diary," published in 1784 is curious as exhibiting the traits which distinctions as exhibiting the traits which distinctions are successful to the control of the guished the statesmanship of the time. B. in guisaca the statesmanship of the time. B. in Dorsetshire in 1691; D. 1762. Dorsets, Robert, dodd-'le, an author and bookseller, but who first figured in life as foot-man to a lady. While in this station, he pub-lished a volume of poems by subscription, es-titled the "Muse in Liver," His next piece was a dramatic trifle called "The Toyshop," which had the approbation of Pope, and was brought upon the stage with so much suc-cess, that the author was enabled to commence bookseller in Pall Mall, where he carried on an extensive business many years, and then left it to his brother. He also wrote the "King and Miller of Mansfield," which was followed by a sequel to it, named "Sir John Cockle at Court." sequel to it, named "Sir John Cockle at Court," Illis greates dirmatic effort, however, was the tranged of "Cleone," which was successfully brought out at Govent Garden theatre. He also produced a little book, entitled "The Economy of Human Lift," which, owing to a notion that persulaed that it was the production of the earl of Government as the production of the earl of Government. of Chesterfield, had a large sale. In 1760 he published select fables of Æsop and other fabulists, to which he prefixed an essay on fable, lists, to which he prefixed an essay on fible. He also edited a valuable collection of possible different anthors, 6 vols.; and a collection of old plays, 12 vols. Mr. Dodsley was likewise the projector of the "Preceptor," a useful book for youth, 2 vols. Sto; and of "The Annual Register," a work of high and deserved reputalegister," a work or high and userved reputa-tion. His own miscellaneous pieces were col-lected and published in 2 vols. 8vo. n. at Jansfield, 1703; n. at Durlam, 1764. Donsworrn, Roger, £6ds'-acorif, an English Donsworrn, Roger, £6ds'-acorif, an English Dongrapher, who collected the antiquities of Yorkshire, in 162 large volumes, which are in the Bodlean library at Oxford. n. in Yorkshire, 1585; p. 1654.

Dodsworth

Doduble, Henry, dod-wel, a learned writer, who, after various vicissitudes, was, in 1693, appointed Camden professor of history at Oxappointed Camber Processor of insoly as Or-ford, but was deprived of that place in 1691, for refusing the oaths to King William, on which he retired to Cookham, and afterwards to Shottesbrooke, in Berkshire. In 1701 he published an account of the ancient Greek and Roman an account of the ancient creek and Roman cycles, a quarto volume, of which Dr. Halley had a high opinion. To follow him through his numerous publications would exceed our limits: but his most famous book was on the "Natural Mortality of the Soul," in which he endeavoured to prove, from Scripture and the fathers, that "it is immortalised actually by the pleasure of God, to punishment or reward, by its union with the divine baptismal spirit." This book made a great noise, and was answered by several writers, particularly Dr. Samuel Clarke. He wrote and edited several other works, and died at Shottesbrooke in 1711. onler work, and ded a shortestocker 1711.

n. at Dublin, 1641.—Henry, a son of the above, was bred to the law, and was an active promoter of the Society for the Eucouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce. He wrote a pamphlet, but did not affix his name to it, en-titled, "Christianity not founded on Argument," in which, under the pretence of friendship, he endeavoured to undermine the Christian religion. It was answered by Dr. Leland, Dr. Doddridge, and the author's brother William, who was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, and became D.D., rector of Shottesbrooke, prebendary of Salisbury, and archdeacon of Berkshire

Dogger, Thomas, dog-get, the legator of "Dogger's coat and badge," was an English actor and dramatic poet, who excelled in the representation of comic characters, playing at Porury Lance theatre, and becoming joint manager of that house. D. in 1721.—He left a legacy to provide a coat and badge to be rowed for, from London Bridge to Chelses, by six watermen, yearly, on the 1st of August, the day of the accession of George I.

Domenichino

DOLABELLA, P. Cornelius, dol'-a-bel'-la, the son-in-law of Cicero, who attached himself to Julius Cesar, by whom he was made consul.
On the death of Casar he obtained the government of Syria; but having slain Trebonius, the ment of syria; but having shan 1 coording, and governor of Asia Minor, and one of Casar's assassins, he was declared an enemy of the re-public. Cassius besieged him in Laodicen, where he killed himself, in the 27th year of his age. D. 43 B.C.
Doler, Carlo, dol'-chai, an artist of Florence.

who attained great eminence as a painter of religious subjects. His heads are said to be rengious subjects. His needs are said to be inimitable. B. 1616; p. 1686.

Dollond, John, dol'-lond, an eminent English optician, who, though put to the trade of rish opercial, who, though put to the trace of silk-weaving, devoted himself to the study of astronomy, which led him to consider the means by which the power of the telescope might be improved. Commencing business as an optician with his eldest son Peter, he invented the achromatic object-glass, and succeeded in applying the micrometer to reflecting telescopes, and made many other improvements. B. in Spitalfields, 1706; p. 1761.—His son Peter also made great improvements in optical instru-ments, and, in conjunction with his father, acquired a well-merited reputation. B. 1730; p. 1820.

DOLOMIEU, Deodat, do'-lo-me-u(r), an able French mineralogist, who sorved with Bonaparte in Egypt, but on his return was taken prisoner, and confined at Messina. Sir Joseph Banks, and commed at Messina. Sir Joseph Banks, president of the Boyal Society, interested himself successfully for his release, which he obtained in 1801. B. at Grenoble, 1760; n. in 1801.—His principal works ure, "Voyage to the Isles of Lipart in 1781;" "Memoir on the Earthquake of Calabria in 1783;" and several papers contributed to the "Mineralogical Dictionary." He was companded. tributed to the "mineralogical Discionary, He was commander of the Order of Malta, a member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, and also of the National Institute.

DOMAT, Jean, dom-ar', a distinguished French jurist, who presided for nearly 30 years over one of the courts of law at Clermont. He wrote an important work on the civil law of France, an important work on the civil law of France, entitled, "Les Lois Civiles dans leur Ordre Natural, suivies du Droit Public," which was the origin of the system of Montesquieur "Spirit of the Laws." It was translated into English, in 1772, by William Strahan. Domat's "Legum Delectus" was published after the author's death. B. 1625; D. 1695.

DOMBROWSEI, Henry John, dom-broo'-ske, a Polish general, who, in 1791, was engaged in the cause of the independence of his country against Russia and Prussia. Obliged to take refuge in France in 1796, he there formed a refuge in France in 1796, ne there normed a Polish legion, and had the command of it in the Italian campaign. In 1806, after the battle of Jena, he hastened to Poland, and there assembled a force of 80,000 men, which he united with Napoleon's army. In 1812, having made the greatest exertion to cover the retreat of the French from Moscow, he led the remains of his army beyond the Khine. He was ap-pointed, in 1815, commander of the cavalry, and senator of the new kingdom of Poland, but where his fellow pupils, from his slowness, called him the "Ox." On this, one of his masters told them, that "this ox would in time masters told them, that "this ox would in time make his ground so fruitful, that painting would be fed by what it produced." The prediction was verified. He was also deeply skilled in architecture, and filled the appointment of architect to Gregory XV. B. at Bologna, 1581; p. 1641.

DOMINIC, St., dom'-e-neek, a Spanish priest, who founded the order of the preaching friars who founded the order of the preaching friars called Dominicans, and, according to some authorities, the Inquisition. This, however, is an error, as the formal establishment of the "Holy Office" did not take place until 1233, when Gregory IX. named Pietro da Verona, a Dominican monk, the first inquisitor-general. B. at Calahorra, Spain, 1170; D. at Bologna, 1221. He was canonized by Pope Gregory IX.

DOMITAR, Titus Flavius, do-misk-e-an, the younger son of the emperor Vespasian. He obtained the imperial dignity on the death of his brother Titus, a.D. 81. The commencehis brother Titus, A.D. 81. The commence-ment of his reign seemed auspicious for the happiness of the Romans; but he soon discovered the wickedness of his disposition, and gave way to the most detestable crimes. He assumed the title of deity, and, at the same time, anused himself in catching flies, and sticking them on a bodkin. His cruelties rendered him so odious, that he was afraid of his own shadow, and took a number of precautions to secure himself from a number of predations to seem nimes from assassination, by which fate, however, he was overtaken, A.D. 96, in the 45th year of his age. He was the last of the twelve Casars.

ne was the last of the twaire Crearis.

Dontrians, Donitini, donish -eal-nus, general of Diodelain's army in Egypt, who caused himself to be proclaimed emperor at Alexandria in 236, and fell by violence two years afterwards.

Dox, David, an eminent botanist, who is 1858; was appointed to the chair of Botany in the Wasse (Colleges Lawrice and the Colleges Lawrice and th

King's College, London, which he held till his death. He wrote several excellent works upon the science of which he was a professor, and was, for some time, librarian to the Linnaan Society. B. at Forfar, Scotland, 1800; p. 1810.

DONALDSON, Thomas Leverton, don'-ald-son, professor of architecture in University College, protessor of arcintecture in University Joniege, Lordon, gradually rose to the high position he attained, and published several works illustrative of the subject of his profession. After pursuing his studies abroad, visiting Naples, and spending a year at Rome, he returned, and commenced publishing several works, which brought him prominently into notice. When brought him prominently into notice. When the Institution of British Architects was inaugurated, in 1835, he was chosen one of its secre-taties, and subsequently became chairman of the commissioners of sewers for Westminster. In 1843 he was appointed professor of architecture at University College. He acted on the committee for the Great Exhibition of 1851, and, to minitee for the Great Exhibition of 1931, and, in 1835, received, for his own drawings, from the committee of the "Exposition Universelle," a gold medal. He gave up his professorship in 1864. B. 1795.

DONATELLO, or DONATO, don-a-tail-o, aFlorentine sculptor, was the first who abandoned the dry Gothic style, and attempted to restore to his art the grace and beauty of the antique. His works are to be found in many of the Italian churches. Michael Angelo, it is said, held Donatelli's performances in high admiration. в. 1383; р. 1466.

DONATI, M., do-na'-te, a modern Italian astro-nomer, of the museum at Florence, who was the first to discover, on the 2nd of June, 1958, the magnificent comet of that year, and which was known by his name. At that date it was 228,000,000 miles distant from the earth, being visible only by the most powerful telescopes. From that time it gradually approached our world until the 10th of October, when it was at its nearest, viz., 51,000,000 miles. Donat's comet was unexpected, and was new to astronomers, who, however, at its arrival, had been anxiously looking out for the return of that of 1556.

DONELLY, Sir Ross, don'-el-e, a British admirol who entered the navy when young, and served in Lord Howe's victory on the 1st of June, 1791, where he so distinguished himself as to obtain promotion to flag rank, and was in commission for some time in the Mediterranean. In 1503, Nelson entrusted him with the command of the squadron of frigates engaged in blockading Toulon; and in the expedition against the Cape of Good Hope, shortly afterwards, he evinced the most determined bravery. His next sphere of action was South America, where he was at the capture of Buenos Ayres; and during the investment of Monte Video he commanded the brigade of seamen and marines acting on land along with the army, and took part in the storm-ing of the town on the 3rd of February, 1807, for his services on which occasion he received the thanks of Parliament. He next served on the Cadiz station, and, in 1810, joined Lord Col-ingwood off Foulon. He attained the rank of rear-admiral in 1811; vice-admiral in 1825; and admiral in 1838. D. at an advanced age in 1841.

DONIZETTI, Gactano, don-e-zet'-te, a distinguished Italian musical composer, who received his first instructions in his art in the Musical Institute of Bergamo. In 1815 he removed to Bologna, and, entering the army, produced, in Venice, in 1815, his first opera, entitled "Enricod di Borgogna." In 1822 he left the army, but still continuing to cultivate his musical abilities, he put forth, in 1830, his "Anna Dolera" at Milan. Up to this period he had produced no fewer than thirty-one operas; and during the next fourteen years he added to these thirty-three more. Many have sunk into oblivion, but others, being of the highest class, rotain their popularity with the musical public. Am. mg potarity with the musical public. Am. mg Fille du Regiment, "Don Pasquale," &c. In 1833 he was appointed professor of counterpoint in the Poyal Collego of Music at Xugot. his first instructions in his art in the Musical point in the Royal College of Music at Naples, and afterwards became chapel-master and conposer to the imperial court at Vienna. Having poser to the imperial court as Terma. The major unfortunately contracted habits of intemperance, he was for some time confined in a lunatic asylum. In 1847 he was taken to Bergano. where he died in the following year. B. at Bergamo, 1793.

Donovan, Edward, don'-o-van, a writer on various departments of natural history, one of whose earliest works was "A Natural History of British Insects," begun in 1792 and fluished in 1816. This work, although of great nnshed in 1816. This Work, atmough of great value at the time of its appearance, has since been superseded by others. Between 1794 and 1797 he published four volumes of a work entitled "The Natural History of British Birds," and in 1798, he commenced a series of fill-strated volumes of the insects of Asia, containing epitomes of the natural history of the insects of China, India, and Asia generally, which had a very large sale. He subsequently published other works, and conducted a periodical called the "Naturalist's Repository," of which three yols, appeared. Science is not indebted to

Donne

Donovan for any new discovery or important generalization: but his illustrated works have done much to engender a taste for the study of natural history. D. 1837.

DONNE, John, dov, an English divine and poet, who, though reared a Roman Catholic, embraced, at the age of nineteen, the Protestant religion. Soon afterwards he went abroad, and on his return became secretary to Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, when he privately married a daughter of Sir George More, lieutenant of the Tower. The latter was so irritated at the match, that he not only prevailed upon the chancellor to dismiss him from his service, but got him imprisoned in that ancient fortress. His confinement, however, was short, and a reconciliation was effected. At the desire of King concination was emerced. At the desire of rang James, he entered into orders, and became his chaplain. He was made D.D. by the university of Cambridge, and rose to such fame by his preaching, that he had the offer of no fewer than fourteen different livings during the first year of his ministry. In 1617 he was chosen preacher at Line-du's Inn; in 1621 he was made dean of St. Paul's, and soon after, Vicar of St. Dunstan's in the West. D. in London, 1573; D. 1431, and was buried in St. Paul's cathedral. -Dr. Donne was a man of great wit, learning, and gravity. His satires are highly praised by and gravity. His sources are many proceed by Dryden, who calls him "the greatest wit, though not the greatest poet, of our nation." They were rendered into modern English by Pope. Three volumes of his sermons were published after his death, and some miscellaneous essays.

Donne, Benjamin, an English mathematician, who made a survey of Devonshire in 1761, for which he received a premium of £100 from the which he received a premium of £100 from the Soliety for Fromotting Arts and Commerce. About the same time he published "Mathe-matical Essays," in $\mathfrak{F}_{\text{ato}}$ which had a favourable reception, and procured him the office of keeper of the library at Bristol, where he kep-an academy many years. In 1771 he printed an "Epitome of Natural and Experimental Philo-sophy," and in 1773 a work entitled "The British Mariner's Assistant," In 1786 he was received meaning in the him as appointed master of mechanics to the king. at Bideford, 1729; D. 1793.—Resides the books above mentioned, he wrote treatises on geo-above mentioned, he wrote treatses on geo-metry, hock-keeping, and trigonometry. Doo, George Thomas, doo, an English artist, who was appointed labstoried entraver to the queen, and is best known by his "Knox preach-ing before the Lords of the Covennit," after Wilkie; Etry's "Combat," and Eastlakes "Italians couning in Sight of Rome." Rental door the little encouragement, however, extended to his art. he nearly entitled shandowed it and his art, he nearly entirely abandoned it, and became a painter of portraits in oil. D. in London, 1800.

Donay, John, Ph.D., dor'an, a modern English writer, who, at the age of fifteen, manifested a prediction for literature, and produced a melodrama entitled "The Wanderd Savey" the way of the control of the produced a melodrama entitled "The Wanderd Savey" which was, in 1829, first blyed at the Savey which was, in 1829, first blyed at the Savey Theatre, London. After passing some your in France, he became, sencessively, private ratios and the "Savey" became for the molliest families in Bettain, and, in 1835, miblished his "History of the Berough and Caslle of Reading." This work obtained for him the honorary degree of Ph.D. from which was written in conjunction with Mrs. Romer, and published in 1853. The share of "Table Traits, and Something on Them," "Habits and Men," "Knights and their Days," "Habits and Men," "Anights and their Days," Queens of England of the House of Hanover," "Monarchs retired from Business," and "The History of Court Fools." These works passed through several editions, and Dr. Doran also acted in the capacity of editor to a weekly paper, and contributed largely, both in prose and verse, to various periodicals. B. in London, 1807.

Dorigny

DORCHESTER, Dudley Carleton, Viscount, dor'chester, an eminent English statesman, who, after visiting different European courts in a diplomatic character, was appointed ambassador to the United Provinces of the Netherlands, where he bore a distinguished part in the synod of Dort. On his return to England, he was, in 1626, created a peer by the title of Baron Carleton. He was soon after sent again to the Hague, and was employed there in several important measures, when he was recalled, created Viscount Dorchester, and made secretary of state. B. in Oxfordshire, 1573; D. 1632.—His letters during his embassy were printed in 1757, and again in Donia, Andrea, dor'-e-a, a celebrated Genoese naval commander, who, born of a noble family, early adopted the profession of arms, and distinguished himself in the service of different Italian states. At length his own country required his assistance against the rebels of Corsica, and these he defeated. He was then appointed commander-in-chief of a fleet of galleys, and inflicted severe loss on the African pirates. On a revolution breaking out in Genoa, he entered into the service of Francis I. of France, which he quitted for that of Pope Clement VII., but shortly afterwards joined the party of Charles V. of Spain, and succeeded in driving the French out of Genea. Charles now offered to invest Doria with the sovereignty of Genea, but he nobly refused it, stipulating only that the republic should continue under the imperial protection. Having delivered Genoa from the oppression of the French yoke, he was, in 1528, honoured by the senate with the title of the "father and saviour of his country," and had a statue creeted to his houour, and a palace bulls for him. He made his name famous through the Mediterranean by his naval ex-ploits, particularly against Barbarossa and the African corsairs. B. at Oneglia, 1468; p. 1560.

Dorf, Paul Gustave, dor-ai', a French artist, noted chiefly for his drawings illustrative of the Bible, Milton, Dante, etc., which are marvel-lously effective. He is the most prolific draughtsman and painter of the present day. B. at completed his task in 1719, when he received a from animal food, and observed the sabbath complete ins task in 1/19, when he received a front animal food, at purse of 100 guineas for a couple of sets which he presented to George I., who also knighted him. His sight having begun to fail, he, in nim. His sight having beguin to lail, he, in 1723, disposed of his drawings, and in the following year returned to Paris. B. at Paris, 1657; D. 1746.—He had an elder brother named Louis, distinguished as a fresco-painter, who passed his life chiefly in Italy. D. at Verona.

Strasbourg, 1833.

Donislavs, Isaac, dor-is-lai'-us, a Dutch doctor of civil law at Leyden, whence he went to England, and was appointed to read lectures on rangama, and was appointed to read feetures on history at Cambridge; but avowing republican principles, was obliged to resign. He after-wards became judge-advocate in the king's army, but quitted his majesty's service for that of the parliament, and assisted in drawing up the charge against Charles I. In 1649 he was sent ambassador to the Hague, where he was stabbed, while at supper, by some exiled royalists. The parliament caused his body to be brought to England, where it was interred in Westminster Abbey. Here, however, it was not suffered to remain. At the Restoration it was exhamed, and finally buried in St. Margaret's churchyard.

Donochoff, Ivan, dor'-o-koff, a Russian general who entered the army at the age of twenty, and won distinction in the wars with the Turks in 1733. He displayed great courage in the siege of Warsaw in 1794, for which he was promoted and obtained a gold medal. He was made major-general in 1803, and from that was indeed and the french and was decorated both by his own sovereign and by the king of Prussia. He was charged with the defence of the fortresses on the Gulf of Finland; and in the campaign of 1812, again came into prominent notice, having greatly distinguished himself in the battles of Smolensko, Borodino, and Moskwa, for which he was raised to the rank of lieutenant-general. B. 1762; p. 1813.

D'Orsax, Alfred, Count, dor'-sai, a clever Frenchman, distinguished as a man of fashion, and for his drawings and models, especially of horses. He married a daughter of the Countess of Blessington, but subsequently separated from her. He befriended Napoleon III. when residing in London as an exile, for which the emperor made him Director of Fine Arts in Paris in 1852, a few months before his death. E. 1793.

DORSET, Thomas Sackville, earl of, dor'-set, grand treasurer of England, was raised by Queen Elizabeth to the peerage, under the title of Lord Buckhurst. He was one of the Com-missioners who tried Mary Queen of Scots, and it was he who was deputed to announce her sentence to that unfortunate lady. In 1593, he succeeded Lord Burleigh as treasurer, and was president of the commission appointed to try the earl of Essex. James I. created him earl of Dorset, and he continued to receive in his reign the same favour he had enjoyed in the preceding. B. at Buckhurst, Sussex, 1536; D. at the council-board, 1608, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

Dosrratus, do-si-the-us, a heresiarch of Samaria, who assorted that he was the Messiah, and had with him a woman whom he called the moon. Retiring into a cave, he there starved himself, in order that his disciples might tioned in terms of high praise by Arbato, n. about 1475; p. 1590.—His brother, Giolattista, alded Dosso in the execution of his works, though only in the subsidiary parts. Doubleday, Edward, the United States, he returned, and became one of the curators in the British Museum. Here he was enabled to pursue his favourite studies to a large extent, and commenced a work in parts, "On the Genera of Diurnal Lepidoptera." This work he did not live to complete. B. in London, 1810; p. 1849.

Douge, Francis, dooce, an antiquarian, chiefly known by his work entirled "Illustrations of Shakspeare and Ancient Manners." At his death he bequeathed his writings and correspondence, in a strong box scaled up, to the British Museum, which would not necept it, on account of its being labelled with the following account of its being labelled with the following inscription:—"Mr. Douce's papers, to be opened in the year 1900." It was then presented to the Bodleian library. b. in London, 1763; n. 1801.
—Mr. Douce also wrote a dissertation on Hollein's "Dance of Death," accompanied by User 1971. ented

DOUGLAS, dug-las, the name of a family who have played a distinguished part in Scottish history, and who were long the leading noble house in that kingdom. The name, which is of Gaelie derivation, signifies "dark gray," and is said to have originated in the following circum-stance. In a battle between the Scots and an invading body of Danes, in which the latter were defeated, the Scottish king had observed a man of stalwart proportions, grizzled locks, and dusky aspect, perform prodicties of valour in the battle, and after the conclusion of the combat, seeing the hero leaning on his sword at a little distance, directed one of his atten-dants to call youlder abu-glass man to him. On the approach of the warrior, the monarch complimented him on his prowess, knighted him, and assigned him certain lands for his inheritance. This, according to a tradition, was whether the story be true or not, it is certain whether his soly is the or int, is is eventile that the race have generally been distinguished by the courage, the stalwart frame, and the swarthy complexion of their alleged progenitor. The family has produced many eminent warriors, of whom the following are the most distinguished :-

Douglas, William, surnamed the "Hardy," was besieved in Berwick by Edward I., and notwithstanding a gallant defence, was taken prisoner. p. 1302

Douglas, James, eldest son of the above, usually called "The Good Sir James," was one of the most eminent of the associates of Sir Robert Bruce in his efforts to restore the independence of Scotland, and did distinguished service at the battle of Bannockburn, where he commanded the left wing of the Scotlish host, starved himself, in order that his disciples might and was made a kinglish bannerst under the royal believe he had assended to heaven. His sect, standard. He afterwards, in company with which lasted till the 6th century, abstained Lockhart of Lee, undertook to convey the heart 2.3 Dovle Drake

"Inquiry into the Nature and Origin of Despo-"Inquiry into the Nature and Origin of Despo-tism in Hindostan;" An Inquiry into the State of Bengal," &c. n. at Criefi, Perthshire; n. 1779, DOXLE, Sir John, doil, a military officer, who entering the army as ensign in 1771, won distinction in the first American war, in the principal actions in which he took part. He afterwards served tions in which he took part. He arterwards survey under Lord Moira, and in Holland under the duke of York; was secretary at war in Ireland under earl Fitzwilliam and Lord Camden, and acquired great influence in the Irish House of Commons, in one of his speeches in which he produced a great sensation by relating the con-duct of a corporal of the 16th dragoons, named Olarcy, who, being sent with despatches through a dangerous country, was attacked by the enemy, wounded, and, to conceal his despatches, hid them in his wound, where they were afterwards found completely covered by the congcaled blood. Sir John was subsequently employed (as brigadier-general) in Gibraltar, Minorca, and Malta; went as a volunteer to Egypt, and shared in the actions of the 8th, 13th, and 21st of March, 1801; accompanied General Hutchinson in the expedition to Grand Cairo, where he greatly distinguished himself; travelled from Rosetta to Alexandria, a distance of 40 miles, while suffering from fever, and, in command of a division of the army, defeated the attempts of General Menou upon his position. In 1804 he was appointed governor of Guernsey; in 1805 was created a baronet; in 1808 was pro-moted to the rank of lieutenant-general; in 1812 was made a knight of the Bath; in 1819 attained the grade of general; and was subsequently made governor of Charlemont, an honoquenty made governor of transminit, an mono-rary office. B. 1756; D. 1834.

Doyle, Sir Charles William, also a distin-guished British officer, who began his career as licutement in the 14th foot, in 1793, and subscquently served with great merit in various parts of the world, but especially in Spain, principally in the armies of the country, but with the approval of Wellington and the British government, who had appointed him military commissioner with the particite forces. He attained the rank of mejor and lieutenant general in the Spanish service, had the cross of Charles III. conferred upon him for his services in 1808-9, a corps called the Triadores of Doyle having been previously raised and named in commemoration of his conduct at Olite, in 1810; he took by assault the battery of Bagur, Sept. 10, and assisted in the capture of Palamos on the 14th, in honour of which services a special medal was in montr of when service a special media was struck by the Spanish authorities. For his de-fence of Tarragona, in 1811, and for his conduct in three battles in Catalonia, he received the Grand Cross of Distinction from the Spanish government, and was made commander of the army of reserve raised at Cadiz during the siege. He was made a companion of the Bath and a hnight of the Legion of Honour in 1812; was created a knight of the Guelphic Order for his services with the Hanoverians at Valenciennes and Lanois, and was advanced grand cross of the same order in 1839. He attained the rank of colonel in the British army in 1813; major-general in 1815; and licutenant-general in 1837. B. in Ireland; D. 1843.

trated with great success, and in endless variety, "Ye Manners and Customs of ye English," and produced many other sketches, discovering much originality of invention, as well as humorous appreciation. In 1850 he ceased to contribute to "Punch," and afterwards produced "The Foreign Tour of Brown, Jones, and Robinson," and other works, B, in London.

Draco, drail-ko, a celebrated lawgiver of Athens, who exercised the office of arction, and Attens, who exercised the office of arction, and, in 623 n.c., compiled a code of laws, which, on account of their severity, were said, by the corator Demands, to be written in letters of blood. He punished all crimes with death, alleging that, as the smallest crimes deserved it, be could not find a more severe punishment for the most creative. The large many contractive of the contractive atrocious. These laws were at first enforced, but were afterwards often neglected, on account of their extreme rigour, Solon ultimately totally abolishing them, except that which punished a murderer with death. Notwithstanding the severity of his code, his popularity was so great that it was the proximate cause of his death, The Athenians, agreeably to a custom among them, out of great respect, heaped hats and cloaks on him at the theatre to such a degree, that they smothered him. Flourished in the 7th century B.c.

DRAGUT, dra'-goot, the favourite and successor of the corsair Barbarossa, whom he equalled in skill and valour. After a series of daring exploits, he was killed before Malta in 1565. (See BARBAROSSA.)

Deake, Sir Francis, draik, a celebrated British admiral, who carly went to sea, and served under his relative, Sir John Hawkins. After passing through some adventures, and playing some doubtful parts, he, in 1570, raised sufficient volunteers to man two ships, and went to the West Indies, where he reaped considerable advantages. In 1572 he sailed agvin for the Spanish Main, and after a short absence re-turned to Plymouth loaded with treasure. He next served under the earl of Essex, in Ireland, where he distinguished himself so much by his bravery, that Sir Christopher Hatton introduced him to queen Elizabeth. In 1577 he made an-northward till he reached the 48th parallel Here he took possession of New Albion, and then steered for the East Indies. He doubled the Cape of Good Hope, and returned to Plymouth in 1880. This voyage round the world occupied two years and nearly ten months. Queen Elizabeth ordered his ship up to Deptford, and partook of a banquet on board of her and then conferred the honour of knighthood and then conterred the honor of singinition on Drake. In 1985, and the whole of 1884, he was engaged in the West Indies, where he took several places from the Spaniards; visited the colony of Virginia, in America, planted by Raleigh, and brought some of the colonists to England with him, by whom it is supposed. hat tobacco was first introduced into Eng-and. Drake returned from this expedition land. also loaded with treasure. In 1587 he commended a fleet of thirty sail, with which he entered Cadiz, and destroyed a quantity of DOYLE, Michard, an English artist who ex-celled in depicting the passing whims and shipping; and afterwards, between St. Vincead collities of the day, and was for some time a and Callz, burned 100 vessels, and destroyed constant illustrator of the pages of Punch. several casiles on the coast. This Drake humor-tly was in that facetious periodical that he illus-oucly termod *singeing the Spanish nonarch's beard. The year following, he commanded as his other works may be mentioned. "Most divided find the following and was inon the Chemical Action of Licht," to which as trumental in the defect of the Spanish Armada. In all seen translated into French, Grann, and After this he went to the West Indies with Sir John Hawkins; but the two commanders disagreeing in their plans, little was done by them. n. at Tavistock, 1545; D. in the harbour of Nombre de Dios, in America, 1596. He was member of parliament for the town of Plymouth, to which he was a great benefactor, by causing water to be conveyed to it from springs at cight miles distance.

DRAKE, James, a political writer, who gave great offence by the publication, anonymously, of a pamphilet called "The Memorial of the Church of England," A proclamation was issued Chuter of highest and the was not successful; but Drake was afterwards prosecuted for editing a newspaper entitled "Mercurius Politicus," and, though acquitted, the trial cauged so much excitement in him as to occasion his death. He was a physician by profession, and was, besides his political writings, author of a "System of Anatomy," in 3 vols. B. at Cambridge, where he was educated, 1667; D. 1707.

DRAKENDERG, Christian Jacob, dra'-ken-

Darkender, Christian Jacob, dra't-ken-bring, a Norwegian scaman, who is noticed here on account of the great age he attained. In his 13th year he went to sea, in his 63th was captured by Algerine pirates, and was kept in slavery till his 51th. In his 102nd he was taken into the service of Count Samsoc, with whom he went to Copenhagen. In his 111th he married a widow 60 years of age, and died at the age of 146. B. at Blomsholm, Norway, 1626. He was never known to be intoxicated.

DRAKENBORCH, Arnold, dra'-ken-bork, professor of history and eloquence at Utrecht, who published editions of Livy and Silius Italieus, with learned notes. B. at Utreeht, 1684; D. 17.47

DRAPER, Sir William, drai'-per, an English general, whose father was collector of customs at Bristol. He received his education at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, after which he went to the East Indies, where he rose to the rank of colonel. In 1763 he took Manilla, in conjunction with Admiral Cornish; but the conjunction with Admiral Cornisis; but the place was preserved from plunder, on condition of its paying a runsom of four millions of dollars, which was never discharged.

service he was created a knight of the Bath. In 1760 he was engaged in a controversy with Junius, in defence of his friend the marquis of Granby. In 1779 he was appointed lieutenant-governor of Minorea. When that place sur-rendered, he brought an action against General Murray, the governor, after whose trial General Draper was commanded by the court to make an apology to him. B. at Bristol, 1721; D. at Bath, 1787.

DRAFER, William, a distinguished chemist, a native of Liverpool, but who emigrated to America in 1833. In 1836 he was appointed

Virgin. chair of chemistry and natural history in the university of New York, and was one of the founders of the medical college of that seat of learning. Dr. Draper contributed to a variety Italian; "Human Physiology, Statistical and Haman; "Human Enganology, Stanthan and Dynamical; or, the Conditions and Court of the Life of Man," which is his principal per-formance; "Treative on the Fare's which Pra-dume the Organization of Pants;" at "Taxt Books on Chemistry and Natural Philosylps," - Natural Enganology, 1988, 1989, 1 B. May 11, 15./5.

n. Mey 11, 18-55.

Danyton, Milhard, deplotin, on Brell his poet, who received his collection at order, but never took a decree. In 1936 he will hid at collection of pastornia, ornited "The 8th cheed's Gardan i," which was 107 or 1 by his poems of "The Danors Wars," and "his chiand Herotoul Epiths!" The "Barons Wars" contains many as case of creat beauty, which work initiated by Milton. In 1613 the published his "Polyolbion," or a Description of Encland, to which Mr. Solden wrote notes. This is his creat work, "cath, line, at once the bearing. Which Air, Sounch Wrote hotes, 'This is his great work, 'Feehlo line, at one, the hearthing of an historian, on cantiguary, a natiguity, and a geographer, besides being embelished with the inagemention of a poor.' n. or Herlell ', Warwickshire, 1869; D. 1801, and was harful if westminister Abby. His workstween empirical in 1753 in one volume folio, and in 1753 in 161. vols. Svo.

DEPUBLE, Cornelius van, dreb-cl. a Dat de philosopher, whose chief work is "De Nata-A Elementorum," Svo. He invented the thermometer which bears his name, and is also said. although erroneously, to have been the verer of the microscope and te Alkmaar, 1572; p. in Loudon, 1

DREYSE, Nicholas, draice, the inventor of the Just 1885, Menous, ordice, in inventor of the famous Prussian needle-gran, which was nainly instrumental in giving the Prussians the victory over the Austrians at Sadowa, and the encounters of the "Scrow Weeks War" in 1806. He was brought up as a locksmith. n.at Sommerda, 1788; D. 1507.

DREW, Samuel, droo, was born of humble parents in the parish of Austell, Cornwall, and was apprenticed to a shoemaker, and though nearly destitute of education, he became noted for his shrewd and subtle powers of debate among his fellow-workmen, while his free muners of life induced him to slight the principles of religion. Having, however, heard Dr. Adam Clarke preach, he was induced to change his opinions; determined to obtain knowledge, which mons; determined to obtain knowledge, which he jurisude with great energy, and became a local Methodist preacher, while still following his trade of a shoemaker. In 1790, he appeared as an author, in a truct entitled "Remarks on Paine's 'Age of Ren on," which was well received; he subsequently published "An Essay on the Immateriality and Immortality of the Soul," which established his fame as a netal-privated theologien. He now showledge trade Soui, "Whith established his fame as a next-physical theologian. He now abundoned trade, and devoted himself to divino literature, pro-ducing, among other valuable works, a "frea-tise on the Being and Attributes of God." He edited, with much ability and critical calm-ness and acomen, the "Imperial Magazine," from 1819 to his death, which occurred in 1833. B. 1765.

dimersing of New 1078, and was 000 of time 1.100.

Gourders of the medical college of that seat of learning. Dr. Draper contributed to a variety of scientific journals, and was a very per ogg, cincile the army, and, after passing through life writer, having between 1897 and 1857 suptiled no less than 40 treaties to the "Edin" in 1805. In 1807 Dantic capticulated to him, ph Philosophical Journal." alone. Among under Massena, and was opposed on many occasions to the English. On Napoleon's return from Elba, he was one of the most eager to receive him, and commanded the first corps d'armée during the "hundred days." He was con-demned, in 1816, to death, but found an asylum in Prussia, and returned, in 1825, to his country; but did not rejoin the service till 1830. In 1834, he was appointed governor-general of Algeria. Here he was the author of several administrative reforms; but, not displaying against Abd-el-Kader the necessary energy, he was recalled in 1835, being made, however, a marshal in 1843. p. at Rheims, 1765; p. 1844 He wrote his autobiography, under the title of "The Military Life of General Drouet,"

DROUET, Jean Baptiste, a leading actor in the great French revolution, and who, when postmaster at St. Menehould, recognised Louis XVI. and the queen, when attempting to escape in 1791, pursued them to Varenues, and caused them to be conducted back to Paris, for which service he was voted 30,000 francs by the Nascribe he was voted 30,000 frames by the Are-tional Assembly. He became a member of the Convention in 1792, and being appointed to keep guard over the Temple, where the king and royal family were confined, behaved towards them with the greatest rudeness and insolence. In 1703, he proposed that all the English in France should be shot, under the pretence that they were spies, and that all his associates in the Convention should declare themselves brigands. His next employment was as commissioner with the army of the North. He was taken prisoner at Maubeuge by the Austrians, who carried him to Brussels, from thence to Luxembourg, and in 1794 consigned him to the castle of Spielberg, in Moravia, where he remained for two years, till exchanged for a daughter of the unfortunate French monarch. He next acted as a member, and subsequently as secretary, of the Council of Five Hundred; but, falling under the displeasure of that body, he fled to Teneriffe, where he took an active part in resisting the attack made upon the place by Nelson. At the revolution of 18th Fruc-tidor he returned to France, became a member of the Convention, and on the overthrow of the of the Convention, and on the overtimes of the Directory by Donaparte on 18th Brumaire, he was named sub-prefect of St. Menchould, and became a warm partisan of Napoleon. On the final downfall of the emperor, Dronet was except.d from the amnesty, and banished. After living some time in Germany, he returned secretly to France, where he lived in conventional to the convention of the conven ment till 1824, when he died at Macon. B. at St. Menchould, 1763.

DROUND DE LHUYS, Edward, droo'-awng de(r) lweece, a modern French statesman, who early entered the diplomatic service of his country, and was employed in several minor positions at various courts. He was also elected to the Chamber of Deputies. Here hewas opposed to the policy of M. Guizot, and was one of those to the policy of M. Guizot, and was one of those who signed the list of charges drawn up against the ministry by Odillan Barrot. In the first cabinet of Louis Napoleon, after he became president, Drouyn de Lhuys was appointed foreign minister, and acquitted himself with considerable ability in those difficult times. He was afterwards sent as ambassador to England, and subsequently, in 1852, being again foreign and flippancy of some of the remarks which it minister, addressed to the various powers despatches announcing the establishment of the empire under Napoleon III. During the disappointed to a cadetship at Woolvich, where pute between Turkey and Russia, he strenuously exerted himself in favour of peace. He took part in the conferences at Vienna in 1855, and, on their breaking up without any result, resigned his office. The following year he also tendered his resignation as senator. In 1863 he again became minister of foreign affairs on the

again became minister of foreign attars on time reffrement of M. Thouvenel, but resigned office in 1866. n. at Paris, 1805. DRUMMONN, William, drum'-mond, a Scotch poet, was the son of Sir John Drummond of Hawthornden, and was destined for the law; but Parnassus had more charms for him than the courts. In his retirement at Hawthornden, he wrote several beautiful poems; but the death of a lady, to whom he was about to be married, affected him so much, that he went abroad, where he remained some years. On his return, he settled at Hawthornden, and wrote his "History of the Six Kings of the Name of James," and several pieces to promote peace and union in that turbulent time. B. at Hawand unon in that turbulent time. B. at Haw-thornden, 1855; D. 1639.—This poet excited the envy of rare Ben Jonson, as well as attracted his praise. That bard, in 1819, made a journey to Scotland expressly to see him. Hazilit says of his sonnets, that "they come as near as almost any others to the perfection of this kind of writing."

DRUMMOND, Sir William, of Logie Almond. an eminent scholar, and accomplished writer. statesman, and diplomatist, first became known by a work entitled "A Review of the Governby a work entitled "A Review of the Govern-ments of Sparta and Athens," published in 1794. He was returned to Parliament for St. Mawes in 1795, and subsequently sat for Lostwithiel in the Parliaments which met in 1796 and 1801, the Parlaments which met in 1795 and 1801, on both occasions being elected while absent on diplomatic service—in 1796 at Naples, and in 1801 at Constantinople. While residing at the court of Palermo in 1808, he endeavoured to secure the regency of Spain, which had then taken up arms to get rid of the French yoke, for Princo Leopold of Sielly, for which he was severely censured. The latter part of his life severely censured. The latter part of his his was spent chiefly abroad, in consequence of the state of his health, and he died, after a lingering illness, at Rome, March 29, 1828. The dot of his birth is not known. Besides that already mentioned, Sir William Drummond published the f. llowing works:—"Translations of the Satires of Persius," 1798, about the same time as Mr. Gifford's version of the same poet appeared; Mr. Gifbord's version of the same poet appeared, "Academical Questions," 1895; "Archeological and Philological Dissertations, containing a MS. found at Hereulaneum," 1810; "Essay on a Panie inscription found in Malita," 1811; "Odin," a poem, 1818; "Origines, or Remarks on the Origin of several Empires, States, and Cities," 1894-1830; in 3 vols, which is his ablest work. His "Qdipus Judaicus," which versions of the original properties of the original properties of the original properties. printed, though not for sale, in which he endeayours to prove that certain of the histories and other portions of the Old Testament are astroother portions of the old restament are astro-nomical and other allegories, brought upon him sovere criticism from Dr. D'Oyly, and the "Quarterly Review" and led to a controversy in which Sir William got the worst, both in science and scholarship. The style of the pra-face to the work in question is very elegant, but this does not compensate for the irreverence and dispersely of some of the records which it

Davden, John.

DRURY, DRU.

DEAKE, SIR FRANCIS.

DUNDONALD, EARL OF.

he soon began to distinguish himself by his Drusus was confined by Tiberius, and deprived mechanical talents in the engineering depart-ment of the government institution of that place. Having served there some time, he went to Plymouth, thence to Chatham, and thence to to rymount, thence to Chainam, and thence to Edinburgh, where he got acquainted with Cap-tain Colly, then engaged in the trigonometrical survey. From this officer he obtained employ-ment, and, in surveying a portion of Ireland, invented a new light, which greatly assisted his observations in loggy weather. He also invented a heliostat, an instrument for reflecting the rays of the sun, which was used in this survey. This instrument, in an improved form, connected with the theololite, has been found of great service. He continued to devote himself to scientific pursuits, until ill-health compelled him, for a time, to resign his situation. He was subsequently engaged in laying down the boundaries to the old and new boroughs, under boundaries of the Reform Bill; in which capacity he distinguished himself by his usual perseverance and accuracy. In 1835 he became under-secretary for Ireland. His labours now took a political direction, into which it is unnecessary to enter. B. at Edinburgh, 1797; D. 1810.

DRURY, Robert, droo'-re, an English seaman, who, in 1702, was shipwreeked on the coast of Madagascar, where he remained fifteen years. After his return to England, he published a very exact and curious account of that island,

8vo. 1729.

Drury, Dru, an English naturalist, supposed to have been descended from Sir Dru Drury, a knight of the reign of Elizabeth. He was for several years a jeweller in the Strand, London, and was a great collector of specimens of natural history. He wrote three volumes on insects.

D. 1804

DRURY, Joseph, a learned divine and distinguished scholar, who was educated at Westmin-ster school and Trinity College, Cambridge, and in 1785 became head-master of Harrow school, where he had as pupils Lord Byron and Sir Robert Peel. Byron on various occasions speaks of him in the highest terms, saying, in the notes to "Childe Harold," "My preceptor, the Rev. Joseph Drury, was the best and worthiest are roseph Dray, was the lost and worthing fined I ever possessed; whose warnings I have remembered but too well, though too late, when I have erred, and whose counsels I have but followed when I have done well or wisely."

Dr. Drary retired to Cockwood, Devonshire, in 1805, and devoted hinself to ogricultural pursuits. He held the prebendal stall of Dalting-cot, in Wells Cathedral. B. in London, 1750; p. 1834. A cenotaph, with a suitable inscription, has been creefed in Harrow church to his memory.

Dausus, dru'-sus, a name common to many eminent Romans, the most remarkable of whom are the following: -1. A son of Tiberius and Vipsania, who made himself famous by his intrepidity and courage in the provinces of Illyricum and Pannonia. He was raised to the greatest honours by his father, but a blow which he gave to Sejanus, an audacious libertine, proved his ruin. Sejanus corrupted Livia, the wife of Drusus, and, in conjunction with her, the former caused him to be poisoned by a cunuch, 23 A.D.-2. A son of Germanicus and of all aliment. He was found dead nine days after his confinement, 33 A.D.—3. Claudius Nero, was a son of Tiberius Nero and Livia, and was adopted a solo i liberius Nero and Livia, and was adopted by Augustus. He was brother to Tiberius, who was afterwards made emperer. He greatly signalized highers in the wars in Germany and figurated with a free wars in vermany and faul against the Rhæti and Vindelici, and was honoured with a triumph. He died of a fall from his horse, in the 30th year of his age, 9 from his horse, in the 30th year of his age, y B.C. B. 33 B.C., DEYANDER, John, dre-an'-der, a mathematician and physician of Wetteren, in Upper Herse-Cassel. He was a professor at Marburg, and wrote several books on physic and mathematics, which were once held in great esteem, D. at Marburg, 1600.

DEYANDER, Jonas, a Swedish naturalist, a comil of Hunsans went to Encland, and there pupil of Linnaus, went to England, and there became a member of the Linnman Society, being also charged by Sir Joseph Banks with the care of his library. He wrote several memoirs, and also compiled a catalogue of Sir Joseph's library. B. 1749; D. in London, 1810.

Derder, John, dri'den, an English poet, educated at Westminster school, under Dr.

Busby, whose severe discipline and constant use of the rod are well known; whence he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1650. He proceeded to the degree of M.A., and in 1957 removed to London, where, in the following year, he wrote an elegy on the death of Cromwell. His sorrow, however, was of short dura-tion; for at the Restoration he complimented Charles II. in a poem, entitled "Astrea Redux." In 1862 appeared his first play, called "The Wild Gallant," which was indifferently received. Soon afterwards he produced "The livial Ladies," and next "The Indian Emperor," which made him famous. This last was written in conjunction with Sir Robert Howard, who introduced him to the earl of Berkshire, whose eldest daughter he married, but who brought him no happiness. Soon after the fire of London, he engaged with the king's theatre for an annual stipend, on condition of furnishing a certain number of plays in each year. On the death of Sir William Davenant, he was nominated poet laureate, and in 1669 obtained the place of historiographer royal, with a salary of £200 a year and a butt of wine. His eminence as a dramatic writer was now established, but it exposed him to the envy of several rival wits. Among these the duke of Buckingham held among tosse the duke of Buckingham held him up to ridicale in the character of Bayes, in "The Rehearsal;" and the earl of Rochester being offended, it is supposed, at some allusions in an "Dssay on Satire," written jointly by Dryden and Lord Milgrave, caused the former to be cudgelled by some hiredruffans as he was going home from a coffee-house. Others, how-ever, declare that the vanity of the duchess of ever, declare that the valley of the duchess of Portsmouth, one of the king's mistresses, was wounded by a jeu d'esprit of Dryden, and that this procured him the cudgelling. To his anthis procured into a congening. 16 his antagonists is satirfued weapons he was decidedly superior. "His keen and trenchant binde," says Sir Walter Soott, "never makes a trust in vain, and never strikes but at a vulnerable point." The duke of Buckingham is the Zimri of the poot's "absalom and Achiophal." On the accession of James II. Dryden became a Agrippins, who enjoyed offices of the greatest Roman Catholic, and, like most converts, entrust under Tiberius. His enemy, Sejama, how-ever, effected his ruin by his insimations; of the old one, in a poen called "The Hind and Panther," which was admirably parodied by an epic poem on the discovery of America, Prior and Montague, afterwards carl of Hall-which is esteemed her greatest work. She far, in "The Country Mouse and the City also published "Taryels through England, far, in "The Country Mouse and the City Mouse," At the Revolution he lost his posts. and was succeeded by Shadwell, whom Dryden satirized under the name of Mae Flecknoe. In 1697 his translation of Virgil apycared; which performance alone is sufficient to immortalize his name. Pope pronounces it "the most noble ans name. Pole pronounces to the fact foole and spirited translation in any language." No other translations are equally excellent. n. at Aldwinkle, Northampto ishire, Aug. 9, 1681; p. in London, May 1, 1700, and was buried between the graves of Chaucer and Cowley, in West tween the graves of Chaneer and Cover, in West-minster Abley, where there is a monument to his memory, created by Shadishi, duke of Buck-ingham. Dydom's works are too numerous to be here distinguished. His critical prefices are admirable, his prose being motehless for its freedom, viscour, variety, and conjousness, It ranks with the best in the Emplish language. His poetry is correct, harmonious, and strong, particularly his satires. As a dramatic writer, he chiefly excelled in tragedy. His plays are numerous, he having been the sole or joint author of twenty-seven.—He had three sons: Charles, who became usher of the palace to Pope Clement XI., and was drowned in 1704; John, who wrote a comedy, called "The Hus-band his own Cuckold;" and Henry, who entered into a religious order abroad.

Du Barry, Jeanne Vaubernier, Countess (See Barry, Marie Juanie.) Du Barras. (See Barras, William de Sallust.)

DUALEN, or DOTALEN, François, doo'-ar-en, a French lawyer of eminence, who was originally a tutor in the family of M. Budé, Maitre dos Requêtes, at Paris, and acquired his knowledge of the ruliments of law from frequent conver-sations on the subject with the father of his pupils. When Cujacius attacked the old system of instruction in jurisprudence, Duaren, who was then settled at Bourges in the exercise of was then settled a Bourges in the exercise of his profession, warmly defended it; and to this controversy, Unicius allowed that he owed much of his knowledge of law. n. 1509; p. 1659.

Du Bullar, doo bel'-lai, a French cardinal

and state-man, who enjoyed the favour of Francis I., and was sent as annonsador to Henry VIII. of England and the pope, Paul III. He was appointed lieutenant-general of the kingdom during the absence of Francis, who was engaged against the emperor Charles V. in Provence. Falling into disgrace on the death Provence. Falling into disgrace on the coam of this king, he retired to Rome. n. 1492; n. 1660. This cardinal protected and encouraged letters, and it was at his suggestion that the College of France was founded. Rabelais was attached to his establishment,—His brother William was one of Francis L's bravest generals, and was viceroy of Piedmont, where he defeated the Imperialists; he wrote some interesting memoirs, which he called "Ogdondes."

DUBOCAGE, Marie Anne le Page, doo'-bo-kaj, DUNDOCACE, Marie Anno le Page, déo-lo-kelj, a talented French authoress, who was a member of the academies of Rome, Bologna, Padura, Lyons, and Rouen. She carly distinguished herself by a taste for poetry, and translated Pope's "Temple of Fame" into French. In 1746 she obtained the prize given by the academy at Rou.a, and afterwards translated Millton's "Panadise Lost," which she followed by a translation of the "Doath of Abel" in 1749 she produced a tragedy, called "The Amazons," and subsequently "The Columbiad," also published "Travels through England, Ilolland, and Italy," in the epistolary form, n. at Rouen, 1710; n. 1802.

Dunois, William, doo-beard, archbishep of Cambray, cardinal, and prime minister of France, was the son of a poor French apotherary. He first became vallet to the superior of cary. He first became vallet to the superior of the college of St. Michael at Paris, where he studied, and entered into orders. Being ap-pointed private reader to the duke de Chartres, afterwards duke of Orleans and Regent, he received the rich abbey of St. Just, and subsequently became counsellor of state. In 1717 he quency became counsency or state. In 1717 he was sent to England as plenipotentiary to sign the triple alliance, which had been entered into against Spain, between England, France, and Holland. On his return, he was made minister and sceretary of state, and obtained the archibishowic of Campury. In 1911 the the archbishopric of Cambray. In 1721, the pope advanced him to the cardinalate, and, in the following year, he was appointed first minister of state. From that time he reigned absolute master, and the French court, already so deprayed, sank still lower in its vices; but happily his death soon put an end to his power, a. at Brives-la-Gaillarde, in Limousm, 1056; b. 1723. He possessed great talants, but they were sullied and clouded by his vices of de-were stanied and clouded by lins vices of de-bauchery, avarice, and guilty ambition. Dusois, Edward, a writer of light literature who attained a high degree of popularity in his time, and was connected with the "Mirror" and "Morning Chronicle" in their palmy and and "Morning Chronicle" in their palmy and under the direction of Thomas IIII and Mr. Perry respectively. Dubois had studied for the bar, but paid little attention to his profession, though he held two legal appointments, the deputy judgeship of the Court of Request and the secretaryship to the Commissioners of the secretaryship to the Commissioners of Lunacy. His principal works were—"My Pocket Book, or Hintes for a Hight Merrie and Conceited Tour in Quarto" published amonymously, and written in ridicale of the books of tawel got up by Sir John Carr, and which passed through several editions. "The Wreath," "Old Nick," a satirical poem; the "Decameron of Boccaecid," with remarks on his life and writings; a work on the "Letters of Junius," which he attrabuted to Sir Publius Prawies with which he attributed to Sir Philip Francis, with whom he was said to have been connected. B.

1775; p. 1850.

Dunos, John Baptist, doo-bo', a French writer, who wastemployed in some secret trans-actions by M. de Torcy, minister of forcign actions by an activity, immater of actions and affairs, for which he was rewarded with several benefices. He is principally known by his "Critical Reflections on Poetry and Painting," 2 vols. 12mo; a work which, at the time of its

2 vols. 12mo; a work which, at the time of its oppearance, was highly esteemed. He also wrote some political pieces, and a "Critical River of the Establishment of the French Monarchy in Gaul." r. at Beauvais, 1870; p. at Paris, 1742.

Du CANGH, Charles Dufresne, Seignour, doo-kangl, a French author, who studied for the protession of the law, but subsequently devoted himself entirely to history and philosophy. His first work was "A History of Constantinople under the French Emperors," which was succeeded by his "Scriptural Gosary," a work of great value in enabling us to understand the writers of the dark and middle understand the writers of the dark and middle iges. He also produced some other historical works, and left a large number of manuscripts. B. at Amiens, 1610; D. 1638.—His children received a pension of 2000 francs from

Ducarel

Dudley

Louis XIV.

DUGAREL, Andrew Coltee, doo'-ka-rel, an eminent civilian and antiquary, who published a number of topographical and antiquarian works. His best known is one on Anglo-Gallie, Works, This best shown is one on Angio-Canto, Norman, and Aquitaine coins, which appeared in 1757. "Anglo-Norman Antiquities," con-sidered in a tour through Normandy, is another valuable work on the particular subject of which it treats. B. in Normandy, 1713; D. at South Lambeth, 1785. Ducarel was commissary of St. Catherine's and Canterbury, and was brought an cancernne sand canteroury, and was brought to England soon after his birth. When the Society of Antiquaries was incorporated, in 1755, he was appointed one of its first fallows. Druas, Michael, dod-kās, the auther of a history of the Greek empire, from the reign of John Palleologus I, to its fall in 1453. His work was printed at the Louvre in 1649.

Ducasse, Jean Baptiste, doo-kas-sai, a French naval officer, who during the reign of Louis XIV. made himself formidable to the English while governor of St. Domingo, and gained fame by obtaining a victory over the renowned Admiral Benbow, p. 1715.

DUCKWORTH, Sir John Thomas, Bart, duk'werth, a British admiral, who entered the navy in 1759, under Admiral Boscawen, and took part in several engagements with the French. Having served in various ships, and seen a great deal of active service, he, in 1793, was attached to Lord Howe's fleet, and, in the celebrated action of June 1, 1794, greatly distincentrated action of Julie 1762, greatly distin-guished himself by his bravery, as well as naval skill. In 1800 he was appointed to the command of the Leeward Islands; and in 1801 for aiding in the reduction of the Swedish and West India islands, was created a K.C.B. In 1803 he was appointed commander-in-chief of Jamaica, and for the vigorous measures he adopted in protecting the commerce of that island, received tecing the commerce of that standar, releaved the thinks of its House of Assembly, with the presentation of a sword valued at £1000. In 1960 he defeated the French in the Bay of St. Domingo, for which he was thanked by both Houses of Parliament, and Lad on annulty of £1000 bestowed upon him. Lad on annulty of £1000 bestowed upon him. Lad a spile of the he passage of the Dardansles, in spile of the second of the passage of the Dardansles, in spile of the second of the passage of the Dardansles, in spile of the second of the passage of the Dardansles, in spile of the second of the passage of the Dardansles, in spile of the second of the passage of the Dardansles, in spile of the second of the passage of the Dardansles, in spile of the passage of the Dardansles, in spile of of the Dardansles, in the Dardansles, in the Dardansles, in the Dard Furks; and, from 1810 to 1815, was commander-in-chief at Newfoundland. He subsequently became governor of Plymouth, and, in 1813, was created a baronet. p. in February, 1748; p. at Devenport, 1817.

Duclos, Charles Pineau, doc-klo', an historio-rapher of France, who became perpetual secre-tary to the French seademy, and died in 1776. B. at Dinaut, 1705. His principal works are a. as Dinaut, 1705. His principal works are—

1. "Memoirs on the Manuers of the 18th Century," 1 vol. 12mo; 2. "The History of Louis XI." 3 vols. 12mo; 3. "The Confessions of Count ***."

DUDEYANY, Madame Amantine Lucile Aurore, dood-ant, better known by her assumed name of Georges Sand, having been married at 17, parted from her husband in her 27th year, and went to Paris to pursue a life of lite-

She affixed the name of Georges Sand to it, to commemorate her friendship with Sandaan. She subsequently wrote voluminously in the region of fiction; but perhaps the best of all her tales is "Consuelo." In 1848 she started a democratic newspaper of her own in Paris; but her views groving unpalatable to the regime of Louis Napoleon, it was suppressed. From that time she mostly wrote for the stage, but not with equal success to that which marked her former efforts in stories of the imagination.

Dupley, Edmund, dud'-le, an English states-man, who being, when young, introduced to the court of Henry VII., became one of the favourites of that monarch. In 1494 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Grey, Lord Lisle. In this parliament of 1504 he was speaker of the House of Commons, and, two years afterwards, obtained the stewardship of Hastings. On the king's death, he and Empson were sent to the Tower, and in 1510 were beheaded on Tower-hill. z. 1462. While in confinement, Dudley wrote a piece, entitled "The Tree of the Con-monwealth," which is still in Ms.

DUDLEY, John, son of the preceding statesman, was created Viscount Lisle and knight of the Garter, by Henry VIII. In the next reign he was made earl of Warwick. On the execuhe was made earl of Warwick. On the execu-tion of Sir Thomas Seymour, he was appointed lord high admiral, and in 1551 was created duke of Northumberland. Pursuing an ambitious bolley, he offected a marriage between his s n, Lord Guilford Dudley, and Lady Jane Grey, the eldest daughter of the duke of Sullolk, and a edgest daughter of the duke of Schools, and a branch of the royal family. When the days of Edward VI, were drawing to a close, he pre-vailed upon him to set aside his sisters, Mary and Elizabeth, from the succession, in favour of and Elizabeth, from the succession, in favour of Lady Jane, and on his death he caused his daughter-in-law to be proclaimed. An insurencetion being ralsed in favour of Mary, however, she was proclaimed in London, and the duke executed, 1553. B. IO22. (See EDWARD VI., ELIZABERI, MARY.) DUDLEY, Robert, son of the above. (See EDWARD VI., BUTCHESTE, Robert, son of the above. (See EdWARD VI., BUTCHEST, Ambrose, son of the above, was commed with his father, but received a partion. In 1557 he went with his two brothers to the Low Countries, and served in the Spanish unny

Low Countries, and served in the Spanish army Low Countries, and served in the Spainsi army, be was created earl of Warwick. He died of a wound, received in defending Newhaven against the French in 1859. p. 1850. Durnary, Sir Robert, the son of the earl of Leiesster by the Lady Douglas Sheffield, though treated by his father as lifetimale, yet was left the bulk of his seater, after the death of his under the country of the seater of the country of the c

Ambrose. In 1594 he made a voyage to the Ambrose. In 1934 he hade a voyage to the South Seas, and, in the following year, com-menced a suit to prove his legitimacy; but the countess dowager of Leicester filing an information against him for a conspiracy, he went mation against him for a conspiracy, he went to Florence, where the grand duke appointed him chamberlain to his wife, the archiducless of Austria, sister to Ferdinand II. That emperor created him a duke of the holy Roman empire, on which he assumed the title of duke of Northumberland. He drained the morass between Fisa and the sea, by which Legborn became one of the first ports in the world. 3s. 3 Siene, in Surry, 1673; n. at Florence, 1869.

Sheen, in Surrey, 1573; n. at Florence, 1839. He wrote several pieces, the chief of which is "Del Arcano del Mare.

which met with success. Her next performance, entitled "Indiana," was entirely her own, and it immediately made her celebrated.

DUDLEY, Sir Henry Bate, a noted literary character and politician, was the son of the Rev. Henry Bate, incumbent of St. Nicholas, Worcester and of Farmbridge, Essex. He was educated for the church, and took orders, but was in early life notorious for living a free life about London, where his exigencies induced him to have recourse to literature, in order to recruit his finances. He established the "Morning Post" and "Morning Herald" newspapers, and was the author of several dramatic pieces, among others, the "Woodman," "Biyal Candidates," and the "Flitch of Bacon." He became curate. to the Rev. Mr. Townley, author of "High Life below Stairs," at Hendon, Essex, and subsequently obtained a baronetcy and considerable church preferment, both in Ireland and England. In the discharge of his elerical functions, but particularly in the judicial sphere as a magistrate, Sir Henry Dudley was remarkable for the ability he displayed, and for always favour-the ability ne displayed, and for always involving including and promoting improvements wherever his influence extended. 3, 1745; D. 1824.

DURENSKY, Charles Rivière, doorfres'-ne, a French comie writer, who was descended from Henry IV., to whom he bore considerable resemblance. He possessed great talents for landscape and ornamental gardening, and was, on this account, appointed by Louis XIV. comptroller of the royal gardens. The "grand motroner of the royal gardens. The "grand mo-narch" also gave him several privileges; amongst which was the monopoly of the manufacture of looking-glasses. This right, however, with others, he scon disposed of for certain sums of ready ne scon disposed of nor certain sums of ready money, and always managed to be penniless in an exceedingly short space of time. In reference to his want of funds, once of his friends observed that poverty was not a crime. "No, it's much worse," nameworde h. Louis XIV., who was very much attached to him, supplied him liberally with funds on more converse but at learth with funds on many occasions, but at length with tunus on many occasions, but at length grew tired of the continual demands made by Dufresny, saying, "I am not powerful enough to make Dufresny rich." Losing his first wife, he married his laundress, in order to pay the washing bill due to her. Paris was full of this occurrence for a few days, he being well badgered for this mesalliance; and the following is an ancedote told of him at this time. Meeting the Abbé Pellegrin, who was not conspicuous for cleanliness, he reproached him for always wearing such dirty linen. "Ah!" replied the Abbé, "every one isn't so fortunate as to marry a washerwoman." On leaving the court, Dufresny began to write for the theatres with Regnard, and afterwards alone, composing some dramatic pieces, which, though containing much wit, were uneven and irregular in their style. B. at Paris, 1648; p. 1724.

DUFFERIN, the Rt. Hon. Frederick Temple Blackwood, K.C.B., Lord, duf-fer-in, whose mother was a member of the Sheridan family, was born in 1826, and was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford. In 1880 he published an account of his voyage to Iceland in the pre-ceding year, under the title of "Letters from High Latitudes." In the same year he went to Syria, as British Commissioner, to inquire into the massacre of Christians that had been perpetrated there. In 1866 he accepted office as undertrated there. In 1886 he accepted office as under-secretary of state for India; and in 1868, at the accession of Mr. Gladstone to power, became chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. Dugdale, Sir William, dag-dadi, an English antiquary, who, in 1638, was made a pursuivant-348 at-arms by the name of Blanche Lyon. He subareams by the name of Dianene Lyon. He sup-sequently became Rouge Croix, which gave him aresidence in Heralds' College, and opened up the treasures of antiquity to his inspection. He was with Charles I. in several engagements, and in 1642 was created M.A. by the University of Oxford. On the ruin of the royal cause, he compounded for his estate, settling in London, where he completed his "Monasticon Anglicanum," in 3 yels. folio. At the Restoration he was made Norroy, and in 1677 Garter kingof-arms, on which occasion he received the oranns, on when occasion he received the honour of knighthood, which, on account of his limited estate, he would much rather have de-clined. B. at Shustoke, Warwickshire, 1605. D. there, 1686, Duguay-Trouin, Réné, doo-gai-troo-a, a famous French admiral, born at St. Malo, who showed as a boy a love for a seafaring life, and, when 18, was in command of a privateer. When 20, he fought an action with a 40-gun ship against six English vessels, but was defeated and captured, and carried to Plymouth, from and captured, and carried to Flymouth, from which he escaped by a romantic adventure. In 1897 he encountered, vanquished, and took prisoner the Dutch admiral De Wassenaer; subsequently served during the war of the Spanish succession; and, in 1708, was made Chevalier of St. Louis for his defence of Cadiz, then threatened with a siege. In 1707, he was sent, along with Count de Forbin, to intercept an English convoy which was carrying provisions for the service of the archduke of Austria, comtor the Service of the Archause of Austria, competitor for the Spanish throne with Philip V., and in this service captured the Cumberland, of 2 guns, and scattered or destroyed the rest of the fleet. On September 23, 1711, he captured Rio Janeiro, his most notable exploit; and after serving in the West Indies, the Micditerrancan, and elsewhere, and having greatly raised the character and fame of the navy of his country, died at Paris, respected and honoured by king and people, in September, 1736. B. 1673. His memoirs were published in Paris in 1740, and appeared in an English translation at London in 1742.

DUSCAMMER, Jean François Coquille, doo-gom-e-ai, a native of Guadaloupe, who had large estates in Martinique, which, having espoused the revolutionary cause, he defended against a body of royalist troops, and afterwards coming to France, entered the army, and rose through various grades till made commander-in-chief of the army of Italy, at the head of which he gained several victories over the combined Austrian and Sardinian forces. In 1793 he captured Toulon, after a severe contest and a protracted siege, during which Napoleon first a protracted stege, cauring winen avapoeou mre made himself conspicuous. Dugommier subse-quently commanded in the Eastern Pyrences, gained the battle of Alberdes, and took pos-session of Montesquien, where he captured 200 pieces of cannon and 200 prisoners. He was killed in an engagement at St. Schestian in 1724 a free harding further distributional bisecute 1794, after having further distinguished himself by repeated successes in the field. B. 1736.

DU GUESCLIN, Bertrand. (See GUESCLIN.

DUHALDE, Jean Baptiste, doo'-hald, a French Jesuit, who compiled, from the accounts of the missionaries, an "Historical and Geographical Description of the Empire of China and Chinese Description of the Empire of China and Santasa Tartary," 4 vols. folio, a work formerly held as an authority. B. at Paris, 1674; D. there, 1743. Duillius Nepos, du-il-le-us ne'-pos, a Roman consul, who obtained a naval victory over the Carthaginians, near the Lipari Islands, in which they lost fifty-eight vessels, this being the first engagement at sea which the Romans had fought, 260 B.C. He was honoured with a naval triumph, the first that ever appeared at Rome, and was also allowed peculiar honours. Some medals were struck in commemoration of this victory, and there still exists at Rome a portion of the column which was erected in the Forum on this occasion, and the inscription on which is one of the most ancient specimens of the Latin language.

Dujardin

Dumouriez DUMAS, Jean Baptiste, a distinguished Fr

DUJAEDIN, Charles, doosh'-ar-da, a Dutch painter, distinguished for his representations of market scenes, mountebanks, and robbers. also engraved in aquafortis. B. at Amsterdam, 1640; p. at Venice, 1678.

DUMARESQ, Henry, doo-mar-esk, a lieutenant-colonel in the British army, who served throughout the wars with Napoleon, and was present in the thirteen battles for which medals were struck, besides many affairs of outposts in the sieges of Badajoz and Burgos, and the attack on the forts of Salamanca. His last field was Waterloo, where he was on the staff of Sir John Byng, and was sent with an order by the Duke of Wellington to his general of brigade. This he delivered, and in returning with the answer was shot through the lungs; but, determined to do his duty, he rode up to the duke, delivered his despatch, and then fell from his horse ap-parently a dying man. The wound was not immediately fatch, however; but as the ball was never extracted, it is supposed to have pro-duced paralysis, and caused his death in 1838, at the establishment of the Australian Agricultural Company in New South Wales, where he was chief commissioner. B. 1792.

Dumas, Lewis, doo'-ma, an ingenious Frenchman, who was brought up to the law, but applied himself to mathematical and mechanical studies, inventing an instrument called the bureau typographique, to teach children reading and writing mechanically. He also devised an-other for instructing them in music, and wrote other for instructing them in music, and wrote works on these subjects, explanatory of this method. n. at Nines, 1676; p. 1744.

DUALS, Alexandro Davy, one of the most fertile French dramatists and romanelsts. His dramas number more than forty. He wrote about 1200 volumes, many of them representing a low volumes, many of their representing a low state of morals, rather repulsive than attractive to the general tone of English sentiment. He also wrote "Impressions of Voyages," and his "Memoirs," which were commenced in 1852, and by 1856 had extended to twenty-seven volumes. His most popular work is, perhaps, the "Count of Monte Christo," which has been reproduced in English in several forms. Dumas affected to be a universal genius, took to polities, and started a newspaper in Naples during the dictatorship of Garibaldi in 1860, which, however, did not live long. He also prided himself. on his skill as a cook, and on the rapidity with which he could serve up a dinner. B. at Villers-Cotterets, in the department of the Aisne,

Dumas, Alexandre fils, son of the above, wrote "Trois Hommes forts," "La Dame aux Camélias," and the "Demi-Monde;" pro-ductions which, however they may exhibit the possession of talent in their author, are very low in their morality. B. 1824.

chemist and botanist, who, in 1923, root the appointment of demonstrator of ch the appointment of denometrator of the try at the Polytechnic School, and war also made professor of chunking at the Athenee of Paris. From this pariel the science of offenic chemistry stand depth in debted to his exertions. In 1829 he founded the Central School of Arts and Manufacture, and, in 1834, became professor of organic che-mistry in the School of Medicine. In 1845 he In 1545 he was made president of the Society for the Encouragement of Industry, and, in 1319, received the porte-feuille of Agriculture and Commerce. In 1851 he acted as vice-president of the Great

Exhibition in London, and subsequently became vice-president of the superior council of public instruction in France. B. at Alais, in the de-partment of the Gard. 1300.

DUMONT, Pierre Etienne Louis, doo'-mawaq, a Swiss divine, who became minister of the Protestant church in Geneva, and afterwards went to London, where he became acquaint 1 with Sir Samuel Romilly, and other entir at men. After a visit to France, he returned, and became the editor of several of the treaties of Jeremy Bentham, from pure admiration of the wisdom of that philosopher. In 1-11 h. returned to Geneva, and because a member of its turned to Geneva, and became a member of its representative council; and there, on the panopticon plan of Mr. Bentham, had a prison erected, in 1824. D. at Geneva, 1750; D. travelling in Northern Italy, 1829.

DEMONT D'UNVILLE, Jules Schastien César, door'-veel, a French naturalist and navigator. Being commissioned by Charles X. of France, Deing commissioned by thates X to France, in 1826, to go in search of La Peronac, the French navigator, and his companions, he took the command of the frigate Astrophy, and was so far successful, as to obtain a knowledge of the fate of these voyagers. Whilst engaged in this duty, he made some important surveys of the coasts of various islands in Australasia and the Eastern seas. An account of his labours was published in 1830, and is esteemed as a valuable contribution to science. In 1837 a valuance contribution to science. In 1837 he proceeded on a voyage to the south pole, and penetrated to lat. 64° 20′ S.; lon. 181° 18′ E. On his return he published an account of his expedition. n. 1790; killed in a railway accident between Versailles and Meudon, 1842.

DUMOURIEZ, Charles François, doo-moor'-e-ai, an officer in the French military service, who, at the commencement of the great revolution, espoused the liberal side, although attached to the constitutional monarchy of 1791. ected, as well as detested, by those whose political principles were more violent, he retired from internal politics, and took service under General Luckner, then fighting against the Austrians on the northern frontier. Here he soon distinguished himself, and, receiving the command of the army opposed to the dake of Brunswick, took up a position in the forest of Argonne, which enabled Kellermann to beat the Prussians at Valmy, and saved France from invasion. He next entered Flanders, won the invasion. He next entered Fiancers, won the battle of Gemappes, took Liège, Antwerp, and a large portion of the country; but was compelled to return to Paris on the trial of Louis XVI. After the execution of that monarch, he resumed his command, entered Holland, and took Breda; but was defeated at Neerwinde and Lonvain. As he still wished for a return of the pleased the Convention, because he was averse to their proceedings against the Belgians, and entered into secret negotiations with the enemy, which brought an accusation of treason against him, when, with several of his officers, he fied to the Austrian head-quarters. His ideas of a constitutional monarchy, however, were not conformable to the notions of the allies, and he refused to serve against his country. He now wandered through several parts of the continent, with a price set upon his head, and at length crossed to England; but was thence driven by the operation of the Alien Act. He then took refuge in Hamburg, where he remained for some time; but again returned to England, and, throughout the remainder of his days, enjoyed a pension from the British government. B. at Cambrai, 1739; D. at Henley-upon-Thumes, 1823.

DUNBAR, William, dun'-bar, a Scottish poet, who wrote several beautiful effusions, and, after being almost unknown for 200 years, was resuscitated in his poems, which are now acknow-ledged to be amongst the most original in his language. His "Thistle and Rose," an allegory celebrating the metrimonial union of James IV Sectiond with Margaret, daughter of of Scotland with Margaret, daughter of Henry VII., is a rich specimen of poetical inagery. B. it is supposed, about 1400; D. about 1520. His poems were published, with notes, by Sir David Dairymple.

Dureax, Adam, Lord, dan-kan, a British admiral, was bred to the sea, and, in 1761, attained the rank of poet-ceptain. Being intirate with admiral Keppel, the latter appointed him his ceptain; and, in 1787, he became rearrabrarly in 1793, vice-admiral; and, in 1795, ediorial of the Bilee. In the war he was appointed to the North Sec station, where he blockaded the Dutch in the Texel, till the summer of 1979, when an alarmingr multip blockaded the Dutch in the Texel, till the summer of 1797, when an alarming mutiny broke out in his squadron. His conduct on this occasion was firm, and, notwithstanding the difficulties in which he was placed, he detained the Dutch until he was enabled to nect them in action. An engagement then took place on October 11, off Camperdown, when the Dutch admiral, De Winter, after a brave resistance, was obliged to strike. Eight ships were taken, two of which carried flags. For this service the gallant admiral received the this Service the gamma admiral received the thanks of parliament, was created viscount Duncan, of Camperdown, and baron Duncan of Lundie, in the shire of Perth. An annual pension, also, of £2000 was granted him, and the two next heirs of the peerage. n. at Duncan Cambridge 1221 . 1850 V. Lord Duncan. dee, Scotland, 1731; D. 1804. Lord Duncan was of a singularly manly and athletic form, his height being six feet three inches. His character was that of an amiable, upright man. It is said that when Duncan and De Winter, who was also of gigantic stature, met on the surrender of the latter, each was struck with the fine physique of the other; and that Duncan exclaimed, neither having been wounded, "Why, Admiral, how has it happened that two such marks as we present should have been missed in such a shower of bullets as that we have just passed through?"

DUNCOMBE, William, dun-kum, a poet, and author of a tragedy entitled "Lucius Junius Brutus," besides other works, and a translation of Horace, was born in London in 1090, and died in 1769.—His son John was also a poet, government to constitutional monarchy, he dis- and wrote "The Feminead," and other poems.

B. 1730; D. 1756.
DUNDAS, Sir David, dun-dass, a general in the British army, who enjoyed a high reputation as a tactician, was for a short time commanderas a acticing, was for a snore time community in-chief on the resignation of the duke of York, and was author of two works, "Principles of Military Movements," and "Regulations for the Cavalry," which are both standard authorities

Cavairy," which are both standard authorities in the army. B. at Edibnurgh, 1736; D. 1820. DuxDas, Thomas, a gallant British officer, who greatly distinguished himself at the capture of Guadaloupe, in 1794, and died there in the succeeding year. There is a conotaph to his memory in St. Paul's Cathedral, London. B.

1750.

DUNDAS, Henry. (See MELVILLE, Lord.) DUNDAS, Sir James Whitley Deans, a modern English naval commander, entered the navy at an early age, and was present at several minor an earry age, and was present as several million actions during the Napoleon wars. He was for some years a lord of the admiralty under lord Melbourne, and, in 1841, became rear-admiral. In 1853 he was appointed to the command of the English fleet which was to assist Turkey against Russia. At the commencement of the following year he entered the Black Sea, and in April the English and French fleets bombarded Odessa. In the December of the same year, however, Admiral Sir Edward (afterwards Lord) Lyons superseded him in the command. His Deans, Eq., M.D., of Calcutta; but he took the names of Whitley and Dundas on marrying his cousin Janet, daughter of the late Lord Amesbury. B. in Scotland, 1785; D. 1862.
Dundas, Sir Rich, Saunders, K. C. B., an English

naval commander, but having no relationship to the above. Entering the service at an early age, he was a captain at 23, and, in 1840, took a part in the war white China, and afterwards commanded a squadron in the Mediterranean, under the orders of admiral Parker. Between Bass and 1846, he was twice secretary to the admiralty, and from 1852 to 1855 was a lord of the admiralty. In 1863 he was appointed rear-admiral, and, in 1855, was nominated to succeed Sir Charles Napier in the command of the English fleet sent to act against Russia in the Baltie Sea. Doubting, like his predecessor, the success of an attack on Cronstadt, he took vigorous measures to destroy the enemy's commerce in the north, and, assisted by the French admiral l'enaud, attacked Sweaborg. After a bombardment of 45 hours, the Russian arsenals, barracks, and magazines were almost entirely destroyed, with a loss also of 2000 men. This was the most terrible blow to the naval power of the car during the whole of the war. n. at Mel-ville Castle, Edinburghshre, 1802; p. 1861. Dundonald, Thomas Cochrane, Earl of, dun-don'-ald, a British admiral, and the tenth earl of this name, entered the naval service in 1793. He soon distinguished himself by his bravery, being almost continually engaged in the most difficult and daring enterprises, in boarding vessels, or cutting out rich prizes from beneat the very mouth of the guns in the land for-tresses of the enemy. In 1809 he commanded a fleet of fire-ships, with which he destroyed the French fleet in the Basque Roads, for which he was rewarded with the knighthood of the Bath. In 1814 he was charged with having spread a report relative to the abdication of the emperor Napoleon I., which had a great effect on the funds, and which caused him to be brought to trial. He was found guilty, and sentenced to pay £1000, to stand in the pillory, and to undergo one year's imprisonment. When this happened, he was a member of the House of Commons; he was therefore deprived of his seat, stripped of the order of the Bath, and struck off the list of the order of the Bath, and struck of the first of captains. These proceedings were iniquitious in the extreme, as they arose almost entirely from his being a radical reformer and strong opponent of the Liverpool-Castlereagh administration. The public were enraged at such a sentence. The punishment of the pillory was remitted, he was reseated in parliament, and his fine paid by public subscription. His prospects of advancement in the service of his country were, however, for the time, annihilated.

350

Dunning

Accordingly, he sought employment abroad, and in 1818 received the command of the flect of the Chilians, to fight for their independence. In this war he displayed his usual bravery. 1822 he exchanged the Chilian for the Braresize he exchanged the Chinan for the Bra-zilian service, and, in the following year, was made marquis of Maranao by Don Pedro. On leaving this service he returned to Europe, and, in 1827 and 1828, assisted the Greeks in their war of independence. He had hitherto borne the title of Lord Cochrune, but by his fither's death he now succeeded to that of Earl of Dundonald, and, on the accession of the Whigs to power in 1830, was reinstated in his command to power in 1880, was runstaceum in is command in the British navy, and made a rear-admiral. In 1811 he became vice-admiral of the Blue, and, in 1817, had his order of the Bath restored to him. In 1851 he became vice-admiral of the White, and, in 1854, admiral of the Chitek King-dom. Eving greatly devoted to scientific pur-suits, he offered, in 1856, to blow up the walls of Schwistonel during the siene of that fortress. Sebastopol during the siege of that fortress; but the committee appointed to consider his plan, rejected it. B. 1775; D. 1859. His Life, written by himself, was recently published under the title of "Autobiography of a Scannan, by Thomas, Earl of Dundonald."

DUNNING, John, dun'-ning, an eminent lawyer, was the son of an attorney at Ashburton, in was the son of an attorney at Ashburton, in Devonshire. After studying under his father some time, he entered the Middle Temple in 1752, and in 1756 was called to the bar. He soon 1762, and in 17-20 was caused to the par. The soon rose to distinction in his profession, and obtained a seat in parliament, where he distinguished himself on the side of the opposition. Afterwards he became solicitor-general, recorder of Bristol, and chancellor of the duchy of Lanof Distol, and chancelor of the duely of Ear-caster. In 1782 he was created Lord Ashburton, but died in the following year. B. at Ashburton, Devonshire, 1731. His lordship was an upright lawyer, and often pleaded the cause of the poor, unsolicited, and without a fee.

Dunois, John, doo'-neaw, count of Longue-ville, and called the "Bastard of Orleans," grand tine, and canced the "Bastard of Orleans," grand chamberlain of France, was a natural son of Louis, duke of Orleans. It is said that when but a youth, his mother-in-law, the duchess of Orleans, who was a daughter of the Views of Milan, when on her death-bed, called her family together, and charged them never to rest till they had revenged the death of her husband, who had been assassinated by the Burgundians who had been assassmanted by the Durgundams. On this young Dunois stepped forward, and pledged himself never to forget his father's wrongs while he could wield a sword or rein in steed. "Ah," oxclaimed the dying duchess, "they have robbed me-gow, should have been my son." At a very early age he distinguished 351 himself by his great bravery, and had the better in an action with the English in 1427, at Mortargis. At the siege of Orleans, he shared the laurels of success with Joan of Arr, and in 132 laurers of success with Joan of Art, and at 1805 contributed greatly to the victory at Patay. The same year he brought under the rival authority the town of Chartres, and in 1436 re-occupied Paris, which had been taken by the English. After these considerable services to the state, he sullied his fair fame by engaging in a conspiracy against Charles VII, and insti-gating against that king the revolt of his sen, afterwards Leuls XI. He repaired his de-loyalty, however, by throwing himself at the feet of the former monarch, and caused all to be forgotten in his devotion at the sieges of Harfleur, Gallardon, and Dieppe. In 1444 he was appointed lieutenant-general, and, from this appointed feedbackground, and, from this time to 14:0, was engaged against the English, who were now driven out 1 oth of Normandy and Guienne. He was appointed, for his services, grand chamberlain. B. at Paris, 1402; D. 1463. This is the warrier alluded to in this opening lines-

Dunaly

openmer lines—
"C'était le jeune et brave Dunois"— of the favourite French national air "Partant pour la Syrie," which was e par a sel by Hortense pour la Syrie," which was evan order in recese Beaminarials, the mother of Nord. at III.

DUNS, John, duns, commonify called "Duns Scotus," a famous Franciscam citine, who was educated at Oxford. In 13-1 he became professor of theology at Oxford, professor of theology at Oxford, year was oddstringthind by his eloquence, that it is said 30,000 scholars came to listen to his precepts.

1. 2010, and to Paris, where he apending a In 1304 he went to Paris, where he acquired a great reputation as a disputant, and was called the "subtle doctor." He opposed the notions of Thomas Aquinas, which produced two parties, the Thomists and the Scotists. n. supposed at Dunstance, near Alawick, Northumberland, 1265; p. at Cologne, 1308. His works were printed at Lyons in 12 vols. folio, 1639.

DUNSTAN, St., dun'-tan, an English monkand celebrated statesman, who, at a very early age, was made abbot of classonbury by king Edmund I. King Edgar made him bishop of Worcester, and, in 959, archbishop of Canterbury. The pope confirmed the appointment, and appointed him his legate. Dunstan extended the papal power in a most arbitrary manner, though opposed by the English clergy; for which he deprived many or their concerns, and placed monks in their room. On the death of Edgar, in 975, he placed on the throne his son Edward, who being a minor, Dunstan dithe regency. Under Ethelred, however, he loot his influence, and died of grey 1958. In at Glastonbury, 925. The popular for which he deprived many of their benefices,

953. B. at Glastonbury, 925. The popular story of his taking the devil by the nose with a pair of tongs when his satanic majesty was too importunate with the saint, is well known, and is believed to have had its origin in the fact of Dunstan having rather rudely separated the young king and the wife he had presumed to marry without the sanction of the reverend minister.

DURTON, John, dun'ton, a noted bookseller, who published the "Athenian Mercary," which was reprinted in 4 vols. 8vo, under the title of the "Athenian Oracle." In 1710 appeared the "Projects of Mr. John Dunton." He also wrote a book called "Dunton's Life and Errors." which abounds in literary history of a curious kind. B. in Huntingdonshire, 1659; D. 1735. Duplity, Jean Baptist Mercler. doc-mi-fa. a eminent French publicist, and president of the parliament of Bordeaux, was author of "His-torical Reflections on Penal Laws," "Academica" Discourses, and Letters on Italy." B. at Ro Discourses, and Letters on Italy." n. at 80 n. helle, 1748; D. at Paris, 1758.—His son, Charles, was a famous sculptor, whose works are distinguished by their classes purity of tyle. n. 1771; n. 1853.

DUPPREEN, Louis Isidore, doo-pair-re, French hydrographer, who in 1817 made t voyage in the North Pacific Ocean, and mapped.

the Ladrone Islands and several others; but, whilst engaged in his duties, suffered shipwreck among the Sandwich Islands, in 1820. After remaining ten weeks on an island, he and the crew were taken by an American ship to Monte Video, whence he returned to France in the same year. He was subsequently engaged in making surveys in the South Pacific, and afterwards published the results of his expeditions. B. at Paris, 1786.
DUPIN, Louis Ellies, doo'-pà, a French writer, who, about 1684, commenced his valuable work who, about 1654, commenced in valuable work entitled "Bibliothèque Universelle des Auteurs Ecclésiastiques," &c., or "History of Eccle-siastical Writers," which, notwithstanding its general excellence, was much censured by zealous Romanists for some freedom of sentiment, which the author was compelled to retract. He afterwards became involved in a profitiess dispute with Dr. Wake, archbishop of Canterbury, on a projected union between the English and Gallicar, churches. B. at Paris, 1657; D. there 1719. Besides the above work, he wrote several others or the scriptures, church governnent, and practical divinity.

DUPIN, André Marie Jean Jacques, an eminent French lawyer, who, in 1815, became a member of the Chamber of Representatives, and opposed the proposal to proclaim the son of Napoleot. I. emperor, under the title of Napoleon II. In the same year he was united with Berryer in the defence of Marshal Ney. Subsequently, he defended several others, among whom may be named Berauger, in 1821 from the vengeance of arbitrary power. In 1820 he became a member of the Chamber of Deputies, and assisted by his influence and opposition to produce the revolution of 1830. Ir the same year he was made procureur-general of the Court of Cassation, and, in 1832, became president of the Chamber of Deputies, to which office he was re-cleuted seven times.
After the forced abdication of Louis Philippe, It is is, he proposed the young count of Paris as king of the French, but failed in this attempt to stem the republican tide. He then endeavoured to form a new government, and, it the following year, became president of the it the following year, became pressuent of the Legislative Assembly. During this stormy period of political viclositude, his conduct was marked by great firmness and courage. In 1832, when the decrees confiscating the property of the House of Orleans were published, he resigned his procureur-generalship. In 1857, because he capture quantity of the procure of the course of the c signed his procureur-generalship. In 1597, however, he again accepted the office of procureur-general, and in his address, written at the time, he says, "I have always belonged to the time, he says, 'I have always belonged to France, and neve to a party.' He wrote several valuable works on law. n. at Varzy, in the department of the Nievre, 1783; n. 1885. Dursix, Charles, Baron, brother of the above, entered the French navy in 1803, as an engineer, and the physical sciences in the Ionian Academy, which he assisted in forming, at Corfu. In 1812 he returned to Paris, and, in 1813, instituted the maritime museum at Toulon. After the peace of 1815, he visited Great Britain, for the purpose of examining her pub-Britain, for the purpose of examining her pub-lic engineering works, and afterwards published the results of his observations. In 1828 he was elected to the Chamber of Deputies, as representative for the department of Tarn, and, after the revolution of 1830, represented Soine. When the change of 1818 was effected, he became a representative in the Constituent Assembly, and also in the Legislative Assembly, After the vegotiation of 1831, he became a After the revolution of 1851, he became a senator. In 1851 he was president of the He wrote a great number of important works connected with the science of engineering

B. at Varzy, 1784.

DUTINO, Charles François, doo-pe'-no, a modern French philosopher, who, during the revolutionary era, distinguished himself as a politician, and rose to the presidency of the Legislative Assembly. Previous to this, how-ever, he had filled the chair of rhotorie in the college of Lisieux, and had deeply devoted himself to astronomical studies. He was the inventor of a telegraph, by which he cor-responded with a friend at some distance, until dread of the political factions then rampant dread of the political factions then rampain compelled him te lay it asile. By this time he had published several scientific works, and, in 1794, appeared his "Origine de tous les Cultes; ou, le Religion Universelle," a great work, which ultimately led to the "commission" undertaken to explore the ruins of Upper Egypt, in the time of Napoleon I. This production was succeeded by other volumes, relating to astronomy and mythology. B. at Frye-Chatcau, near Chaumont, 1742; p. at Is-

DUPLRIX, Scipion, doo-plui', historiographer of France, wrote a work on the liberties of the Gallican church, which he presented to the chancellor Seguier to be licensed; but that magistrate threw it into the fire. This so preyed upon his mind, that he died in 1661.

B. at Condom, 1569. Besides the above, he produced,—1. "Memoirs of the Gauls;" 2. produced,—1. "History of France," 6 vols. folio; 3. "Roman History," 3 vols. folio; 4. "A Course of "hilosophy," &c. Drrheix, Joseph, a celebrated French merchant, who, in 1731, was sent as director of the colony of Chandernagore, where he carried on an extensive commerce through all parts of the ndies. In 1742 he was made governor of 'ondicherry, which, in 1748, he defended against wo English admirals. For this he was created marquis by the French king, and a nabob by the Mogul. He was recalled, however, in 1754, and died in 1763.

sur-Lille, 1809.

DUPONCEAU, Peter S., LL.D., doo-pawng'-so, a native of the He de Rhé, in France, after completing his education in his native province, went to Paris, where he acted for some time as secretary to De Gebelin, author of a well-known work entitled "The Primitive World." Duponceau accompanied Baron de Steuben to America in 1777, served four campaigns in the colo-Durix, Charles, Baron, brother of the above, nial army during the War of Independence; and entered the French navy in 1803, as an engineer, and after performing some services in the pointed to a post in the office of the Republic's Mediterranean, became professor of mechanics of the secretary for foreign affairs. He subsequently studied for the bar, then devoted himself to literary pursuits, and wrote two very learned and ingenious works, the one being on the lan-guages of the aboriginal American Indians, and guages of the aboriginal American indians, and the other on the nature of the Chinese written character, which, although neither alphabetic nor syllabic, he explains to be still lexicographic or strictly representative of particular vocables, with their grammatical accidence, and not pictorial or vaguely indicative of ideas or things. Later investigations have elucidated those questions more fully; still Duponceau's work is of constderable value. B. some time between 1750 and 1760; p. 1844.

Dupont

DUPONT, Pierre, doo'-pawng, a gifted French song writer, the son of humble parents, made song writer, the son of numble parents, made imbasel famous by his lyrics, especially those from rural scenes. He has been called the "Burns of France," and is so, perhaps, more truly than even Béranger. His first published production is entitled "The Two Angels," and was issued in 1844. This was followed by "The Oxen," which was received with a burst of applause, which encouraged the author to sing of the scenes and occupations of the country, and the joys and sorrows, the manners and the lives, of the French peasantry. Having obtained an appointment in the bureau of the Institute, he became a resident of Paris, and was affected by the political and social questions of the time. by the political and social questions of the time.

"Song of Bread" was produced prior to the revolution of 1836, as was likewise his "Song of the Workers." In the midst of the din of the convulsion which cost Louis Philippe his throne, the strains of Dupont sounded clearly out in tones of triumph and encouragement. He was arrested after the coup d'état, and conne was arrescu atter the coup a teat, and con-demand to transportation to Cayenne; but strong representations having been made to Louis Napoleon, he ordered his release. The poems of Dupont have been published in a col-lected form under the titles "Cahiers de Chan-sons," "La Muse Populaire," and "Chants et Chansons, Poësie et Musique," Paris, 1850-64. B. at Lyons, April 21, 1821

DUPONT DE NEMOURS, Pierre Samuel, docpawng-dai-nai-moo(r), a political economist of France, was twice president of the Constitu-tional Assembly, and held several high official tional Assembly, and near several high omena positions, and was eminent for his steady oppo-sition to the anarchists, from whose enmity he was obliged to fly to America in 1787. He returned thence in 1805, became president of the Chamber of Commerce, and, in 1814, was appointed secretary to the provisional government. On the return of Bonaparte from Elba in 1915. Dupont finally retired to America. He was the Dupont inally retried to America. He was the author of a variety of works on various departments of political economy and other subjects, the most prominent of which are his "Tableau raisonné de Principes de l'Economie Politique," Refloxions sur l'Ecritiniti. Elichesses de l'Etat," and "Philosophie de l'Univers." p. 1739; p. 1817.

and "Philosophie de l'Univers." n. 1738; p. 1817.
Drra, Brian, duy-pa, a plous prelate, who,
In 1683, was appointed tutor to the Prince of Wales, afterwards Charles II, and, about the same time, made bishop of Chichester, whence, In 1641, he was removed to Salisbury. He attended Charles I, in the 181e of Wight, and is supposed to have assisted him in the composition of "Eikon Basilika." At the Restoration he was made bishop of Winchester and lovd almoner. s. at Lewisham, Kent, 1589; p. 1682.
He published a few devotional pieces, but his greatest works were those of charity.

3533

Durand

Duprat, Anthony, doo-pra', a French states-man, who became president of the parliament of Paris in 1507, and chancellor of France in 1515. He was also appointed tutor to the count 1915. He was also appointed enter to the count of Angouleme, afterwards Francis I., and was the author of the famous Concordat, which rendered him 30 acceptable to the court of Rome, that he obtained several ecclesiastical preferments and a cardinalship. D. 1535.

Dures De St. Maur, Nicholas Francis, doo prai, a French writer, who was a memter of the Academy of Paris, and translated Milton's "Paradise Lost" into French. He also wrote an essay on the coins of France, "Inquiries concerning the Value of Moneys," &c. D.

at Paris, 1696; D. 1775.

DUPUNTEEN, Guillaume, le Baron, doo-pre'tren, a distinguished modern French surgeon and anatomist, who invented several surgical instruments, and greatly extended the limits of his profession by the scientific character which he gave to his clinical instructions. He wrote very little, and on the evening before he expired. desired that a medical paper might be read to him, "that I may carry," said he, "the latest news of disease out of the world." B. at Pierre-Buillère, in the department Haute-Vi-enne, 1777; D. in Paris, 1835. Whilst pursuing his studies, Dupuytren was so poor that be could hardly obtain the means of keeping life in his body; yet he bequeathed a fortune of £20,000 to an only daughter, and £8000 for the endow-ment of a pathological and anatomical chair in Paris.

DUQUESNE, Abraham, Marquis, doo.kain', a celebrated French naval warrior, first went to sea under his father, who was in the service. He distinguished himself at so early an age, that at seventeen he had the command of a vessel, in seventeen he had the command of a vessel, in which he fought sevent a successful actions with the Spaniards. In the troubles which occurred in France during the minority of Louis XIV, between the was in the service of Sweden, and defeated the Danish fleet commanded by King Christian IV. Recalled to France in 1647, he got together a squadron at his own expense, and was engaged several times both with the English and Spanish, In the French war of 1672 with Holland, Louis XIV, sent bitm sections to Bruster and Dru-XIV. sent him against De Ruyter, and Du-quesne defeated him in a terrible engagement near Messina, in 1876. He afterwards gained great successes against the pirates in the Medigreat successes against whe branes in the ment-terranean, and humbled the dey of Algiers. p. 1610; p. 1688. Being a Protestant, Louis XIV. did not raise him to those high positions which his services entitled him to; and thus he never became an admiral. (See RUYTER, DE.)

DUBAN, Don Augustin, door'-an, a modern panish critical and miscellaneous writer, who made some excellent collections of the romances of his native country, and acquired con-siderable fame by some of his own poetical imitations of old ballads. B. at Madrid about

1793; D. 1862.
DUBAND, Jean Nicholas Louis, doo'-rant, an eminent French architect, who, in 1780, obtained the great prize for an architectural design from the Royal Academy of Architecture in Paris. He afterwards became professor of architec-ture in the Polytechnic School, and produced several works illustrative of his Art. These are not considered very valuable, although they have been greatly commended. E. at Paris, 1760; D. at Thiais, in the vicinity of Paris, 1834.

Duranti

DUBLINT, Jean Etienne, doo-rant'-e, first president of the parliament of Toulouse in 1531, wrote "De Itilibus Ecclesia," printed at Rome in 1591. B. 1534; murdered by the Leaguers in 1559. DUBLS, Clara, duchesse de, doo-ra', a French literary lady of considerable talent and of high moral excellence, was authoress of "Ourika" and "Edouard," two imaginative works. She was more distinguished, however, for exertions to promote education, and her support of cha-ritable institutions, than even for her mental capacity. Her father, the Count de Kersaint, was sacrificed to the popular fury for having voted against the regicides in the National Convention. The Duchess de Duras was born in 1779, and died at Nice, where she had gone for her health, in 1828.

DURER, Albert, doo'-rer, the first engraver on wood, and an eminent artist, the son of a goldwood, and an entitleth artist, the son of a god-smith in Nuremberg. He engraved more than he painted; so that his pictures are scarce, and highly valued. The people of Nuremberg show with pride his portraits of Charlemagne and other emperors; but it is as an engraver that he is most celebrated. He is said to be the first who engraved upon wood; yet, as a painter, he was so highly esteemed, that the emperors Maximilian I, and Charles V. appointed him their artist, and conferred upon him rank and riches. Düren's best historical paintings are in the collections of Dresden, Vienna, Munich, and Prague. He was also the first who printed woodcuts in two colours. B. at Nuremberg, 1471; D. there, 1528. Dürer wrote a book on the rules of painting, and some other works; and since the revival of German art, he is looked upon as its great exemplar.

D'URFEY, Thomas, dur'-fe, a facetious English poet, who wrote a number of plays and songs, which are very licentious. Charles II. was wont to lean upon his shoulder, and hum the tunes of some of his songs. His effusions, however, on account of their looseness, are now justly forgotten. He resided frequently with the earl of Dorset at Knowle, where is a portrait of him, painted when he was asleep, after dinner; for he had such an ordinary visage, that he could not bear to have his likeness taken, that he could not bear to have his likeness take. His billads, &c., were printed in 6 vols. 12mo, under the title of "Pills to purge Melancholy."

B. at Exter, about 1645, b. in London, 1723.

Durhim, John George Lambton, Farl of, dur-ham, was educated at Eton, and, in 1813, became member of Parliament for the country of Durham. In 1828 he was raised to the peerage, by the title of Baron Durham, of the city of Durham, and, in 1830, became prominently con-nected with the reform agitation. In the same year he was made lord privy seal, under the ad-ministration of Earl Grey. In framing the Reform Bill at that time, he proposed the introduction of the ballot; but thus was rejected. In 1833 he resigned his office in the government, and was created earl of Durham. In the same year he was sent on a special mission to Russia, and, on his return, differed from his colleagues, but was, in 1835, again sent to Russia, where he remained for two years, and became an especial favourite with the emperor of that country. In 1838 he was sent as governor-general, with extraordinary powers, to Cauada; but conceiving himself not supported in his measures by the home government, he returned, without being rene, and on the marriage of that prince with recalled, in the same year. For this step he was the heiress of the house of Austria, he accomrebuted, and not permitted to land under the panied him to Vienna, where the emperor 354 usual salute. This may be regarded as the close of his public life. B. at Lambton Castle, Durham, 1792; D. at Cowes, Isle of Wight, DURHAM, Joseph, sculptor, was the son of a London merchant, and sprung from an old family at Houghton-le-Spring, in the county of Durham. He was the pupil of Francis, and of Mr. E. H. Baily, R.A., and first attracted notice by his bust of Jenny Lind, in 1848, of which more than 1000 copies were sold in a brief period. In 1855 he executed, for Sir F. E. Moon, a bust of the queen for presentation to the corporation of London; and shortly afterwards was commissioned to make a bust of Hermione for the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion-house. He also executed a statue of Frank Crossley, Esq., for the public park at Halifax; and his design was selected for the work of art commemorative of the Exhibition of 1851—his design being unanimously adopted from among the many unanimously adopted from among the many sent in in response to the invitation which had been issued to the "artists of all nations." Amongst Mr. Durham's minor works are "Paul and Virginia," "Chastily." "Fate of Genius." "Go to Sleep," &c., all displaying much merit, в. 1821.

Duval

Dunce, Michael, doo'-rok, entered the French army in 1792, and accompanied Napoleon I. to Egypt, where he greatly distinguished himself, and was severely wounded by the bursting of a howitzer. When the imperial court was formed, in 1805, he was made grand-marshal of the palace, and was subsequently engaged in the palace, and was subsequently engaged in several diplomatic missions, although he still continued to play his part in the wars of France, IL was made Duke of Friuli, and fell in the battle of Wurtzchen 1813, z.1772. (For full de-tails of Duroc's connexion with the emperor and the Imperial family, see Bourrleane's "Momoirs.")

Dusser, John Louis, doo-sek, a celebrated musical composer, and an excellent performer on the pianoforte, was a native of Bohemia, and a pupil, at Hamburg, of Emanuel Bach, Having gone to France, the occurrence of the revolution forced him to leave that country and come to London, where he established a musical warehouse in the Haymarket; but this specula-tion did not succeed, and he returned to the continent, and was successively attached to the household of Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia and of Talleyrand. His compositions, though unequal, are very voluminous, and few authors have written so much that is both good and popular. B. 1762; D. 1812.

Duval, Nicholas, do-cat, a Dutch painter, who studied in Italy under Pietro da Cortona, whose manner he adopted. King William III. appointed him director of the Academy at the Hague. B. 1644; D. 1732.

DUVAL, Valentine Jamerai, an extraordinary person, who, after serving as a shepherd, became, in his eighteenth year, keeper of the cattle belonging to the hermits of St. Anne, near Lung-Under these brothers he ardently devoted blines to study, and, by an accident, got intro-duced to the duke of Loraine, who placed him in the college of Pont à Moussun. The duke afterwards made him his librarian, and profes-sor of history in the Academy of Luneville. In 1738 he followed the grand-duke Francis to Flo-appointed him keeper of his cabinet of medals. в. 1695; р. 1775.

Dwight

DWIGHT, Timothy, dwite, an American di-vine of high reputation, both as pulpit orator vine of high reputation, both as pulpit crator and lucid expounder of the Scriptures. In 1795 he became president of Yale College, Newhaven, where he also held the professorship of theology. He wrote several religious works, but the one upon which his fame rests is entitled "Theology Explained and Defended, in a Series of Sermons." This is an extensive work, and consists of a course of lectures delivered by him, as professor of divinity, on the Sundays in term-time. These extended over four years.

him, as processed and the second over four years, and although exhibiting no great depth or originality of thought, are still, as a whole, a pleasing collection of divinity. B. at Northampton, Massachusetts, 1752; p. 1817.

Drog, William, R.A., dice, a distinguished Sectitish painter, who was taught the rudiments of his art in the Scottish Academy. In 1844 he exhibited at the Royal Academy "King Joach beating the Arrow of Deliverance," which shooting the Arrow of Deliverance," which raised him to the rank of an associate of that institution. He afterwards exhibited specimens of his skill in fresco-painting, and soon afterwards received a commission from Prince Albert to paint, in that style, one of the com-ADDET TO PRINK, IN THAT STYLE, OHE OF THE COMPARTMENTS OF his summer-house at Buckingham Palace. He was subsequently similarly employed at Obborne. He was also among the first artists engaged upon the new palace of Westminster, and his "Baptism of Ethelbert", in the House of Lowest is considered one of the in the House of Lords, is considered one of the in the House of Loris, is consulted one of the best paintings in the o'amber. After this he was appointed to raint the queen's robing-room. In 1845 he was elected R.A.; after which he produced "Omnia Vanitas," the "Meeting of Jacob and Rachel," "King Lear and the Fool in the Storm," "Christabel," the "Good Shepherd," and several other works of more or less merit. B. in Scotland, about 1800; p. 1864.

1800; D. 1864.

Dycg, Rev. Alexander, was educated for the church, and officiated, for some years, in both Cornwall and Stuffelt; but, going to reside in London, in 1827, he entered upon a literary career, and soon rose to distinction. He edited editions of the poems of Collins and Skelton, "Specimens of British Poetesses," and several of the elder dramatists. He also appeared as a commentator on Shakspeare, and edited works for both the Camden and Shakspeare Societies. In 1856 he edited a volume of "Recollections

In 1886 he carted a volume of "Recollections of the Table Talk of Samuel Rogers." B. at Edinburgh, 1798.

Drsg. Sir Edward, di'-er, a poet of the Elizabethan era, who was educated at Oxford, and after having travelled, received many appoint. ments from the queen, principally in the fereign diplomatic service. He studied chemistry, was thought to be a Rosicrucian, and was made a dupe by the famous astrologers and impostors, Dee and Kelly. His pieces were mostly pas-toral odes and madrigals, and are to be found in "England's Helicon," published at the close of Elizabeth's reign, and reprinted in the "Bibliographer." B. about 1549; D. some time after the accession of James I. Dee and Kelly. His pieces were mostly pas-

DYER, John, an English poet, who was educated for the bar; but, quitting the legal pro-called "Grongar Hill," which, according to Dr. Johnson, is "the happiest of his productions." Not long after his return, he entered into orders, and obtained the living of Calthorn, in Leicestershire, which he exchanged for Pelchford, in Liveolushire. He also had the rectory of Coningsby, in the same county, to which was added that of Kirby. In 1757 appeared "The Fleece," a poem which possesses considerable merit, notwithstanding that it only treats of

Eachard

"The care of sheep, the labours of the loom." B. in Carmarthenshire, 1700; D. 1753.

Dxen, George, a poet, a scholar, and an anti-quary, deeply versed in books and their history, was educated at Christ's Hospital, London, and at Emanuel College, Cambridge, where he gra-duated B.A. in 1773. He spent some time as usher at a school, and in officiating as a Baytist minister. He ultimately settled in London, where his time was occupied first as a parliamentary reporter, which, however, he abandoned after a trial of two months, then as a private teacher, and finally in various literary undertakings. As and finally in various merry successions, as a peet, byer attracted notice, but not finne; as a scholar he edited some plays of Euripides, and an edition of a Greek Testament, but is best known as editor, or joint-ceiter, of "Valpy's Editions of the Classics," in 141 volumes, in which all the original matter, except the prewater an true original mater, every the pre-face, was contributed by him; as an antiquary, his principal works are a "History of the University of Cambridge," in 2 vols, and "Pri-vileges of the University of Cambridge," also in Vineges of the oniversity of Camoriage, and in 2 vols. Dyer was a man of great simplicity of character, and his studious habits made him somewhat absent-minded—traits of character which afforded his friend "Elia" (Charles Lamb) an opportunity of making sundry jokes at his expense in articles in the "London Magazine." B. 1755; D. 1841.

n. 1755; p. 1841.

Dyacora, Joanthan, di'-mond, a linen-draper, and a member of the Sceiety of Friends, published, in 1823, an "Inquiry into the Accordance of War with the Frinciples of Christianity." This work was well receivel; but his famerests more particularly upon his "Essay on the Frinciples of Morality, &c.," which first appeared in 1820. This work was reviewed by Southey, at great length, in the "London Quarterly Review." If may be regarded as one of the most valuable works on moral government in the language scene by those who government in the language, even by those who contains. B. at Exeter, 1796; D. 1828.

[Where e is used in the explanatory pronunciation, it is sounded as e in bed, fed, led; where ee is used, it is sounded as e in mete, or ce in been, or beer.]

EACHARD, John, e'-chard, an eminent English divine, who became fellow, and afterwards master, of Catherine Hall, Cambridge. In 1670 he published a piece entitled "The Grounds and Reasons of the Contempt of the Clergy and Re-ligion inquired into," This he attributed to ngton inquired into. This he authorized to the improper education of the young men for the ministry, and to the abourd style of preach-ing too generally adopted. He blended much ing coo generally adopted. The binness manu-humour with his remarks, which occasioned favoured the public with a descriptive piece, ever, is his "Dialogues between Philashas and of Hobbes. He had great powers of ridicule, but on serious subjects he exhibited not much talent. B. in Suffolk, 1636; D. 1697. His work:

were published in 3 vols, 12mo, in 1779.

EADMER, ede'-mer, an ancient figlish historian, who, in 1120, was elected bishop of St. Andrews, in Scotland, but was never conse-erated. He was the friend and biographer of crates. He was the friend and bographer of Anselm, archibishop of Canterbury; but his principal work is the "Historia Novorum," or listory of his own Times, which was first printed by Seiden in 123. He also wrote lives of St. Wilfrid, St. Oswald, St. Dunstan, &c., which were inserted by Warton in his "Anglia

Which were his rice by the Early D. 1124.

EARLY John, earl, an English bishop, who was tutor to Charles II. while Prince of Wales, and suffered much during the civil war and the Commonwealth. At the Restoration, he was made dean of Westminster, and afterwards bishop of Worcester, and then of Salisbury. bishop of Worcester, and then of Salisbury. In: Earle was a scholar and author, heaving written a humorous work called "Microcompraphy, or a Pieze of the World Discovered; in Essays and Characters." He also translated into Latin the "Elkon Dasilke," and Hooler's "Declesiastical Polity," the latter, however, we destroyed through the carelessness of the bishop's servants. In at York, 1801; p. 1865.

ERROLE Bishord exclusion on eminant bross.

EARLOM, Richard, er'-lom, an eminent Eng-lish engraver, who was distinguished for his skill in mezzo-tint, and produced a great num-ber of initations of chalk-drawings. He en-graved after many of the most celebrated masters, both English and foreign. B. in London, about 1742; D. about 1822.

EASTLAKE, Sir Charles Lock, P.R.A., eest'laik, a modern English artist, early became a student under Fuseli, at the Royal Academy of Painting, and afterwards settled at Plymouth as a portrait painter. In 1817 he visited Italy and Greece; in 1823 he began to exhibit at the and orecce; in 1825 he becam to exhans as an Royal Academy, and in 1827 was elected an associate of that institution. In 1829 he exhibited on its walls his "Pensants on a Pilpgrimage to Rome," &c., which is a work of great reprit, and has been several times engraved. His next great work was his "Christ weeping over Jerusalem." This placed him at the head of his profession, and was, at the time of its production, esteemed as one of the best paintings in the historical style that had appeared for a lengthened period of time. It was succeeded by his "Christ blessing little Chil-dren" and his "Hagar and Ishmael;" both, though excellent, are considered, as pictures, by no means equal to the other. In 1841 he was president of the Royal Academy, with the honour of knighthood, and in 1855 was made director of of knighthood, and in 1855 was made director of its National (allery, with a salary of Eliodo a year. In the same year he was created a knight of the Legion of Housen, and two years aller with the degree of D.C.L. presented to him by the University of Oxford. Besides his emineue as an artist, Sir Charles as contributed some raluable works to the literature of art. Among these may be named his "Contributions towards a History of Coll Painting," first published in 1847. B. 1793; p. 1865.

Lastlate, Elizabeth Rigby, Lady, the wife of 300

Timothy," which were intended to expose, what Sir Charles, won, under her maiden name, con-he considered, the absurdity of the philosophy siderable literary celebrity by a work which apsiderable literary celebrity by a work which ap-peared in 1841, entitled "Letters from the Shores of the Baltic," being a record of observations made during a lengthened visit to that region, which the authoress paid to a sister who was married to a nobleman of Esthonia. Sub-sequently she published "Livonian Tales," and was a contributor to the "Quarterly Review," was a contributor to the "Quarterly Review," some of her papers in which have been re-printed in a separate form. She was the daughter of Edward Rigby, M.D., of Norwich, and was married to Sir Charles Eastlake in 1849. B. about 1816.

EASTMAN, Mary H., eest-man, an American authoress, the daughter of Dr. Thomas Henderson, U.S. army, and the wife of Captain S. Eastman, of the same service. Her writings Eastman, of the same servee. Let writings principally relate to the aborigines of America, and are entitled "Dacotah; or, Life and Legends of the Sioux," "Romance of Indian Life," "American Aboriginal Portfolio," "Chicora, and "Affireran Austrania rotation, concora and the Conquerors and the Conquerord," and "Aunt Phillis's Cabin," designed as an answer to Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." She likewise contributed to various magazines and other periodical works.

EBERHARD, John Augustus, ai-ber-hard, a German philosopher and divine, was professor of theology at Halle, a member of the Royal Academy at Berlin, and privy councillor of Frederic the Great of Prussia. He was a deredded opponent of Kani's philosophy; and wrote "A General Theory of the Faculty of Thought and Sentiment," "A General History of Philosophy," &c. B. at Halberstadt, 1739 : D. 1809.

EBION, e'-bi-on, a Jew, the founder, in the 1st century, of a sect called Ebionites. This sect differed little in its doctrines from the Nazarenes, denying the divinity of Jesus Christ, and renes, denying the divinity of Jesus Carrist, and the writings of the apostles, with the exception of the gospel of St. Matthew, which they muti-lated. To the precepts of the Christian religion they added Mosaic practices. The first Ebionites were strictly moral, but, in process of time, they gave themselves up to great excesses. Some think that the Ebionites derived their name from a Hebrew word meaning "poor." ECHARD, Laurence, e'-chard, an English diine and historian, was brought up at Christ's ine and historian, was brought up at Units's Deliege, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. in 1085. On entering into orders, he bitained two livings in Lincolashire. In 1600 he published a "History of Rome" 3 vols. 6vo. and, in 1702, ihs "deneral Ecclesiastical work, however, is the "History of England," 3 vols. 6vo. were, is the "History of England," 3 vols. 6vo. his principal work, however, is the "History of England," 3 vols. 6vo. Living and the state of the control of th nterpreter," which was once a popular book, and the foundation of all of its class. In 1712 he was made archdeacon of Stowe, and, some time after, obtained three livings in Suffolk. B. in Suffolk, about 1670; p. 1730.

Ecluse

and at the Diet of Augsburg, in 1538, he argued member of the last Irish House of Commons against the Protestant Confession. He held a and an active magistrate in the neighbourhood three days' debate with Melanchton and others where he resided. at Weimar, in 1541, on the continuance of sin after baptism; and again, on the same topic, at Ratisbon, to which place the discussion had been adjourned. He was the author of numerous polemical works, and some homilies. He was considered a clever debater, but it is believed that he did not greatly aid the cause he defended. B. 1486: D. 1543.

ECLUSE, Charles de l', ai-klooz', a physician of Arras, and professor of botany at Leyden, whose works on botany were published at Antwerp, in 2 vols. folio, 1601. B. 1526; D. 1609.

EDELINGE, Gerard, ed'-e-timb, an eminent Dutch engraver, who mostly resided in France, where he executed the bulk of his works; among which may be noticed, as his finest, the picture of the "Holy Family," by Raffaelle, and the "Tent of Darius," by Le Brun. B. at Antwerp, 1649; D. 1707.

EDEMA, Gerard, e'-de-ma, a Dutch landscape-painter, who went to Norway and Newfound-land to delineate the plants and insects of those countries. He settled in London in 1670, and became famous for painting landscapes. B. about

1652: p. 1700.

EDGAR, ed-gar, king of England, at the age of 16 succeeded his father Edwy, in 959. He made war against the Scots, and compelled Wales to pay him yearly a certain number of wolves' heads, which cleared the country of those animals. Securing his kingdom from invasion by a large fleet, he is said to have invasion by a large neet, he is said to have subdued Iroland, and governed his people with a vigorous success. His queen dying, and hear-ing of the great beauty of Elfrida, a daughter of the earl of Devon, he sent Earl Ethelwald, one of his favourite courtiers, to see if the charms of the lady were equal to what was reported of them. The moment he beheld her, the earl for-got his duty to his master, gave a false report of her charms, and married the lady himself. His ner charms, and married the lady limited. It is conduct ultimately became known to the king, who caused him to be slain for his treachery, when the beautiful Elfrida became the wife of Edgar. p. 975. The quiet enjoyed in England during his reign procured him the name of the Peaceable. (See ELFRIDA.)

Peaceable. (See ELFRIDA.)
EDGAR, king of Scotland in 1093, was the son of Malcolm III., by the sister of Edgar Atheling of England. His sister married Henry I. of England, which circumstance terminated a war which had been raging between the two countries. D. 1107.

EDGEWORTH, Richard Lovell, edg'-werth, an English writer, was designed for the profession of the law; but on the death of his father, in 1769, he relinquished all intention of carrying out this design, and went to Ireland, in 1782, to dedicate the remainder of his life to the improvement of his estate and the education of his children. To this duty he nobly devoted himself, and reared a large family by four diffehimself, and reared a large family by four unc-ernet wives, he having been as often married. B. at Bath, 1744; D. at Edgeworthtown, Long-ford, Ireland, 1817. He greatly assisted his celebrated daughter, Maria, in her works, although he himself was by no means "a ready writer." The following, however, appeared in his name: "Poetry Explained," "Rational Primer," "Professional Education," "Speeches in Parliament," and an "Essay on the Conin Parliament," and an "Essay on the Condour, he received the name of the Magnificant, struction of Roads and Carriages." He was a and was stabled at a feast in Gloucester, in 946,

Edmund and an active magistrate in the neighbourhood

EDGEWORTH, Maria, the daughter of the preceding, a fayourite modern English authoress, was the offspring of his first marriage, and resided in England till 1782. She then removed to Ireland, where her education proceeded under the direction of her father, and in 1793 they published a joint production on "Practical Educa-tion." "Early Lessons" was the next production, which attained great popularity. In 1802 appeared the "Essay on Irish Bulls," another joint production; but it is not on these that the fame of Miss Edgeworth rests, but on the excellent series of novels, which already had begun to appear under her sole name; the first of these was "Castle Rackrent," which was issued in 1801, and which indicated the possession of powers of a very rare character. In all her powers of a very rare character. In an ner novels her pen was devoted, not only to make us feel what is good, but to make us do what is good. This is especially the case in her "Belinda," "Leonora." "The Modern Grischlar, "Moral Tales," "Doplan Tales," "Tales of Fashhonable Life," in short, in all that she has """. written. Her last and most popular novel was "Helen," which appeared in 1834, and which was closed by the juvenile story of "Orlandino," It was to her "rich humour, pathetic tenderness, and admirable tact" in the delineation of her Irish characters, that Sir Walter Scott was indebted for the suggestion to do something in indebted for the suggestion to do something in a similar way for his own country. He accordingly began the Waverley novels, keeping, no doubt, the productions of Miss Edgeworth clearly in his view. As a general estimate of her gening, the following discriminating criticism of Lord Jeffrey is as just as it is happily expressed.—"The writings of Miss Edgeworth exhibit so simpling a minon of sober sense and inexhaustible invention - so minute a know-ledge of all that distinguishes manners, or touches on happiness, in every condition of hu-man fortune—and so just an estimate, both of the real sources of enjoyment, and of the illusions by which they are so often obstructed that it cannot be thought wonderful, that we should separate her from the ordinary manufacturer of novels, and speak of her tales as works of more serious importance than much of the true history and solemn philosophy that come daily under our inspection. It is impossible, we think, to read ten pages in any of her writings, without feeling not only that the ner witnings winners remain into my taker ane whole, but that every part of them, was intended to do good." a. at large Matter Hatch, Reading, 1767; a. at Lalge worth town, Long frond, Freland, 1816. BENTATUREN, DIMON (6.66 ALTREND, PITMEN), EDWATTER, S. a. ed-mand, Became & Ring of the Last Angle dealth, by the worth of the Matter and Company of the Matter and war and Hubba, whose propositions for peace, war and futures, whose propositions to peace, from their humiliating conditions, he had rejected. "His body," Fuller says, "was placed in a goodly shrine, richly adorned with levels and precious stones, at Bury, in Suffolk." He was canonized, and Bury St. Edmund's was so named from its being the place of his burial.

EDMUND I., king of England, son of Edward the Elder, succeeded his brother Athelstanin 940. He subdued Mercia, Northumberland, and Cumberland. For his personal elegance and splen-dour, he received the name of the Magnificant, son of Endrice, whom he succeeded on the English throne in 1016. A fierce war raged between him and Canute, king of Deymork, and he ultimately was forced to agree to a partici-pation of the kingdom with the Danish prince. Assassinated in 1017, at Oxford, by two of his chamberlains. (See Canute.)

Edmund

EDRED, ed-red, king of the Angle-Saxons, was the youngest son of Edward the Elder, and succeeded his brother Edmand in 946. He repressed several revolts of the Danes, and de-feated Malcolm, king of Scotland. D. 955, leaving the throne to his nephew, Edwy.

Edussi, ed-re-se an Arabian writer on geography, who produced a work on that science, which has been translated into several languages. In 1836-1940, it was published in France, and formed the fifth and sixth volumes of the "Reformed the fifth and sixfi volumes of the "Re-ceedi de Vorgaçes et de Memoires" of the French Geographical Society. n. 1039; n. 1164. Enwars the Eider, de'Arand, son of Alfred the Great, succeeded his father in 901. He subdued Northumbria and East Anglia, and extended his dominions as far as Scotland.

EDWARD the Martyr, son of Edgar the Great, king of England, was murdered by order of his stepmother Elfrida, at Corfe Castle. His youth and innocence, coupled with his tragical death. procured for him the designation of the Martyr. B. 961; assassinated 978, after a reign of three years.

EDWARD, king of England, called the Con-fessor, was the son of Ethelred. He succeeded Hardicanute in 1042, and was crowned at Westminster on Easter-day. Having been brought up in Normandy, he brought over many of the natives of that country, whom he preferred at his court, which gave great disgust to his Saxon subjects. Notwithstanding this, he kept pos-session of his throne, and framed a code which is supposed to be the origin of the common law of England. He abolished the tax of Danegelt, was the first who pretended to cure the king's evil by touch, and restored Malcolm to the throne of Scotland, which had been usurped by Macbeth. He consulted William of Normandy about the choice of a successor, and this after-wards furnished that prince with a plea for in-vading the kingdom after the death of Edward, in 1066, when he was buried in Westminster Abbey. B. at Islip, Oxfordshire, about 1005.

EDWARD I., king of England, surnamed Long-shanks, succeeded his father, Henry III., in 1272. At the time of his father's death he was in Palestine, fighting against the Saracens for the recovery of Jerusalem, and when he re-turned, completed the conquest of Wales and subdued Scotland. To preserve Wales, he caused studied Sciuland. To preserve water, he caused his son, who was horn in Caernaryon, to be called the "Prioce of Wales," which, ever since, has continued to be the title of the eldest son of the king of England. In endeavouring to break the spirit of the Scotch, he was unsuccessful, the partiotism of Wallace and his followers conpletely baffling his attempts at the entire subpietely baining his accomples as one entire subjugation of that people. B. at Westminster, 1239; D. at Carlisle, on his way to Scotland, 1807—Whilst in the Holy Land, Eleanor, the wife of this sovereign, is said to have saved his life by Edward by Leolf, a robber, whom he had caused to be banished.

EDMUND II., commonly known as Ironside, son of Ethelred, whom he succeeded on the which he framed cattle him to the name of the English Justinian, (See HENRY III., and MONT-FORT, Simon de.)

EDWARD II., the son of the above, was created Prince of Wales in 1284, and after his accession to the throne, suffered himself to be governed by his favourites, Gaveston and the Despensers, which occasioned the barons to rise against him. In his reign the battle of Bannockburn was fought near Stirling, in Scotland, which restored to that country whatever she had lost of her independence in the previous reign. In 1327 he was deposed by his subjects, and his crown conferred on his son, when he was confined in Berkeley Castle, Gloucestershire, where he was murdered in 1327. B. at Caernarvon, 1284.

EDWARD III. was the son and successor of the above, and ascended the throne when about the above, and ascended the throne when mount fourteen years of age. His reign was active and glorious. He obliged the Scots to acknowledge Edward Baliol for their king, who did him homage for his crown. This was the result of the battle of Halidon Hill, in which the Scots were defeated, and had 14,000 men slain. next laid claim to the crown of France, and gained the battles of Cressy and Poietiers. In the first was defeated Philip of Valois, and in the last king John, who was taken prisoner, and sent to England. He also defeated the French in a naval engagement off the coast of Flanders. which is the first sea fight on record between the English and the French. His queen also, about the same time, defeated David Bruce, king of Scotland, and took him prisoner. He afterwards reduced Calais, and peopled it with atterwards reduced canns, and proposed a value English. B. at Windsor, 1312; b. at East Sheen, near Richmond, Surrey, 1377. In this reign Chaucer, the father of English poetry, lived; the order of the Garler was instituted; the art of weaving cloth introduced from Flanders; gunpowder invented; and cannon first used at ganpowder inveneury and cannon mess used at Cressy. As his gallant son, Edward the Black Prince, died before him, he was succeeded by his prandson, Richard II. (See EDWARD, Prince of Wales, etc.) EDWARD IV. was the eldest son of Richard, duke of York, and disputed the crown with Henry VI., whom he succeeded in 1461. He married Lady Elizabeth Grey, whose husband had fallen, as an adherent of the house of Lancaster, and whose beauty, whilst pleading for the restoration of her husband's lands, won the heart of the king. This marriage so disgusted the earl of Warwick, commonly called the Kingmaker, that he joined the Lancastrian party, and, in 1469, defeated Edward's forces near Banbury. Soon afterwards Edward was taken prisoner, but, effecting his escape, he put him-self at the head of his followers, and obtained a victory over Warwick, near Stamford. earl fled to France, whence he returned with a supply of troops, and proclaimed Henry VI., who had been confined in the Tower for six years, and set bim on the throne. This event procured for Warwick the title of "king-maker." Edward had fled to Holland, but soon returned with assistance, and marched to London, where he took Henry prisoner. Shortly afterwards, he met Warwick on the field of battle at Barnet, whilst a the long leading meaning in the or in the wawkes of the ment of beated and the sucking the poison from a wound which he received from a wengeful assassin. She was the cured Edward the quiet possession of the throne,

Edward

In Edward's reign the art of printing was introduced into England.

EDWARD V., king of England, son of the above, succeeded his father at the age of twelve. Richard, duke of Gloucester, his uncle, after-wards Richard III., took the guardianship of both him and his brother, and placed them in both nim and nis brother, and placed them in the Tower, where they were smothered in their beds, in 1433. n. in the sanctuary of Westmin-ster Abbey, 1470. The bodies of these princes were discovered in 1674, and removed, by com-mand of Charles II., to Westminster Abbey. (See RICHARD III.)

EDWARD VI., the son of Henry VIII., by Jane Seymour, ascended the throne in 1547, at the age of ten years. He was a prince of promising talents, virtue, and piety. The Reformation, begun by his father, was energetically carried on by Archbishop Cranmer throughout his reign. His aversion to popery was so great, that he signed a will, in which he see aside his that no signed a will, in which no see aside his sisters, Mary and Elizabeth, from the succession, lest they should favour the Roman Catholics, and settled the crown on Lady Jane Grey, n. at Hampton Court, 1267; p. at Greenwich, 1565. He founded the hospitals of Christ Christophewell, St. Thomas, and a number of grammar-schools, which are still popularly brown as King Edwards Schools. known as King Edward's Schools.

D. Prince of Wales, commonly called the Black Prince, from the colour of his armour, was the eldest son of Edward III. He accompanied his father to France in his 16th year, and distinguished himself there above all the warriors of his age; particularly at the battle of Créey, or Cressy, where he captured the stan-dard of the king of Bohemia, embroidered with dard of the king of Bohemia, embroidered with three ostrich feathers, and the motor Lot Alem, "I serve." Those he adopted himself; and from that time to the present, they have con-tinued to be the crest and the motor of the princes of Wales. He also gained the victory of Poictiers, where he took prisoners John, king of France, and his son, whom he brought captives to London. Their entry into the capi-tal took place in 1356. In 1361 he married the denother of Edmund earl of Kent, budder to tal took place in 1856. In 1861 ne married the daughter of Edward, earl of Kent, brother to Edward II., a wildow by whom he had a son, who was afterwards Richard II. By the peace of Bretigny, he obtained the principality of Aquitaine and Gascony, taking up his residence at Bordeaux. Here he gare an asplunt to Peter the Cruel, king of Castile, who had been direct from his through by his harder Henry. Apren 200 Marchael Bretan 1860 Marchael Peter Serve Northern Peters. of Trastamare. Peter was restored to his kingdom by Edward; but the Castilian b. haved to him with the basest incratifular, retaining to find supplies for the English troops, and, it is alleged, even causing poten to be administered to the English hero, from the effects of which he never recovered. B. at Woodstock, 1330; D. 1376.

EDWARD PLANTAGEMEN, the son of George, duke of Clarence, brother of Edward IV. and Richard III., by Isabella, daughter of the fa-mous earl of Warwick, the "king-maker," was allowed by his uncle Edward to take the title of and Warwick, but refused the dukedom of Clarence. When Henry VII. attained to the throne, he confined the young earl in the Tower, and in 1486 Lambert Simnel assumed his name, and got up a party to maintain his right to the Tower, where he was involved in a plot Ly Per-Theory where he was involved in a post of rec-lin Warbeck, who had personated Richard, dake of York second son of Edward IV., and both were in consequence executed in 1994. This unfortunate prince was of weak intellect, and was left by Henry VII. almost totally un-

educati

Ebwands, Richard, ed-wards, an early Eng-lish dramatic writer, was appointed by Que.n Elizabeth in 1561 master of the singing boys of Beved from 179).

Ebwams, Tumes, a finious polamical di-vine, who warned both with Epic opaliant and Independents, and withdrew into Holland when the latter party calculation secondary, having portiously harded against the "Scharles," as he called those, a work called "Gauerman," which exhibits a curious plasme of the re-ference minimizing of the five. In the horse gious animosities of the time. He belonged to grous animostics of the time. He dones to the Presbyterian party, and was suttled in rant of all copy ation to the tenets of his— He was educated to Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A., and died in exile in 1017. Enwanns, George, an enthant English naturalist, who, after traveling some time abroad, wheread, and became librarian of the College of Physicians, London. He published a "History" of Birds," 7 vols. 4to; "Gleanings of Natural History" a vols. 4to; and a valume of #Ps. Engeleans, London. He published a "History of Birds," 7 vols. 4to; "Gleanings of Natural History," 3 vols. 4to; and a volume of "Essays," Svo. E. at West Ham, Essex, 1693; D. 1773.

, Thomas, an English divine, who in 1755, printed a translation of the Psalms, and afterwards was chosen master of the grammarafterwards was chosen master of the grammar-school at Coveniry, and presented to the rectory of St. John Daptiss in that city. In 1739 he published the "Doctrine of Irresistible Grace proved to have no Foundation in the New Tes-tament;" and, in 1782, defended Bishop Hare's system of the Hebrew metre against Dr. Lowth, in which he failed. In 1766 he took his doctor's degree, and, four years later, obtained the living of Nuneaton, in Warwickshire, where he died in 1785. p. at Coventry, 1729. Besides the above works, he published selections from Theoritus, with notes, and some other pieces.

EDWARDS, William, an architect who acquired great skill in bridge-building. He was only a common mason, but by dint of genius and skill, he rose to distinction in the line mentioned. His first performance was on the river Tanfe, which brought him into notice, and gave him opportunities for displaying his powers, which he did in numerous other structures. B. in

Glamorganshire, 1719; D. 1789.

EDWARDS, Jonathan, an American divine, who, in 1767, was chosen president of the col-lege of New Jersey, where he died in 1758. B. at Windsor, Connecticut, 1703. Mr. Edwards was an acute metaphysician, but a rigid Calvinist. He wrote "A Treatise concerninisty affections," An Inquiry into the I prevailing Notion of that Freedom of Will which is supposed to be Essential to Moral Agency;" "The Great Doctrine of Original Sin Defended," "Sermons," &c. &c. EDWARDS, Bryan, an ingenious writer, who became a member of the Assembly of Jamaica,

Edwards

W. Indies, where he delivered a speech against Mr. Wilberforce's proposition concerning the slave trade, in 1789. He atterwards settled in England, and became member of Parliament for Grampound, in Cornwall. He made his first speech in defence of his countrymen against the advocates for the abolition of slavery, and distinguished himself by a blunt roughness of manner, blended with sound sense and judgmanner, blended with sound sense and judg-ment. B. in Wiltshire, 1743; D. 1800. He wrote "The History, Civil and Commercial, of the British Colonies in the West Indies," 2 vols. 4to; "The Proceedings of the Governor and Assembly of Jamaica in regard to the Marcon Negroes;" and "An Historical Survey of the French Colony in the Island of St. Domingo," 8vo.

EDWANDES, Sir Herbert Benjamin, K.C.B., a gallant British officer, who, entering the ser-vice of the East India Company in 1840, soon became noted for his talents, which first particularly displayed themselves in a series of letters in an Indian newspaper, from "Brahminee Bull in India to his cousin John Bull in Eng-land." He was present as aide-de-camp to Sir Hugh Gough at the battles of Moodkee and Sobraon. He afterwards served against the Affghans in the Bunnoo Valley, of the operations in which he published an account; but his principal achievement was against Dewan Moolraj of Mooltan, who, having rebelled against the Sikh government at Luhore, Lieut. Edwardes collected a Sikh force, defeated Moolraj in two pitched battles, and shut him up in the fortress of Mooltan till a regular army could be brought against him. The siege of the robel governor's stronghold shortly followed by a British force under General Whish, and Moolraj surrendered on Jan. 22, 1849, just as a breach in the walls was about to be stormed. For his services in this war in the course of which he lost his right hand by the accidental explosion of a pistol, Lieut. Edwardes was raised to a brevet majority, and by special statute was created an extra companion of the Bath. He subsequently served under Sir Henry Lawrence in the Punjaub, and was of essential service in raising troops to aid in the suppression of the great Indian rebellion of 1857, for which he was made a K.C.B. in 1860, and was promoted to brevet colonel in 1861. B. at Frodesley rectory, Shropshire, in 1819; D. December 23, 1868.

EDWY, ed'-we, king of England, son of Edmund I., succeeded his uncle Edred in 956. He married Elgiva, his relation within the prohibited degrees of kindred, which proved the ruin of both. Archbishop 0do seized the queen, and having branded her in the face with a hot iron, sent her to Ireland, after which she was put to a cruel death. Edwy was driven from the throne, and died under excommunication in 958; B. 939.

EGBERT, og'-bert, the first king of all Eng-land, and the last of the Saxon heptarehy, was proclaimed king of Wessex in 800, and, in 827, united all the other kingdoms under him. He distinguished himself against the Danes. D. 837.

Ehrenberg

1721, and resided there for fifteen years, labouring to convert the inhabitants. B. 1686; p. 1758. Egode wrote a description of Greenland. 1758. Egole wrote a description of Greenland, published first in 1729—1718 son Paul became assistant to his father, and afterwards bishop of Greenland. He published a new edition of his father's book, and a journal respecting Greenland. n. 1708; n. 1789.

Borston, Thomas, edf-ev-ton, lord chancellor of England in the reign of James 1, received his education at Oxford, whence he removed to Lincoln's lum, and in 1562, received the honour of knighthood, and was made at temper.comcall. Soon afterwards he become torney-general. Soon afterwards he became torney-general. Soon alterwards me became master of the rolls, which was followed by the office of lord keeper. In 1603 he was made Baron Ellesmere and lord chancellor. In 1616 he was created Viscount Brackley. B. about ne was created viscount brackley. B. ndout 1540; p. 1817. After his death were published his "Privileges and Prerogatives of the High Court of Chancery," and his "Observations concerning the Office of Lord Chancellor."

Egg, Augustus, R.A., eg, a painter, who first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1838, and was elected an associate in 1848. His forte lay in depicting scenic and humorous subjects, Shakspeare in his lighter moods and Le Sage furnishing him with themes. He also executed some historical pieces; but even in these his sense of the humorous exhibits itself. Mr. Egg sense of the numerous extinues users. MIL 1253 was entrusted with the arrangement of the gallery of modern paintings at the Manchester Art Treasures Exhibition in 1857; and exhibited at the Royal Academy, in 1859, a triptych, which was considered to be superior to anything he had previously produced. His other works are numerous and much esteemed. He was

are numerous and much esteemed. He was made R.A. in 1800. p. 1816; p. 1863. EGINHARD, all-gis-hard, a German historian at the court of Charlemagne, and appointed secretary to that sovereign, who gave him his daughter Imma in marriage. He afterwards embraced a religious life, and became superintendent of several monasteries. D. about 841. Eginhard wrote a curious "Life of Charlemagne," in elegant Latin; also the "Annals of France from 741 to 829."

EGIL, Scallegrim, ai'-qil, an Iceland poet and warrior of the 10th century, who was in the habit of joining the incursions made by his countrymen into the north of England and Scotland, in one of which he slew a son of Eric of the Bloody Aze, the exiled king of Norway; and being afterwards taken prisoner, was condemned to death, but having delivered extemcommen to death, but having cell-year extension of porniously a poem in praise of Eric, he was pardoned. This poem has been preserved, and is entitled "The Ransom." A Latin version of it was printed in Wormlars "Danish Literary Antiquities," in 1808.

The Advance of the Comment of the Comme

guissied nobleman in Fianders, who served in the armies of Charles V, with great reputation. He was made general of horse by Philip II., and distinguished himself at the battle of St. Quen-tin in 1557. But the duke of Alva, on the pre-tence that he meditated designs in favour of tones that he meditated designs in navour on the prince of orange, caused him, together with count Horn, to be beheaded at Brussels in 1568. B. 1528.—(See Auva, and Motley's "History of the Rise of the Dutch Republic")

ETRENERS, Christian Gottiffe, dar-in-hosiry, a distinguished German microscopist and naturality who made agreed leading a graduation.

ECEDE, Hans, at geed, superintendent of the ralist, who made several scientific expeditions Danish missionaries in Greenland, went, in into various parts of the globe; among which

ELGIN, LORD.

ERASMUS, DESIDERIUS.

DURER, ALBERT.

ELIOT SIR JOHN

Ehret

may be noticed one with Humboldt into the Ural and also the Altai mountains. He wrote largely on his favourite pursuits, and investigated the fossil forms of microscopic organic beings with success. B. at Delitsch, in Prussian Saxony, 1765.

EHBER, George Dionysius, ai'-rait, a botanical painter, a native of Germany, who was employed in 1786 in illustrating the "Hortus Cliffortianus," and afterwards came to England, where he was liberally encouraged, and became a member of the Royal Society. B.1710. p. 1770.

he was liberally encouraged, and became member of the Royal Society. B.17(3) 5.1770. Euronx, Johann Gottfried, the horn, a German profissor of oriental and biblied literature in the university of Göttingen. He filled several important posts, and in 1819 was appointed privy councilitor of justice for the kingdom of Hanover. His writings, illustrative of oriental literature, are numerous, and procured for him areputation of being amongst the most learned and distinguished scholars of Germany. B. at Dorrenzimmern, 1762; p. 1837.—Charles Federick, a son of the preceding, distinguished himself as a jurisconsult. B. at Jene, 1781; p. 1854.

ELBER, Gigot d', dai(l)-bai, the general-inchief of the Vendeaus in the war of the French revolution, was a native of Dresdon, but became naturalized in France, and served some time in the army. He quitted the service, however, in 1783, and retired to Beaupréau, in Anjou. In 1793 he became leader of the royalists in La Vendée. B. 1793; taken and shot, Jan. 2, 1794.

was educated at Eton and Christ Church (Arford, and, in 1841, was returned to parl for East Gloucestershire. Since 1847 he has represented Haddingtonshire. Hewas alord of the treasury under Lord Aberdeen in 1852, and a prominent member of the "Adullamite" party that aided the Tories to throw out Gladstone's Reform Bill in 1866.

Exaxon, el-e-nor, duchess of Guinne, succeeded her father, William IX, at the age of 15 in 1187, and the same year snarried Louis VII, king of France. She accompanied him to the Holy Land, where she is said to have intigued with her uncle, Baymond, prince of Antiock, and a young Turk named Salailin. As sparation ensued between her and her husband, and in 1153 she married the duke of Normandy, afterwards Henry II, king of England, which occasioned a succession of wars between the two kingdoms. Her jealousy of Henry, and subsequent conduct to Fair Rosamond, have afforded a copious subject to poets and romance-writers. She excited her sons to robel against their father, for which she was imprisoned sixteen years. On the accession of Richard I, she was released, and in his absence in the Holy Land, was made regent. D, in 1204, a nun in the abbey of Fondervaulk.

abbey of Fontervault. ELDON, John Scott, earl of, el'-don, after passing through the university of Oxford, entered himself a student of the Middle Temple in 1773, and took his degree of Master of Aris in the following year. After patient and laborious study, he rose into notice, and is 1738 was returned member of parliament for Weobly. In 1878 he was appointed chancellor of the bishopric and county palatine of Durham; and, in the following year, solicitor-general. In 1798 he was made attorner-general, and in 1798 was ruised to the other justiceship, with a seat in the House of Lords, as Baron Eldon. In 1501 hebeame lord chancellor, which office he finally resigned in 1527. In 1521 he had been created Viscount Encombe and Earl of Eldon. 2. at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 1761; p. Jan. 13, 183. ELGIN, Tromas Brace, seventh carl of, et. gin.

Elgin

ELGIN, I Tomas Brace, sevenith cart of, et. gin, netrored the army at an early age, and, in 1.03, accompanied the Prussian army in its operations in Germany. In 1705 he war, made env y extraordinary, and sent to Berlin, and in 1700 dispatched to Constantinople in the same enquity. Here he remained till the French wre expelled from Egypt, in 1820. In 1830 he mede a journey to Atheus, for the purpose of recovering some of her remains of Greadanart, and was so far successful as to make an excellent collection, which, in 1816, was purchased by the government, and placed in the British Museum, where it is known as the "Eigin Marbles."

B. 1766; D. at Paris, 1811.

ELGIN. James Bruce, eighth earl of, was, in 1841, returned member of parliament for Southampton; but on the death of his father in the same year, succeeded to the earldom, and in the following year was appointed governor of the island of Jamaica. In 1846 he became governor-general of Canada, where the character of his policy rendered him an especial favourite, not only with those over whom he had been called to rule, but with the ministers in England. In 1549 he was created an English peer, and in 1854 appointed to the lord-lieutenancy of Fifeshire, Scotland. War having broken out between England and China, lord Elgin was, in 1857, sent out by the British government as plenipotentiary to China, with the view of obtaining satisfactory terms of peace, or, if this could not be done, to prosecute the contest with vigour. The Indian mutiny of the same year, however, prevented him from carrying into effect his instructions so soon as he would otherwise have done; for not only was part of the force destined for China diverted from its route and sent to Calcutta, but he himself left Hong-Kong with all the troops that could be spared, to go to the assistance of Lord Canning. turning to China at the end of the year, he immediately made a demand of redress for injuries sustained by the British, and upon the refusal sustained by the British, and tiple the Steise of the Chinese, through commissioner Feb, to comply, Canton was atticked and captured. Lord Light then, in conjunction with Baron Gros, the French plenipotentiary, determined to proceed with an armed force to the vienity of Pekin, and reached the mouth of the Feilin river, which he found strongly defended by forts on each bank. These being taken by Admiral Sir M. Seymour, the force proceeded to Tien-tsin, and there the plenipotentiaries were met by Chinese commissioners, to adjust the terms of a treaty. After much procrastination, on various pretexts, which were met by Lord Elgin with great determination, the Chinese commissioners agreed to execute a treaty in conformity with the terms proposed to them, and on the 25th June, 1858, this was signed at Tien-tsin. This great point gained, Lord Elgin determined to proceed to Japan, in order to obtain from that government a treaty which would throw open its ports to British commerce, so that its might participate in the advantages possessed by the Dutch. Taking with him a yacat, as a by the Dutch. Taking with him a james, as a present from the queen of England to the emperor of Japan, he reached the port of Nagasaki, and proceeded up the Gulf of Jeddo, beyond where any foreign vessel had hitherto been allowed to pass. After effecting a treaty of commerce between Great Britain and Japan, he returned to England, and took office, in 1539, under Lord Palmerston as postmaster-general. In 1500, in consequence of the Chintre having read to permit the British envoy tolvekin to pass up the Pel-ho, and having fired on the British ships of war when endeavouring to force the passage of the Taku forts, Lord Eight was again sent to China in company with the French plenipotentiary, Baron Gros. His expedition was successfully ended by the capture of the Summer Palace near Pekin, which induced the Chineso ministe, Prince Kung, to promise a strict observance of the treaty of 1588. In 1863 he succeeded Earl Cunning as vicercy of India, but dided the following year at Dhurumsala, in Cashmeter. P. J.S.II.

361

ELTO DE BLATIONT. (See BLAUNONT.)

ELTO DE BLATIONT. (See DELUNONT.)

ELTO J. John, el-yol, a pious divine, called the "Apostle of the Indians," was clunated at Cambridge; but on embreding puritanism, he, in 1831, emigrated to New England, and became paster of a congregation of Independents at Exchange 1831, emigrated to New England, and became pastor of a congregation of Independents at Exchange 1831, emigrated in 1831, emigrated to learn the Indianal panguage, that he might devote himself to the conversion of the natives. In this he met with encourage and obtained a considerable the Bible into their language, and several pieces of practical divinity. B. 1001; p. at Rochury, 1860. Batter says of this divine, "There was no man on earth whom I honoured above him," A handsome memoral, to perjectuate his name, was crected in the "Forest Hills Cemetery," at Rochury.

ELIOTT, or ELLIOT, George Augustus, Lord Heathfield, educated at Leyden and the military school of La Fere, in France. He afterwards entered the Prussian service as a volunteer, and returned to Scotland in 1735. Not long after this, he joined the engineer corps at Woolwich, and obtained an adjutancy in the and troop of horse grenadiers, with which he went to Germany, and was wounded at the hattle of Dettingen. In 1759 he was appointed to raise the 1st regiment of light horse, with which he served on the continent with great reputation. On his recall from Germany, he was sent to the Havannah, in the reduction of which he had an eminent share. At the peace, the king conferred on his regiment the title of royal. In 1775 General Eliott was appointed commander-in-chief in Ireland, whence he re-turned soon after, and was made governor of Gibraltar, for which important post no man could have been better fitted. He was very abstemious, his constant food being vegetables, and his drink water. He never allowed himself more than four hours' sleep at a time, and was so accustomed to hardiness, that it became habitual, and enabled him to defend that important fortress against the formidable operations of the French and Spaniards, 1779-83, with such persevering obstinacy, that the stege of Gibraltar will always stand out as one of the most glorious incidents in military history. On his return to England, he was raised to the peerage by the title of Lord Has raised to the peer-age by the title of Lord Heathfield and Baron Gibraltar. B. in Roxburghshire, Scotland, 1718; D. at Aix-la-Chapelle, 1799. Lord Heath-field married Anne, daughter of Sir Francis Drake, of Devonshire, who died in 1769, leaving one son and a daughter. His remains were brought to England, and buried at Heathfield, in Sussex, where a monument was creeted to his memory.

ELIZABETH, queen of England, was the daughter of Henry VIII. by Anne Boleyn, who was beheaded in 1536. She was educated in the Protestant religion, and, in the reign of her sister Mary, was sent to the Tower, whence sho was afterwards removed to Woodstock, where she was afterwards removed to Woodstock, where she was kept till 1555, and then taken to the royal palace of Hatfield. On the death of her sister, in 1558, she was proclaimed queen, and Philip of Spain, the husband of Mary, made her an of Spain, the Buscand of Mary, made her an offer of marriage, which, after a considerable amount of coquetting, she civilly declined. Now was commenced the restoration of those Now was commenced the restoration of mose religious reforms which had been proscribed in the previous reign, but with that prudence and moderation, which showed how well qualified she was to guide the destinies of the people over whom she had been called to reign in such troublous times. One of her first measures was to send succours to the reforming party in Scotland, which produced the treaty of Edinburgh and the departure of the French from that country. She next gave her assist-ance to the French Huguenots, who put Havre de Grâce into her hands, whilst she continued gradually to tighten the reins of government upon her own Catholic subjects, and such other religionists as would disturb the peace of the state by their zeal and violence. Dudley, earl of Leicester, became her favourite, and had the ambition to aspire to her hand; she, however, preferred to make an apparent effort to unite him to Mary queen of Scots. In 1568 that unfortunate princess fled to England for protection from the religious persecution of her subjects; but being a Catholic, and having offended Elizabeth, she was taken prisoner, and after being kept many years in confinement, was at last beheaded in Fotheringay Castle, Her treatment of the queen of Scots, against whom she would appear to have contracted a feeling of jealousy, is one of the blackest spots in the reign of Elizabeth. She afterwards ondeavoured to clear herself of the odium which the death of Mary raised against her, and caused Davison, her secretary, to be prosecuted for issuing the warrant for the execution; but such conduct only made her guilt more transparent in the eyes of the penetrating and thoughtful. The French and Spaniards having formed a league for the extirpation of heresy, Elizabeth was induced to protect the Protestants; and her assistance was of great effect in bringing about the separation of the United Provinces from the dominion of Philip II. The king of Spain, in return, sent a body of troops to invade Ireland; but they were all cut off by Lord Grey, the deputy. In the mean time, various offers of marriage were made to the queen, the most remarkable of which was that of the duke of Anjou, who came to England for the purpose of espousing her; but after staying some time, and after Elizabeth had taken up the pen to sign the marriage articles, she with-drew her hand, and broke off the alliance. In 1588, Philip of Spain sent against England his famous armada, to which the pope gave the appellation of Invincible. It censisted of 130 vessels, carrying 2,431 pieces of artillery, 4,575 puintals of powder, and was manned by about 27,000 soldiers and seamen. To oppose this formidable force, Elizabeth had 191 ships, which was effected without the shedding of manned by about 18,000 sailors. On this blood. At her accession, she made a yow that occasion the queen distinguished herself by her |no earlier partial punishments should take place in reat presence of mind and inflexible courage.

Elizabeth Elliott

he rode on horseback through the camp at he rode on horseback through the camp at Tibury, and inspired her people with heroism by her deportment and her speeches. The English fleet, however, assisted by the winds, revented the Spaniards from landing, and the bensted armada was destroyed. The duke of Medina-Sidonia, who commanded the Spanish fleet, escaped, and arrived at Santander, in the Bay of Biscay, with no more than 60 sail out of his whole fleet, and these very much shattered. In speaking of this victory, Camden says, "Several speaking or time victory, cannot says, "Several monies were coined; some to commenorate the victory, with a fleet flying with full sails, and this inscription, Veuit, vicit, fugit,—'It came, it saw, it fled; others in honour of the queen, with fireships and a fleet all in confusion, inscribed Dux famina fucti,—'A woman the leader of the exploit,'" In this same year, leaver of the exploit. In this same year, Leivester, her favourite, died, when Robert Devereux, earl of Essex, took his place; but this nobleman, on account of treason, was executed in 1601. After this event Elizabeth seems to have become weary of the world, for she never recovered the shock which the execution never recovered the shock which the careauan of the Earl of Essex gave her. n. at Greenwich, September 7, 1533; n. March 24, 1603. Elizabeth was endeared to her subjects by the glory of her reign, by the wisdom of her measures, and by the frugality of her administration, which rendered the public taxes few and light. She had, however, much vanity, thought herself the most beautiful and accomplished of women, and was, besides, violent and haughty in her temper. She understood the learned languages, and some of her letters and prayers, written with her own hand, are extant.

ELIZABETH, queen of Bohemia, eldest daughter of James I, of England and Anne of Demark, was married in 1613 to Frederick, then Elector Palatine. The Bohemian states, in 1619, offered Frederick their crown, which, unfortunately for himself and his family, he accepted; but after the battle of Prague, in November, 1620, he lost not only Bohemia but his own dominions, and was obliged to fly from one place to another for several years, until he at last found refuge with the Prince of Orange at the Hague. All his wanderings and sufferings were shared by Elizabeth, who, after her ings were shared by Elizaboth, who, after use husband's death in 1803, at the restoration of their son Charles Louis to a portion of his partimony, resided for some tine in the Palatinate, but came to England with her nephew, Charles II., in 1800, where she died in 1803, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Prince Rupert, and of Sophia, wife of Ernest Augustus, Elector of Hanover, and mother of George I.

ELIZABETH of Austria, daughter of the emperor Maximilian II., was married to Charles IX. of France, in 1570. She sent to Margaret, queen of Navarre, two books of her writing; one on the Word of God, and the other a relation of the chief events in France during the time she resided there. B. 1554; D. in a convent, 1592.

ELIZABETH PETROVNA, daughter of the czar Peter the Great, in 1741 usurped the im-perial throne, by deposing the infant Ivan, blood. At her accession, she made a vow that no capital punishments should take place in her reign. But her humanity was at least equivocal, as she afterwards indicted upon the countesses Be tuchef and Lapoulin the punishment of the knout, and had their tongues out out, for betraying some of her secret amours. Though dissolute in her manners, she was extremely superstitions, and perform tions with rigorous exactness. In 1756 she joined Austria and France against Prussia, and died in 1761. B. 1709.

ELLENBOROUGH, Edward Law, first earl of, el'-en-bru(r), was the son of the first Lord Ellen-borough, and in 1819 succeeded to the peerage borough, and in 1913 succeeded to the pecuage as second baron. In 1928 he was made pre-sident of the Board of Control, which office he filled under the administrations of the duke of Wellington and Sir Robert Peel. In 1842 he superseded the earl of Auchland as governor-general of India, and under his government Seinde was annexed to the British crown. La 1843 he was recalled, contrary to the wishes of the government of Sir Robert Peel, who, in 1845, appointed him first lord of the Admiralty. It is the following year, with the fail of the ministry, he resigned his post, and ther that time disanssed in the Hause of Peers the affairs of India with consider the ability. In 1855 he of thing with consider the Derby administration, president of the Board of Control, will be resigned the same year, in the consure inflicted on a severe letter written by him to Lord Canning, in reference to a pro-

by min to Lord Canning, in reservence to a pro-clamation issued by that nobleman while go-vernor-general of India. In 1790.

ELLESATION, Francis Leve-on Gower, Earl of, els'-incer, bro her of the late duke of Sutherland, distinguished himself by several translations from the German, and, from 1828 translations from the German, and, from 152-b to 1831, represented Sitherhundshire in the House of Commons. In 1827 he was appointed one of the lords of the Treasury; in the follow-ing year he became secretary for Ireland, and in 1839, secretary at war. On the death of his father, in 1833, he took the name of Egerton, and as Lord Francis Egerton, represented South Lancashire from 1835 to 1846. In this last year he was created earl of Ellesmere and Viscount Brackley, and in 1849 was elected president of the Asiatic Society. In 1855 he was created a knight of the Garter, and became colonel-commandant of the Lancashire yeomanry cavalry. mandant of the Lancashire yeomany cavalry, Besldes translations, he wrote works, in the form of tragedy, history, and biography, of considerable merit. The gallery of plantings collected by him is, perhaps, the finist psessed by a private individual in the kingdom, n. in London, 1800; p. 1837. ELLOTSON, Dr. John, el-yot-son, a distinguished English physician, who, from the opposition which his views met with in reference to the mesmeric treatment of patients, resigned the mesmeric treatment of patents, resigned some important appointments, and, in 1919, became physician to a mesmeric hospital in London. He was an unfinching advocate of what he deemed the truths of mesmerism; made considerable contributions to medical science, and was follow of the Royal College of Physicians, of the Royal Society, and the founder and president of the London Phrenological and president of the London Phrenosogreal Society. B. 1785; D. 1889. ELLIOTT, Ebenezer, ell-yot, an English poet, who was an iron-merchant at Sheffield, and became famous as a writer of "Rhymes" against would occupy a considerable space; but those the Corn Laws. These first appeared in a local paper, after their author had settled at local paper, after their author had settled at Sheffield, and produced a powerful effect upon all who read them. When they 2-appeared in a single volume, in conjunction with "The Ranten" he no longer sung in comparative closeutity, but commanded a wide circle of admirers. In 1831 a c-llected edition of his works was published. His effusions have pro-cured for him the right of being emphastically the bard of Yorkshire, as he is certainly, like Crabbe, the poet of the poor and of the Corn-law struggle, before that ended in the triumphal achievement of the aspirations of his musc. B. near Rotherham, Yorkshire, 1781; B. near Barnsley, 1849.

ELLIS, John, el'-lis, an English poet, brought up as a serivener, and for many years deputy of his ward, and master of the Seriveners' Com-

"The Surprise, or Gentleman turned Apothe-cary," a tale in Hudibrastle verse; and "A Travesty of the Canto added by Maphæas to the Eneid." B. in Londou, 1693; D. 1791. In reference to this person, Dr. Johnson remarks to Boswell, "It is wonderful what is to be found in London. The most literary conversation that I ever enjoyed, was at the table of Jack Ellis, a money-serivener, behind the Royal Exchange, with whom, at one period, I used to dine,

generally once a week.

generally once a week."

ELLUS, GOORG, one of the authors of the 'Rolliad," to which he contributed "The Birth Apy Ode," "The Ole on Dundas," &c., and was also a writer of the "Probationary Odes," and an acute contribute to the "Anti-Jacobin." His greatest work, however, is his "Specimens of the Early English Poets," Which suggested Southey's "Specimens of the Later kupitsh Poets." He as produced "Specimens of the Early English Romanoes in Metre," which is another excellent work. In 1745; p. 1815. Sit Walter Sout addressed to Ellis the 6th canto of "Marmion," and says, "Ille was the first converser I ever saw. His patience and good-breeding made me often ashamed of myself, breeding made me often ashamed of myself, going off at score upon some favourite topic."

going oif at score upon some favourite topic."
ELLIS, Sir Houry, an English writer, who became connected, as a librarian, with the British Museum in 1803, and, in 1827, was made principal, which office he held till 1856, when he resigned it. During that time he produced many antiquarian works; amongst which was an edition of "Brande's Popular Antiquities," which is highly esteemed. He also publish history, from anterpraha in the British Museum; and from autographs in the British Museum; and, in 1816, wrote the general introduction to the "Doomsday Book," which is considered an able performance. In 1832 he was created a knight of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic order, and, in 1838, was raised to the rank of knight bachelor. B. in London, 1777; D. 1869.

ELLIS, Mrs. Sarah Stickney, the wife of the Reverend William Ellis, officially connected with the London Missionary Society, was one of the most fruitful writers of her time. As a poetess she received well deserved praise, whilst, as a prose writer, she held a highly respectable rank, especially among those whose productions have made in 1745, under the auspices of Prince a special reference to the social condition of Charles Edward, who made him captain of the women. A bare enumeration of her works second troop of his life guards. Balmerino was 384 would occupy a considerable space; but those which are, perhaps, best known to the public, may be specified as suggestive of the moral tone of her works. "The Wives of England," "The Mothers of England," "Look to the End," &c. All these have, more or less, a character of practical good, nave, more or less, a character of practical good, conveying, in a meek and modest spirit, the best advice, and having in view the special improvement and edification of her own sex. B. about 1812.

ELLISTON, Robert William, el'-lis-ton, a cele-brated English actor, who was esteemed the best comedian of his time. "The Venetian Outlaw" was the only literary work he produced. B. in London, 1774; D. 1831.

ELLWOOD, Thomas, el'-wood, was bred in the Church of England, but was converted to Quakerism, through which he lost the favour of his father. He became reader to Milton, sufhas hatter. He became reduce to altern, sur-fered imprisonment for his profession, and wrote a number of books in its defence. He also edited George Fox's "Journal," and published a "History of the Old and New Testament;" a sacred poem on the life of David, &c. B. 1632; D. 1713. A casual remark of Ellwood's to Milton, suggested to the latter the idea of writing the "Paradise Regained."

ELMES, James, elms, was brought up for an architect, but became rather an expounder than a professor of the science in the pursuit of which a professor of the scenece in the pursuu or writer, the began life. He wrote largely on architecture, the fine arts, and edited "Elimer's Quarterly Roview," to which Haydon contributed. He also produced a "General and Bibliographical Dictionary," and contributed to "Encyclopædia Metropolitana." E. in London, "Exceptionædia Metropolitana." E. in London, 1782.

ELMORE, Alfred, A.R.A., ell-mor, an Irish artist, whose pictures of the "Crucifixion" and the "Martyrdom of Thomas a Beeket," brought him prominently into notice in 1840; after which time he became a pretty regular contri-butor to the walls of the Royal Academy. His works are numerous; among which we may specify "The Inventor of the Stocking-loom," as, perhaps, one of the best known. B. at Clonakilty, Cork, 1815.

ELMSLEY, Peter, elms'-le, an eminent littérateur, and early contributor to the "Edinburgh Review," and also to the "Quarterly Review," on literary subjects. He became Camden professor of modern history at the university of fessor of modern misory as the automospy Oxford, and was, besides, principal of St. Alban's Hall. As a Greek scholar, he was highly dis-tinguished. a in London, 1778; D. 1825.

ELPHINSTONE, William el-finstone, a bishop of Aberdeen, who founded King's College, in the University of Aberdeen. He was also the principal means of establishing the Grayfriars' convent and the chapel royal at Stirling. B. at Glasgow, in 1431 or 1437; D. at Edinburgh, 1514.

ELPHINSTONE, Arthur, Lord Balmerino, during the reign of Queen Anne had a company in Lord Shannon's regiment; but joining in Mar's rebellion in 1715, fought at Sheriffmuir, and, in consequence of the defeat of the partisans of the Pretender, was compelled to fly to France, in the army of which country he served for some time, but returned to England in 1733. He again embarked in the attempt to restore the Stuarts taken prisoner at the battle of Culloden, was taken prisoner as the basile of Officier, was committed to the Tower, brought to trial in Westminster Hall, July 29th, 1746, along with Lords Kilmarnock and Cromarty, condemned, and executed on Tower-hill, on the 18th of the and executed on lower-mit, on the 18th of the following month. B. 1688.

Elphinstone

Emerson

ELPHINSTONE, George Keith, Viscount. (See Keith, Viscount.)

ELPHINSTONE, James, a native of Edinburgh, who spent his life in attempting to effect what he called a reformation in the orthography of the English language, the orthography of the English language, on the principle of spelling all words according to their pronunciation—an attempt in which he of course failed, but the idea has again been revived by the Pitmans of Bath, under the name of phonography. This effort is not likely to be more successful than that of Elphinstone, who wrote several works on the subject, and wasted his time, energies, and substance in vain. B. 1721; D. 1809. ELPHINSTONE, the Honourable Mountstuart joined the Bengal civil service at the age of 18, and was an attaché to the political resident at the court of the Peishwah, adoptive father of Nana Sahib, the Cawapore slaughterer, when the duke of Welling on visited it at the commencement of the nineteenth century. He then became attached to the duke's suite, and acted as his aide-de-camp at the battle of Assaye. He was afterwards resident at Nagpore, envoy to Cabul, and, in 1816, when the marguis of Hast-Caout, and, in 1916, when the harques of the ings took the command of the armies of the three presidencies against the confederated Mahratta powers, of which the Peishwah was the chief, Mr. Elphinstone was the British representative at his court, and penetrated the inmost soul of the wily, treacherous chief, although the latter had succeeded in making Sir John Malcolm believe that he was a faithful ally of the English. In the course of a few weeks, Elphinstone's opinion of the Peishwah was verified to himself by his being burnt out of his own ambassadorial dwelling by the emissaries of this friend; and he reached the British camp with nothing except the horse he rode camp with nothing except the noise he rouse and the clothes he wore. In 1820 he became governor of Bombay, to which presidency the Peishwah's country was attached, and during the seven years he ruled Western India, the "Elphinstone Code" became law, and for its brevity, its completeness, its clearness, its en-lightened provisions, might be compared to the "Code Napoléon," in imitation of which its leaves were coloured. The education of the upper classes was commenced, and, on the principles he advocated, extended itself far and wide among the natives. At the close of his administration, in 1827, he left India, when, in addition to the presentation of addresses from all classes, to the presentation of addresses from all classes, a college, called after him, was established by the natives; a statue of him by Chantrey was erected, and other substantial tokens of respect and affection were offered. After his arrival in England, he produced his "History of India." It is said he was subsequently offered the peerage twice, with the high offices of governor-general of India and of Canada. On her majestry accession, a deputation of the directors of the late East India Company waited the peerage to the company waited of the company of the company waited the peerage of the peerage of the company waited the peerage of t upon him to ask him to accept the order of the Bath, and a seat in the privy council. Other honours, which most men esteem and covet were also offered, and in turn declined. D.

ELSYNGE, Henri, ec-sinje, clork of the House of Commons, was remarkable for his skill and tact in conducting the business of the House, and it was said in consequence that more respect was paid to his stool than to the speaker's chair. He rest med his place, which had been procured for him by ar hhishop Laud, in 1613, procured for him by ar history hand, in 1648, rather than, as he privately stated, have any hand in the king's death. He wrote a very useful work, entitled "The Ancient Method and Manner of Holding Parliaments in England Mainer of hooling Parlaments in England, which was published in 1933, and several times reprinted. He also left in MS. "A Tract Concerning the Proceedings in Parliament," which has notyet been printed. It is in Lincoln's Inn library. B. at Battersea, 1598; p. 1654. ELWES, John, el'-wes, an extraordinary miser, whose family name was Mezgot, which he altered, in pursuance of the will of Sir Harvey Elwes, his uncle, who left him at least $250.000. At this time, he was possessed of nearly as much of his own, and was in the habit of attending the most noted gaming-houses. After sitting up a whole night at play, he would proceed to Smithfield to meet his cattle, which were coming to market, from his seat in Essex, and there stand disputing with a butcher for stand uspaning with a catcher for a shilling. If the cattle did not arrive, he would walk on to meet them. More than once, he walked, without stopping, the whole way to his farm, which was 17 miles from London. He would walk in the rain in London sooner than pay a shilling for a coach; sit in wet clothes to save the expense of a fire; eat his provisions in the last stage of patrefaction, and he once wore awig a fortuight which he had picked up in a lane. In 1774 he was chosen knight of the shire for Berkshire, his conduct in Parliament being perfectly independent. B. about 1712; p. 1789, leaving a fortune of half a million sterling, besides entailed estates.

BESIGES entance extracts.

ELZEVIR, el'-z-o-ir, a family of famous printers at Amsterdam and Leyden. There were five of this name,—John, Bonaventure, Abraham, Louis, and Daniel. Louis began to be known at Leyden in 1895, and was the first who made the distinction between the v consonant and the w vowel. Daniel died in 1630. He published, at Amsterdam, in 12mo, 1674, a catalogue of books printed by his family. A particular style of type is called by their name at the present day.

EMANUEL, e-man-u-el, king of Portugal, succeeded John II. in 1495. He restored the nobility to their privileges, and greatly encouraged maritime expeditions, by one of which a new passage to India was discovered by Vasco da Gama, and to Brazil, in 1501, by Cabral. Emanuel also sent an expedition to Africa, and established a commercial intercourse with the kingdom of Congo. D. 1521.

EMBRSON, William, em-er-son, an English mathematician, who began life as aschoolmaster, but quitted that employment, and contented hunself with a small paternal estate. He was a profound mathematician, but of singular habits, vulgar in his manners, fond of low company, and extremely shabby in his dress. He always walked to London when he had anything to publish, and carefully revised every sheet himself. B. at Hurworth, near Darlington, 1701; n. there, 1782. He wrote treatises on Funions, Mechanics, Algebra, Optics, Astronomy, Navi-gation, Arithmetic, a "Commentary on the Prin-cipia of Newton," and several other works.

EMERSON, Ralph Waldo, an American essayist, the son of a Unitarian minister of Boston, U.S., was designed for the same profession. The was designed to the Same processor. The peculiarity of his views, however, led him into other studies, which broke his connexion with the religious body to which he belonged. After publishing several essays or orations, he, in 1849, started a publication called the "Dial," devoted to the discussion of prominent questions in philosophy, history, and literature. It lived for four years, during which period Mr. Emerson kept himself before the public by delivering orations upon popular subjects. In 1844 he published "Lectures on New England Reformers," and subsequently lectured on Sweden-borg, Napoleon, and other eminent men. In 1840 appeared a volume of poems, and in 1849 he visited England, where he delivered a series of lectures, and afterwards published them, under the title of "Representative Men." Soon after, he published "English Traits," embodying some of his observations on English manners, customs, and characteristics. Besides these more special labours, he contributed to various reviews and other periodicals. B. at Boston, U.S., 1803.

EMERY, John, em'-er-e, a comic actor of considerable merit, especially in the delineation of rustic characters, in which line he was very successful on the London stage. He was a native of Sunderland, where he was born in 1777; D. 1822. EMIXX, Thomas, emi-lin, an English Arian divine of high reputation, and remarkable on account of the persecution he suffered for his epitions. He published a book entitled "A lumble Enquiry into the Scripture Account of Jesus Christ," in consequence of which he was accused of blasphemy, tried, condemned, and sentenced to a year's imprisonment; and £1000 fine. The fine was subsequently reduced to £70, and after suffering the year's imprisonment, Emlyn was set at liberty. He was of an amiable disposition, and enjoyed the friendship of Dr. Samuel Clarke, Whiston, and other distinguished men. B. 1663; D. 1743.

1777; D. 1822.

EMIA, cm'-ma, daughter of Richard II., duke of Normandy, and mother of Edward the Con-fessor, king of England. She was first married to Ethelred, who was obliged to flee to Nor-mandy with his sons Alfred and Edward, when the Danes invaded the kingdom. After his death she married Canute. In the reign of her son, the earl of Kent accused her of a too intison, the earl of them accused her of a coomer mate familiarity with her relation, the bishop of Winchester. To prove her innocence, she is said to have walked barefoot over burning ploughshares without being hurt. Lived in the Plugishman sharper of the son of a physician in Dublin, was called to the bar, but did not practise his profession, becoming, instead, one of the active and prominent leaders of the "United Irishmen." He was apprehended by order of the Privy Council, made a full con-fession of his participation in the rebellion of 1798, was kept for some time in confinement, and then set at liberty. He ultimately settled in America, and rose to great eminence at the New York bar. B. 1764; D. 1827.

the rebellion he fled the country, but subsequently returned, and, in 1803, attempting a new duently returned, and, in 1005, accompany a new rising, with very slender means, was appre-hended, tried, condemned, and executed as a traitor. Emmet was full of zeal, enthusiasm, and energy; he also possessed a wonderful power of cloquence, and these qualities, together with his ardent attachment to the daughter of Curran, liave thrown an interest of a peculiar kind around his brief and unhappy career. His memory is still held in much reverence by his countrymen, His memory is who consider him to have been a true and de-It was his attachment to Miss voted patriot. voted patriot. It was his attachment to Miss Curran that led to his tragic end; he might have escaped from the country, but lingered about the residence of the young lady. The correspondence between them became known to her father, who gave information to the attorney her father, who gave unformation to the attorney general, and the apprehension of Emmet with its fatal catastrophe, was the result. More has celebrated this sad story in his song beginning, "She is far from the land where her young hero sleeps." B. 1780; executed, 1808. EMPEDOCUSS, emped-o-blees, a philosopher, poet, and historian of Agrigentum, in Silving adopted the doctrine of the metempsychosis, and words a nem on the system of Prilances.

and wrote a poem on the system of Pythagoras, very much commended. His poetry was bold and animated, and his verses were so universally estcemed, that they were publicly recited at the Olympic games with those of Homer and Hesiod. It is said that his curiosity to view the flames of the crater of Etna proved fatal to him. Some maintain that he wished it to be believed that he was a god, and, that his death might be un-known, he threw himself into the crater, and perished in the flames. His expectations, how-ever, were frustrated by the volcano throwing up one of his sandals, which discovered to the world that Empedocles had perished by fire Others report that he lived to an extreme old age, and that he was drowned in the sea. Lived between 450 and 350 B.C.

between 450 and 505 h.c. EMPSON, Sir Richard, emp'-son, the son of a sieve-maker at Toweester, Northamptonshire, became a favourite with Henry VII., and, on account of his oppressions, rendered himself odious to the nation. He was beheaded with his coadjutor, Dudley, in 1510.

ENGRE, Johann Franz, enk, a German as-tronomer, director of the royal observatory at Berlin. He enlarged the boundaries of astronomical science, and resolved the orbit of the comet called after his name, which was first seen by Pons on the 26th of November 1818. B. at Hamburg, 1791; D. 1865.

ENGELBERGHT, John, en'-gel-breesht, a Lutheran fanatic, who gained the attention of ignorant and vulgar people by pretended intercourse with spirits. He asserted that he had received letters from heaven, and called himself "the mouth of the Lord." He ultimately died neglected and despised, in 1641. B. at Brunswick, 1599.

ENGHELBRECHTSEN, Cornclius, en'-gel-breesht-sen, a German artist, who was the first of bis countrymen who painted in oil, and has been regarded as one of the most eminent limners of his age. B. at Leyden, 1488; D. 1633. ENFIELD, William, en. field, a dissenting minister, who was educated under Dr. Ash-New York har. B. 1764; D. 1827.

EXPERIDD, William, en-ficial, a cussioning Extract, Robert, younger brother of the above, minister, who was elasted under Dr. Ashwas also educated for the legal profession, but worth, at Daventry, and, in 1763, became became involved in the plots of the "United minister of a congregation at Liverpool Irishmen," having acted as secretary to the About 1770 he removed to Warrington, as secret direction of that body. On the failure of tutor in the belles-lettres in the academy

Enghien

Epaminondas

there. During his stay at Warrington, he ublished several works; as the "History of Liverpool," "Institutes of Natural Philo-sophy," &c. In 1785 he undertook the pastoral care of a congregation at Norwich, and coneare of a congregation at norwich, and con-tinued there till his death in 1797. B. at Sud-bury, 1741. He is best known as the author of "The Speaker," a school book in general use. He published also a volume of Prayers and Hymns; "Biographical Sermons;" a "History of Philosophy," in 2 vols. 4to; and two volumes EXCHIEN Louis Antoine Henri de Bourbon, Duc d', dong -e-a, son of the duke of Bourbon, and a descendant of the "Great Condé." He entered the army at an early age, and under his grandfather, served in the ranks of the French emigrants against the troops of the French republic. When the corps was disbanded in 1801, the young prince took up his residence at the château of Ettenheim, near the banks of the Rhine, in Baden. To this spot the agents of Napoleon I. came by night, and having seized him in his bed, hurried him to France, where he was tried by a mock tribunal for taking up arms against his country in the time of Robespierre, and condemned. In the night of the 22nd March, 1804, he was shot in the wood of Vincennes; an event which roused the indig-nation of Europe, and excited an interest and sentiment of sorrow wherever it was known.

B. at Chantilly, 1772. ENGLAND, Sir Richard, G.C.B., ing-land, a ENGLAND, or Identify officer, began his cares of distinguished military officer, began his cares in the great war with France, and saw considerable service at Flushing, in Stelly, and in France. In 1832-33 he commanded the troops in Caffraria, and distinguished himself in the in Caffaria, and distinguished athress in the war there in 1355-86. He then went to India, and commanded the column which relieved Candahar in the Afighan war, for his services in which he was made a K.C.B. He com-manded a division in the Crimea in 1854-5, and was present in the battles of the Alma and Inkermann, as well as the unsuccessful attack on the Russian stronghold, in June 1855. Sir Richard returned to England at the close of the latter year, and was nominated G.C.B. He the anter year, and was nonmated G.C.B. He became a general in the army, and colonel of the 41st foot. n. in Canada, 1793. ENNIUS, Q., en!-ne-ns, a Roman poet, who wrote in heroic verse the annals of the Roman republic, and displayed much knowledge of the world in some dramatical and satirical compositions. D. of the gout, contracted by his frequent intoxication, 169 B.C.; B. at Rudier, now Ruge, in Calabria, 239 B.C. Scipio, on his deathbed, ordered his body to be buried by the deathbed, ordered his body to be buried by the side of this poetical friend. Conscious of his merit as the first epic poet of Rome, Ennius bestowed on himself the appellation of the Homer of Latium. Of all his writings, nothing now remains but fragments collected from the quotations of ancient authors.

on the second invasion under Alaric, a number of others flew to the Venetian marshes, and built houses beside that of Entinopus, and this was the origin of the great city of Venice, of which he ray thus be said to have been the founder. His own house Entinopus converted into a churen, which stood on the site of that of San Giacomo, in the Righto, p. about 120 A.p., ENTERCASTALY, Joseph Autoine Bruni d', outr-kas'-to, a famous French admiral, who became, in 1785, commander of the naval forces of his country in the East Indies. In 1791 he was appointed to the command of two frigates destined to search for La Pérouse, and also to explore those coasts which that unfortunate navigator had not reached. In spite of all his endeavours, Entrecasteaux was unable to fulfil but the second part of his instructions. He explored the eastern coast of New Caledonia, the isle of Bougainville, and nearly 1000 miles of the S.W. coast of Australia, besides visiting many points of the Tasmanian scaboard. B. at Aix, 1740; p. at sea, near Java, 1793.-Captain Rossel, who succeeded him, wrote an interest-ing account of the expedition. Boves, Joseph, e-drost, an eminent Hunga-rian politician and little there, who wrote some from pointing and green then, who whose some dramas, and, in 1930, set out upon his travels, and visited England, of whose institutions he formed a high opinion. Some of his works have been translated into English, and are held in high estimation for the talent they display.

B. at Dada, 1813. EPAMINONDAS, e'-pam-t-non'-das, a famous Theban, descended from the aucient kings of Beotia, and celebrated for his private virtues and military accomplishments. His love of truth was so great that he never disgraced him-His love of self by a lie. He formed a sacred and inviolable friendship with Pelopidas, whose life he saved in By his advice, Pelopidas delivered a battle. Thehes from the power of Lacedamon. This was the signal for war. Epaminondas was put at the head of the Theban armies, and defeated the Spartans at the celebrated battle of Leuctra, 371 B.c. Pursuing his victorious career, he en tered the territories of Lacedmmon with 50,000 men, and gained many partisans; but, on his return to Thebes, he was seized as a traitor for violating the laws of his country. In the midst of his successes he had neglected the decree which forbade any citizen to retain the supreme power more than one month, and all his eminent services seemed insufficient to redeem him from death. He bowed to his fate, and only begred of his judges that it might be inscribed on his tomb that he suffered death for saving his country from ruin. This reproach produced such an effect that he was pardoned, and again invested with the sovereign power. He was successful in a war in Thessaly, and assisted the Eleans against the Lacedamonians. The hostile Escans against the Lacetamonans. The nostric armies met near Mantinea, and while Exami-nondas was bravely fighting, he received a fatal wound in the breast. Being informed that the Brotians had gained the victory, he expired, ex-claiming that he died une inquered. Fell in the 48th year of his age, 362 years B.C. B. 411 B.C. The Thebans deeply lamented his death; The Theoans deeply amonted his desth; in him their power was estinguished; for which during his life had they enjoyed freedom and independence among the Grecian states. Epaminondas was frugal as well as virtuous, and indiguantly refused the rich presents which were offered to him by Artaerres, hing of Persia. He is represented by his biographer as an elegant dancer and a skilful musician, accomplishments highly esteemed among his country-

ETHREM, Syrus, ef-rem, an eminent Christian author, and deacon of Edessa, who syrote against the opinions of Sabellius, Arius, the Manicheans, &c., and acquired such reputation that cheans, &c., and acquired such represents the was styled the doctor, and the prophet of the Syrians. His works have been published in various editions, the best being those of Oxford, 1708, folio, and Rome, 1732-1738, tolio, in Syriac, Greek, and Latin. He was a native of Nisibis, in Syria, and died about 378.

EPICHARMUS, ep-i-kar'-mus, a poet and philosopher of the Pythagorean school, and mentioned as being the first writer of comedy. Aristotle attributes to him the invention of the letters θ and χ . B. in Cos, and flourished in the 5th century B.C.

EFFORTUS, ep-ik-té-tus, a Phrygian Stole philosopher, originally the slave of Epaphroditus, the freedman of Mero. Though driven from Rome by Domitian, he returned after that emperor's death, and gained the esteem of Adrian and Marcus Aurelius. He supported the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and declared himself strongly against suicide. B. at Hierapolis, and flourished in the 1st century. His "Enchiridion" is a faithful picture of the Stole philosophy. His style is concise, devoid of all ornament, and full of energy and useful maxims. The emperor Antoninus thanked the gods he could collect from the writings of Epictetus wherewith to conduct life with honour to himself and advantage to his country. His favourite maxim was "Bear and forbear." Into this he resolved every principle of practical morality.

EFICURUS, ep-i-ku'-rus, the founder of a cele-brated sect of philosophers, studied at Samos and Athens, whence he removed, in consequence of the war with Perdiceas, and opened a school, first at Mitylene, and next at Lampsacus. He finally settled at Athens, where he obtained a number of disciples, owing to the pleasantness of his system and his deportment. They lived together, and had all things in common. It is said that he wrote no fewer than 300 volumes. B. about 342 B.C.; D. near Athens, 270 B.C. The system of Epicurus, some think, tends to atheism, by ascribing too little to the Deity, and too much to nature. His doctrine of pleasure being the supreme good, has been much misrepresented and abused; for his own life was irreproachable, and he inculcated virtue as the essence of pleasure. It must be admitted, how-ever, that his system was afterwards grossly perverted from the author's original meaning.

EPIMENIBES, ep.i-men'-i-dees, an epic poet of Crete, contemporary with Solon. He is reek-oned one of the seven wise men, by those who While he exclude Periander from the number. was tending his flocks one day, he entered into a cave, where he fell asleep. His sleep, accord-ing to tradition, continued for fifty-seven years, and when he awoke, he found every object so considerably altered, that he scarcely knew where he was. After death he was revered as a god by the Athenians. Lived between 650 and 550 B.c.

EFINAY, Louise, Madame d', dai-pe'-nai, was the daughter of a gentleman of Flanders, who having been killed in the service of the king of

M. d'Epinay, the son of a rich financier. Her husband, however, treated her cruelly, and she separated from him at an early age, became insoparated from him at an early age, decame in-timate with all the literary persons of note in Paris, especially Rousseau, for whom she formed a warm attachment, and loaded him with giffs, which he repaid by becoming violently attached to her sister-in-law, and violently hostile to her-self. She afterwards became the associate of the famous Grimm, with whom she deposited some memoirs of her life, with fictitious names and which, after Grimm's death, were published with the real names inserted in place of the fictitious ones, under the title of "Memoirs and fictions ones, under the title of "memors and Correspondence of Madame d'Epinay." During her own lifetime she had published "Les Con-versations d'Emilie," which went through several editions, was awarded a prize by the French Academy, in 1783, and has been translated into several languages. Among her other benefacseveral languages. Among her other benefac-tions to Roussean was the cottage in the valley of Montmorency, called the Hermitage, where he occasionally resided, and which was long visited by his admirers with great reverence. n. about 1725; p. 1783.

EPIPHANIUS, ep'-i-fui-ne-us, a bishop of Salamis, active in refuting the writings of Origen; but his compositions are more valuable for the fragments of others which they preserve. than for their own intrinsic merit. D. 403.
EPIPHANIUS, St., a Christian bishop, who wrote in Greek several religious works, the principal of which is the "Panarion," or a treatise on heresies. B. near Eleuthoropolis, in Palestine; D. at sea, on a voyage to Cyprus, EPISCOPIUS, Simon, e-pis-ko'-pe-us, a learned divine, who, in 1612, was chosen divinity professor at Leyden, but met with considerable trouble on account of his being an Arminian. He was the principal of the Arminian remon-strants at the synod of Dort, which assembly deposed him and the other deputies from their ministerial functions, and banished them the republic. He then went to Antwerp, but in 1626 returned to Holland, and became minister to the remonstrants at Rotterdam. In 1634 he removed to Amsterdam, and was chosen rector of the remonstrants' college. B. at Amsterdam, 1583; D. there, 1643. His works make 2 vols.

EPBÉMESNIL, Jas. Duval d', e'-prai-mes-neel a French advocate, who became counsellor of the parliament of Paris, and distinguished himself by his violence during the French revolution. D. on the scaffold with his old antagonist, Chapelier, in 1794. B. at Pondicherry, 1746. On his way to the place of execution, he said to his companion, "We have at this moment a terrible problem to solve; namely, to which of us two the shoutings of the mob are addressed."
He was the author of "Remonstrances," published by the parliament, 1788; "Nullity and Despotism of the Assembly," Svo; "Actual State

Despotism of the assembly, '8vo; "Accus state of France," 1790, 8vo.

Erard, Sebastien, ail-rard, a celebrated French pianoforte-maker, the son of an upholsterer. He early went from the provinces to Paris, and there established a planoforte manufactory, improving considerably all that related to that instrument, as likewise to the harp and organ. He also founded an establishment in London. B. at Strasburg, 1752; D. 1831.

France, a suitable match was found for his Erasmus, Desiderius, e-räs-mus, an illustridaughter, and she was accordingly married to ous Dutch writer, the illegitimate son of one

Gerard, a native of Tergou, by the daughter of Erssmus wrote an admirable dialogue, entitled a physician. Brasmus was called Gerard, which "Cleeronianus," printed in 1523. The same he afterwards altered to the Latin name Desiderins, and the Greek, Ersamus, all signifying Latini Greeking Exprensis Promissione." amiable. At an early age he lost both his His last publication was his "Ecclesiastes, or the derius, and the Greek, Erasmus, all signifying amiable. At an early age he lost both his parents, when his patrimony was left to the parents, when his partitions was left to the care of guardians, who, in order that they themselves might enjoy it, removed him from one convent to another, till at last, in 1486, he took the habit among the canons regular, at Stein, near Tergou. The monastic life being Stein, near Tergou. The monastic life being disagreeable to him, he accepted an invitation from the archbishop of Cambrai to reside with him as his private secretary. During his abode with this prelate, he was ordained a priest; but in 1496 went to Paris, and supported himself by giving private lectures. In 1497 he visited England, and met with a cordial recepvisited England, and met with a cordial recep-tion from the most eminent scholars, and ap-plied himself to the study of the Greek lan-guage, of which he was before ignorant. His first literary works were philological; as his "Adagia," De Copia Verborum," and "De Ratione Conscribend! Epistolas," His "Ada-gia" is a collection of proverbs, commented upon with great learning. In 1503 we find him of Lowerie whose he exited distribute ander at Louvain, where he studied divinity under Adrian Florent, afterwards Adrian VI. The Adrian Florent, atterwards Adrian VI. The next year he published his "Enchiridion Militis Christiani," a book of practical religion. In 1506 he took his doctor's degree at Turin, and went to Bologna, where he continued some time; thence he removed to Venice, and resided with the famous Aldus Manutius. From Venice he proceeded to Padua and Rome, where many offers were made him to settle; but having reoners were made and to settle; out awing re-ceived an invitation from Henry VIII., he set out for England, and arrived there in 1510. He at first lodged with Sir Thomas More, and while there, wrote his "Praise of Folly," designed to show that fools are everywhere to be found, even in "high places," and at the court of Rome. Fisher, bishop of Rochester, now invited him to Cambridge, where he was made Margaret professor of divinity, and Greek pro-fessor. In this seat of learning a lodging was assigned him in Queen's College, in the grounds of which his walk is still shown. In 1514 we of which his walk is sun shown. In 1914 we find him at Bâle, preparing for the press his "New Testament," and "Epistles of Jerome," which were published in 1516. This was the first time the New Testament was printed in Greek; and is Erasmus's greatest work. The Reformation now began under Luther; and though Erasmus approved of his principles and object, he was afraid to irritate the court of A friendly correspondence passed between these two great men; but afterwards a tween these two great her; but ancewards a controversy ensued on free-will, and Luther treated Erasmus as a hypocrite. It is certain that Erasmus approved the Reformation in his heart, but had not courage to express himnis heart, but had not courage to express man-self openly; and the consequence was, that he was disliked by both parties. Indeed, he says of himself, "Even if Luther had spoken every-thing in the most unobjectionable manner, I had no inclination to die for the sake of truth." nad no inclination to die for the sake of trust.

In 1522 appeared his "Colloquies," which gave great offence to the monks, who used to say that "Erasmus laid the egg which Luther hatched." His next controversy was with Scaliger and others, who, in their zeal for the purity of Latin composition, objected to the use of words not in the works of Cicero; whence they were called Ciccronians. Against these pedants inhabitants of Rotterdam still show the house where he was born, and there is a statue erected to his memory in the great square of that city. His works were edited at Leyden in 1703, in 10 volumes folio, by Le Clere, ERASISTRATUS, e-ra-sis'-tra-tus, an ancient high reputation at the court of Seleucus Nicanor, was the first to dis-est human bodies, and has been called the father of anatomical ence. He wrote several works, none of which are extant, except in the form of fragments in Galen and Caelius Aurelianus. He lived to a great age, and ultimately put an end to his life by drinking hemlock, in order to escape the pain caused by a cancer in his foot. Lived in the 4th century, B.c.

BEASTS, Thomas, e-ris-tus, a physician, and the author of several medical works. He is re-membered principally from the religious con-troversy known by his name. His general principle was, that the consures of the hurch, and other inflictions, were not the proper means and other limited may be not the proper means to be adopted for the punishment of crimes. The celebrated Beza was his chief opponent. n. at Baden, Switzerland, 1.22; n. at Bide, 1.53, Exarostrensus, er-afos-the-ness, a native of Cyrene, intrusted with the care of the Alexandrian library. He has been called a second Plato, the cosmographer, and the geometer of the world. He first observed the obliquity of the ecliptic, and discovered the means of measuring the extent and circumference of the globe. Starred himself, after he had lived to his eighty-second year, 195 B.C. He collected the annals of the Egyptian kings by order of one of the Ptolemies.

ERATOSTRATUS, er-a-tos'-tra-tus, an Ephesian, who burnt the famous temple of Diana, the same night that Alexander the Great was born. His object was to transmit his name to posterity by an action so uncommon.

ERCILLA Y ZUNIGA, air-seell-ga e theo'-ne-ga, a Spaniard, who was brought up at the court of Charles V., and joined the expedition against the Arucanians in Chili, S. America. The scenes in which he was engaged suggested the composition of an epic poem, which he produced, and called "La Araucana." He wrote the words have a la Araucana. He whole it on scraps of paper and bits of leather, during those intervals he was enabled to snatch from his military duties. It describes the perils of the contest in which he was engaged with great split in which he was engaged with great spirit and vividness. This poem is considered the first epic in the Spanish language. The author's career was on one occasion nearly brought to a premature end while in the new world. A tournament was being held at the imperial city in that country in honour of the accession of Philip II. to the throne, when a dispute occurred between Ercilla and another Hot blood arose, swords were gentleman. drawn, partisans joined both sides, and a general melle was the result. Don Garcia, the governor, bastily setting the disturbance down as an act of mutiny, condemned both the originators of the quarrel to death. Eroilla was led to the scaffold, everything was ready for the execution, when at the last moment, and barely in time to save his life, the innocence of the poet was dis-covered, and the tragedy averted. He subse-quently took part in an expedition against some rebels in Venezuela, and then returned to repers in venezueia, and then returned to Spain, where he was neglected by his former patron, Philip, and after living for some years in obscurity in Madrid, he died in that city in 1595. B. in 1533, some biographers say in Madrid, others in the town of Bermea, Biscay. The "Araucana" was published in separate portions Araucana was punnsnea in separate portions between 1577 and 1590; and has been intro-duced to English readers by Mr. Hayley, who in his "Essay on Epic Poetry," translated select passages, and gave an analysis of the whole piece.

Firic Errington

Erro, eer'-ik, is the Swedish synonyme for the English Henry. Of this name there are many kings of Sweden and Denmark. The following are the most deserving of notice:-ERIC XIII. of Sweden and VII. of Denmark, who succeeded Margaret in 1412. He mar-ried the daughter of Henry IV. of England, and made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, but was taken prisoner in Syria, and paid a large ransom for his liberty. Soon after his return ransom for his neerly. Soon after his return the Swedes revolted, and were joined by the Danes; on which he withdrew to the isle of Guthland. In 1439 he was formally deposed, and afterwards settled in Pomerania, where he died in 1459. This monarch compiled a "History of Denmark to the Year 1288."

ERIC XIV., son and successor of Gustavus I king of Sweden, made proposals for the hand of Princess Elizabeth, afterwards queen of Eng-land; but being refused, he married the daughter of a peasant. This alienated from him the hearts of his subjects, and, together with his cruelties, occasioned a revolt. He was com-pelled to renounce his throne in 1568, and died in prison, 1578.

ERICSSON, John, er'-ik-son, a Swedish me-chanician, who, early displaying considerable ability, was appointed an engineer cadet, and subsequently entered the army of his country. He was employed in the survey of Northern Sweden, and devoted much of his time to sweden, and devoted much of his time to mechanical speculations, more particularly to his "flame-engine." This was intended to work independently of steam, by condensing flame, and so obtaining the necessary power. Visiting England in 1821, he discovered that when worked by mineral fuel, the experiment failed. In 1829 he competed for the prize offered by the Liverpool and Manchester Railway Company for the best locomotive, and his engine attained a speed of fifty miles an hour. He subsequently removed to the United States, and many useful inventions, developed there, made his name familiar to the world. His made his hame taining to the world. His caloric engine, however, was that which attracted most attention, as likely to supersede the use of steam. It seemed, at first, to meet with some success in England, but was ultimately allowed to drop, Brunel and Faraday deciding against its practicability. A vessel called the Ericsson was, however, built in the United States, and fitted with his caloric engine, and, on her trial ntrip, she made 12 miles an hour. Returning from this, however, a squall overtook her, and she sank. Since that catastrophe, Ericsson's From this, however, a small overtock her, and she sank. Since that catastrophe, Eriesson's salams does not appear to have proceeded civil engineer, and when rallways began to be further. In 1893, be constructed an iron-clad constructed in the north of England, devoted cupola war-ship, called the Monitor, for the himself civility to the department of his profes-

Federal government of America, which was followed by several others on a similar principle. The idea of this voscel, however, Friesson is alleged to have borrowed from the plans of Captain Cowper Coles. of the British navy. B. in Vermeland. Swetch, 1803.

B. in Vermeland. Sweden, 1803.

ERIGENA, John Scotts, ex-ig-ena, a learned Scotchman, who is said to have travelled to Athens, where he acquired the Greek and Oriental languages. He resided many years at the court of Charles the Bald, king of France, with whom he lived on terms of the greatest familiarity. At the request of his patron, he translated the works of Dionysius into Latin, which drew upon him the resentment of the which are upon him the resentment of the pope, to avoid whose fury he field to England. His greatest work was the "Division of Nature, or, the Nature of Things," printed at Oxford in 1681. Some say that he was employed by Alfred in restoring learning at Oxford, and that he kept a school at Malmesbury, where he was murdered by his pupils on account of his sewart. Lived in the 6th century. severity. Lived in the 9th century.

ERINNA, e-rin'-na, a Grecian poetes, who was contemporary with Sappho, and wrote several pieces, fragments of which are extend and were published in the Edinburgh edition of Anacreon of 1754. Flourished 600 3.c.

Erlach, John Louis, air-lak, a noble Swiss, who distinguished himself in the service of Franca, and obtained several victories, for which, on the defection of Turenne, he was made commander-in-chief of the army, by made commander-in-chief of the army, by Louis XIV. B. at Berne, 1695; p. 1650. EBLE, Sir William, evl. an eminent laywer, who represented the city of Oxford from 1837 to 1841, and after a successful career in his profes-sion, became chief justice of the Common Pleas. This office he resigned in 1866. B. 1793.

ERNEST II., Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, er-nest, the brother of the late Prince Consort, noted as the leader of the reform party in Germany. He is an accomplished musician. B. 1819.

He is an accomplished musician. B. 1818. Ernyser, John Augustus, air-mes'-te, a German writer, was in 1742 chosen extraordinary professor of ancient literature at Leipsie, and, in 1766, professor of eloquence. Two years afterwards, he took his doctor's degree, and obtained the divinity chair, which he held with great reputation till his death, in 1781. B. at great reputation.

Tennstadt, 1707.
Enos, 4-vos, a servant, of whom Mark Antony demanded a sword to kill himself. Eros tony demanded a sword to kill himself. Fors produced the instrument, but, instead of giving it to his master, killed himself in his presence. Emostratus. (See Brancostratus.) ERPENIUS, OF ERPEN, Thomas van. er-pen. Learned Dutchman, who was educanted at Ledden, after which he travelled into several control of the contro countries to perfect himself in the oriental languages. He returned to Leyden in 1813, and was chosen professor of the oriental tongues.

B. 1584; D. 1624. He wrote "Grammatica Arabica," "Rudimenta Linguæ Arabicæ," Arabica," "Rudimenta Lingua Arabica," "Pracepta de Lingua Gracovum Communi," "Grammatica Hebrea," "Orationes de Lingu-arum Hebrea atque Arabica Dignitate." Ho also translated several Arabic works into Latin, with annotations, and the New Testament and Pentateuch into Arabic.

ERSKINE, THOMAS BARON.

EXMOUTH, VISCOUNT.

EUGENE (OF SAVOY), PRINCE.

EYRE, EDWARD JOHN.

Erskine

sion connected with them. As no with Mr. Locke, he was engineer to the Glasgow and Greenock railway and dock, the Lancaster and Carlisle, the Caledonian, the East Lancashire, the Scottish Central, Scottish Midland, and Aberdeen railways. About the year 1550 he was, again with Mr. Locke, appointed consultwas, again with far. Locke, appointed consin-ing engineer for the northern division of the London and North-Western railway, and in that capacity constructed many of the paraches and extensions. He was also up to the time of his death engineer-in-chief to the London and South-Western railway. He superintended the construction of the lines connecting that system with Exeter and the West of England. He was, like his partner (Mr. Locke), a strong advocate for economy in the first cost of construction, and the lines executed by him all bear testimony to this. Mr. Errington, at the time of his death, was vice-president of the Society of Civil Engineers. B. at Hull, 1806; D. 1832. EBSKINE, Ebenezer, ers'-kin, the founder of

EBSEXTE, EGENEZE, erg-sin, the founder of the Secession church of Sectional, wrole many sermons and discourses, which, in their day, were highly setemed. "Were I to read in order to refine my tasto," says Hervey, in his "Theoron and Aspasia," "I would prefer lishop Atterbury's sermons, Dates works, or Scol's discourses, but were I to read with a single view to the edification of my heart in true faith, solid comfort, and evangelical holiness, I would have recourse to Mr. Erskine, and take his olumes for my guide, my companion, and my own familiar friend." n. at Dryburgh, Berwickshire, Scotland, 1680; p. 1751.—In his evangelical labours, Ralph, a brother of Mr. Erskine. greatly assisted him, acting with him, and sus-taining him in his great work. He published "Gospel Sonnets," and—

"Employ'd his talents to reclaim the vain."

D. 1685; D. 1752.
ERSKINE, Thomas, Baron, was the third son of the tenth earl of Buchan, and, in his 14th year, entered the navy, in which he served four years. In 1763 he quitted the sea, and entered the army, in which he remained for eight years, when he renounced the profession of war for that of the law. In 1775 he i ccame a student of Lincoln's Inp. and, in 1778, was called to the bar, where his advancement was both rapid and brilliant. In 1783 he became member of par-liament for Ports nouth; but his talents did nament for Forestouth; for installation und here appears to the same advantage as they did at the bar. He, however, became attorney, superfect to the prince of Wales; but, in 1792, was forced to resign the appointment, for determining to defend Thomas Paine when proceeded for the publication of "The Rights of Man." In 1802 Erskine was made chancellor of Man." In 1802 Erskine was made chancellor of the duchy of Cornwall; and, in 1806, when the Grenville ministry was formed, became lord chancellor, being raised to the peerage, with the title of Baron Erskine, of Restormel Castle, in Cornwall. In 1807 he retired from public life, and, in 1815, received the order of the Thistle. and, in 1815, received the order of the Thistic.
In the intervals of his leisure, Lord Eristic wrote a political romanee, called "Armata," a preface to the speeches of Fox, "A View of the Causes and Consequences of the War with France," which passed through numerous editions. His works have been published in 5 vols Svo. B. at Edinburgh, 1750; p. 1823.

"EBSENTH, Henry, brother of the preceding, was blearies, a larger brainer become a member."

was likewise a lawyer, having become a member of the Scottish Faculty of Advocates in 1768.

He was gifted with great oratorical powers, his speeches before the courts and in the General Assembly of the Church having eclipsed those of all his rives and contemporaries. Mr. Erskine was also amous as a wit, and for his love of humorous practical jokes; he was exceedingly popular everywhere, and had the happiness to continue to culoy celebrity and universal favour all his life. When Lord Rockingham's ministry was formed in 17-2, Mr. Ershine was appointed Lord Advocate and entered Purliament; on the accession of Pitt to power, however, he retired, and was then elected dean of Faculty. He was again Lord Advocate in 1800, under the Grenville cabinet; and retired from public life in vind cubine; n. at Edinburgh, 1749; D. 1817. Innumerable anecdotes illustrative of the wit, humour polish, and popularity of "Harry Erskine" are still current in Edinburgh.

ERSKINE, John, a writer on law, was the grandson of Lord Cardross, and cousin-german of Lord Chancellor Erskine. He passed the life of a studious recluse, and there are few incidents in his career to notice. He was a member of the Faculty of Advocates of Edinburgh, having been called to the bar in 1719, but does not appear to have had much practice. In 1737 he appear to nave that much practice. In 1/37 he became professor of Scotch Law in the university of Edinburgh, and in 1751 published "Principles of the Law of Scotland," in one volume, a work remarkable for its lucid arrangement and the clearness and terseness of its expolition of the leading principles of the laws.

It became a leading authority, and passed through several editions. He resigned his profestorial chair in 1760, and employed his time in his retirement in expanding the materials of his "Principles" into a more elaborate work. which he left nearly finished at his death, and which was published in two volumes folio, in 1773, under the title of "An Institute of the Law of Scotland," and has since been many times reprinted, with notes and commentaries, so as to make it harmonise with all recent changes in the law. It has long been, and is enanges in the law. It has long been, and is still, the great standard of Scottish law, and is as firmly established as "Coke upon Littleton," or "Blackstono" in England. Unlike the great English standards, however, it is of little value for its constitutional law, which is slightly treated; and the great changes which have taken place since Erskine's time, have made that portion of his work relating to matters of trade and commerce meagre and out of date; but as to the rights of person and property it is sound and comprehensive, and of great value both to the practical lawyer and to the theoretical student. B. 1695; D. 1785.

ERWIN DE STEINBACH, air-rö, a continental architect, who built Strasburg cathedral, with the exception of the tower, which was not com-pletely finished until the 15th century. B. at Steinbach, Baden; p. 1318.

ERNLEBEN, John Christian Polycarp, ainx'-le-ben, a German naturalist, who studied physic le-ben, a German naturalist, who studied physic at Göttingen, and there gare lectures on the veterinary art and natural history. He also wrote on those subjects. His "Princheles of Natural History," Svo, 1768, is a valuable work, n. at Quedlinburg, 1744; D. 1777. Exycars., Ferdinand de Meneses, Count, air-es-ser-a, a Porteguese historian, who de-voted himself as an able leader at Tanzis n. at 1/sebn. 2144. He words "The Hi

B. at Lisben, 1614. He wrote "The Hi

Tangier," folio, 1723; "History of Portugal," 2 vols. folio; "The Life of John I., King of Portugal," &c.

Portugal," ac.

ENTORIA, Francis Kavier Merses, Count, a descendant of the above, was Iso a soldier and an author. B. at Lisbon, 16/3; b. 17/3.
He wrote on the "Value of the Coins of Portugal," "Reflections on Academical Studies," "Parallels of Illustrious Men and Women, and a translation of the "Henriade."

"Environ, Wolfow non circle-studies of ESCHENBACH, Wolfram von, aish-en-bak, a German troubadour of the middle ages, deemed one of the best poets of his time, adopted a military life, as was customary at the time, but he won more laurels with the lyre than with the sword. He lived principally at the court of Herman, landgrave of Thuringia, and in 1207 won the prize in one of those poetic contests which were common at that time, and have since been celebrated by a modern poet as the "Wars of Wurtzburg." Eschenbach was acquainted with Latin, French, and Provençal, besides his native tongue. His principal poems are the "Titurel" and the "Pareival," or the "History of the Guardians of the San Greal," of which so much Guardians of the san Great, of which so much mention is made in the "Morte d'Arthur." The "Titure!" was printed in 1477; and is contained in Müller's collection of the German poets of the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries. The dates of Eschenbach's birth and death are unknown, but he was living in 1227.

ESPACAC, John Baptist, Baron d', des panyak, a gallant French general, who served with great glory under Marshal Saxe, and wrote a number of books on military art, with a history of the Marshal, in 8 vols. 4to. B. 1713; D. at

Paris, 1783. ESPARTERO, Joaquin Baldomero, ais'-partair o, a modern Spanish general and states-man, though designed, on account of the delicacy of his constitution, for the literary profession, was so captivated by the charms of a military life, that in 1808 he enlisted as a common soldier in an infantry regiment at Seville. He subsein an infantry regiment as sevine. He subsequently entered a military school at Cadiz, where he studied the art of war generally, with the science of engineering and fortification. In 1815 he joined an expedition to Peru, in South America, and there became captain in a regiment. He was now on the way to advancement. From his being successful in no fewer than seventeen consecutive actions, he was raised to the command of a battalion; and, in 1820 and 1822, successively became colonel, brigadier, and chief of the general staff. Subsequently, the successes of Bolivar defeated the efforts and blasted the hopes of the royalist Spanish generals, and Espartero was thrown into prison at Arequipa. From this situation he soon afterwards made his escape, and arrived in Spain in 1825. He now enjoyed repose for a few years, although still following his profession. In 1833 the civil war commenced, when he sought and obtained leave to proceed against Don Carlos. Throughout the stormy period which now ensued, he took a leading part, and rose to the dignity of field marshal and general-in-chief of the army of the North. In 1836 he acted with General Evans in North 16 1830 he seeke with ceneral xvanis the relief of Bilboa, and continued vigorously to oppose the efforts of the Carlists till 1899, when the supremouy of the queen was acknowledged. In that year he was created a grandee of the first class, and duke de la Victoria. In 1841 he became regent of the kingdom, but in 1843 was forced to quit his country, and take refuge in England. He there took up his residence in London, and did not return to Spain till 1847, where he lived for some years in retirement, but in 1854 was again called to assume the reins of government, which he held till 1856, when he

of government, which ho held till 1856, when he was forced to tender his resignation. B. at Granatula, in Ciudad Real, 1792.

ESPEN, Zeger Bernard van, espen, a lewned professor at Louvain, who opposed the formulary and the bull Unigenitus, by which he brought himself into trouble, and went to American Company. fort to avoid his enemies, where he died in 1728. 1646. His works on the canon law were

B. 1646. His works on the canon law were printed at Paris, 4 vols. folio, 1752. ESPER, Johann Friedrich, es'-pair, a naturalist and astronomer, and author of a work entitled "A Method of determining the Orbits of Comets and other Celestial Bodies without astronomical instruments or mathematical cal-culations." He was the first to explore the caverns in the neighbourhood of Bayreuth, and to describe the curious fossil remains which they contain. One of these caverns has been named after him. B. at Drossenfeld. Bayreuth.

1732: p. 1781.

ESPRONCEDA, José de, ais-prone-thai'-da, a Spanish poet of some reputation, but whose political predilections brought him, at an early age, into difficulties with the government of his age, into difficulties with the government of his country. He was twice imprisoned before he was eighteen, and, on the last occasion, fell in love with the daughter of a brother prisoner, when he was shipped to England with some other Spanish refugees. Here he made himself acquainted with the language, and devoted himself to the study of Shakspeare and other poets. In 1830 he took part in the political disturbances In 1830 he took part in the political disturbances in Paris, and fought at the barrieades. On the death of Ferdinand, the king of Spain, he returned to Madrid, and entered the regiment of body-guards of the queen. In 1835 and 1836 he was fighting in defence of the barrieades in the streets of Madrid; and, in 1941, became secretary to the embassy at the Hague. On his return to his country, he became a member of the Cortes, which had long been an object of his most forwart ambition. R. near Almendraleio. most fervent ambition. B. near Almendralejo, Estremadura, 1810; D. at Madrid, 1842. The poetry of Espronceda is estimated highly by his countrymen; but it consists only of a few short effusions, which altogether do not amount to coussins, which attogether do not amount to more than would be comprised in a single vo-lume little larger than the "Vicar of Wakefield." The character of his muse may, in some degree, be indicated by naming a few of the titles of the subjects upon which it was exercised—"The Bergar," "The Executioner," and "The Firster," Essa; André de Montlembert d', de-sud, distinguished French military commander, who ioined the army of Vironne in the first expedi-tion to Naples, and at the battle of Fornovo, in 1495, when only 12 years of age, gave remark-able proofs of valour and coolness. He was present in all the wars waged for some years in Italy between the French and Spaniards, and won so high a name for courage that Francis I. chose him for one of his four companions-inarms as challengers at a tournament held be-tween Ardres and Guines in 1520, the exploits performed on the occasion being always after a performed of the occasion being always after a favourite theme of conversation with the king. In 1543, d'Essé, with a very weak garrison, de-fended Landredies against Charles V. and 80,000 men, and compelled him to raise the siege. 1483; killed at the siege of Terouane, 1568. Essex

Esourros. Henri Alphonse, es'-ke-ros, a talented French writer, formerly representative for the department Saone-et-Loire in the French legislative assembly. He was exiled in 1853 for his opposition to the government of Napoleon III., and, in 1855, came to England, where he has since resided, acting as Examiner to the Military Council of Education. He has written some admirable sketches of English life and character in the Revue des Deux Mondes. I 1814

Essex, Thomas Cromwell, Earl of, es-seks, was the son of a blacksmith at Putney. Early in life he became clerk to the English factory at Antwerp: but, leaving that situation, he went into several countries as the secret emissary of the state. On his return to England, he was taken into the service of Cardinal Wolsey, who obtained him a seat in the House of Commons. where he defended his patron with great spirit, on the fall of the cardinal, Cromwell became the chief adviser of Henry VIII., who gave him several important places. He was very instrumental in the dissolution of the monasteries, and greatly promoted the Reformation. For these services, the title of earl of Essex, with many manors and estates, chiefly the spoils of the Church, were conferred upon him. At length his affairs took an adverse turn. He had been so unfortunate as to advise the marriage of the king with Anne of Cleves, who, not proving agreeable to Henry, that capricious sovereign wreaked his vengeance on the adviser of the marriage, and caused him to be tried for high treason and heresy. To be so accused was certain death. Accordingly, he suffered decapitation on Tower-hill, in 1540. B. at Putney, Surrey, about 1490. He was a man of a liberal mind, and promoted more men of merit while he was in power than any of his predecessors. He left a son, who was created Lord Cromwell; which title continued in the family many years.

ESSEX, Robert Devereux, Earl of, was the son of Walter, earl of Essex, and in 1588 accompanied the earl of Leicester, the favourite of Queen Elizabeth, to Holland, where he behaved with bravery at the battle of Zutphen. On his return to England, he was made master of the horse, and rose rapidly in the royal favour. In 1589, he accompanied Sir Francis Drake and Sir John Norris in an expedition to Portugal, which gave great displeasure to the queen, whose dissatisfaction was further increased by his marrying a daughter of Sir Francis Walsingham and the widow of Sir Philip Sidney. In 1591, he commanded the forces sent to In 1801, he commanded the forces sent for the assistance of Henry IV, of France, but was unsuccessful, and lost his only brother, to whom he was greatly attached. In 1896, he was appointed joint-commander with Lord Howard in an expedition against Spain, where he contributed to the capture of Cadiz, and also to the destruction of fifty-seven ships of war belonging to the enemy. After this, he had the command of a force sent out to intercept the Spanish flort, but nothing was done growth the Spanish ficet; but nothing was done except the taking of Fayal by a separate division of the squadron, commanded by Sir Walter Raleigh; and this occasioned a dispute between him and the earl. In the following year, Esser was made earl-marshal of England, and spoke vehe-mently against a peace with Spain, in opposition neutry against a peace what spain, in opposition to Lord Burleigh, who supported the measure. On the death of that statesman, Essex suc-ceeded him as chancellor of Cambridge; but about this time, at a private council held respecting the appointment of a proper person to govern Ireland, he had the imprudence to oppose her macsty with rudeness; on which she gave him at ix on the ear. The earlinstantly laid his hand on his sword, and swore that he would not have endured such treatment even from her father, and withdrew from the court. At length a reconciliation was effected, and he was sent to Ireland to subdue the province of Ulster, which had risen in rebellion. The ill success which had risen in rebellion. The in success when attended him in this expedition was the true be-ginning of his downfall, as it gave his enemies an opportunity of poisoning the queen's mind against him, with apparent justice, during his absence. On his return to England, however, he met with a better reception than he expected; but, soon after, fell into disgrace, and was imprisoned. In 1600 he regained his liberty; but instead of conducting himself with caution, he instead of conducting influent with caution, he began to vent his indignation in bitter terms, and said that "the queen grew old and cankered, and that her mind was become as crooked as her careas." His enemies having intelligence of his actions and speeches, sent for him to attend the council, which he refused, and began to arm in his own defence. Some blood was shed before he surrendered; on which he was made prisoner, tried, and beheaded, in 1601. n. at Netherwood, Herefordshire, 1567. A story is told of the queen having given Essex, whilst in her favour, a ring, with the assurance that, on his sending it to her at any time when he on this sending it to her at any time which he might be in trouble, he should receive her pardon. This ring, it is said, he gave to the countess of Nottingham, his relation, and the counters of Notingman, his relation, and we wife of his inveterate enemy, the admiral, to carry to the queen; but that lady, in obedience to the commands of her husband, kept it, and the unhappy Essex suffered. On her deathbed the countess is stated to have confessed this fact to Elizabeth, who said, that "God might forgive her, but she never could." The authenticity of this story is doubtful; but it has served to embellish a tragedy called "The Earl of Essex." (See ELIZABETH.)

Fasor

ESSEX, Robert Devereux, Earl of, son of the above, was educated under Sir Henry Savile at Merton College, Oxford, and was restored to his family honours by James I. He married Lady Frances Howard, daughter of the carl of Suffolk; but she, contracting an affection for the royal favourite, Robert Carr, afterwards earl of Somerset, instituted a shameful suit against her husband, and obtained a divorce. In 1620 Essex served under Sir Henry Vere in the Palatinate, and afterwards under Prince Mauricein Holland. On his return to England, he acted as a member of Parliament in opposition to the court; and on the breaking out of the rebellion, had the and on the preasung out of the recenture, man une command of the parliamentary army. He fought against the king at Edgehill, after which he took Reading, raised the sleep of Gloucester, lought in the double battle of Newbury, and succeeded in overing London. In 1644 he marched into the West; but was so completely included in Coursell that he and his markets. inclosed in Cornwall, that he and his principal officers were glad to escape by sea. By the Self-denying ordinance, in 1645, he was deprived of his command, and died the year following. B. 592.

Essex, James, an architect, was the son of a earpenter and builder, of Cambridge, and spe-cially applied himself to reviving the gothic tyle, in which aim, though deficient in clucation and theoretic knowledge, he was very successful. He was entrusted with the repairs of King's College chapel and of the cathedrals of Lincoln and Ely; and wrote some memoirs on architecture, &c., in the "Archieologia." B.

1723; p.1784.

ESTAING, Charles Hector, Count d', des'-tang, a French commander, who served under Count Lally in India, where he was made prisoner by the English; but was released on his parole, which, however, he broke. In the American war he was employed as vice-admiral and general of the French armies, and took the island of Grenada. In 1737 he became member of the Assembly of Notables, and commandant of the national guards at Versailles at the commence-ment of the Revolution. B. in Auvergne, 1729;

ment of the Revolution. B. in auverging, 1229; guilloithed at Paris, 1734.

Estamps, Anne de Plaseleu, duchees d',

Estamps, Anne de Plaseleu, duchees d',

Estamps, Anne de Plaseleu, duchees d',

France. She carried on a correspondence with Charles V. of Spain, and informed him of the state of the armies and the country. By her means Charles was enabled to gain considera-ble advantages, and to humiliate France. After the death of Francis, she retired to her country seat, where she died in 1576.

ESTE, HOUSE OF, one of the oldest historical families of modern Europe, its origin being traced as far back as the 5th century. The last offspring of this house was Maria Beatrice, wife of the archduke Ferdinand of Austria, who died in 1800. Their son, Francis IV., was restored to the Modenese dominions of his maternal ancestors by the treaty of Paris, in 1814. He died in 1846, and was succeeded in his possessions and titles by his son, Francis V., deposed in 1859.

posed in 1889. Estrades, Godfrey, Count d', des'-trad, a French general and statesman, who, in 1661, was sent ambassador to England, and again in 1666, where he strenuously maintained his right of precedence over the Spanish ambassador. The year following he went to Holland, and concluded the treaty of Breda. In 1673 he was at the conference at Nimeguen, and continued to be engaged in politics up to the time

tinued to be engaged in polities up to the time of his death. n. at Agen, 1007; p. 1680. The negotiations of the Count d'Estrades were printed at the Hague in 172; in 9 vols, 12mo.

ESTREES, Francis Annihol d', 168+1/2ni, olive and marshal of France, was educated for the church, and appointed bishop of Laon, which he quitted for a military life. n. 1573; p. at 1/2ns, 1670. He wrote "Memoirs of the Regency of Mary de Mcdicis", and a "Mary de Mcdicis", and a "Mary the Mary the trees, the mistress of Henry IV., was this noble-man's sister; and several of his descendants were distinguished in the military and naval service of France.

ETHELBALD, eth'-el-bald, king of Wessex, was the eldest surviving son of Ethelwolf. He married his step-mother, Judith of France, but was forced to abandon that connection, and she was invest to accurate to an extended and and such became the wife of Baldwin, count of Flanders, and the ancestress of Matilda, wife of William the Conqueror, and, through her, of the kings of England. Ethelbald was engaged in military conflicts with the Danes, and distinguished himself by the common quality of bravery, but otherwise holds no remarkable place in history. D. SGO. ETHELBERT,

ETHELBERT, e'h'-el-bert, king of Kent, married Bertka, daughter of Caribert, king of France. By her means he was induced to em-brace Christianity, which he had permitted to be preached to his subjects by Augustine, the After enacting several laws, he died monk.

ETHELEERT, king of England, the second son of Ethelwolf, succeeded his brother Ethel-bald in 860. He was a virtuous prince, beloved by his subjects, and mostly engaged in repelling the incursions of the Danes. D. 860, and was buried at Sherborne.

ETHELER, eth'-el-red, king of England, the son of Edgar, succeeded his brother, Edward the Martyr, in 973. His unmanly spirit submitted to pay a tribute to the Danes, by a tax levied on his subjects, called Danegelt. To free himself from this oppression he caused the Danes to be treacherously massacred, through-out the country, in one day. On this, Sweyn, king of Denmark, entored his kingdom, and compelled him to fly to Normandy; but Sweyn dying soon after, Ethelred returned, and, after an inglorious reign of 37 years, died in 1016. an inglorious reign of 37 years, ded in 1016.

ETHELWOLF, eth'-el-woolf, king of England, came to the crown in 887, and rendered his reign famous for being that in which tithes were instituted. He was a mild and religious prince, and went to Rome with his youngest son, Alfred. D. 857, and was buried at Winchester.

chester.

Efference, George, eth-eredj, an English dramatic writer of the reign of Charles II. In 1604 he produced the comedy of "The Comical Revenge; or, Love in a Tuh." Encouraged by the favourable reception of this piece, he brought out another in 1608, entitled "She Would if She Could." In 1676 appeared his "Man of Mode; or, Sir Fopling Flutter." These productions raised him to a place among the beat relative the reception of the productions raised him to a place among the beat relative the reception. the best wits of his time, although they are more remarkable for spirit of dialogue than originality of invention. Their licentiousness, however, has long ago excluded them from public representation. In 1633 he received the honour of knighthood. p. 1636; p. at Ratisbon, from a full down a stair, after a convivial entertainment, 1688.

ment, 1058.
ETT., William, R.A., et-ta, an eminent Eng-lish artist, who, in 1807, entered as student of the Royal Academy; but, after what might be called, without a metaphor, no end of labour and disappointment, he was unable to get himself represented by any of his pictures on the walls of the academy till 1811, when "Telemachus rescuing Antiope" was permitted to appear. From this time he continued to plod at, but not to attract by, hisart; and, in 1816, was induced to visit Italy, for the purpose of study; but he re-turned, almost immediately, to work again in London. Labour, as usual, met its reward. In 1820 he commanded notice by his "Coral-Finders;" and the following year his "Cleo-patra arriving in Cilicia" procured and established a reputation. He was now famous, and produced a great many works, and especially excelled in representing the nude female. His excelled in representing the nude female. His aim, in all his large pictures, was to paint some great moral on the heart; as, for example, in "Ulysses and the Syrens," he meant to show the importance of resisting sensual delights. The only picture which the nation possesses of his painting is "Youth at the Prow, and Pleasure at the Helm," which is in the Vermon Gallery. n. at York, 1787; p. there, 1849.

EUGLID, w'-kbid, a celebrated mathematician

of Alexandria, who immortalized his name by his books on geometry, in which he digested all the propositions of the eminent geometricians the propositions of the eniment genericans who preceded him, as Thales, Pythagoras, and others. Ptolemy became his pupil, and his school was so famous, that Alexandria, where he taught, continued for ages the great universely sity for mathematicians. Lived in the 3rd censty or mathematicans. Dived in the ord century B.c. The best, indeed only, edition of his whole works is that of Gregory, Oxford, folio, 1703. His "Elements" have gone through innumerable editions, and have been used in every country where mathematics are taught.

EUCLIDES, u-kli'-dees, a native of Megara, and a disciple of Socrates. When the Athenians had dusting of socrates. When the Attendars had forbidden all the people of Megara, on pain of death, to enter their city, Euclides disguised himself in woman's clothes to introduce himself into the presence of Socrates. He was the founder of the school called the Megaric, distinguished by its dialectic subtlety. He wrote six dialogues, which are lost. Lived in the 4th century B.C.

EUD EMON, John Andrew, u'-de-mon, a learned Jesuit, descended from the imperial family of Jesus, descended from the imperial manny of the Palwologi, was educated in Italy, and taught philosophy at Padua and Rome with much re-putation. Urban VIII. appointed him principal of the Greek college re-established at Rome, and he accompanied Cardinal Barberini in a mission to France. He left a variety of works behind him, chiefly of a polemical character, having been engaged in religious controversies with many individuals, among whom were the English anti-papal divines Abbot, Prideaux, Collins, and others. B. in Candia; D. at Rome. 1625.

Eunocia, eu-do'-she-a, a learned Athenian EUDOGIA, et-do-she-da, a Listricu Atlenian day, whose original name was Atlenais. She was the daughter of Leontius, the philosophical sophist, who left her only a small legacy, bequestling the rest of his property to his two sons. Conceiving herself list-sed, she went to Constantinopie to lay her complaint before Theodosius II. Here she became the favourite of Pulcheria, sister of that emperor, and em-braced the Christian religion. In 421 she was married to the emperor, who afterwards di-vorced her in a fit of jealousy. She then went to Jerusalem, where she built churches, and led a life of great devotion, always protesting her innocence of the crime laid to her charge by Theodosius. D. 460. This empress wrote some Greek poems, and paraphrases on some of the prophets. She is said also to have written a life of Christ, composed of lines taken from Homer.

EUDOCIA, or EUDOXIA, widow of the emperor Constantine Ducas, on whose death, in 1067, she assumed the imperial diadem, and married the general Romanus Diogenes. When her son the general Romanus Diogenes. When her son Michael ascended the throne, he shut her in a convent, where she amused herself in writing on the pagan mythology. She left a treatise on the genealogies of the gods and heroes, which was printed in Villoison's "Ancedota Graea," 1781.

EUDOCIA, Feodorevna, first wife of Peter I., czar of Russia, and daughter of the boyard Feodor Lapukin. Peter married her in 1689, but a few years afterwards he sent her to a nunnery, on account of her complaints of his infi-delity. D. 1731,

EUDOXUS of Cnidus, u-dox'-us, an eminent in Egypt with Plato, and afterwards opened a in Egypt with Plato, and atterwards opened mathematical school at Athens. It is said that he passed a great part of his time on a high mountain, where he made celestial observations. Liv.d in the 4th century B.C.

EUGENE, Francis, of-zhain, Prince of Savoy

Carignan, was the son of the count of Soissons, by the niece of Cardinal Mazarin. intended for the church, but the death of his father changed this design, and determined him to follow the military profession. His mother being banished to the Netherlands by Louis XIV., and his family otherwise wronged by that sovereign, he went to Vienna, where the emperor gave him a regiment of dragoons, and he served in Hungary with great reputation against the Turks. In 1691 he, at the head of the imperial army, entered Piedmont, where he relieved Coni, which was at that time besieged by the French, and took Carmagnola. In 1897 he commanded the imperialists in Hungary, and, the same year, defeated the Turks at the battle of Zenta. On the death of the king of Spain, in 1701, the "war of the Spanish succession" commenced, and Prince Eugène achieved new laurels. At the close of the campaign of 1702, he returned to Vienna, and was made president of the council, and associated in the command of the allied army with the duke of Marlborough. In 1704 he had a principal share in the famous battle of Blenheim. In 1707 he was repulsed at Cassano by Vendôme; but he soon recovered his reputation in a bloody action near Turin. which was then besieged by the French, whose trenches he forced, and gained a complete victory. The same year he entered France, and laid siege to Toulon, but did not succeed in and and stegs to folion, but and not succeed in taking the place. In 1708 he shared in the victory of Oudenarde and the capture of Lille. In 1709 he Lught at Malplaquet, where he was severely wounded, but would not quit the scene of action. In 1712 he visited London, to m-duce the English ministers not to make a scparate peace; but his arguments were in-effectual, and England signed the treaty of threcht, Now left to carry on the war alone, he was successfully opposed by Marshal Villars, with whom he entered into a negotiation, which was followed by the peace of Radstadt in 1714. In 1716 a war broke out between the in 1714. In 1716 a war broke out between the emperor and the Turks, on which the prince was again intrusted with the command in tlungary, where, in that year, he defeated the grand vizier of Peterwardein, this splendid victory being followed by the no less great exploit of the capture of Belgrade. It was here, protect and expected of Deligrands. It was nere, with 40,000 men, he defeated a relieving army of 150,000 Turks, Peace being concluded at Passarowitz, in 1718, he retired into private life; but in 1733, when the election for the crown of Poland was disputed, he was again employed. This campaign, however, was short and approductive of any remarkable action, although successful in its results. r. in Paris, 1663; p. at Vienna, 1736. During the few years of repose which the peace of Passarowitz brought this warrior, he worthily employed himself in public affairs and in the arts of peace. The emperor Charles VI. found in him as faithful a counsellor as he was a skilful captain; and in the days of his misfortunes, he would cry, "Alas! the fortune of the empire has departed with Prince Eugène!" The prince was of the middle height, but stoutly astronomer of Caria, in Asia Minor. He studied | built, and was exempt from those excesses great men. Napoleon places him in the same rank of generals as Turenne and Frederick the Great, and considered the plans of his cam-paigns as conveying a perfect knowledge of the art of war. art of war.

EUGENIUS I., u-je'-ne-us, a pope and saint, succeeded Martin in 654. He is praised for his liberality and piety. D. 657.

EUGENIUS II. succeeded Pascal I. in 824, and decreed that in every country parsonage a master should be kept to read and explain the Scriptures. He, however, defended image-worship, though the practice was condemned by the council of Paris. D. 827.

EUGENIUS III., Pope, ascended the papal chair in 1145. Rome was at that time in a turbulent state, and finding that he could do little good, Eugenius retired to Pisa, and thence to Paris. D. 1153.

EUGENIUS IV. (Gabriel Condolmera) succeeded Martin V. in 1431, in which year the council of Bale assembled. This pope and the members of that assembly differed in their judgment, when he issued a bull against them. This, however, was disregarded, and he was under the necessity of confirming the decrees. In 1438 he called a council at Ferrara, to bring about a reconciliation between the Greek and Latin churches. At this council appeared the emperor Palæologus, with several Greek bishops; but the plague breaking out at Fer-rara, the council was removed to Florence, where, in 1439, a sort of union was agreed to, but was soon broken. In 1439 the council at Bâle deposed Eugenius, and elected Amadeus VIII duke of Savoy, who took the name of Felix V. Eugenius, however, triumphed over his adversaries. B. at Venice; D. at Rome, 1447.

EUGERIUS, an obscure grammarian, who was proclaimed emperor in Dauphiné by Count Arbognst, after the murder of Valentinian II., in 392. He crossed the Alps, and made himself master of Milan in 394; but was defeated and slain by the emperor Theodosius. Lived in the 4th century.

EULER, Leonard, oo'-ler, a Swiss mathemati-cian, who received his education in the university of Bale, with a view to the church, but principally devoted himself to mathematical studies under the famous John Bernoulli. In 1727 he followed his friends Hermann and Daniel Bernoulli to St. Petersburg, where, in 1733, he became professor of mathematics in the Academy of Sciences. In 1735 he impaired his sight by intense application to the solution of a difficult problem. His memoir on Fire ob-tained the prize from the French Academy of Sciences, in 1738, and, in 1740, he divided another, on the Flux and Reflux of the Sea, with Maclaurin and Daniel Bernoulli. In 1741 he went to Berlin, at the invitation of the king, to assist in establishing the academy there. When introduced to the queen-dowager, she expressed her surprise at the paucity of his conversation; upon which he replied, that he had just come from a country where those who spoke were hanged. He continued at Berlin till 1766, when he returned to St. Petersburg, um 1766, when he returned to St. Petersburg, where he seen after entirely lost his sight. Still he continued his layourite pursuits. He also received another prize from the French Academy, for three Memoirs on the Inequalities in the Motions of the Planets; which were followed by two others for scalarious of continues of the planets; which were followed by two others for scalarious of continues of the planets; which were followed by two others for scalarious of continues of the planets: lowed by two others for solutions of questions which have so often sullied the characters of on the Theory of the Moon. In 1772 appeared great men. Napoleon places him in the same his Lunar Tables. B. at Bâle, 1707; D. at St. rank of generals as Turenne and Frederick the Petersburg, 1783. Besides the above works, he Petersburg, 1785. Desides the above works, he wrote a great number of papers in the Memoirs of several academies; "Opuscula Analytica," "Introduction to the Analysis of Infinitesimals," &c. In 1760, when the Russians invaded Brandenburg and advanced to Charlottenburg, they plundered a house belonging to Euler. When this was told to General Tottleben, he immediately caused reparation to be made to the mathematician, and the empress Elizabeth of Russia presented him with 4000 florins.

EUMENES, u'-me-nees, a Greek commander. and accounted the most worthy of all the officers of Alexander to succeed him after his death. He conquered Paphlagonia and Cappadocia, of which he obtained the government, till the power and jealousy of Antigonus obliged him to retire. He then joined his forces to those of Perdiceas, and defeated Craterus and Neoptolemus. He and defeated crateria and Neoptonemus. He was put to death by order of Antigonus, 315 B.C. The latter, however, honoured his remains with a splendid funeral, and conveyed his ashes to his wife and family in Cappadocia.

to his wile and namny in cappadocia.

EUMENES I., king of Pergamos, succeeded his uncle Philaterus, 263 s.o., and reigned 22 years.

—Eumenes II., nephew of the preceding, succeeded his father, Attalus, 197 B.C. He assisted the Romans against Antiochus the Great, and the Romans against Amelocines the Great, and reigned 38 years.—Both of these sovereigns were greatly attached to learned pursuits, and the latter enriched the famous library of Pergamos, which had been founded by his predeces-sors, in imitation of the Alexandrine collection of the Ptolemies.

EUNAPIUS, u-nai-pe-us, a Byzantine sophist and historian, who wrote a history of the Cæsars, of which few fragments remain. His "Lives of of which few fragments remain. His "Lives of the Philosophers" or his age is still extant. It is composed with fidelity and elegance, precision and correctness. n. 347; n. 420.

EUNUS 4"nus, a Syrian slave, who inflamed the minds of the people by pretended inspiration and enthusiasm. Oppression and merusiasm. Oppression and merusiasm. Oppression and menusiasm. Oppose the proper of the property till Perpenna forced him to surrender by famine, and he and the greater number of his followers were impaled on crosses, 132 B.C.

EUPHRANOE, u'-fră-nor, a Greek sculptor, whose principal works were effigies of the Greek gods and heroes, a figure of Paris being esteemed his best performance. He was a native of Corinth, but seems to have practised his art at Athens, and is mentioned as the first sculptor who gave an appropriate expression to the sub-ject of each of his works. He worked with equal success on both marble and bronze, and was also clever as a painter. Lived about 364 B.C.

EUPHORION, u-for'-e-on. The most remarkable of this name is a Greek poet of Chalcis, in Eubea. Tiberius took him for his model for correct writing. p. 220 s.c.

EUROLIS, w-po-lis, a comic poet of Athens, who severely condemned the vices and immoralities of his age. It is said that he had composed 17 dramatic pieces at the age of 17. Some supposed that Alcibiades put Eupolis to death, because he had ridiculed him in his verses; but Suidas maintains that he perished in a sea-fight between the Athenians and the Lacedæmonians in the Hellespont. Lived in the 5th century B.C.

i, u-rip'-i-dees, a Grecian tragic poet, who studied at Athens under Anaxagoras the philosopher and Prodicus the rhetorician. He was twice married, but was unfortunate in both wives, which is supposed to have suggested some of the severe remarks levelled against the female sex which are found scattered over his works. He left Athens in disgust, on account of the rivalry of Sophocles and the raillery of Aristophanes, and went to the court of Archelaus, king of Macedon. Here he enjoyed all the tranquillity he sought; but as he was walking one evening in a wood, he was attacked by the king's hounds and torn in pieces. D. at Salamis, 450 B.C.; killed, 400 B.C. The Athenians, out of respect for his talents, went into mourning, and asked for his body; but the Macedo-niaus would not part with it, but erected over it a magnificent tomb at Pella. Only 19, out of 75 of his tragedies are extant; and the best editions are those of Barnes, Cambridge, 1694, folio; and Musgrave, Oxford, 1778, 4to. He has been well translated into English by Woodhull and Potter.

EURYBIADES, u-ri-bi'-a-dees, a Spartan com-mander of the Grecian fleet, at the battles of Artemisium and Salamis, against Xerxes. He was on the point of striking Themistocles, when the latter was advising an attack on the Persian fleet; upon which the Athenian cried, "Strike, but hear me." (See Themstocles.) Lived in the 5th century B.c.

EUSDEN, Laurence, use'-den, an English poet. EUSDEN, Laurence, use -den, an English poet, who in 1713 obtained the laurenteship, which made him several enemies, particularly Pope, who placed him in the "Dunciad." Cooke, in his "Battle of the Poets," refers to him in those lines:

"Eusden, a laurell'd bard, by fortune raised, By few been read, by fewer still been praised." The duke of Buckingham, in his "Session of the

Poets," also ridicules him :-"In rush'd Eusden, and cried, 'Who shall have it

But I, the true laureate, to whom the king gave it? Apollo begg'd pardon, and granted his claim, But vow'd that, till then, he had ne'er heard his name."

He became rector of Coningsby, in Lincolnshire, where he died, 1730. His poems are in Nichols's collection. B. in Yorkshire.

Eusebius, u-se'-be-us, succeeded Marcellus as bishop of Rome, in 310, and died the same year. He was strongly opposed to the readmission of lapsed Christians to communion. His opinions on this subject gave great offence at Rome, and the emperor Maxentius banished the pope to Sicily. He was by birth a Greek.

EUSEBIUS, Pamphilus, an ecclesiastical historian, who, in the persecution by Diocletian, tions, particularly his friend Pamphilus, whose name, out of veneration, he assumed. He was chosen bishop of Casarea about 313, and was at first the friend of Arius, because he considered him as persecuted; but on perceiving the dan-gerous tendency of his opinions, he abandoned him, and assisted at the council of Nice, which he opened with an address; he was also at that of Antioch. The emperor Constantine had a particular esteem for him, and showed him several tokens of favour. n. in Palestine, about Evans, Oliver, ev-ans, an ingenious American 285; n. 333. He wrote an "Ecclesiastical History," the "Life of Constantine," and other manufacture of cotten, and made many improve-works. The best edition of his "Ecclesiastical History" is that of Cambridge, 3 vols. folio, 1720. He wrote, besides, many other works, the principal # which is one entitled "Evangelical Preparation," 2 vols, folio, Paris, 1623.

gelical Preparation," 2 vols. 1010, Paris, 1025. EUSTACHIUS, Bartholomew, u-stai-she-us, a distinguished Italian physician, who settled at Rome, and made several discoveries relative to medical science. The most important of these was the passage from the throat to the external ear, since known by the name of the Enstachian tube. He formed some anatomical tables. 2.14 Boerhaave, in 1707, published his "Opuscula Anatomica." p. 1574.

Is, u-stai'-the-us, an Homeric commentator, was a native of Constantinople, who, in the latter part of his life, was made archbishop of Thessalonica, in which station he exhibited much ability and prudence. He is best known, however, for his commentaries on Homer and Dionysius Periegetes, the first of which is a compila-tion from the works of older scholiasts and commentators, to which Eustathius added but little of his own. It is, however, a work of immense labour, and was first printed at Rome in 1542 1550, and has been reprinted at several other times and places since, as, for instance, at Paris, in 1577, and at Oxford in 1697. The date of his death is unknown, but is believed to have occurred subsequent to 1104.

EUTROPIUS, Flavius, u-tro-pe-us, a Latin his-torian, who wrote an epitome of the History of Rome, from the age of Romulus to the reign of the emperor Valens, to whom the work was dedicated. Of all his works, the Roman history alone is extant. It is composed with conciseness and precision, but without elegance. Lived in the 4th century.

...., u'-ti-kees, a monk, who lived near Constantinople, and who is said to have founded the sect called Eutychians, in the East. Lived in the 5th century.

EUTYCHUS, u-fi-ki'-us, a physician and divine. who, after practising physic for many years, was ordined, and in 938 became patriarch of Alexandria. B. at Cairo, 876; p. 950. He wrote, in Arabic, "Annals from the Creation to 900," published at Oxford by Pocces, in 1659, 4to. He published at Unitord by Pococs, in 1802, sto. it also write a "History of Sicily," the MS. of which is in the public library at Cambridge.

Evacocas, end-or-ris, a Greek historian, who wrote a "History of Egypt," the "Life of Timagenes," "De Artificle O'Hunyddid Oratorio" "Lexicon in Thucyddem." Lived in the 1st century A.D.

EVAGORAS, king of Cyprus, who re-took Salamis, which had been wrested from his father by the Persians. He made war against Artaxerxer, the king of Persia, with the assistance of the Egyptians, Arabians, and Tyrians, and obtained some advantages over the fleet of his enemy. The Persians, however, soon repaired their losses, and Evagoras saw himself defeated by sea and land, and-obliged to be tributary to the power of Artaxerxes, and to be stripped of all his dominions, except the town of Salamis. Assassinated soon after this fatal change of Assassinated Soon and this later change of fortune, by a cunuch, 374 B.C.—He left two sons; Nicocles, who succeeded him, and Protagoras, who afterwards deprived his nephew Evagoras of his possessions, upon account of his oppression.

ments in the common corn-mill; but is chiefly remarkable as the inventor of the high-pressure steam-engine, and as having proposed the application of steam power to the propulsion of carriages, having, though ridiculed the secred at, actually constructed a locomotive engine. B. near Philadelphia, 1755; D. 1911.

Evans, General Sir De Lacy, G.C.B., entered the army in 1807 as ensign in the 22nd Poot, and cfor secritive secret ly ears, in India, returned after serving several years in India, returned and fought in the Peninsular campaigns of 1812 1813, and 1814. He also fought at Quatra Bras and Waterloo, where he had his horse shot under him. In 1835 he yolunteered to command the British Legion in Spain, and for his valour throughout the campaigns in which he served against the Carlists, he was invested with the order of the Bath and the Cross of San Ferdinand and San Charles of Spain. In 1854 he became commander of the second division of the Army of the East, and greatly distinguished himself at the battle of the Alma. At Inkermann he rose from a bed of sickness to join his division; but when he saw the manner in which General Pennefather was leading his men, he refused to take the command, but left his share of the merit entirely to that officer. He returned to England in 1855, and received the Grand Cross of the order of the Bath. With the exception of two short intervals, he had a sent in parliament from 1831 to 1865. B. at Moig, Ireland, 1787. Evanson, Edward, ev'-on-son, an English divine, who became curate to his uncleat Alitcham, in Surrey. In 1763 he obtained the living of South Mimms, and was afterwards presented to the living of Tewkesbury, in Gloucostershire, to which was added that of Longdon, a village in Worcestershire. Here his sentiments on the doctrine of the Trinity underwent a change, and he ventured to make alterations in the Common he ventured to make attentions in the Common Prayer, which gave such offence to the parkhibners that a prosecution was instituted against him, which failed, on account of some irregularity in the proceedings. In 1778 he resigned this livings and returned to Mitchen, where he understook the education of some transparence of the contraction of some processing of the contraction. pupils. D. at Warrington, Lancashire, 1731; D. 1805. He wrote the "Dissonance of the four generally-received Evangelists;" "A letter to lishop Hurd on the Grand Apostasy;" "Reflections on the State of Religion in Christendom;" and some other works.

Evans, David Morier, forsome years assistant city correspondent of the Times newspaper, and afterwards manager of the commercial department of the Standard and Morning Herald. He ment of the Standard and Morning Herold. He is the author of many important commercial works, the chief of which is "Facts, Failures, and Frands," published in 1859. He is the editor of the "Bankers' Magazine." B. 1819. Every, John, ev-lin, an English author, who, by marriago with the daughter of Sir Richard Browne, became possessed of Sayes Court, a manor in Kent, where he led a retired life till the Restoration, to which he in some measure contributed. At the establishment of the Royal Society, he became one of its first members. In 1662 appeared his "Sculpturg. or, the History and Art of Chalcorranhy and memores: In 1000 appeared in Sculptura; dent of Jefferson College, Loulsiana, and, in or, the History and Art of Chalcography and 1845, minister-plenipotentiary toChina Through Engraving in Copper." This curious and valuable work lass since been reprinted. In 1684 work has since been reprinted. In 1684 when the did 1847. as it Boston, 1786 came out his "Sylva; or, a Discourse of Forest Trees," which has gone through many editions, and is a great repository of all that was, in the of pastor, and became, before he was twenty, 378 author's time, known of the forest trees of Great Britain. He was appointed a commissioner for the sick and wounded seamen, one of the com-missioners for rebuilding St. Paul's, and after-wards had a place at the Board of Trade. In the reign of James II, he was made one of the the reign of sames 11, ne was made one of the commissioners for executing the office of lord privy scal, and after the revolution was ap-pointed treasurer of Greenwich hospital. In 1897 appeared his "Numismata, or Discourse of medals." Mr. Evelyn has the honour of being one of the first who improved horticulture, and introduced exotics into this country. Of his incrouved exores into this country. Of his garden at Sayes Court a curious account may be seen in the "Philosophical Transactions." p. at Wotton, Surrey, 1020; p. 1706. Evelyn was buried at Wotton, where, on his tombstone, he had it recorded, "That all is vanity which is not henest; and that there is no solid wisdom but real picty." He wrote several books besides the above, and of his "Memoirs" Sir Walter Scott says, "We have never seen a mine so Scotts says, "We have never seen a mine so rich."—His son John wrote a Greek poem, profixed to his father's "Sylva," and translated Rapin's poem on gardens into English, and the 'life of alexander' from Plutarch. He was also the author of u few pooms in Dryden's collection. D. 1698, aged 44.

EVERDINGEN, Aldert van, ever-din'-jen, a clever Dutch landscape painter and otcher, who excelled in delineating the rude and grand features of nature. He spent upwards of a year in Norway, and took great delight in sketching the wild scenery of its rugged coast. Some of his forests are extremely picturesque and truthful; and he likewise excelled in sea stories and in figures. He executed numerous etchings, which are now searce; among them are a series which are now scarce; among them are a series of views in Norway, and fifty-six original illus-trations of the fable of "Reynard the Fox." He was born in Alkmaar in 1621, and died there in 1675.

EVERETT, Alexander Hill, ev'-e-ret, an American author of note, who began life as a tutor in an academy, but afterwards entered into the office of John Quiney Adams, as a student of the law. In 1809 he went to Russia as an attaché of the mission of Mr. Adams, and spent attache of the mission of Mr. Adams, and spent two years in St. Petersburg, studying political economy, and making himself acquainted with the modern languages. On returning to Ame-rica, he connected himself, in Boston, with both law and literature. From 1818 to 1824 he served as charge d'affaires in the Netherlands. served as crurys a cycles in and Aronacian, where he pursued his literary studies, and, in 1821, published a work entitled "Europe; or, a Canaral Surgay of the Principal Powers" &c. a General Survey of the Principal Powers," &c., which was highly spoken of. In the following year he issued another, which entered into a consideration of the Godwin and Malthusian theories of population. In 1825 he became American minister at the court of Spain, which he held for nearly five years, during which he continued to devote himself to his studies, and continued to devote numsen to his studies, and produced a political work on America, whilst at the same time contributing to the "North American Review," then under the editorship of his brother. In 1841 he was chosen president of Jefferson College, Louisiana, and, in the contribution of the contribution minister of a large Unitarian congregation a libiston. In 1815 he relinquished the pulpit for the professorial chair of Greek Language and Literature in Harvard university. Provious to his entering upon his duties, he visited Europe, and for two years resided at Göttingen studying German, and making himself ac-quainted with the best modes of instruction adopted in the German universities. After adopted in the definate aniversities. Archi-sojourn in Europe of five years, during which he visited various countries, he returned to America, and entered upon his university duties with large stores of accumulated learning a knowledge. In 1820 he added to the duties his chair those of editor of the "North Ame-rican Review," which he continued to perform for four years. In 1824 he was elected to the House of Representatives, and, in 1836, became governor of Massachusetts. In 1841 he was appointed minister to the English court, which post he held for about five years, and on his return was elected president of Harvard university, which he was subsequently compelled to resign on account of ill-health. In 1853 he was elected a member of the Senate for Massachusetts. B. 1791; D. 1865.

Evremond

EVERSLEY, the RI, Hon. Charles Shaw Lefevre, Viscount, ever-evel, for many years member for the northern division of the county of Hampshire, was elected Speaker of the House of Commons in 1839, an office which he retained until 1857, when he was raised to the peerage. B. 1794.

EVREMOND, ST., aier'-mont, Charles de St. Donis, Lord of, a French writer, who relinquished the law for the military profession. He served under Condé, as lieutenant of the Guards, and in the civil wars of France fought at the battles of Rocroi and Nordlingen. He attended Mazarin in the negotiation with Spain; but having betraved some confidential secrets, in a correspondence with the marquis de Crequi, was obliged to quit France. Accordingly, he found a refuge in England, where he was in great esteem with Charles II. In 1639 permisgreat esteem with Charles II. In 1639 permis-sion was granted him to return to his country; but he preferred ending his days in the land of his adoption. B. near Coutanees, Normandy, 1813; D. in London, 1703, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Ho was a man of wit and ingenuity. His works were printed in 1705, in 3 vols. 4(a), by Des Meiszeur. Ewald, Johannes, w'-clid, a distinguished Danish poet, who wrote several dramatic pieces, and a poem entitled "The Temple of Fortune," which move his genus to have been consider-which prove his genius to have been considerable. His principal work is named "Balder's Death," a drama which takes a high standing in Danish literature. B. at Copenhagen, 1743; D. 1781.

EWING, John, u'-ing, an American divine and mathematician, was educated, or rather com-pleted his education, at Princeton college, and acted for some time as teacher of the grammar school there. He took his degree in 1755, and was chosen instructor of philosophy in the college of Philadelphia, and minister of a presby-terian congregation in that city. While on a visit to this country, in 1773, the university of Edinburgh conferred upon him the degree of Edinburgh conterred upon him the degree of D.D.; and in 1779 he was chosen provost of Philadelphia university. He contributed some papers to the American edition of the "Encyclopedia Britannica," published a volume of leafures on natural philosophy, and was commissioner for settling the boundary lines beEvre tween several of the states of the American union. B. in Maryland, 1732; D, 1802.

EXMOUTH, Edward Pellew, Viscount, a dis-tinguished Hitish naval commander, who, in tinguished littish naval commander, who, in 1770, enteres, the navy, and first brought himself promine alty into notice in 1776, at the battle of Lake Champlain, N. America. Having risen successively through the ranks of lieutenant and post-capitain, in 1733 he was appointed to the command of the Järnber Frigate, of 36 guns, and falling in with the Cleopatra French frigate, he captured her, after a desperate fight, and had the honour of knighthood conferred month him. Continuing in active serferred upon him. Continuing in active service, in 1799 he was appointed to the command of the Impetuous, of 78 gunz, and was engaged in various services on the French coast. In 1802 he was named colonel of the marines; and, in the same year, was chosen member of parliament for Barnstaple, in Devonshire. In 1804 he commanded the Tonnant, of 84 guns, and received the rank of rear-admiral of the Red. He was also made commander in the East Indies, on which he resigned his par-liamentary seat. In 1808 he was raised to the rank of vice-admiral of the Blue. In 1810 he blockaded Flushing, and, shortly afterwards, was appointed to the commander in-chiefship in the Mediterranean. Here he co-operated with the British forces on the eastern part of the coast of Spain with great skill. The value the coast of Spain with great skill. The value of his services was recognised in 1814, when he was raised to the peerage as Baron Exmouth, of Canonteign, Devonshire. In the same year he was promoted to the rank of full admiral, and, subsequently, made a K.C.B. and G.O.B. and Slo he proceeded to Algiers, to chastise the Deg for having violated a treaty concluded for the abolition of Christian slavery. His plan of attack is considered to be one of the boldest ever adopted by a naval commander. He entered the harbour with his ship, the Queen Charlotte, and being admirably supported by the other ships of his fleet, set fire to the war-ships of the Algerines, bombarded the city, and forced the Dey to yield to all his demands. For this service he was thanked by both houses of Parliament, and raised to the rank of viscount. On the death of Admiral Duckworth, in 1817, On the death of admiral Duckworth, in 1814, he was appointed to the chief command at Plymouth; but, after 1821, retired from public service. D. at Dover, 1767; D. 1833.

EXTPRISE, ex-u-per-lo-us, bishop of Tououse, and a saint of the Roman calendar. He expended all his own wealth, and sold the sacred ressels, to maintain the poor in a time of famine. about 417.

EYCK, Hubert van, ike, an eminent artist, and founder of the Flemish school of painting. or his finest works, in which he was assisted by his brother, is the "Adoration of the Lamb," in the church of St. Bayon, Ghent. He painted in distemper and in oil. B. at Masseyck, 1366; າ. 1426.

Excs. John van, brother of the above, ainted history, portraits, and landscapes; but is chiefly known by his being the inventor of a new method of mixing his oils, which reatly improved the style of painting. B. 1370: . 1411.

EYEE, Edward John, ire, a son of the Rev. Anthony Eyre, of Hornsea, Yorkshire, who emianticuly Eyre, of mornies, torkshire, who emi-grated to Australia when young, and was noted or his explorations there, and his good, owards the aborigines. After being.

governor of New Zealand and Antigua, he became governor of Jamaiea in 1892. Here he sent bishops into Gaul to propagate Christopyrossed a rebellion of the nacroes in 1865, finnity. He suffered in the persecution under which threatened the lives of all the whites in Dedus, 250.

The Jamaiea in 1893, and erected churches, and became the suffered from the suffered churches, and became the suffered from the suffered churches, and became the suffered from the suffered churches, and the suffered churches are suffered churches, and the suffered churches churches are suffered churches are s having exceeded his powers as governor, but completely exonerated by the result of a commission of inquiry held on his conduct. B. 1817.

EYRE, Sir William, K.C.B., an English general, entered the army in 1923, and, after serving in Canada, proceeded to the Cape of Good Hope, and distinguished himself as lieutenant-colonel in both the Caffre wars. In acknowledgment of his eminent services, he acknowledgment of his eminent services, was made a companion of the order of the Bath, promoted to be colonel in the army, and appointed an aide-de-camp to the queen. On the military force being sent out to the East, during the Russian war, he was appointed to a brigade of the 3rd division of the army, and was present at the battle of the Alma. He commanded the troops in the trenches during the battle of Inkermann, and remained in the Crimea until after the fall of Sebastopol. In 1855 he was created a knight commander of the order of the Bath, was made a commander of the Legion of Honour, a knight of the imperial order of the Medfidie of the 2nd class, and was among the general officers who received the Sardinian war-medal. After his return, in 1850, he was selected by the commander-in-chief to command the troops in Canada, which appoint-ment, on account of ill health, he was forced to resign. B. 1806; D. at Bilton Hall, Warwickshire, 1859.

F

Faber, Johann, fa'-ber, a German divine, who was created doctor at Cologne, and in 1528 was appointed confessor to Ferdinand, king of the appointed contessor to returning amp or ane Romans. He was subsequently presented to the see of Vienna, and was called the "Mallet of Heretics," owing to the zeal which he showed against Luther. B. in Swalia, 1470; D. 1541. His works were printed at Cologne, in 8 vols. folio.—There was another controversialist of this name, who wrote several works against the Protestants.

FABRET, Abraham, fa-bair, a gallant French officer, who was the son of a bookseller at Metz. He was educated with the duke d'Epernon, became a soldier, and saved the royal army in the celebrated retreat of Mayence in 1635. He was wounded in the thigh at the siege of Turin, was woulded meet ranging at the sigg of a ranging and on being recommended to have the limb amputated, he refused, remarking, "I wont die by piecemeal; death shall have me entire, or not at all." He, however, recovered, and subsequently distinguished himself in the battle of Marfée in 1841, and at the siege of Bapaume, He was afterwards governor of Sedan, and in 1854 captured Stenai, and received the baton of a marshal in 1858. He refused the decoraof a marshal in 1683. He refused the decora-tions of the king's orders, as he said he was not entitled to wear them; and being unable to produce the proofs of nobility which had been conferred on his family by Henry IV., he like-wise declined that honour, "because he would not," be declared, "have his cloak decorated with a cross, and his name disgraced by an imposting." a 1500, 11862.

FABRUS MAXIMUS, Rullianus, juo-oo-ao, an illustrious Roman, who, as master of the horse in the war against the Samnites, charged a hitchined a victory. Having the enemy, and obtained a victory. Having done this in the absence of the dictator, and done this in the absence of the dictator, and centrary to his orders, he was condemned to death, but was rescued by the people. In 303 n.c. he served the office of censor, and obtained the name of Maximus, for lessening the power of the populace in elections. He triumphed over seven nations, and served the office of dictator a second time 287 B.C.

Fabrus Maximus, Quintus, surnamed Cunc-tator, a Roman, distinguished for his prudence. valour, and generosity. He was consul the first time 233 b.c., when he gained a great victory over the Ligurians. When Hannibal the Carthaginian defeated the Romans at the battle of Thrasymene, he was nominated prodictator, to oppose that general. He succeeded in surrounding Hannibal, whom, however, he allowed to escape, when he was recalled by the senate, who refused to confirm an agreement which he had made for the ransom of prisoners. On this, Fabius sold his estates to raise the money. When the time of his dictatorship money. When the time of his dictatorship expired, headvised his successor, Paulus Æmilius, not to hazard an engagement; his advice, however, was neglected, and thus was lost the famous battle of Cannæ. Fabius was now looked upon as the only refuge of the Romans, and he quickly recovered Tarentum, which had been betrayed to Hannibal. In his advanced years, he was superseded by Scipio, yet his death was lamented by the people as a common loss. B. about 275; D. 203 B.C.

FABER John Claude, fabr, a French priest of the Oratory at Paris, who compiled two dic-tionaries, translated Virgil into French, and continued Fleury's "Ecclesiastical History." B. 1668; D. 1753.

FABRI, Honoré, fol-bre, a learned Jesuit, who wrote "Physica, seu Rerum Corporearum Scientia," 6 vols. 4to; "Synopsis Optica," 4to; "De Plantis, de Generatione Animalium, et de "De Plantis, de Generatione Animatain, et de Romine," 4to, &c. He is said, by some, to have discovered the circulation of the blood before Harvey. B. at Bellay, 1607; D. at Rome, 1688

FABRIANO, Gentile da, fab'-re-a'-no, an Italian artist of great skill and merit, whose principal works were a picture of the Madonna for the Cathedral of Orvieto, "The Adoration of the Cathedral of Orvieto, "The Adoration of the Kings," now in the Florence Gallery, and many other works at Florence, Siona, Rome, and Venice, the senate of the latter city having invested him with the patrician togal nacknow-ledgment of his merit as an artist. A great many of his best works have been lost, and one of these is said to have elicited from Michael Angelo the remark that the artist's style was like his name-gentile. B. at Fabriano, in the Marches of Ancona, about 1370; p. about Fabricius, Caius, fd-brish'-e-us, a celebrated Roman, who, in his first consulship, obtained several victories over the Samnites and Luwith a cross, and his name dispraced by an canians, and was honoured with a triumph. Imposture." p. 1599 p. 1.662.

Rabian, Jai-be-an, a pope and caint, according to the Roman calendar, He ascended the sents offered him. Pyrrhus admired the contact of the Roman calendar. Fabricius | Fagius magnanimity of Fabricius, but his admiration its importation into the Low Countries. He dewas increased when he made a discovery of the perfidious offers of his physician, who had volunteered to the Roman general to poi-son his master for a sum of money. To this greatness of soul was added the most consummate knowledge of military affairs, and the most perfect simplicity of manners. Fabricius wished to inspire a contempt for luxury among the people. He lived and died in the greatest poverty. His body was buried at the public charge, and the Roman people were obliged to give a dowry to his two daughters, when they had arrived at years of maturity. Lived in the 3rd century B.C.

FABRICIUS, George, a learned German antiquary and poet, who, in 1550, published a work entitled "Roma," being an elucidation of the antiquities, &c., of the seven-hilled city. His poems appeared at Bâle, in 1567, in two volumes, and besides these he wrote a two volumes, and besides these he wrote a variety of other pieces, all of which are characterized by great purity and elegance of style. His Latin especially was of high excellence. The emperor Maximilian is said to have conferred a laurel crown upon him shortly before his death, which occurred in 1571. B. at Chemnitz, Upper Saxony, 1516.

Faractus, Jerome, an Italian physician, usually called Aquapendente, from the place of his birth, professed anatomy with extra-ordinary reputation at Padua. P. 1537; D. 1619. His works on anatomy have been printed in

2 vols, folio,

Fasicotus, Johann Albert, a learned dirine, who became professor of eloquene at Hamburg, and published "Bibliotheca Latina," 2 vol. 4to; "Bibliotheca Grisca," 14 vols. 4to; "Codex Apeorrphus Novi Testamenti," 3 vols. 8vo; "Codex Pseudenjeraphus Veteris Testamenti," 2 vols. 8vo; "Bibliotheca Latina Ecclesiastica," folio; "Bibliotheca Latina Ecclesiastica," folio; "Bibliotheca medie et infirme Latinitatis," 5 vols. 8vo. B. at Leipsic, 1683; p. at Hamburg, 1782 FABRICIUS, Johann Albert, a learned divine, 1736.

Fabron, Angelo, fa-bro'-ne, a learned Italian, who was educated first at Faenza, and afterwards at Rome, where he obtained a canonry. He was afterwards appointed prior of the church of St. Lorenzo at Florence, where he remained till called to be curator of the univer-sity of Pisa. He is generally known by his Biographies of Italian literati of the 17th and 18th centuries, of which work he published 18 volumes, and left another ready for the press. Besides this, he wrote separate biographies of Cosmo, Lorenzo, Leo, and other eminent persons of the house of Medici, with many panegyrics on learned men. He also conducted the "Giornale di Literati," and published some religious pieces. B. in Tuscany, 1732; D. at Pisa, 1803.

FABLAN, or FABLAN, Robert, fa'-bi-an, an English historian, and author of a work called the "Concordance of Histories," being a chronicle "Concordance of Histories, penig a constant of the history of England from the first landing form to his own time. The first of the Romans down to his own time. The first edition was printed by Pinson, in 1816, and the work has been several times republished since. Fabyan was a merchant of London, a member of the Drapers Company, served the offices of alderman and sheriff, and repre-sented the corporation in certain deputations to the king for redress of grievances in connexion with the duties charge I upon English cloth in its importation into the now countries. Its de-clined the office of mayor in 1502, on the ground of poverty, though he is known to have been opulent at the time; but then he had sixteen opident at the time; but then he had sixteen children, which, in his opinion, was a sufficient reason for declining to incur the expenses attending the chief magistracy of London even then. He is believed to have been born in London, though the family from which he sprung had an estate in Essex. n.

which he sprung had an "estate in Essex. n. about 1450; n. about 1512.

FACCIOLARI, Jacopo, fat'-che-o'a'-te, an Iralian scholar, who gave much attention to the study of classical literature, to the revival of which he greatly contributed. He compiled Latin dictionary, upon which, in conjunction with his punjl brocellini, he spent nearly forty years of labour, and which was published at Padna in 1771 in four vols, folio. He was professor of logic in the university of Padna, and his lactures and offiter compositions, which and his lactures and offiter compositions, which and his lectures and other compositions, which are very voluminous, show him to have been one of the most erudite men of his own or any one of the most evidute men or his own or any other time. D. 1893; D. 1769.

FADLALLAR, 'Or CHODSA RASCHID ADDIN FADLALLAR, 'Or CHODSA RASCHID ADDIN FADLALLAR, 'fad-lal-la, a Persian historian, was vizier to the sultan Cazan, who reigned at Taurus, and at whose command he compiled a history of the Mogruls, which he finished in 1294. He added a supplement to this work by the order of Cazan's successor. The first part was translated into French by La Croix. Lived in translated mito Freedin by La vfotz. Lived it in the 13th century.

Flay, John, Joed, artist, having early displayed a taste for art, went to Edinburgh when 21 years of ace, and extibited there, in 1850, some pictures delineating humble life, which were the productions of his pencil, his entitled the productions of his pencil, his entitled the productions of his pencil, his subjects being drawn from Shakspane and his contemporaries, Burns's "Cotter's Saturday Night," "Tam o' Shanter," &c. B. in the Stewartry of Kirkeudbright, 1820.

FAED, Thomas, R.A., brother of the above, a painter of distinction, whose earliest exhibited work was a water-colour drawing from the "Old work was a water-colour drawing from the "Old English Baron." He seon, however, adopted oil as the medium of his conceptions, and successively produced "Soct and his family at Abbotaford," "The Mitherless Baim," "Home and the Homeless," "The First Break in the Family," "Exermons in the Backwoods," "His Cally Paim," "From Dawn to Sunset," &c. Mr. Fead became an associate of the Soottish Academy in 1849, and shortly afterwards fixed his residence in London, where he was made A.R.A. in 1869, and R.A. in 1864, n. at Burley Mill. Kilykandhright 1898. Mill, Kirkeudbright, 1826.

Mill, Kirkeadbright, 1826.

Fagar, Christopher Bartholomew, fai-gam, a comic author, of Irish extraction, was a clerk in a public office in Paris, and devoted his leisure to literary pursuits. His works were published in 1760, in four vols, and the most approved of his pieces, all of which are executed in a delicate and racy style, are entitled—"La Rendezvous," "La Pupilla,"
"L'Amitic Rivala," "Lee Originaux,"
"L'Amitic Rivala," "Lee Originaux," which coveraged distinctibles men of contra which generally distinguishes men of genius, but, what is more singular, he had also a strong dislike to society. B. at Paris, 1702;

D.1775.
FAGUS, Paul, fai je-us, a German Protestant divine, whose real name was Buchlein. For some time he exercised the office of a schoolmaster, but afterwards entered into orders. In cromby (formerly the French ship Hautpoult, 1541 the plague broke out at Isny, where he which he had himself captured) till the concin-1341 the plague broke out at Isny, where he resided at the time, and he remaiged in the place, comforting and ministering touthe sick. In 1543 he and Bucer went to England, where are this hope the remaining the r accumentation of the Scriptures. D. at Heidelberg, 1504; D. at Cambridge, 1550. In Mary's reign his body was taken up and burnt. He wrote several books on the Hébrew language and the Targums.

Faithorne

FACEL, Gaspard, fw-jel, a famous Dutch statesman, who after filling the offices of counsellor-pensionary of Haarlem and recorder the States-general, was, on the murder of De Witt in 1672, advanced to the vacant position of Witt in 10/2, advinced to the viacini position of grand pensionary; and, in 1678, co-operated with Sir William Temple, English ambassador, in arranging the treaty of Nimeguen. Louis XIV., in the course of his war with Holland, attempted to corrupt the pensionary, but the offers were indignantly spurned, and Fagel continued to give the most effective aid to the Prince of Orange, afterwards William III. of England, especially in preparing the way for that prince to the throne of James II, but unfortunately did not live to learn the official notification of william's accession, having died on the 15th of December, 1638. B. 1629. He was a man of great sagacity, of impressive eloquence, and wielded much political influence. He was never married .- Several other members of the same family played prominent and honourable parts in the affairs of Holland, one of whom, Francis Nicholas Fagel, nephew of Gaspard, was one of the most eminent military commanders the republic produced. He enjoyed the friendship of William III.; displayed marked gallantry at the battle of Fleurus in 1690; as well as at the siege of Moms in 1691, at the siege of Namur, at the capture of Bonn in 1703, at the taking of Tournay, and at the battles of Ramillies and Malplaquet, under Marlborough. D. 1718.

Facos, Guy Crescent, fu'-gawng, physician to Louis XIV., who defended the doctrine of the circulation of the blood, and collected numerous plants to enrich the royal gardens, of which he was superintendent. B. at Paris,

1633; D. 1718,

FAHERNHEIT, Gabriel Daniel, fä-ren-kite, an experimental philosopher, who improved the thermometer, by making use of mercury instead of spirits of wine, and formed a new scale for the instrument, grounded on accurate experiments. The English have generally adopted his scale; but the French prefer Réamur's. n. at Dantzig, 1886; p. 1736. Fahrenheit wrote "A Dissertation on Thermometers."

A Dissertation of Internometers."

FARTS, Sir William Cherles, fair ha, one of the many distinguished officers who illustrated the annals of the British navy during the last war with France, served as a lieutenant with great credit in the West Indian campaign of 1794, obtained post rank in 1796, and from that the fill 1810 by wes to accept a content of 1795 and from that the fill 1810 by wes to accept a content of the server of the time till 1810 he was in constant employment in the West Indies, during which period he cap-tured the French men-of-war L'Armée d'Italie and Hautpoult, assisted in the reduction of the and Hamponia, assisted in the reduction of the Dutch West Indies in 1807; at the capture of Martinique in 1809, and at that of Guadaloupe in 1810. He subsequently reduced the islands of St. Martin, St. Eustatius, and Saba; and the flags of Holland and Frames being now expelled from the Antilles, he returned to Engred Line in the Company of the Compa land. He continued in command of the Aberwhich he had amself espured; In the concision of the war. He was nominated C.B. in 1815; and, after the escape of Napoleon from Elba, co-operated, in the Madfa, 74, with the Austrian general, Lanc, in the siege of Gedet, which surrendered, after an obstinate definee, in August, 1815. For this service Compair Fahie received the insignia of a Kniphot St. Fertinand and Merit from the King of the Two Sicilies. He and Mentifrom the King of the Two Sidlles. He was promoted to the rank of rear-admiral in 1819, vice-admiral and Knight Commander of the Bath in 1880, and from 1890 till his death beld the commands in the Leeward Islands and Halifax. In 1763 jp. 1883, at Bermuda.

FAIRMAIN, William, fair'-bairn, a Sooth mechanist and civil engineer, who was among the first, fir not the first, to construct senging the state of the stat vessels of iron. He was also continually engaged in experimenting on the qualities of iron, and did much to advance mechanical knowledge in the department of engineering. B. at Kelso.

the department of engineering. B. at Acid. Scotland, 178-20.

FAIREAX, Edward, fair'-faks, an English post, who translated Tasso's poem of "Godfrey of Bouillon" into English verse, and wrote a curious book entitled "Demonology," in which he avows his belief in witchcraft. D. about

FAIRFAX, Thomas, Lord, general of the parlia-mentary army in the civil war, was the cluest son of Ferdinando, Lord Fairfax. He began his military earcer under Lord Vere, in Holland, his minary career unter force of a monand, and when hostilities commenced between the king and parliament, he took a decided part in favour of the latter, being, like his father, a zealous Presbyterian. He had a principal command in the northern counties of England, where he and his father were defeated in several engagements; but, afterwards, Sir Thomas had better fortune, and distinguished himself so greatly at the battle of Marston Moor, in 1614, that he was appointed general of the army, in the place of the earl of Essex, and Cromwell the place of the ear of Essex, and Cromwen became his lieutenant-general. In 1645 he defeated the king's forces at Naseby, after which he marched into the west, where he took Bath, Be marched into the west, where he took state. Bristol, and other important places. In 1647 he was made constable of the Tower, and the following year succeeded to the title, by the death of his father. He then proceeded into the eastern counties, and took Colchester, after a brave resistance by Sir George Lisle and Sir Charles Lucas, whom his lordship, after the surrender, caused to be shot. On his return to London, he was named one of the king's judges, but refused to act, though he took no steps to pre vent the death of the king, and, at the time of the vent the death of the sing, sind, at the 1mh of rise execution, was kepf engaged in prayer by Major Harrison. In 1650 he resigned his commission, and lived in redirement till the Restoration, when he made his peace with Charles II., upon whom he waised at the Hague. n at Denton, Yorkshika, 1671. He wrote an account of his public shika, 1671. He wrote an account of his public shika, 1671. He wrote an account of his public shika, 1671. slife, and this, in conjunction with the "Fairfax Correspondence," published a few years since, throws much light on the motives which influ-throws much light on the motives which influenced himself and others in taking a prominent part in the important events of those times. Fattracers, William, Jai-thory, a Bagdish painter and engraver, was a soldier in the royal army during the civil war, and was taken prisoner by Cromwell. On obtaining his liberty, he went to France, where he studied under-

Falconberg

Champague. At his return, he practised paint-ing in miniature, and engraving, but chiefly the historical pictures and portraits, visited Eng-latter. He also published a book on drawing, land in 1776, and gained two prizes from the graving, and etching. B. in London, 1816; B. Society of Arts. graving, and etching. B. in London, 1816; D. 1601. Walpole gives a considerable list of the prints of this artist.—His son, William, was a good engraver in mezzotinto.

FALCONBERG, Mary, Countess of, fall-kon-berg, the third daughter of Oliver Cromwell, and wife of Thomas, Viscount Falconberg, was a woman of considerable talents, a member of the church of England, and contributed to the restoration of Charles II. was possessed of great personal beauty, and so much spirit and energy that Burnet says, "She was more worthy to be Protector than she was more worthy to de Protector than her brother." D. 1712. (See Cromwell,) FALCONER, Thomas, full-ke-ner, a great student and eminent scholar, was the author of "Chronological Tables" from the reign of Solomon to the death of Alexander the Great, "Observations on Pliny's Account of the Temple of Diana at Ephesus," published in the "Archeo-Diana at Ephesus," published in the "Archeologia," and an edition of Strabo, published long after the author's death. Such was his passion for atter tneauthors death. Such was his passion for the acquisition of knowledge, that he used to read in a kneeling posture, the only one he could bear during an illness of nearly thirty years. He was almost constantly enduring acute pain, and that he was able under these circumstances to study at all, much less compose his various works, is wonderful. D. at Chester, 1736; D. 1792.

FALCONER, William, brother of the preceding, a physician in large practice at Bath, was a clever writer on medical and chemical subjects, many valuable treatises having been projects, many valuable treatises having been produced by him. He ascertained the properties of carbonic acid gas, a discovery which has been erroneously attributed to Dr. Priestley.

B. at Chester, 1749; p. 1824.

FALCONER, William, a Scotch poet, who was born of humble parents, and bred to the sea. In 1751 he published a poem on "The Death of the Prince of Wales;" but his reputation rests on "The Shipwreck," a norm in three captas which is biblib deach." ms repusation rests on the Shipwreck," a poem in three cantos, which is highly descriptive and pathetic. It was suggested by a shipwreck, suffered by himself, in a voyage from wreck, Sattered by liminser, in a voyage from Alexandria to Venice, when only he and two others of the crew were saved. Falconer also wrote "An Ode to the Duke of York," which obtained him the post of purser to the Royal George. He likewise compiled a useful work, entitled "The Marine Dictionary," 4to, and entitled "The Marine Dictionary," 4to, and published a poem against Wilkes and Churchl, under the title of "The Demagogue." He sailed from England, in the Aurora, for the East Indies; but, after her departure from the Cane of Good Hone the chief were well as the contract of the Cane of Good Hone the chief were a second than the chief were the contract of the contr Cape of Good Hope, the ship was never heard of B. about 1780; lost, it is supposed in the Mozambique Channel, in the winter of 1769.

Mozambique Channel, in the winter of 1705. His father was a barber in Edinburgh. FALCONET, Stephen Maurice, fall-ko-nai, a famous sculptor, was a native of Paris, was admitted a member of the Academy in 1741, and soon produced a rapid succession of admirable works that won for him a European fame. In 1766, Catharine II. invited him to Russia to execute a statue of Peter the Great, and the result was the well-known colossal figure of the emperor on horseback at St. Petersburg. Falconet was an author as well as an artist; and ofter his return to Paris in 1778, published some works in reference to sculpture. B. 1716; D.

Falkner

Fileonia, Proba, fill-ko'-ne-a, a Latin poetess, who composed a cento from Virgil, containing the sacred history from the Creation, and the history of Christ in verse. Lived in the 4th century.

FALIERI, Ordelafo, ful-c-air'-c, doge of Venice, who sailed with a fleet to the assistance of Raldwin, king of Jerusalem, about 1102. He con-quered Dalmatia, Croatia, and other provinces; but, in defending the republic against the Hun-garians, was killed, 1117.

FALIERI, Marino, doge of Venice in 1354, formed the design of murdering all the senators, to render himself absolute; but the plot being discovered, he was beheaded. This forms the subject of one of Byron's dramas. D. 1355.

Falk, John Peter, falk, an ingenious Swede, who tudied medicine at Upsal, where, also, he applied himself assiduously to botany under Linnaus. by whose recommendation he was appointed professor of botany in the Apothecaries' Garden, and keeper of a cabinet of natural history at St. Petersburg. B. 1727; shot himself, 1774. His observations, made in his travels, were published observations, indee in his travers, were published at St. Petersburg, in 1785, 3 vols. 4to.

Flereling, Henry Cary, Viscount, fault-land, was lord-deputy for Ireland, from 1622 to 1620. popular. He wrote "A History of that most unfortunate Prince, Edward II." D. 1633.

FALKLAND, Lucius Cary, Viscount, the eldest son of the preceding, was educated in Trinity College, Dublin, where he became distinguished for his proficiency in classical and general literature. He married a lady of small fortune. which greatly displeased his father, when he retired to a country house, and devoted himself to the study of Greek. On the breaking marked the conduct of Charles I. In the midst of the troubles which distracted the kingdom, be lost the buoyancy of his spirits, and would frequently ejaculate to himself, in mournful tone, "Peace I peace!" which, however, he was not destined to live to see. At the battle of Newbury, he volunteered into the cavalry commanded bury, he Volunteered mto the certairy commanded by Lord Byron, and fell, slot through the bedy. His remains were not found till the following day. In 1810, tilled, 1648. Lord Clarendon, in his "History of the Rebellion," says that this nobleman "was a person of such predigitous parts of learning and knowledge, of that inestimable sweetness and delight in conversation, of so sweetness and dengue in conversation, or so flowing and obliging a humanity and goodness to mankind, and of that primitive simplicity and integrity of life, that if there were no other brand upon this odious and accursed civil war than that single loss, it must be most infamous and execrable to all posterity." Notwithstanding the apparent excess of this panegyric, Fakand seems to have deserved it; for he was an ornament to the nation, and the envy of the age. One of his sayings was, "I pity unlearned gentlemen on a rainy day." He is represented among the statues in the lobby of the House of Commons.

FALKNER, Thomas, falk'-ner, an English sur-geon, who became a Jesuit, and acted as a miss-sionary in Paraguay. He returned to English was professor of anatomy, first at Pisa, and afterwards at Padua, where he died in 1562. p. at Modena, 1523. His works were printed in 3 vols, folio, at Venice, in 1584.

Fallonio

voics, 1010, at venice, in 1054.

Fancourt, Samuel, fan'-kort, a dissenting minister, who became pastor of a congregation at Salisbury, whence he was obliged to remove for rejecting the Calvinistic notions of election and reprobation. He then went to London, and established the first circulating library, about 1740, in which, however, he had little encouragement. He wrote some controversial tracts, and died poor, in 1768. B. in the W. of England, 1678.

FANNIUS, Caius, fan'-ne-us, survamed Strabo, was consul of Romes91A. U.C., and rendered him-self remarkable by a law, which problibited any person from spending more than a certain sum daily.—His son was distinguished for eloquence. He was consul in the 630th year of Rome.—There was another of this name, who wrote a history of Nero's cruelties, the loss of which is greatly regretted by Pliny the Younger. He lived in the 1st century.

Fanshave, Sir Richard, fan'-shaw, a statesman and poet, who was educated at Cambridge, and in 1635 was sent ambassador to Spain, whence, in 1641, he returned, and acted steadily for the royal cause. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Worcester, and closely confined for a considerable time; but at last recovered his liberty, and went to Breda, where he was knighted by Charles II, in 1656. At the Restoration he was made master of requests, and sent to Portugal to negotiate the marriage with the to Forugat to negotiate the marriage with the king and the infanta Catharine. In 1664 he was sent ambassador to Spain, where he died of ever in 1686. n. in Hertfordshire, 1608. He translated into English the "Pastor Fido," of Pathfull Shephend, of Guarnia, ilso the "Luxisad" of Camoens. His letters during his embassics in Spain and Portugal were printed in 1702, 8vo. FARADE, Michael, far'-a-da, a distinguished English chemists and natural philosombes who

English chemist and natural philosopher, who was at first apprenticed to the trade of bookbinding, but whose mechanical genius and talent binding, but whose mechanical genities and talent for investigation procured him the ultimate patronage of Sir Humphry Davy. Through his interest he was taken into the laboratory of the Royal Institution of London, where he was enabled to pursue his studies. In 1827 he pub-lished his work on "Chemical Manipulations," and from that time continued a regular conand from that time continued a regular con-tributor to the "Philosophical Transactions," spreading his investigations over the wide field of electricity. He succeeded, if not in discovering, at all events in establishing, the laws of electro-magnetism, and has, perhaps, done more than any other man towards the elucidation of than any other man cowards are electric phenomena. On this subject he published three volumes, entitled "Experimental Researches in Electricity," in which are included his researches into the magnetic nature of oxygen his researches into are magnetionatured to year gas, light, and other important subjects. A true philosopher, he rejected all posts of honour, confining himself to his sphere in the Royal In-after the suppression of the order to which he belonged, and lived subsequents in retirement. He was the author of a "Descliption of Patagonia," &c. D. 1780.

Fallowing, Gabriel, fal-lo-ps-a ne minent physician and anatomist, who discovered tubes of the uterus which bear his name. He sciences, which are little known. B. in Sicily, 1650; D. at Naples, 1718.

FAREL, William, far-el, a Protestant divine, who studied at Paris; but having embraced the Reformed religion, he left France and settled at Geneva, where he laboured with great zeal against popery, and was there the chief actor in establishing the Reformation. He was bani sandishing die Reformation. He was na-nished thence, with Calvin, in 1533, for refusing to submit to the synod at Berne. Farel then settled at Neufchâtel, where he died in 1565, n. in Dauphiné, 1499. His writings are few.

Farey, John, fai'-re, a clever geologist and surveyor, who made a survey of the county of Derby for the Eoard of Agriculture, which was Derby for the Board of Agriculture, which was published in two volumes. He took great pains to investigate the relative position of the various strata throughout Great Britain, and collect specimens illustrative of this valuable department of science; and it is in this last respect that his chief merit lies. His observations on this subject were published in a series of papers in Nicholosus' 9 Philosophical Journal, P. B. at Wohnn, Bedfordshire, 1786; p. 1288.

FARIA Y Sousa, Emanuel, fa-re'-a ee soo'-sa, a Portuguese knight, who wrote a "History of Portugal" to the reign of Henry the Cardinal, a "History of the Portuguese Dominions in Europe, Asia, and Africa," and some other works. D. 1590; D. at Madrid, 1649.

Farinato, Paolo, fuw-re-nu-to, a celebrated painter of Verona, who was a pupil of Titian, and of whose works there are several excellent specimens in the churches of Verona and the vicinity. His style of design is robust and vigorous, and his colouring partakes largely of the character of the Venetian school. He like-wise etched a few designs from sacred and mythological subjects. B. 1522; D. 1606, on the same day as his wife.

Fabinelli, fuwr-e-nail'-le, a distinguished Neapolitan vocalist, whose real name is said to have been Carlo Broschi. He studied under Porpora at Rome, whence he went to Vienna, where he became a great favourite with Charles VI., who loaded him with riches and presents. In 1734 he visited London, and, by the captivating power of his melody, drew all who could afford to hear him. So great was the attraction of his voice, that Handel was forced to dismiss a rival company, over which he was presiding, notwithstanding his own immense popularity. His influence over the musical sympathies of his audiences seems never to have been equalled. In a dudences seems have a marked of the late and dissenting divine, who wrote "An Inquiry into the Nature and Late and La and Design of our Lord's Temptation in the Wilderness, '8vo, in which he considered that event as a divine vision, representing the different scenes of our Saviour's future ministry. If was a several writers. In 1771 he published his "Dissertation on Miracles." His next publication was an "Essay on the Demoniacs of the New Testament," whom he maintained to have been afflicted with natural diseases. This stitution, where the charm of his lectures was a work was replied to by Dr. Worthington and continual attraction to those who delighted to Mr. Fell: to the former Mr. Farmer returned a

FARADAY, MICHAEL.

FIRRAGET, ADMIRAL.

Paterax, Teomas Lord.

Firmese, Adminious (Linus on Paper).

Farmer

temperate answer, but on the other he was unmercifully severe. His last performance was entitled "The General Prevalence of the Worentitled "The General Frevalence of the vor-ship of Human Spirits in the Ancient Heathen Nations, asserted and proved." This was also attacked by Mr. Fell, in an acute and learned treatise, in 1785. In the same year Mr. Farmer was almost deprived of his sight; but was relieved by a surgical operation, and enabled to pursue his studies. B. at Shrewsbury, 1714; D. at Walthamstow, 1787. He directed his executors to burn his papers; but some of his letters, and fragments of a dissertation on the story of Balaam, were published in 1804, with his life

RMEB, Richard, a divine and antiquary, was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of M.A. in 1760, and the same year was appointed classical tutor. In 1767 he took the degree of B.D., and became one of the preachers at Whitehall. In the pre-eeding year he published his "Essay on the Learning of Shakspeare," in which he proved that all the knowledge of ancient history and mythology possessed by the immortal bard was drawn from translations. In 1775 Mr. Farmer was chosen master of his college, and took his degree of D.D. He also became chancellor and prebendary of Lichfield, librarian to the university of Cambridge, and prebendary of Canter-bury, which last situation he resigned for a residentiaryship of St. Paul's. He collected ample materials for a history of Leicester; but ample materials for a history of between; one these, with the plates, he gave to Mr. Nichols, for the use of his history of that county. B. at Leicester, 1735; n. 1797.—His collection of scarce and curious books was sold by auction

FARNABY, Thomas, fur'-na-be, an eminent English schoolmaster, who, after a variety of fortune, settled in London, where he acquired great reputation as a teacher. In 1616 he was admitted to the degree of M.A. at Cambridge. admitted to the degree of M.A. at Cambridge.
In the civil war he was imprisoned for his loyalty, and died in 1647. n. in London, about 1676. He published Jurenal and Persias; Seneca's "Tragedles;" Martial; Lucam's "Pharsalia," and other classical authors, with notes;
"Index Rhetoricus et Poeticus;" Floritejtum
Epigrammutum Gracorum;" and "Systema
Systema

Grammaticum

FLENESE, Pier Luigi, fur-nai-se, the first duke of Parma and Placentia, was the son of Pope Paul III. by a secret marriage, before he became a cardinal. He was assassinated by his subjects, on account of his oppressive conduct, FARNESE, Alexander, a Roman cardinal, was the cldest son of the above. Charles V. said, that if all the members of the sacred college were like Farnese, it would be the most august assembly in the world. B. 1520; D. 1589.

FARNESE, Alexander, third duke of Parma, and nephew of the preceding, his mother being Margaret, a princess of Austria, distinbeing Margaret, a princess of Austria, unsunguished himself as an able general in the service of Philip II. against the Netherlanders, and afterwards in the Catholic army in France, in afterwards the League against Henry IV. He was wounded at the siege of Caudebec, and died soon after, at Arras, in 1692. B. 1848.—(For an account of this commander's exploits, see Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic.") in Derbyshire, where he died, 1736. B. in Derbyshire. He translated the "Life of Pope Sixtus V. from the Italian, 1754, folio; Davila's "History of the Civil Wars of France," in 1757, 2 vols. 4to; the Works of Machiavelli, 1761, 2 vols. 4to; and Fleury's "History of the Israelites," 12mo.

FARQUHAR, George, far'-quor, an English comic writer, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and quitted that seat of learning for the boards of the Dublin theatre. Here, while playing Guoymar, in the "Indian Emperor" playing Guoymar, in the "Indian Emperor" of Dryden, he was so unfortunate as to stab a brother actor, when he relinquished the stage and proceeded to London, where he received from the earl of Orrery a lieutenamcy in his lordship's regiment. He now commenced writing for the theatre, and in 1693 appeared which got the theater, and in 1682 appeared his first dramatic piece, entitled "Love in a Bottle," which met with success. This was followed, in 1700, by the "Constant Couple, or Trip to the Jubilee." The same year he was in Trip to the Jubilee." The same year ne was un Holland, of which country he has given a humorous description in his Letters. In 1701 appeared the comedy of "Sir Harry Wildair," and the year following, his "Miscellanies." In 1703 he brought out "The Inconstant, or the Way to Win Him." His next piece was the country of the Marchitting Officer." His Way to Win Him." His next piece was the popular play of "The Recruting Officer." His last comedy was "The Beau's Stratagem," which also had a great run, and is his best production. B. in Londonderry, 1678; D. 1707, Farquhar's comedies are lively, natural, and full of business; but they are also extremely licen-tions. Cibber, in his "Lives," thus speaks of him and his comedies:—"He seems to have been a man of genius rather sprightly than great, rather flowery than solid. His comedies are diverting. because his characters are natural, and such as because his characters are natura, and such as we frequently meet with; but he has used no art in drawing them, nor does there appear any force of thinking in his performances, or any deep penetration into nature; but rather a superficial view, pleasant enough to the eye, though capable of leaving no great impression on the mind."

FARRAGUT, David, far'-ra-gut, a distinguished admiral in the United States navy, born towards the close of the eighteenth century, who entered the service in 1810. He served in the Essex in the war with Great Britain, 1812-14, and had the command of the Saratoga in the Mexican war, 1845-8. In the American civil war he assisted 1845-8. In the American civil war he assisted in the reduction of New Orleans and Vicksburg, and, after suffering defeat at Wilmington in 1864, took that place and Mobile in 1865.

Farsay, Eliza, fur-ren, countess of Derby, accelerated acteus, was the daughter of a surgeon at Cork, who afterwards became a provincial actor, and died at an early age, leaving his family in difficult circumstances. Elizates of the control of the country of t made her first appearance in 1773, appeared at the Haymarket in 1777, and subsequently at Drury Lane and Covent Garden. While con-Dray Lane and Covent Gatter with the Duke of Newcastle's mansion in Privy-gardens, she became acquainted with the earl of Derby, who married her in 1797. She was of irreproachable moral character, and was received by George support of the league against Henry IV. He was wounded at this siege of Caudebee, and died III. and his consort at court. 2. 1759; p. 1859, second of this commander's exploits, see list, general, who served with great reputation and the construction of the commander's exploits, see list, general, who served with great reputation in France, where he obtained several high posts are a fixed when the high lish held possessions in that king-divine, who obtained the rectory of Carsington, dom. In 1440 he returned to his own country, 3858 and distinguished himself as a ft³, and to the poor, a former wife, to death; but her infidelity be and an encourager of learning. The was a considerable benefactor to the unite'sity of Cambi 328. bridge, and to Magdalen College, Oxford. B. at Strange, and conaguated Conege, Oxford. B. at Yarmouth, 1377; n. 1459. Though there be a strong similarity in the names, he is not to be taken for Sir John Falstaff, the knight so humorously rendered by Shakspeare in some of his historical values of the historical values of the historical values of the same of the historical values of the same of the historical values of the same of the humorcusty rendered by Shakspeare in some of his historical plays and comedies.

FAUGURY, Claude, for shan, o French antiquary, whose works are "daulish and French Antiquities;" "The Liberties of the Gallican Church;" "The Origin of Knights, Armorial Bearings, and Heralds;" "Origin of Dignities and Margistrates in France," all printed together as Paris, in 1610, 400, n. 1550; p. 1601.

FAUCHET, Claude, a French priest, who be-came vicar-general to the archbishop of Bruges and preacher to Louis XVI. That monarch, however, was disgusted with his excessive vanity and theatrical mode of action, which, it vanny and theartest more of account, which it is said, made Fauchet a violent revolutionist. He took a leading part in storming the Bastille, and preached a thanksgiving sermon on the occasion. In another address, he designated Jesus Christ as the first sans culotte in the world. He entered among the Illuminati, and, in 1791 bishop of Bayenx. He was also deputy for the department of Calvados to the Legislative Assembly, and afterwards a member of the Assembly, and afterwards a memoer of the Convention. B. in Dorne, 1744; guillottined, 1793. His works are, "A Panegyric on St. Louis," pronounced before the French Academy, "A Funeral Oration for the Duke of Orleans," "Eulogium on Benjamin Franklin," "Discourse on Universal Manners," &c .- There are several other French writers of this name.

TAUST, or FEST, JOHN, JOHN, a goldsmith of Mentz, who is said by some to have been the inventor of printing. He is, however, supposed only to have assisted Guttenberg, and his own sononly to have assisted Guttenberg, and his own som-in-law Schoeffer, in bringing this noble disco-very to perfection. The first production, by the new process of metallic types, was produced in 1459, and was entitled "Durrand Rationale Divinorum Olidoriom," by Faust and Schoeffer. This was succeeded by the "Catholicon Joannis Januensis." The greatest work, however, of all was the Bible, in 1462; previous to which they had executed two beautiful editions of the Psatter. The story of Faust's being arrested as a magician to Paris, on account of the exacta magician at Paris, on account of the exact-ness of the copies of the Bible which he took thither for sale, is not entitled to credit. He was there in 1466, and is supposed to have died soon after.

FAUST, Dr. John, a German philosopher, who, cducated at Wittemberg, thence proceeded to Inpolstadt, where he studied medicine with great success, and, it is said, astrology and magic also; expending, in prosecuting his chemical experiments, a considerable fortune, left him by an uncle. His countrymen, in their ignorance, imagined him one having dealings with supernatural powers; and this view of Faust subse-quently formed a fertile theme for the dramatist. quently formed a terrile theme for the gramatist, poet, and musician, as well as for the sculptor and painter. Goothe, especially, in his "Faust," has depicted, with a rich imagination, the doctor and his sprite attendant, Mephisto-pheles. Lived in the first half of the 16th century.

FAUSTA, Plavia Maximiana, faus'-ta, the se-cond wife of Constantine the Great. By her accusations the emperor put his son Crispus, by FAUSTINA, Annia Galeria, the elder, fausti'-na, was the daughter of Annius Verus, and the wife of Antoninus Pius. Notwithstanding the wife of Antoninus Pius. Notwithstanding her debancheries, the emperor would not divorce her. D. 141, aged about 37.—Her daughter was the wife of Marcus Aurelius, and exceeded mother in dissoluteness. D. 175.

Fayarr, Charles Simon, fav'ar, a Freuch composer of operas, whose pieces are numerous and excellent. They make 10 vols. in Svo. D. at Paris, 1719. D. there, 1792.—His wife was an admirable actress and singer. She died in 1772;

в. 1727.

FAVRE, Jules Gabriel Claude, farv(r), an emi-nent French barrister, who commenced his pub-lic life by taking part in the revolution of 1830, and soon acquired notoriety as one of the chief advocates of republicanism in France. He was under-secretary for foreign affairs in 1848, and under-secretary for foreign attains in 1848, and became a determined opponent of Napoleon III. after his election to the presidency, and still more so after the own d'etat of December 2, 1851. He was returned to the legislative assembly as one of the representatives for Paris in 1853; conducted the defence of Orsini for his attempt on the life of Napoleon III, in the same year; and, in 1868, was elected to fill the chair that the death of Victor Cousin left vacant in the French Academy. Lyons, 1809.

FAWCETT, Sir William, fuw'-set, an English general, whose military predilections were early discovered, when he offered himself as a volunteer to serve in Flanders, and was soon pre-sented with a pair of colours. He paid unresented with a pair of colours. He paid unre-mitted attention to his duty, and, in his leisure hours, studied the French and German lan-guages. While a lieutenant in the Guards, he translated from the former the "Reveries, or translated from the former the "keveries, or Memoirs upon the Art of War, by Field-Marshal Count Saxe," published in 4to, in 1757. He also translated from the German, "Regulations for Count Saxa," published in 4to, in 1/97. He also translated from the German, "Regulations for the Prussian Cavalry," published the same year. This work was followed by "Regulations for the Prussian Infantry," to which was added "Prus-sian Tacties," published in 1759. On General Elliott being ordered to Germany, in the Seven Verset Wire. We Everatt Countyperiod, bits and Years' War, Mr. Fawcett accompanied him as aide-de-camp. Subsequently he was attached, in the same capacity, to the marquis of Granby, who sent him to England with the account of the battle of Warburgh. He was soon afterwards promoted to a company in the Guards, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Frederick the Great, king of Prussia, made him flattering offers to induce him to enter into his service, which, however, he declined. His services and high character were duly valued by his king and country, and he was made knight of the Bath, colonel of the 3rd regiment of Dragoon Guards, and governor of Chelsea Hospital B. near Halifax, Yorkshire, 1728; p. 1804, and was buried with great pomp in the chapel of Chelsea

FAWRES, Guido, or Guy, fawks, the most active and daring conspirator in the "Gumpowder Plot," which was designed, in 1605, to blow up king, bords, and bishops, in the House of Parliament assembled. He was of a respectable family in Yorkshire; but entered into the Spanish army in Flanders, and in 1598 was at the taking of Calais by the Archduke Albert. Little more is known of his history, beyond his connexion with the conspirators, who had pledged themselves by an oath to blow up the House of Lords, on account of James I, having given an assurance to his council, "that he had never any intention of granting toleration to the Catholics." Fawkes had undertaken to fire the powder which had been concealed under the devoted house; but about twelve o'clock, on the night of the 4th of November, was caught in the cellar, with matches and a dark lantern, ready to perform the deed for which he and seven others suffered on the scaffold in 1606.

Fawkes

FAWKES, Francis, an English poet and divine, who took his degree in arts at Jesus College, Cambridge. On entering into orders, he settled at Bramham, Yorkshire, but afterwards obtained at Brainnam, Yorkshire, but afterwards obtained the vicarage of Orpington, in Kent, which he exchanged for the rectory of Hayes, where he dided in 1777. B, in Yorkshire, 1721. His published a volume of poems and translations of Anaereon, Sappho, Bion, Moschus, and Theocritus. His version of the "Argonauties" of Anallonius was unbilished in 1750. Mr. Fawkes Apollonius was published in 1750. Mr. Fawkes also lent his name to an edition of the Bible with notes. It was in translation, however, that he excelled. The "Odes of Anaereon," Dr. Johnson says, are finely translated.

Fax, Charles François de Cisternai du, fai, an eminent French naturalist and chemist, who, as superintendent of the Jardin des Plantes in Paris, raised that establishment to be one of the greatest of the kind in Europe. He obtained distinction also by his researches concerning phosphoric light in the mercurial vacuum in the barometer, and in connexion with the salts of lime, the magnet, and the nature of electri-city. Buffon, through his influence, was named city. Bullon, through his mittenere, was named a bis successor at the Jardin des Plantes. His writings appeared in the "Transactions of the Academy of Sciences," of which he was a member. n. at Paris, 1093; n. 1739.

FAYDIT, Anselm, fair de, a Provencal port, or troubadour, who was patronized by Richard Cœur de Lion. D. 1220. He wrote a poem on the death of Richard I., "The Palace of Love," and several comedies.

FAYDIT, Peter, a French priest of the congre-FATDER, Feter, a French priest of use congre-gation of the Oratory, whence he was compelled to remove, for publishing a book on the Carte-sian philosophy, contrary to a prohibition from his superiors. He also wrote "Illustrations of Ecclesiastical History," Syo: "A Treatise on the Trinity," for which he was imprisoned; and a wretched critique on Telemachus. B. 1649; D. 1709.

D. 1709.
F. Mary Magdalene, Countess de la fai-ée, the wile of the Count de la Fayette, wrote the romances of "Zuide," and the "Princes of Cieves," also the "Prince de Montpensier," "Memoirs of the Count of France," the "History of Henrietta of England," and ether works. S. 1632; p. 103.
FAYETER, LA. (See IA FAYETER)
FAZIO, BATCOlome, p. 42-ee, an Italian biographer and historian of the 15th century, was some from humble arrents, but divisione a grapher and instorain of the loth century, was spring from humble parents, but obtaining a knowledge of Greek and Latin, was patronized by Alfonso, king of Naples, at whose instance he translated into Latin Arrian's "History of Alexander the Great." His principal original work is entitled "De Viria Hlustribus," and contains short memoirs of the most eminent of the contemporaries. a new Snezio in the his contemporaries. B. near Spezia, in the Gulf of Genoa, 1400; D. 1457.

FEARNE, Clarles, feern, an English write; on jurisprudence and metaphysics, was educated at Westminster school, and became a member of the Inner Temple. He subsequently practised as a chamber counsel and conveyancer, and was eminently successful. He wrote a great many works on legal subjects, besides compiling cases and opion legal studects, besides compiling cases antiopnions on interesting causes, and was the author of a metaphysical work entitled "An Essay on Consciousness; or, a Series of Evidences of a Distinct Alind." In 1791, n. 1794. Francis, Daniel, feel-4; a controversial divine, who studied at Corpus Christit Collego, Oxford, where he obtained a Eldowship, and was afterwards rector of Lambeth. He won distinction by maintaining a controversy with two Jesuits, in recompense for which Archbishop Josnits, in recompense for which Archbishop Abbot gave him the livings of Alihallows, Breadstreet, London, and Acton, Middlesex. His principal work is entitled "Clavis Mystica; a key opening divers difficult Texts of Scripture." He held disputes likewise with the Anabaptists, and wrote a tract against them with the quaint and wrote a tract against them with the quantitie of "The Dipper Dipt, or, the Anabaptist plunged over Head and Ears, and Shrunk in the Washing." n. at Charlton-upon-Otmore, Oxfurdshire, 15-2; p. 19-5.

Finns, Philip François Nazarie, felt, was a comparation of the passessed for th sprung from mean parentage, but, possessed of a restless spirit and some ability, he became successively autor, comic writer, and statesman.

When sixteen, he received the prize from the French Academy for a poem called the "Study of Nature;" and soon afterwards had awarded to him the poetical prize at the Floral Garres of Toulouse. This prize was a golden eglantine, or wild rose, and from this circumstance he thenceforth called himself D'Eglantine. He threw himself into the revolutionary movement, and came prominently into notice in the insur-rection of the 10th of August, and shortly afterwards obtained the post of secretary to Danton, then minister of justice. He joined Danton in the schemes of the Hebertists, aided in the ruin of the Girondists, and then joined Robespierre against his former associate Hebert, pierre against his former associate Hebert, These intrigues, however, led to the downfa'l of Danton and his associates, and pellorine at tried along with his chief, and gullotined in 1794. D. at Carcarome, 1775. FECHTER, Charles Albert, fisk-ter, an actor who acquired celebrity in London for his per-formance of Hamlet. He became lessee of the formance of Hamlet. He became lessee of the Lyceum theatre in 1863, and produced many sensational melodramas with much success. B.

in London about 1823.

FECKENHAM, John de, fck'-en-ham, the last abbotof Westminster, whose right name was Howman, but who was called Feckenham from the place of his birth. On the commencement of the Reformation, he opposed it with spirit, and was sent to the Tower, where he continued till was sent to the tower, where he continues un-queen Mary's necession, when he was made abbot of Westminster. Queen Elizabeth, whose life he had saved by his remonstrances with Mary when the latter designed her death, would have made him erhibidop of Canter-bury, if he would have conformed; but he ra-fused. He sai in her first parliament, and protested against the Reformation; for which he was committed to the Tower. He continued in confinement till 1563, and was then delivered to the care of the bishop of Winchester. B. at Feekenham, Worcestershire; D. in the castle of Wisbeach, in 1595. He was a learned and C C 2

TEDOB I., Ivanovich, fai'-dor, the last ezar of the dynasty of Rurick, on the throne of Russia. He began his reign in 1584, and being weak, both in body and mind, assigned the govern-ment of his affairs to Godonoff, who seems to have managed them with dexterity and vigour. In his reign the peasants of Muscovy were converted into seris, and attached to the land. Treviously, they had enjoyed personal liberty. The conquest of Siberia was achieved in the reign of his father, Ivan IV., and many negotiations with foreign courts were effected; so that this period may be deemed by no means the least remarkable in the Muscovite annals. B. 1557; n. 1598. Fron II Morievich exar of Russia, and eldert brother of Peter the Great, ascended the throne when only nineteen years of age, and evinced a strength of will and determination of character, which, had he lived, might have anticinated the reforms which his younger brother was subsequently destined to effect among the people over whom he was called to reign. Fedor's people over whom howes called to reign. Fedor's sway is rendered memorable, on account of his calling into his presence the Muscovite nobles, who desolated the country with broils about their claims to family precedence, and throwing the rolls of the "Razriad," or Arrangement, it to the fire. The genealogical records, which did not relate to claims to precedence, were predicted to the country of the country served and properly arranged, in accordance with his will. B. 1657; D. 1682.

with ms will. n. 1807; D. 1905.

Ferry, Rhywis, file, a distinguished Dutch wiler in the paths of poetry, fiction, and the drama. His most successful poen, which is entitled "Fanny," made its appearance in 1703.
His novels never enjoyed a high reputation and his best dramm is named "Thirray or, the Grindle of Dutlaton" His news had a citi. Triumph of Religion. His muse had a religious east; and two poems of the didactic kind, entitled "Old Age." and "The Grave" were very much extolled by his countrymen. His works, in 13 volumes, were printed at the Hague, in 1825. B. at Zwolle, 1753; D. there, 1824

FELDREN, André, fe-lib'e-en, a French his-toriographer, who wrote "Entretiens sur les Vica, et sur les Ouvrages des plus excellens Peintres," 5 vols. 4to; "The Principles of Architecture, Painting, and Sculpture," ato; and "Conferences of the Royal Academy of Painting." He became superintendent of the royal buildings at Paris, and was the friend of Nicholas Poussin, whose acquaintance he made at Rome. 2. at Chartres, 1619; p. 1695.—His sons, John François and Michael, were also ingenious men. The first succeeded him in his places, and wrote "The Lives of Celebrated Architectis," 4to; and "A Description of Versilles," in 1733.—Michael was a Benedictine Cf St. Maur, and wrote "The History of the Albey of St. Denis," folio: and began "The History of Paris," which was afterwards completed by Lobinean, in 5 vols. folio. p. 1679.— Painting." He became superintendent of the pleted by Lobineau, in 5 vols. folio. n. 1679.— James Felibien, the brother of André, was canon of Chartres and archdeacon of Vendôme. He wrote several religious works. B. 1624; D.

FELICE, Fortuné Barthélemy de, fai-le-chai, an indefatigable continental writer, who was originally a professor of sciences at Rome and Naples. Compelled to quit Rome in conse liberal man, charitable to the voor, and the author of some controversial piaces.

And Switzerland, finally taking up his residence frames and Switzerland, finally taking up his residence frames. The proof. I wontone his defending the many taking up his residence at Berne, where he continued his scientific labours, and connected himself with Haller. Here he embraced Protestantism and married Subsequently he formed, at Yverdun, in the can-ton of Vand, a large printing establishment. ton or vaud, a large printing establishment, whence issued a number of good books, he, at the same time, successfully directing an academy. His first publications were translations, from the English and French into Italian and Latin, of those scientific works which he wished to make known to Italy; among others, those of Newton, Descartes, Maupertuis, and D'Alembert. From 1758, he edited, with Tscharner, some literary 1758, he edited, with Tscharner, some literary and scientific journals, which were held in high estimation, as also several other writings of great merit. Finally he published, from 1770 to 1776 to works here named, his country owes to him the production of other instructive and well-digested volumes. B. at Rome, 1723; D. at Yverdun, 1789.

FELIX I., fe'-lix, succeeded Pone Dionysius in 269, and was canonized. He wrote an epistle against Sabellius and Paulus Samosatenus, which is extant. p. 275.

Fellx II., antipope, was placed in the papal chair in 355, by the emperor Constans, during the exile of Liberius, on the return of whom he was expelled. Constans would have had the two popes reign together; but the peuple exclaimed, "One God, one Christ, and one bishop!" Felix was then exiled, and died in 365.

FELIX III, succeeded Simplicius, in 483. He had a violent dispute with the emperor Zeno in behalf of the Western church, and died in 492, behalf of the Western church, and dued in 492.

FELIX IV, a native of Denevento, ascended the chair after John L. in 528. He governed the church with zeal and piet, and died in 580.
FELIX bloop of Urgella, in Catalonia, espoused the notion of his friend Elipand, arch the supposed the notion of his friend Elipand, arch sistop of Toledo, that Jesus Christ was the so of God only by adoption. For this, Charlemagne caused him to be denosed and haveished to Yours caused him to be deposed and banished to Lyons, where he died in $15.

Fell, John, fel, a learned English prelate, who was educated at Christchurch, Oxford, of which his father was dean. In the civil war he was ejected from the college for his loyalty. At the Kestoration he was made canon and dean of Christehurch, to which college he was a ol Christenturch, to which college he was either albenfentor. He served the office of vice-chancellor several times, and, in 1675, was made bishop of Oxford, with leave to hold the deamery in commendam, a. at Longworth, Berkshire, 1625; p. 1886. His works are, "The Life of Dr. Hammond." "A Paraphrase on St. Paul's Epister Cellife." tles," editions of several ancient authors, with notes; as Cyprian and others. The bishop's father was turned out of his deanery by the Parliamentarians, in 1647, and died of grief for the execution of the king.

Fell, John, an English dissenting minister, who, from being bred a tailor, became resident tutor in the dissenting academy at Homerton. Here he had not long been, when a misunderquence of an intrigue with the countess of standing arose between him and the managers of that institution, which ended in his dismissal, 1588.—John Nelton, grandson of the first-without being heard in his own defence. Some named, assas, insted the Duke of Buckingham friends then subscribed for him a yearly stippend in 1628, for yinch he was tried and executed. of £100, for which he was to deliver a course of of allow, for which he was to deriver a course of lectures on the evidences of Christianity. Four of these were given by him in 1707; but the treatment he had received brought on a comtreatment he had received brought on a com-plaint, of which he died in that year. B. at Cockermouth, Cumberland, 1735. Mr. Fell was the author of an answer to Mr. Farmer's "Essay on the Demoniacs," and another in reply to that gentleman, "On the Idolatry of Greece and gentleman, "On the Idolatry of Greece and Rome;" an "Essay on the Love of One's Coun-try," "Genuine Protestantism," "A Letter to Mr. Burke on the Penal Laws," "An Essay towards an English Grammar," and several other papers.

papers.

FELLENBERG, Emanuel de, fell-en-bairy, a Swiss nobleman, who, after taking part in the public affairs of his country during the occupation of the French, which he did all in his power to resist, devoted his life and fortune to the cause of education. In 1798, he purchased an estate near Berne, where he organized a system of taition which was designed to show what education could do for humanity. His life from this time is a continued record of hemoralest enterprises, belowing for the diffusion benevolent enterprises, labours for the diffusion of knowledge, and the improvement of the people. He possessed singular tact in disarming the opposition of interested or jealous opponents, and ultimately accomplished a large measure of success for his favourite projects. B. at Berne, 1771; D. 1814.

FELLER, Joachim Frederick, fell-ler, a learned German, who became secretary to the duke of Weimar, and published "Monumenta Varia incidita," 1714, 4to; "Miscellanea Leibnitiana," "Genealogy of the House of Brunswick," &c.

"Genealogy of the House of Brunswick," &c. B. 1673; D. 1728.

FELLER, Francis Xavier, an ex-Jesuit, who published, at Luxemboure, "An Historical Mad Literary Journal," from 1774 to 1794, "A Geographical Dictionary," and "The Historical Dictionary," as Vols Svo, at Liège. The editors of the last edition of the "Nouvean Dictionarie Historique" are very severe on him on account of this last work, which they call a phracy committed on their own. E. at Brussels, 1735; D. at Ratisbon, 1802. Feller also wrote "Observations on the Philosophy of Newton," "Observations on the Philosophy of Newton," "An Impartial Examination of the Epochs of Nature, by Buffon," &c.

Fellows, Sir Charles, fel'-lows, a traveller, who, in 1838, made a tour in Asia Minor, and explored the banks of the ancient Xanthus, and discovered the ruins of Xanthus, the ancient capital of Lycia, Tlos, and thirteen other cities, in all of which he found a greater or less number in and winding sound a greater of ress number of works of art. A large proportion of these work of works of art. A large proportion of these work of the state of the proposition of the piritial Museum. In 1862 he republished the journals of his tarvels in a cheap form, under the title of "Invital and Researches in Asia Minor particular of the proposition of the propositio was knighted for his discoveries. B. at Nottingham, 1799; p. 1860.

FELTON, John, fel'-ton, a Catholic gentleman, who placed the pope's bull, excommunicating Queen Elizabeth, upon the gates of the bishop of London's palace, for which he was executed, in 1570.—His son Thomas was an ecclesiastic of the order of St. Francis, and, visiting England as a missionary, was apprehended and executed, in in 1623, for visich he was tried and executed.

FELTER, Hanri Jacques Guillaume Clarke, Duc de, feldr, entered the French military service in 1781, and, by the time he was twenty-seven years of age, he had risen to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, chiefly by the patronage of the duke of Orleans. In 1788 he was made general; and, in 1795, was sent on a secret mission to Vienna, and to the seat of war in Italy, for the purpose of watching the ambitious movements of Napoleon I. In a short time, however, he was fascinated by the rising star of that great man, entered his service, and, throughout his varying fortunes, continued with him till his fall. In 1807 he was made Minister of War, an office which he retained, through much ill-will and clamour, till 1814. In 1809 he was made duke of Feltre. After the fall of the emperor, he served Louis XVIII.; but his merits, however appreciated by the sovereign, were not proof against the continual attacks of other courtiers, and he was sent into a kind of honourable exile at Rouen, with the command of the 3rd division. B. at Landrecies, 1765; D. at Rouen, 1818.

Fe'ne'Lon, Francis de Salignac de Lamothe, fai'-nai-laung, archbishop of Cambral, com-pleted his studies at Paris, where, when young, he distinguished himself as a preacher. In 1636 he was employed by Louis XIV. as a mis-1686 he was employed by Louis Altv. as a mis-sionary in Poitou, to convert the Protestants, and, by his persuasive eloquence, made many friends. In 1689 he became tutor to the dukes of Burgundy, Anjou, and Berri, which office he discharged so well, that he was preferred to the architecture of Cambral. About this time he fell into trouble, on account of his book entitled "The Maxims of the Saints," which was charged "The Maxims of the Saints," which was charged with favouring the mystical principles of Madame de Guyon. Bossuet, bishop of Meanx, who was a violent enemy of that celebrated mystic, attacked the archbishop, and by his influence with the king obtained an order for him to be bamished to his diocese. The book was also condemned at Rome by Pope Innocent VIII., and, to his censure, Fénélou submitted with profound deference, and even read the decree from the pulpit. He spent the remainder of his days in his diocese, and never recovered the king's favour, owing, in a great measure, to his composing, for his royal pupil, the duke of Burgundy, "Telemachus," in which Louis imagined he discovered some passages reflecting on himself. The good archbishop, however, bore his exile with the serenity of conscious integrity. His charities were unbounded, and so revered was his character, that the duke of so revered was his character, that the duke of Mariborough, and other generals of the allies, when possessed of that part of Flanders, exempted his lands from pillage or exaction. n. at the Castle of Fénélon, in Perigord, 1851; p. 1715, without meney and without debt. Beside the above works, he wrote "Dialogues of the Dead," "Dialogues of the Dead," "Dialogues of the Castle of on the Education of Daughters," a "Demon-stration of the Existence of God," and "Spiri-tual Works." Fénélon is inferior in force and sublimity to his countryman Bossuet, but no author has, perhaps, surpassed him in the grace and charm of his style; he has been one of the most successful of writers in modern times in reproducing the noble simplicity of the ancients. As a man and Christian, he practised virtue, as he taught it, and caleed the name and escence of religion to be loves, and respected. Many of his works are lost, for, on the death of the ducks of Bargundy, Louis XLV, caucel several of his writings to be burned, which were found amongst the prince's papers.—His grand-nephew, the Abbé de Fénélon, was chaplain to Maria Lecuhski, wife of Louis XLV, and undertook the direction of an establishment charitably founded for the support of the little Savoyards in Paris, in spite, however, of his virtues and benevolence, he was arrested and brought before the revolutionary tribunal, which condemned him to death. All the Savoyards in Paris, hastened to the Convention of demand pardon for him, whom they called their "good father." Their prayers were vain; he was executed in 1704. In at St. Jean des Tallais, 5114.

Fenn

Ferdinand

First, Sir John, f.n. an English antiquary who edited the well known "Paston Letters," written during the reigns of Henry VI. Edward VI., Richard III., and Henry VII., two volumes of which were published in 1787, dedicated to George III., who, in recompense, knighted the compiler. In 1780 two more volumes appeared, illustrated with notes, p. 1799; p. 1794.
Farnow, Edward, far'-ton, an English navigator in the time of Elizabeth, who accompanied Sir Martin Frobisher in search of a methorast research and fact the failure of Sir archarast research and after the failure of Sir FRITON, Edward, Jew-ton, an Legitish navigator in the time of Elizabeth, who accompanied Sir Martin Frobisher in search of a north-west passage, and after the failure of Sir Martin's attempt, he, in the spring of 1583, salled on a similar expedition, with four vessels. He did not accomplish the object of the vorges, but meeting with a Spanish squadron, he gave them battle, and after a severe conflict, sunk their vice-adminal's ship. He returned home in 1583, and had a command in the fleet opposed to the Spanish Armada in 1583, and distinguished himself by bravery and skill in sundry encounters with the enemy. He was descended from an ancient family of Nottinghamshire, and died at Deptford in 1903, where a monument to his memory was creeted by Richard, earl of Cork, who had married his niece.

Envroy, Sir Geoffey, a writer and stateman, was the brother of the preceding, and enjoyed a large measure of the confidence of Queen Elizabeth, who employed him in freland, where he was the means of estilinguishing more than one rededline. He always endeavoured to persuade Elizabeth that the Irish were only to be governed by adherence to the strict rules of justice, equality, and security in the possession of their property and personal liberty. Sir Geoffrey was the translator of Guiccindurity effects of the was of Italy," and wrote, besides, a vast number of works more or less of an ephemeral charactor, which were published at various times between 1871 and 1579. He was married to a daughter of Pr. Robert Warton, lord-chancellor of Ireland, and dean of the arches in England, and, in 1693, his only daughter, Katherine, was married to Mr. Boyle, after wards can of Cork, a man of first eminear his time. Sir Geoffrey Fenton was born in Nottinghamshire, and field at Dublin in 1609.

wards can of copy, a man of measurements in itime. Sir Geoffery Femion was born in Notinghamshire, and died at Dublin in 1608. FERTOR, Elijad, an English poet, who was for some time usher of a school in Surrey, and afterwards master of one at Sevenoaks, in Kent. In 1710 he became secretary to the earl of Orrery, and tutor to his son. He afterwards lived with Lady Trumbull as tutor to her son, and died at her seat in Derkshire, in 1730. n. at Shelton, Staffordshire, 1633. He wrote some poems; the "Life of Milton," the tragedy of "Marianne," and assisted Pope in his translation of the "Odyssey."

FERDINAND, for di-nand, a name derived from the German verdienen, "to merit," and which has been borne by several emperors of Germany, kings of Spain, Naples, Sicily, &c.

EMPERORS OF GERMANY.

FERDINAND I., emperor of Germany, succeeded his brother Charles V. in 1589, at which time Ferdinand was king of the Romans, and of Huncary and Bohemia. He made peace with the Turks, and died in 1564, leaving the character of a wise and humane prince. B. 1503.
FERDINAND II, was the son of the archdaige

FREITAND II, was the sond the thredame of Styria, and was elected king of Bohemia and of Hingary. Soon afterwards he succeeded Matthias as emperor. The Bohemian states having chosen the elector palatine Frederick to be their king, the latter raised an army of Frotestants against the emperor, and thus was commenced the struggle Innown as the "Thirty Years" War," lasting from 1018 to 1848. Feedland Gefarded Frederick at Prague in 1820, and deprived him of his states. As econol league was then formed against. As econol league was the formed against. the emperor by the Protestant princes, headed by Christian IV. of Denmark, who was defeated by Tilly, and forced to sign a treaty of peace at Lubeck, in 1629, which put an end to the war. Another league was now formed, at the head of which was Gustavus Adolphus, who defeated the Imperialists in different batties, but was himself sinh at Lutzen, in 1632. A partial peace was afterwards made between the emperor and some of the Protestant princes, but it was soon broken, and the war renewed. D. 1637, Maximilian of Boarda, Tilly, and Wallenstein, were amongst Ferdinand's generals. (See those names.)

TREDIMAND III., the son of the above-named, was made king of Hungary in 1825, of Bohemia in 1827, and succeeded his father in 1837. Sweden and France being in alliance, gained several advantages over the Imperialists in the war carried on between the beligerents, and which terminated with the peace of Westphalia in 1824, 3.1685, 1.1667.

Sovereigns of Spain (Castile, Leon, Aragon, &c.)

FREDRIAND I, king of Castile and Leon, called the Grast, was the second son of Sanotho II, king of Navarre. By the death of Bermudo, in 1307, he became king of Leon. He then made war against the Moors, from whom he took several cities, and pushed his conquests as fir as Portugal. He next declared war against his brother, Garcias III, king of Navarne, in which that prince lost his kingdom and his life. p. 1005.

D. 1065.
FEEDTMAND II., son of Alphonso VIII., king of Leon in 1167, gained great advantages over the Portuguese, and made their king, Alphonso Henriquez, prisoner, whom he used with moderation. D. 1188. In the reign of this prince, the military order of St. James was instituted, for the purpose of defending the dominions of the Christian powers against the Stracens.

FERDINAND III., surnamed the Saint, son of Alphonso IX., obtained the crown of Castile and Leon at the death of Henry I. in 1217.

Ferdinand.

e²erdinand

From this time these states remained united. the took many places from the Moors; but while he was projecting an expedition against Marocco, died, in 1252. He was canonized by Pope Clement X., and is regarded as the founder

Pope Clement X., and is regarded as the founder of the university of Salamanea.
FERDINAND IV. Succeeded to the throne of Castile in 1295, at the age of ten years, under the guardianship of his mother, who governed the kingdom with great prudence. D. 1312. His reign was marked by constant conflicts with the Moors. This prince, in a fit of anger, to form his desicns upon Spain. With the view to disconnect fordinand from the projects of Godoy, the Fr nch emperor proposed a matri-monial alliance between him and the daughter of Lucien Bonaparte, which was entertained by Ferdinand, but prevented by Godov, who in-formed Charles IV. of the design, and so exaspenormat charins 1. of the design, and so exasperated the king against the prince, that he was imprisoned in the Escurial. Soon afterwards a public reconciliation took place, when the French army entered Spain, and the public indignation rose to a high pitch against Godoy, in thirty hours from that time. Their prediction was verified, and thence he obtained the name of the "Summoned."

declared war against Alphonso, king of Portuwas proclaimed his successor, and immediately assumed the reins of government. Meanwhile the French advanced towards Madrid, when name of the "summoned.

FERDINARD V, called the "Catholic," son of Ferdinand sont a departation requesting the John II, king of Aragon, married Isabella of preservation of amity with Napoleon; but that the two kingdoms of Castile and Aragon. He is the two kingdoms of Castile and Aragon. He most remarkable event which signalized his composor demanded his renunciation of the reign, was the discovery of America by Columbus. He also made himself master of part of and minister Godor, resumed possession of Navarre, and by the brilliancy of his successes, throne and government, whilst the Spaniards, placed himself generally at the head of Euroin all directions, were rising in arms. Napocan princes. p. 1516. In 143

Ferdia.

great successes, he has been reproached for his instability and craft, which procured for him the surname of the "Crafty," in addition to that of the Catholic for his victories over the Moors. In all his enterprises he was ably seconded by his consort Isabella, his minister Cardinal

INS COUSOTT ISSACHA, INS MINISTET CATCHINAL XIMENES, and his general Gousalvo de Cordova. (See ISABELLA OF CASTILE and COLUMBUS.) FERDINAND VI., son of Philip V. and of Mary of Savoy, ascended the throne in 1746. This prince distinguished his reign by acts of beneficence, restoring liberty to prisoners, pro-claiming pardon to smugglers and deserters, and assigning two days in each week to rendering justice to his subjects. He took part in the war of 1741, and signed the peace in 1749, which confirmed to one of his brothers the crown of the Two Sicilies, and to the other the dukedom of Parma and Placentia. He re-established his marine, and reformed and promoted arts and agriculture. D. at Madrid, without issue, 1759. A singular coincidence of earthquakes oc-A singular compidence of earthquakes oc-curred in this monarch's reign, no less than three severe shecks occurring in South America and Europe. In 1749, Lima, the capital of Perty, was almost entirely destroyed; Quito, in the same country, experienced a like misfortune in 1755, and seven months after this, many cities and towns in Spain suffered considerably from the earthquake which overthrew Lisbon.

Fredings of Spain and the Indies, was the son of Charles IV, and was, when only six years old, recognised as prince of Asturias. During his minority. Spain was governed by Godoy, who vainly endeavoured to acquire the same influence over his mind that Naples, possessed of great beauty and accom-hments. She, however, is supposed to have 1 poisoned in 1800, when Napoleou L begau http://peec.pteec.in. 1897. On the death of Peter

Joseph Bonaparte, the brother of Napoleon, was proclaimed king, whilst Feedband was placed in confinement at Valencay, where he and his family remained till 1813, when he was restored to the exercise of his regal rights. On returning to his kingdom, he was received with open arms by his people; but on arriving at Madrid, he dissolved the Corte, and assumed the powers of an absolute monarch. The Inquisition was re-established, and those liberals who had fought for the expulsion of the French from the Spanish soil, were persecuted with the utmost rigour, despoiled of their property, and forced to fiee or submit to the axe of the executioner. These measures exasperated the people, who, in 1820, rebelled against Ferdinand and re-established repended against returning and revealulated the Cortes, who endeavoured to stay the progress of the revolution, and adjust the affairs of the kingdom. In 1823 France again declared war against Spain, and the duke of Angoulême, at the head of an army of 100,000 men, entered at the local of in arrhy of 100,000 her, cheese the country, with the avowed purpose of restoring Ferdinand to all his absolute powers. The object was effected, but Ferdinand was not permitted to govern entirely by his own will. His despotiedisposition was cheeked on one side by the dread of the liberals, and on the other by doubts of the friendship of the more violent absolutists, who deemed even the rule of Ferdinand too moderate to satisfy their tyrannical propensities. In this position he continued to reign, though hardly to govern, till 1803, when he died, and was buried with great pomp in the vaults of the chapel of the Escurial. n 1734. By his will he left the crown to his daughter Isabella, under acquire the same influence over his mind that the regency of her mother, Maria Christina, to he had gained over the minds of his parents. the exclusion of Don Carlos, his brother. A In 1801 he married Maria Antonia, a princess of long and disastrous civil war was the conse-

391

Ferdinand

Ferdinand.

the Cruel, king of Castile, he as jumed the latter title, which produced a war between him and Henry of Transtamara, who raviged Portugal, and forced Ferdinand to make peace and marry and forced Fermanu to make peace and many his daughter. This marriage he afterwards discounced, and entered into an alliance with John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, who laid claim to the Castillian throne. This war proved very disastrous to the Portuguese, and Ferdinand was obliged to see for peace. Another war was entered into, in which he was supported by the Uncible and was fur a time ported by the English, and was for a time successful, but was at last under the necessity of making peace. p. 1883.

FEBDYANN, infant of Portugal, son of John I., passed into Africa, at the age of 14, to attack the Moors, and laid siege to Tangier. He was, however, made prisoner by the Moors, and spent the remainder of his life in captivity, dying of chagrin, 1443. This prince's misfortunes have formed the subject of a great number of legends and tales.

SOVEREIGNS OF NAPLES AND SICILY, AND OF ATISTRIA

FREDIMAND I., king of Naples (not of Sicily), succeeded Alphonso in 1458. In his reign, a civil war raged in his kingdom; but, uniting his arms to those of Scanderbeg, prince of Albania, he was enabled to defeat his barons in 1462. His rule, however, was again disturbed by them; when, in 1480, on the occasion of the marriage of his niece, he had many of the leading barons arrested in Naples, where they were thrown into prison, and numbers of them strangled. He was detested for his debaucheries and cruelties; yet he enacted many good laws, and restored the university of Naples. D. 1494.

FERDINAND II. ascended the throne in the year 1495, and entered into a war with the French, who afterwards expelled his successor from Naples. His reign was short, and marked by no event of general public importance. D. at

Naples, 1496.

Naples, 1496.
FERDIMAND III. is the same as Ferdinand the Catholic. (See Ferdinand the Catholic. Ferdinand IV. of Naples, and I. of the Tredinand IV. of Naples, and I. of the Two Stidlies, ascended the throne in 1759, and regined for Soyears. On the breaking out of the French revolution, in 1792, the French demanded that Naples should renounce all commided that Naples should renounce all comnexion with Great Britain; but, on the death of Louis XVI. of France, Ferdinand joined the conlition, and participated in the general war against France, from 1793 to 1796. Two years of peace now intervened; when the victory of of peace now intervened; when the victory of Melson, at Aboulti, once more brought Ferdinand into the field against the French, who defected him, drove him from his kingdom, and proclaimed the Parthenopean Republic in 1789. In the same year, however, the capital was retaken by the royalist army. In 1896 he lost retaken by the forjant army. In 1896 no lost his dominions again, Napoleon conferring the crown, first on his brother Joseph, and after-wards on Murat; Rerdinand, however, by the nid of the English, continuing to reign in Sicily. In 1814, the congress of Vianna maily established Ferdinand as king of the Two Sicilies. In 1820 a revolutionary movement commenced, under the auspices of a secret society called Carbonari, which proclaimed a constitution similar to that of Spain, and convoked a parliament at Naples. Another revolt excited the interest of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, who would not acknowledge the new system of government established at Naples; and resulted, in 1821, in an Austrian army crossing the Po, and moving on Naples. Neapolitans resisted, but were defeated; and the Austrians entered the city. Ferdinand, who had quitted his capital, now returned to it.

who had quitted his capital, now returned to it, and the government again became and continued absolute throughout the remainder of his reign. n. 1731; p. 1825.

FREDIMAND II., king of the TWO Sicilies, surnamed "Bomba," from permitting the city of Messina to be bombarded by Filangieri, was the son of Francis I. and Isabella of Spain. He succeeded his father on bella of Spain. He succeeded his father on the throne of Naples and Sicily in 1830. On his accession, by the introduction of a few liberal measures, the announcement of an amnesty for political offenders, and the promise to heal the pointess occuders, and the promise to field the wounds of this unhappy country, he was received with quite an ovation of joy and gratitude. These feelings were not destined, however, to last long. No sooner did he feel himself securely fixed in his seat, than he, like his father, placed himself in the hands of the clergy, more especially the Jesuits, to whom he at first allowed the monopoly of instruction; and thus they soon obtained supreme power. This they shared to some extent with the police, the latter seizing on all the highest posts in the govern-ment, without, however, being able to hinder conspiracies and risings amongst the people. The reign of king Bomba is but a long recital of these. Three attempts at insurrection were made in the year 1833; others, more serious, took place in 1837, 1841, 1844, and 1847. The king now instituted a procedure of torture, and put a price on the heads of those who were suspected of designs against his authority; many lost their lives, and numerous families were forced into exile. This rigorous rule served only to exasperate the people, and hasten the events of the revolution of 1848. In that year, when the thrones of Europe seemed trem-bling in the balance, the rebellion in Sicily, and the popular manifestation at Naples, forced the king to promulgate and swear to a constitution. Public opinion also forced him to send a corps Lombardy; but, after having succeeded in repressing the revolutionists at Naples, he recalled the troops, and employed them to recalled the troops, and employed anem to extinguish the insurrection in Calabria. Emboldened by his success, he treated with contempt the parliament, which had been assembled by virtue of the new constitution, and in the early part of 1849 declared it dissolved. He then turned his attention to like revolutionary subjects in Sicily, and at the same time under-took his unfortunate campaign against the Roman republic. Sicily being now conquered by Filangieri, and Rome occupied by the French, who had driven out the republicans, Ferdinand II.'s tyramy shew no bounds. The picture of his rule, as drawn by Mr. Gladstone, in 1851, in his famous "Letter to Lord Aberden," struck no one as an exaggeration Vexatious and arbitrary proceedings substituted for the law; the civil code mutilated and defaced; education at a standstill; literature and science lumilitated; a rigorous and puerlie and science lumilitated; a rigorous and puerlie subjects in Sicily, and at the same time underand science lumiliated; a rigorous and puerile censorship of the press; relations with other countries rendered difficult, or altogether interbroke out at Palermo, which was not suppressed countries rendered difficult, or altogether inter-without much bloodshed. This state of things dicted; punishments multiplied; the most honomable citizens exiled,—such is the history of the last years of Bomba's reign. The use that he made of his power seemed to the most absolute of European sovereigns a stigma and disgrace to all government, and grave complaints were made at the congress of Paris, in 1858, and even warnings addressed to him by the diplomatists at his court. In vain, however, all this,—the protested against the slightest interference in the internal affairs of his kingdom: and although France and England proceeded to the extremity of jointly recalling their ambassadors, it had no effect in causing a more gentle rule of the Neapolitans on the part of the king. This conduct totally alienated the affections of his subjects, and even of the army, and led to the casy overthrow of the throne of his son, Francis II. ly Garibaldi, in 1800. B. at Palermo, 1810, when the throne of Naples was occupied by Murat;

De throlle of Newson to Control of Markin, son of Francis I., ascended the imperial throne in 1835, and continued to pursue the policy of his father, leaving the chief direction of affairs in the hands of Prince Metternich. In his reign the republic of Crocowwas aunihaited, and a portion of it added to the empire. During the revolutionary year of 1848 he dismissed Metternich, and declared that the new minister should be responsible, and caused him to prepare a constitution. The concessions not being sufficient, vienna revolted in May, the emperor retring to Innsprack, whence he was induced to return at the pressing solicitations of the Viennaes. The dity rising again in October, Ferdinand established himself at Olmutz, and on December 2 1848, addicated, having no children, in favour of his nephew, Francis Joseph I. n. at Vienna,

L'EXPOUSE, OF DERVISI, for-do-/-e, a celebrated Persian poet, whom Mahmoud commissioned to write the "Shah Nameh," or History of the Persiam Kings. The bard was employed thirty years in executing this immense work, which contains no less than 90,00 couplets, which contains no less than 90,00 couplets, which contains no less than 90,00 couplets, which was giving himself up to the execution of his task, his enemies at court managed to damage thin in the estimation of the king, and forced him, by their calumnies, to fly the kingdom. He rethret to Bagdad, where his great reputation, which had preceded him there, obtained for him the protection of the caliph. After several years eatile, Ferdous was recalled to his country, and passed there the romainder of his days. The "Shah Nameh" was published in London, in Persian, in 1629, and was afterwards franslated into Arable. 2s. at Shadah, but the translated into Arable. 2s. at Shadah, but the translated into Arable. 2s. at Shadah, but the standard was the several years and the standard was the shadah, but the standard was the same several sever transiateu into Arabic. B. at Shadab, in the province of Tus, about 890; p. about 1020.

Fracus I., fer-gus, king of Scotland, was the son of Fergus, king of the Irish Scots, and was invited to Scotland to repel the Picts, and for this was chosen king. Drowned in his passage to Ireland, about 404.

Fractroor, Adam, LL.D., fer'-gus-on, was the 250 a year. In 1763 he was elected a fellow of son of the Rev. Adam Ferguson, minister of the Royal Society, without paying the admission of the Revision of the Royal Society, without paying the admission of the Royal Society without paying the Royal Society Royal Royal was chosen profesor of natural philosophy in the University of Edinburgh, and in 17th professor of moral philosophy. From 1773 to 1775 he travelled on the continent with the earl of Chestorfield, and in 1778 received the appointment of secretary to the commissioners sent to America to endeavour to effect an amicable compromise with the Congress representing the different States. In 1755 he resigned his professorship of moral philosophy in favour of Dugald Stewart. Subsequently he retired to St. Andrews, where he passed the remainder of his days. n. at Logienat, 1724; n. 1816. His works are, "An Essay on the History of Civil Society;" "Institutes of Moral Philosophy," and the "History of the Progress and Termiation of the Roman Republic." This last is a work of great merit.

Fraceson, Robert, an English nonconformist, who was ejected, in 1682, from the living of Godmersham, in Kent, and afterwards distinctived by the solitical intrigues. He joined the duke of Monmouth, whom he is supposed to have betravel, but was never long attached to any party. p. 1714. He wrate the "Interest of Reason in Reliefon," etc.; a "Dissourse concerning durification," &c.

FERGUSON, James, a Scotch philosopher and astronomer, whose father was a day-labourer, and who was enabled to send him to school only for three months at a small village in the north of Scotland. When about nine years of age he was placed out as servant to a farmer, who employed him as a shepherd, in which who employed min as a singheren, in which situation he acquired a surprising knowledge of the stars. His abilities being discovered by some neighbouring gentlemen, one of then took him to his house, where he learned decimal arithmetic and the rudiments of algebra and geometry. From a description of the globes in Gordon's grammar, he made, in three weeks, one of these instruments, sufficiently accurate to enable him to work problems. He after-wards made a wooden clock and a watch, which induced the country gentry to employ him in repairing and cleaning their clocks; and, having a taste for drawing, he carned something by designing patterns for ladies work. He next began to paint portraits with Indian ink, by which he supported himself creditably for some years. In 1733 he went to London, where he continued to draw portraits, and publishel some astronomical tables and calculations. He also gave lectures in experimental philosophy, which he repeated with success throughout the kingdom. In 1754 he published a brief description of the solar system, with an astronomical account of the year of the crucifixion of Christ, 8vo; also an "Idea of the Material Universe, deduced from a Survey of the Solar System." His greatest work, however, is his "Astronomy explained upon Sir Isaac Newton's Principles, and made easy to those who have not studied Mathematics." It first appeared in 1756, 4to, and has frequently been reprinted. On the accession of George III., to whom he had read accession of velorge III., to whom he had read lectures, Mr. Ferguson obtained a pension of 250 a year. In 1763 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, without paying the admission-fie, or the annual subscriptions; the same year appeared his "astronomical Tables and Precepts," Svo. In 1767 he published "Tables and Tracts relative to several Arts and Sciences," to Astronomy for Young Gertlemen and Ladies," 1769; an "Introduction to Electricity," the "Art of Drawing in Perspective made easy;" and several tracts and papers in mane easy; an several tracts and papers in the Philosophical Transactions. B. near Keith, Isanfi-hire, 1710; b. 1776. Under the title of the "Peasant-Boy Philosopher," Mr. Henry Mayhow has most delightfully described this vouth's marvellous pursuit of knowledge under real difficulties.

Fenguson, William, a Scotch artist, distinguished as a painter of dead game and still life.

D. 1690.

Farguson, Robert, a Scotch poet, who was educated for the ministry; but habits of dissipation disqualified him for that profession, and he obtained a place in the sheriff clerk's office at Edinburgh. He contributed to the pages of Ruddiman's "Weekly Magazine," andwas greatly admired by Burns, whose own genius was stimu-Inted to poetical composition by the perusal of his cilusions. B. at Edinburgh, 1750; D. insane, in the lunatic asylum of that city, 1774. The poems of Ferguson consist of pastoral, humorous, and lyrical effusions; but his genius is greatly inferior to that of Burns, who often bewails his unhappy end, both in his prose and poetical pieces, and creeted a monument to his memory in Canongate churchyard, Edinburgh, Fragusson, James, a Scotch author and architect, was designed for a mercantile life, but, after passing a couple of years in a count-ing-house in Holland, and a like period in another in London, he went, in 1829, to India. Here he resided for ten years, during which period, as managing partner in a large firm in Calcutta, he amassed a fortune sufficiently large to enable him to return to England, where he began to devote himself to literary and scientific pursuits. His work entitled "Ancient Topo-graphy of Jerusalem," appeared in 1817; but it had been preceded by the "Ancient Architecture of Hindostan." Both were illustrated. These works were considered as exquisite specimens of artistic skill, "enhanced in value by the faithof artistic skill, "enhanced in value by one kalled fulness with which every scene and place was recorded." In 1819 they were succeeded by an "Historical Inquiry into the True Principles of Beauty in Art, more especially with reference to Architecture," a work highly extelled at the time of its appearance. In 1851 he produced "The Palaces of Nineveh and Persepolis re-"The Prances of Knoven and Cursepous re-stored," which coutains many things of general interest, relating to one of the most wonderful discoveries ever made in the history of the world. The principles of this work are illus-trated in the Assyrian Court at the Crystal Pales which we relayed and produced under Palace, which was planned and produced under the superintendence of Mr. Fergusson. In 1851 he illustrated, by a model, a new system of forti-fication, and subsequently issued "The Peril of Portsmouth; or, French Fleets and English Forts," which was designed to subvert the approved systems of military engineers. A sequel to this work appeared with notes on Schastopol, which showed that the subject was well understood by its author. After this, Mr. Forgusson became general superintendent of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham. B. at Ayr, Scotland, 1808.

FERISHTA, Mohammed Kasim, fer-ish-ta, a Persian historian, author of the "History of India under the Musulman," portions of which have been translated into English, was born at have been translated into English, was born at Fernandez, Navarrete, surnamed El Mudo, Astrabad, and was liberally patronized by the orthe Dumb, was one of the most distinguished Mohammedan princes of India. His history is divided into twelve books, with an introduction, in which he gives a resume of the history of India before the advent of the Mohammedans, and a narrative of the conquests of the Arabs in and a marranve of the condess of the Arabs in their progress from their native deserts to Hin-dostan. He gives an account of the geography, climate, and other physical features of Hin-dostan at the close of his work; and is regarded as a very trustworthy writer, as he evidently took great pains in consulting anthorities and verifying his statements. B. about 1570; p. shortly after 1611.

FERMAT, Peter de, fair'-ma, a distinguished mathematician, poet, and civilian, who wrote poetry in the Latin, French, and Spanish languages. He was universally respected for his gauges. He was universary respected for mis talents, and became a counsellor in the par-liament of Toulouse. His prose works were collected and published under the title of "Opera Varia Mathematica," in 1670, and also in 1679.

Fabout 1901; p. 1065.

Fennos, William, fer'mor, a famous Russian general, the son of a Scotchman, entered the army of the cam in 1720 as a common bombardier, and rose by his bravery, intelligence, and skill to be adjutant-general to Count von Mun-nich in 1729. He became acquainted with Frederick William of Prussia at Dantzic, and received from him the order of La Gónérosité. He greatly distinguished himself in the war with Turkey in 1736, and was promoted to the rank of general, and made governor of Zolberg. As inspector of buildings, to which office he was appointed in 1746, he superintended the erection of the imperial palace at St. Petersburg; and. after the new organization of the Russian army, he was commander in St. Petersburg, Novgorod, and Finland; and, in 1755, was commander-in-chief of the whole army. In the war with Prussia he captured the city of Memel after a severe bombardment, succeeded Count Apraxin as general of the army, took possession of the kingdom of Prussia, of which he was made governor, and was created a count of the made governor, and was created a count of the German empire by Frauds I. In 1776 he fought the battle of Zorndorf against Frederick II. of Prussia, and led the first division, under Solti-kow, at the battle of Kunersdorf, for his bra-very at which he received large honours from the empress. He took the city of Borlin in Cotober, 1760, and in the same year went on an expedition to Siberia. Poter III, recalled him from the arms where the Proceed dark Cotobacks. from the army, but after Peter's death Catharine II. made Fermor governor-general of Smolensko, and a member of the supreme senate. B. at and a member of the supreme senace. A, as Pleskow, 1704; D. 1771. FEEN, Fanny, fern. Under this nom de plume, an American lady wrote some sketches of domestic life called "Fern Leaves," which in the United States and Great Britain have attained some degree of success. She was a sister of N.P. Willis, known also as an author of some celebrity, and was originally married, in 1837, to Dr. Eldredge, who died in 1846. She subsequently married Mr. Farmington, from whom, however, she afterwards separated. Besides "Fern Leaves," she wrote two tales, called "Ruth Hall" and "Rose Clark," B. at Portland, Maine, 1811.

FERNANDEZ, Juan, fair-nan'-daiz, a Spanish navigator, who, in 1563, discovered the island which bears his name. D. 1576.

Fernel Festus

of the pupils of Titian, and became pointer to Phillp II. of Spain, who employed him mostly reprinted in 1691. He was in his time the in adoming the Escurial. His principal works are a "Martyrdom of St. James," a "Nativity of Christ," "St. Jerome in the Descrt," and "Abraham with the Three Angels," This last is settemed his greatest work. He painted with great case, and, on account of his colouring, was named the Spanish Titian. B. at Logrono, on the Ebro, 1526; D. at Segovia, 1579.

FERNEL, John Francis, fair-nel, physician to Henry II. of France, published a number of works on medical subjects, which have been frequently reprinted. D. 1407; D. 1558. He was surgamed the modern Galen, from the extent of his medical knowledge, and the number of works he wrote on the subject.

number of works he wrote on the subject.

Fernar, Gaudenio, fuir-war-a, eclebrated Lombard painter of the Milanese school of Leonardo da Vinci. He worked under Raphael at Rome, and has been called one of the seven great painters of modern times, which is an extravagant eulogy, for, although correct in design, eareful in execution, and often brilliant in colouring, his works are devoid of tone, and show a want of appreciation of, or feeling for, harmony of colour. His principal works are in Milan, and have all a reference to sacred subjects. B. 183; p. 15:9.

FERRARI, a distinguished family of Milan, several of whose members became eminent in the 16th and 17th centuries for their at-deserved as the or the 15 mg. B. at Lisbon, 1225; p. 1500.

FERRERAS, Don Juan d., fuir-rair-ass, a learned Spanish divine, who was a member of the companyangung. plearned Spanish derine, who was a member of the Spanish Academy at its sommencement, and contributed largely to the distillance produced by that body. He also wrote a "History of Spain," 10 vois, 4to, and other works, highly esteemed for their minuteness and accuracy, net Labaneza, 1222 p. 1735. As an historian of Spain, this writer is much more to be depended on the Mexican when accept the memorated of the Mexican when accept the memorated of the Mexican when accept the memorate of the memorate of the Mexican when accept the memorate of the Mexican when accept the memorate of the memorate of the Mexican when the Mexican whe nended on than Mariana, whose pages, however, are more elegant and fascinating.

FERRI, Ciro, fau-re, a celebrated Roman freeco painter, was the most distinguished scholar of Pietro da Cortona, and greatly assisted that artist in his extensive works both at Rome and in the Pitti Palace at Florence. After the death of his master, he took the leading position among the fresco painters of Rome, and many of his works have been engraved. B. 1631;

p. 1689.

FIREIER, Miss, fer-ri-er, was the daughter of a writer to the signet in Edinburgh, who held an appointment in the Court of Session as the colleague of Sir Walter Scott. Her early introduction to the best literary society of Edinburgh gave a bias to her tastes, and she became the special of Music Influences of their at authorses of three xeedlent north, entitled the tainments. Octaving Arrara was professor of "Marriane," the "Inheritance," and "Destiny, mathematics and physics at Allian and Padu or the Other's Daughter." In at Edinburgh,

Francesco Bernardino Ferrari was celebrated throughout Europe for his knowledge of books and literature generally. He was a doctor of the Ambrosian college at Milan, and his collection of valuable works was the foundation of the celebrated library of that name. His own wri-tings display much and profound learning. B. 1585; p. 1669.—Ottavio Ferrari, after being histor ographer and professor of rhetoric at Milan, settled at Padua, and was patronized by many students and crowned heads, among the latter being Christina queen of Sweden and Louis XV. of France, the latter of whom conferred on him a pension of 500 crowns. He was distinguished for the mildness of his disposition and the suafor the minness of its disposition and the star-vity of his manners, qualities which procured him the designation of the "Pacification." He was the author, in continuation of Scaliger, of a work entitled "Origines Lingue Italica," and wrote a variety of treatises on ancient customs, manners, &c. B. 1607; D. 1682.—Besides these, there were several other distinguished Italians of this name, who do not, however, appear to have belonged to the same family. Among them may be mentioned—1. Giovanni Andrea Ferrari, distinguished as a painter of historical subjects, and of fruit and flower pieces, was born at Genoa, in 1599; D. 1669 .- 2. Ludovico Ferrari, a native of Bologna, was a professor in that city, and was the discoverer of the method of resolving biquadrate equations. B. 1522; D.

FERRITA, Antonio, fair'-rai-eer-a, a Portu-For this lie was driven into exile, and took guese poet, who held the office of judge, and revote, with considerable success, degice, odes, of his days. n. at Ajaccio, 1763; n. at Rome, 889.

Is "Inex de Castro," one of the first complete targedies of modern times. His works were marian, whose ago is not accurately ascertained; from the field, conscious that there remains behind, not only a large harvest, but labourers capable of gathering it in. More than on-writer has already displayed talents of this de-scription; and if the present author, himself a phantom, may be permitted to distinguish a phantom, may be permitted to distinguish a brother, or, perhaps, a sister shadow, he would mention, in particular, the author of the very lively work entitled 'Marriage.' Miss Ferrier was a frequent guest at Abbotsford, and helped to cheer the melancholy which clouded the last moments of the life of the great novelist.

FESCH, Cardinal Joseph, fesk, a distinguished Corsican, and the half-brother of Letitia Ramolini, the mother of Napoleon I. After suffering considerable privations in the revolutionary period of France, he suddenly found his fortunes changed by the elevation of his nephew to the command of the Army of Italy. He became one of its commissioners, or factors; but, in 1802, was appointed archbishop of Lyons. In the following year he was sent ambasador to the Holy See; and, from the court which he paid to the pope, he received a cardinal's hat, and the consent of that dignitary to vist Paris to crown Napoleon. After the coronation, he, in 1805, became imperial almoner, and received the grand cordon of the Legion of Honour. In 1809 he rejected the archbishopric of Paris, on account of the severity with which the pope was treated by the emperor; and, in 1810, actually openly rebuked Napoleon before the council of Paris.

Figina

but he is believed to have lived in the 3rd century. He compiled some voluminous works on his favourite science, and is classed by Scaliger amongst the best or most useful etymologists for assisting the student in understanding the language of ancient Rome.

ianguage of ament is tone.

Firt, Domenico, fai-te, called the "Mantnan" from being the court painter to Ferdinand Gonzage, duke of Mantna, executa several works in that city, some of which have been engraved; his masterpiece being his "Feeding of the Fire Thousand." hat Rome, 1589; D. at Venice, 1624, being only thirty-five FEUERBACH, Paul Joseph Anselm, foir'-bak, an eminent German writer on criminal law, who became successively professor at the uni-versities of Giessen, Jena, Kiel, and Laudshut. Although he wrote a number of able papers on criminal jurisprudence, his fame did not become established till he produced his "Review of the Fundamental Principles and Ideas of or the fundamental Frinciples and recess the Penal Law." This work, in conjunction with another which appeared shortly afterwards, exercised a great influence on German criminal legislation, and placed Feuerbach in an eminent position in the eyes of his countrymen. In 1808 he became a privy councillor in Bavaria; in 1817 second president of the court of appeal at Bamberg; and in 1821 first president of appeal at Anspach. To these offices his sphere of action was entirely confined throughout the rest of his life. B. at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, 1775; D. there, 1833.

Faulles, Louis, fol-lai, a French astronomer, botanist, and mathematician, was a Franciscan friar, and having received orders from Louis XIV. to proceed to the Levant to make certain astronomical observations, performed the duty assigned him, and afterwards visited the Antilles, Carthagena, Martinique, and western South America, investigating the natural productions of the various places he went to. These voyages occupied him from 1707 to 1712, when he retired occupied him from 1707 of 172, when he retired to an observatory record for him at Marseilles, where he lived during the remainder of his days. He published the results of his observations in a work entitled "Journal of Physical, Botanical, and Mathematical Observations in Western Central America, and the West Indies," 2 vols. folio, with numerous plates. By his means the magnificent Datura arborea was first made known to botanists. B. in Provence, 1660:

D. at Marseilles, 1732.

FEUQUIEEES, Isaac Manasses de Pas, Mar-puis de, fo'-que-aire, a brave French officer of the seventeenth century, conducted the siege of Rochelle, where he was taken prisoner, and afterwards acted as ambassador to Gustavus Adolphus in Germany; for his services on which mission he was made lleutenant-general of Metz, Toul, and Verdun, and died in 1640 at Thionville, of the wounds he had received at the siege of that place the preceding year, and where he was made prisoner. B. 1590. FRUQUIBRES, ISSAC de Pas, Marquis de, son of the preceding, was also a lieutenant-general in the French army, and ambassador to Germany, Sweden, and Spain, and died in the last-named country, in 1683.

FEUQUIERES, Antoine de Pas, Marquis de, son of the last-named, likewise distinguished himself in the armies of his country, having in the German campaign of 1688 performed such eminent services as to be made marshal-d camp. He next went to Italy, where he won the rank of lieutenant-general in 1693. Although an excellent officer, he was very strict and severe in enforcing discipline, and was consequently no favourite with his troops. Indeed sequently no involves with its troops. Indeed, it was said of him, in reference to the feeling of his men, that "he was the boldest man in Europe, since he slept amidst 100,000 of his enemies." He wrote memoirs of the generals chemies. He wrose memours of the generals of Louis XIV., in which he points out the faults committed by those officers on various occasions, enumerating no less than twelve radical blunders which the French commanders fell into at the battle of Blenheim alone. The work is regarded as one of the most able on the theory and practice of war in existence. B. at Paris. 1048; D. 1711.

FRURE, Tannegui Ic, or Tanaquil Faber, fairr, a learned critic, pensioned by Richelicu. at 2000 livres, to inspect the books printed at the Louvre; but on the death of the cardinal his salary was stopped. He then removed to Saumur, where he embraced the reformed religion, and obtained the classical professorship gion, and obtained the classical processorsing, n. at Caen, 1615, n. 1672. He was the father of the celebrated Madame Dacier, and published several comments on Greek and Latin authors; two volumes of letters; "Lives of the Greek Poets," in French; "Greek and Latin Poems;" a "Method of Education."-There are several other French writers of this name.

FIAMMINGO, Arrigo, fé-awm-in'-go, a famous artist, whose real name is unknown, but who artist, whose real name is unknown, but who was called Finamingo from being a native of Flanders. He visited Italy in the time of Groy XIII, and was employed by that pondiff in the Vatican. He likewise painted a picture of the "Resurrection" for the Sistine chargel, and another of St. Michael conquering Lucifer for "A. McCare Joseph and the control of the sisting charged and the sistence of the sistence the church of the Madonna degli Angeli, both of which are works of high merit. D. 1601.— There was another painter, named Enrico, also a native of Flanders, and called Fiammingo by the Italians, who was a pupil of Guido, and whose style resembles that of his master, except that the shadows are darker.

Fronze, Johann Gottlieb, feesht-e(r), a learned German, who, in 1794, became professor of philosophy at Jena, and thence promulgated his system, known as the "Doctrine of Science." mis system, known as the "Docume of Science. Shortly afterwards, a suspicion of irreligious tendencies foll upon him, when he retired to Prussia, and, after living some time in Berlin, received the appointment of professor of philosophy at Eriangem. Here he continued for some sime highly esteemed, but in 1814 he wisted Berlin, where, in the military hospital visited Berlin, where, in the military hospital of that city, his wife caught a fever, and com-municated it to him. She recovered, but he died, in 1814. B. at Rammenau, 1762.

Ficino, Marsilio, fe-ché-no, a learned Italian, whose father was physician to Cosmo de Medici, by whom Marsilio was greatly esteemed, on account of his attachment to the doctrines of Plato. Under the patronage of Cosmo he made rapid progress in all kinds of learning, and was chosen first president of an academy founded by him at Florence. After this, he published a complete version of Plato's works in the Latin language, and translated Plotinus, Iamblichus, Proclus, and other Platonists. Lorenzo the Magnificent was also a liberal patron of Ficino, and thus Platonism revived with great splendour in Italy. At the age of forty-two he entered into orders, and obtained Fielding ronsiderable preferment through the means of rebellion of 17.5 he edited the "Jacobite the high patronage with which he had been Journal," for which he was made a Middleser honoured. n. at Florence, 1433; n. 1499. His justice, in which situation he gained considerworks were collected and printed together in able reputation by his "Inquiry into the Causes

two vols. folio.

two vois. folio.

FIELD, Nathaniel, feeld, a dramatic author, who is supposed to have been a member of Shakspeare's company, and to have been one of the players at the Globe and Blackfriars theatres. He wrote "A Woman's a Weathercock," "Amends for Ladies," and, in conjunction with Massinger, "The Fatal Dowry," Lived between the reigns of James I. and Charles I.

Field, Richard, D.D., a learned English divine, who was chaplain to Queen Elizabeth, was a great favourite with James I., and wrote several works on theological subjects, the most important of which is entitled "Of the Church." mportant of which is entitled. Of the Church, He had likewise begun a book on the "Controversies on Religion," which he did not live to finish. He was a man of a mild and loving disposition, and was ever anxious to heal dissensions in the Christian church. B. 1561: D. 1616.

FIELD, Cyrus West, an American merchant, who, in 1854, took up the subject of ocean tele-graphy. After getting a cable laid between Cape Ray and Cape Breton to connect Newfoundland with the mainland of America, he turned his attention to laying a cable along the bottom of the Atlantic between Newfoundland and Ircland. This, after some failures, was successfully and. This, intersome faitures, was successfully accomplished in 1866. B. 1819.

FIELDING, Henry, feet-ding, a celebrated English author, son of lieutenant-general Fielding, and great-grandson of William, third earl of Denbigh. After receiving the rudiments of his education at home, he went to Eton, whence he was sent to Leyden, where, for two years, he devoted himself to the investigation of civil law, and then returned to England. The narrowness of his father's circumstances, and the largeness of his family, prevented him from providing in a suitable manner for his son, who, in his twenty-first year, went to London, and began writing for the stage. His first piece was entitled "Love in several Masks," and met entitled "Love in several Masks," and met with a favourable reception; as did his next performance, called "The Temple Beau," Some of his tuture. performance, called "The Temple Beau," Some of his future dramatic efforts, however, were not so successful, and he had the courage to prefix to one of them, "As it was damned at the theatre royal, Drury-lane." A large number of his plays are now, by the generality of readers, entirely unknown. In 1734 he was fortunate enough to marry Miss Charlotte Cradock, a lady of some wealth, and, by the death of his mother, or some wears, and, or not centre of ms mother, came into the possession of £200 a year. His extravagances, however, were such, that, at the age of thirty, he had reduced himself to this former condition; on which he entered the Temple, and studied the law with considerable ardour, still exercising his pen for immediate support, as assistant editor of a periodical paper called "The Champion," and by occasional con-tributions of a poetical kind. About this time he produced the "History of Jonathan Wild," a notorious character, whose story Fielding wrought up into an entertaining romance. This has been pronounced to be, perhaps, the most wrought up into an entertaining romance, above great novelist, and accounted a woman of This has been pronounced to be, perhaps, themost considerable learning. She wrote the novels of ingeniously-arranged description of a tissue of "David Simple" and "The Cry," and transheak world. In 1742 appeared his "Joseph English; "The Lives of Cleopatra and Onderway," a novel fail of humour and admirable tavia;" "The History of Ophelia;" and several collengations of human nature, During the win;" "The History of Ophelia;" and several able reputation by his "Inquiry into the Causes of the late Increase of Robberies," and his "Proposal for the Maintenance of the Poor." In 1749 he published his principal work, the novel of "Tom Jones," which exhibits a great knowledge of life, and is equally rich in comic delineation and pathetic expression. His "Amelia" followed in 1731, and is more correct in sentiment, though deficient in humour and variety. For this novel he received £1000. A complication of complaints had now produced a dropsy, and after undergoing the operation of tapping, he went with his family to Listion of tapping, he went with his family to Lis-bon, where he ended his days. n. at Sharpham, Somersetshire, 1707; p. at Lisbon, 1754. His works have been princed uniformly in 12 vols. See, with his life prefixed by Mr. Murphy. That Fielding had a great genius as a writer is unquestionable; and, when we consider the comparative brevity of his life, and the difficul-ties under which he almost invariably wrote, we are amazed at the number and general excellence of his productions. He wrote twenty-four dramatic pieces; and although his talents were not of a decidedly theatrical cast, still it was something to escape general disapproba-tion, though he was, at times, received with indifference. Of his three great works,— "Joseph Andrews," "Amelia," and "Tom upon which his reputation rests, it Jones," upon which his reputation rests, it must be confessed that, however they may occasionally err in their morality, they are extremely happy representations of those features of human nature which must always interest, simply because they are immediately recognised as genuine by every mind that has been brought into contact with the various elements at work in society at large. "Joseph Andrews," Field-ing tells us himself, was written as an imitation of the style and manner of Cervantes, and it cannot be denied that he has well succeeded in cannot be termed that he gravity, and the fine ridicule of his master. His "Amelia" is also an admirable production. "It is, perhaps, the only book," says Dr. Johnson, "of which, being only book," says Dr. Johnson, "or winch, pemg printed off betimes one morning, a new edition was called for before night," The same stern oralist read the book through without stop-ping; and further adds, that "Fieldings," 'Amelia' is the most pleasing hevoine of all the romances." "Tom Jones" is considered as the greatest work of Fielding, yet it has not the greatest work of Fleating, yet it has not escaped severe censure. "Sir," said Johnson, "there is more knowledge of the heart in one letter of Richardson's, than in all 'Tom Jones," -an opinion, however, in which few will concur. There is no novel with which we are acquainted so skilfully conducted in its fable, and evincing so much art in the development of the plot. In composition, also, Fielding is a great master. Indeed, "taking him for all in all," we believe it is the general opinion that he is what Byron calls him,—"the prose Homer of human nature."

FIELDING, Sarah, was the third sister of the above great novelist, and accounted a woman of other works. She have a and agad unmarried at Bath. B. 1744; D. 1769.

Figury, the novelist, and his successor as a justice for Middlesex, was blind from his childhood, yet discharged his office with great credit, and in 1761 received the honour of knighthood. D. He laboured to reform the vicious, and published some tracts on police; a "Charge to the Grand Jury of Westminster," &c.

the Grand dury of Westminston," ac.
Freining, Copley Vandyke, an English painter, belonged to a family of artists, and first exhibited his pictures in 1810, at the Artists' Exhibition in Spring therdems. He carly became a teacher of his art, and from his great season this youtston segured a wide chole of friends and patrons. It is as a water-colour painter that he is best known and most admired; and there are few, if any, who have risen to the same height of popularity in representing English scenery under the same or similar aspects in which he delighted to exhibit it. His path m which he delighted to exhibit it. His path was one of unvarying prosperity, and for many years he held the office of president of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours. His subjects are generally chalky downs, stretching far away, until they are lost in the softened haze of distance. He has also represented both Scotch and Welsh mountain scenery, under peculiar atmospheric effects, and usually with the most striking success. He had great mechanical dexterity in the use of his peneil, notwithstanding which, he had frequently recourse to both the sponge and the cloth to produce appearances, which were not entirely free from a charge of a kind of ingenious trickery. D. 1787;

D. at Worthing, Sussex, 1855.
FIENNES, William, Lord Say and Sele, fe'-en, FIRNIES, William, Lord Say and Sole, follow, was educated at New College, Oxford, and in 1624 was made a viscount. In the Rebellion he sided with the parliament, and became "very active" with Hampden and Pym, for which he was declared an outlaw by the king, after whose execution he retired to the Isle of Lundy, on the coast of Devon, where he continued till Cromwell's death. At the Restoration he was made privy seal and chamberlein of the household. In in Oxfordshire, 1882; p. 1662. His lordship wrote some pamphlets against the Quakers, Clarendon pronounces him "a man of a closs and reserved nature, of reach parts, and of a close and reserved nature, of great parts, and the highest ambition."

FIRNES, Nathaniel, second son of Lord Say and Sele, was also educated at New College, Oxford, after which he went to Geneva. On bliord, after which he went to deneva, on his return he was intrusted with the govern-ment of Bristol, but surrendered it to Prince Rupert, for which he was condemned to death by a council of war. His father's interest, how-ever, saved his life. Cromwell, with whom he was in great favour, made him one of his lords. He was a distinguished leader of the independent party, and printed some speeches and pamphlets. B. 1608; D. 1609. Lord Clarendon says of this person, "If he had not encumbered says of this person, if he had not encurrorered himself with command in the army, to which men thought his nature not so well disposed, he had been second to none in the councils of the Parliamentarians after Mr. Hampden's death."

Flescht, Joseph Marie, foest-ke, a Corsican, and the author of one of the most terrible conspiracies of which history has preserved the remembrance. In 1835, whilst Louis Philippe was king of the French, he made an attempt to other works. She lived and died unmarried at royal family. Preparing an "infernal machine," Rath. n 1714: n. 1763. in a house on the Boulevard du Temple, he, on the 28th July, on the occasion of a grand review. discharged it as the king and staff were passing his windows. Eighteen persons lost their lives, among whom was Marshal Mortier, duke of among whom was marsha morner, dure of Treviso; twenty-two others were severely wounded, the king escaping only by a miracle. The assassin was taken and condemned to death, with Pépin and Morez, his accomplices. This man had formerly been a shepherd, then a Inis min had normerly been a snephero, then a soldier, and had been prior to this, sentenced to ten years' imprisonment for robbery. R. in Corsica, 1790; executed February 19, 1836.

FIRSO, Giovanni Luigh, Jé-ais-ko, a noble Genoese, who, out of hatred to the famous

Genoese, who, out of haired to the famous Andrea Giovanni Doria and his nephew, formed in 1547, a conspiracy, with the assistance of France and Pope Paul, to revolutionize Genoa. In the attempt to seize the galleys Fiesco was drowned. The conspirators, disheartened, gave up the enterprise, and the family of Fiesco was proscribed.

FILANGIERI, Gaetano, fe-lawn-je-air'-e, an Italian political writer, who studied the law, but reasina positions where, who studied the law, but mover practised it. In 1777 he entered into the service of the court, was appointed a gentleman of the budchamber, and an officer in the marine. In 1780 he published the first volume of his work on the "Science of Legislation," which made him famous throughout Europe, and the Sth volume in 1791. It was never completed, In 1787 he obtained a place in the Royal College of Finance, which he designed to reform, but was taken ill, and died on the 24th of July, 1783, B. at Naples, 1752. His work has gone through several editions.

FILANGIERI, Charles, an Italian general, son of the above, having lost his father at an early age, was forced by the troubles of his country, in 1809, to leave it, and set out, on foot, with his younger brother, for France. Arriving in Paris in a state of utter destitution, the name of their father procured for them at the hands of Bonaparte, then first consul, admittance to the bolapare, then hist consult admittance to the school of the Prytaneum. Charles afterwards served in Napoleon's army, being present at Austerlitz, and subsequently distinguished himself as one of the first officers in the Neapolitan service. He afterwards served in Spain, and received for his signal acts of bravery advance-ment and honours from Murat. He does not appear to have been much employed from 1820 till the accession of Ferdinand II., in 1830, to the throne of the Two Sicilies. He then had the direction of the artillery and engineers conthe direction of the artillery and engineers con-ided to him, and in 1848 was appointed to the command of the army sent into Lombardy. (See Fenery, No. 11). Its was now the deci-instrument of Bomba, and, at the head of the expedition directed against Sielly, took posses-sion of Messina after a bombardment of four days and a terrible slaughter. The same fate was in preparation for Palermo, but the Eng-lish and French admirals, seeing humanity so shamed in these proceedings, demanded and obtained an armistice for the suffering Siellians. Six months later however, butilities again. Six months later, however, hostilities again commenced, the submission of the island was completed, and Filangieri was appointed governor, with the fullest powers. B. at Naples, 1783.

FILELFO, Francis, or PHILELPHUS, fe-lail'-fo, an Italian philosopher, and one of the restorers destroy that sovereign and the princes of the of letters. After studying at Padua, he opened a school of rhetoric at Venice, the state of which singularly insufficient," and were admirably appointed him chancellor, and ambassafor to answered by Mr. Locke in his book on govern-constantinople. Rere he made himself ac rent. He also wrote the "Frecholders Grand a senool of rhetoric at Venues, the state of which appointed him chancellor, and ambassador to Constantinople. Here he made himself acquainted with the Greek language, when, on returning to Venice, he took with him many Greek manuscripts. In 1423 he removed to Bologna, where he was appointed professor of moral philosophy; but in 1429 he went to Florance Advisorate hearts against between rence. A difference having occurred between him and Cosmo de Medici, he was forced to retire to Siena, and afterwards to various other places. B. at Ancona, 1393; D. at Florence, 1481. He was a man of learning and abilities. but restless and quarrelsome. His epistles were printed at Venice in 1502.—His eldest son, Mario Filelfo, born at Constantinople, 1426, was time. He executed many works for the churches of Florence, some of which still exist in the Florentne Academy. His chej-d'awre was a picture representing the adoration of the kings, in which the likenesses of Cosmo, Julian, and Cosmo's son, Giovanni Medici, were taken for the kings. He also painted, for the Sistine chapel at Rome, three grand works from the history of Moses and the Israelites. He subse-quently illustrated Dante's "Inferno," and quenty mastrated Dante's "Interno," and attempted to engrave his own designs, in which he failed. D. at Florence, 137; D. there, depending on the charity of Lorenzo de Medici, FILLANS, James, fill-lans, a Scotch sculptor, affairs, and was chosen president of the council, who, from the humble occupation of a keeper of He retired from public affairs in 1716, in consesheep, became a weaver in Paisley, and next a stonemason. Whilst engaged in these occupations, he laboured privately to improve himself tions, he modured privately to improve himsen in the art of drawing, and also obtained a local celebrity by modelling in clay. Meeting with some success, and attracting the notice of Wililiam Motherwell the poet, and also the editor of the "Paisley Advertiser," he was brought fur-ther into notice, and encouraged to proceed to Glasgow, where he would have a wider field to work in. Here he gradually rose in his circumstances, until he found himself in a condition to visit Paris for the purposes of study. On his return, he settled in London, and was introduced to Chantrey by Allan Cunningham. He who likewise knighted him. In 1661 he was chosen member of parliament for Oxford uni-versity; became attorney-general in 1670; in 1673 was made lerd-keeper, and raised to the pecrage; in 1675 he was made lead chanceller. and in 1651 was created carl of Nottingham, His wisdom and eloquence were rated very highly, and Dryden has commemorated him under the name of Amri, in his "Absalom and Achitophel." B. 1621; D. 1682.—His son, Daniel Finch, second carl of Nottingham, was a distinalso a good scholar, and died at Milan in 1180. asso a good senour, and deed a Anjan in 180. Filipper, Sandro, or Alessandro, A'-le-per', usually called Botticelli, from the name of a goldsmith to whom he was apprenticed, having studied painting under Filippo Lippi, rose to be one of the greatest painters of his guished lawyer and state-man, who, disappror-ing of the course pursued by James II., never went to court during that king's reign, and, on his abdication, wished for the appointment of a regency, rather than the election of another king. When William and Mary were put on the throne, however, though he declined the lord > liam at the tan are concress at the Hague, and was excepted by him a Januas, i issuel previous to life intended dose at upon England, in 1632, from the general annesty then promised to those who had supported the new order of things. Finch resigned in 1634, but was ag in respiointed at the accession of Queen Anne; and when George I, came to the crown, he was one of the lords for the administration of quence of making a speech in favour of the Scots gentlemen concerned in Mar's rebellion; and, while in retirement, wrote an eloquent reply to Whiston on the Trinity, for which the university of Oxford thanked him. p. 1847;

Inquest." B. in Kent; D. abou

chancellorship, he are produce of the principal

D. 1730. Finden, William, fin'-den, an English line-engraver, who, by study and intelligence, acquired a highly-finished taste, and rose rapidly to eminence as an engraver of steel-plates. from the excellence of his line, he was chosen to engrave the royal portrait of George IV. seated on a sofa, and pointed by Lawrence. For this work he received 2000 guineas, although the plate was not a large one. He also engraved by Wilkie, and the hy the same artist.

formances, do not seem to have done much for commenced publishing works of art on his own account, and formed an extensive engraving establishment, which he carried on in conjunction with a younger brother, also a good engrayer. The result of this was the production of engraved serials, among the most popular of which were the "Byron Gallery," and the "Gallery of British Art." But whatever may have been the successes of Mr. Finden in this line, they could only have been transitory, as the great expense necessary to support his estathe great expense increasing various in a permitary point of view. The last work upon which he engaged himself was Hilton's "Cruciarion, undertaken for the Art Union, which he finished, with a broken spririt, shortly before his death, in large with a broken spririt, shortly before his death, in 1852. B. 1787.

FINGAL, fix gal, prince of Morven, an an-cient province of Caledonia, the principal hero him. His greatest works are — "The Blind Teaching the Blind," "The Boy and Fawn," and a colosal head of Professor Wisson," these may be added a colosal statue of Sir To James Shaw for the town of Kilmarnock. This work established his fame, and Fillans would have become eminent; but his life was drawing to a close, and although he had been long engaged on a work entitled "Rachel Weeping for her Children," he did not live to finish it. B. at Wilsontown, Lanarkshire, 1808; D. at Glasgow, 1852.

FIMER, Sir Robert, fill-mer, an English writes, who was the author of the "Anarchy of a limited and mixed Monarchy," "Patriarcha," a minted and inited atomarchy, "Patriarcha," in which he proves that government was monarchical in the patriarchal ages, but the arguments in which, according to Mallam, "are

282 A.D. FINLEY, John, fin'-lai, a Scotch poet, author of "Wallace of Ellerslie," a "Life of Cervantes," and editor of a "Collection of Scottish Ballads and enter of a "Collection of Sections Isaliats," was born at Glasgow, in 1782, and educated at the university of his native city. p. 1810.

Frontito, Johann Dominik, fe'-or-el'-lo, distinguished German painter and author, who is, however, best entitled to notice for his labours. in the latter character. He was a native of Hamburg, went to Rome in 1761, where he studied under Pompeo Batoni, was elected a studied under Pompeo Batoni, was elected a member of the seademy of Bologna in 1789, and in 1784 was appointed professor of art in the university of Góttingen. His great works, besides essays on the history of modern art, are his "History of Art in Italy, France, Spain, and England," and "History of the Arts of Design in Gormany and the United Netherlands." Although Fjorillo continued to use his brush to the good of his life he sid due to worken and the contract of the contract of the top of the high the high of the worken are the contract of the contract of the contract of the top of the high the high of the worken are the contract of the contra Attnoog a Frontie continued to use in 5 brush to the end of his life, he did not produce many great pictures. His masterpiece is a theme from Homer, "The Surrender of Briseis to the Heralds of Agamemnon." B, 1743; D, 1821.

rieraus of Agamemon. 8. 1795; D. 1821.
Frantini, fr-mil-ydn, a bishop of Cesarea, in Cappadocia, who was the friend of Origen, and took part with Cyprian in the dispute concerning the rebaptizing of converted heretics. He presided at the first council of Antioch regainst Paul of Samosata, and died in 289.

Firmin, Thomas, fir min, a benevolent Englishman, noted for his extensive charities, began business as a linendraper in London, and amassed a considerable fortune. His piety and benevolence procured him the esteem of many of the most eminent men of his time, especially Archbishop Tillotson, who particu-larly courted his friendship. He erected a larly courted his friendship. He erected a warehouse for the employment of the poor in warehouse for the employment of the poor in the linen manufacture, and when the French Protestants landed in Eugland, set up another for their use at 1 pswich. He was one of the governors of Christ's and St. Thomas's hos-pitals, to which he was a liberal benefactor, as he was to almost every charitable institution he was to almost every character institution brought under his notice. B. at Ipswich, Suffolk, 1632; D. 1697. He published, in 1678, "Some Proposals for the Employing of the Poor, and especially in and about the City of London, and especially in and about the City of London, and for the Prevention of Begging," 4to, Donaldson, in his "Agricultural Biography," says of this pamphlet, "The author's views were sufficiently benevolent, but not very enlarged."

FISCHER, Karl von, fish'-er, a distinguished German architect, who, after studying at Mann-heim and Vienna, and visiting Italy, went, in 1809, to Munich, and became professor of architecture in its academy. Here he superintended tecture in its academy. Here ne supermenneau the crection of several mansions of great merit, but his greatest work is the "Hof Theatre," which is still one of the chief ornaments of Munich. This building was commenced in 1811, and opened in 1818; and although, in 1823, it suffered considerably by fire, it was rebuilt in accordance with the orient dates of Fischer. He is considered the ginal designs of Fischer. He is considered the founder of the Munich school of architecture.

of Ossian's poems, where he is celebrated for his ples of the Reformation, was obliged to fly to bravery, prudence, and patriotism, fought Germany, where, in conjunction with William against the Romans, and made expeditions into Tyndale, he wrote the "Supplication of Beggars the Orsneys, Sweden, and Ireland. B. about against Monks and Friars." This piece so pleased Henry VIII., that Fish had liberty to reum. He also translated from the Dutch. little book, entitled "The Sum of the Scriptures." D. of the plague, 1671. The "Supplication of the Beggars" was a satire upon the Popish elergy, and was answered by Sir Thomas More in his "Supplications of Souls in Purgators". return. He also translated from the Dutch a in Purgatory."

FISHER, John, FISHER, John, fish'-er, an English prolate, who was educated at Cambridge, and became who was educated as Cambridge, and became confessor to Margaret, countess of Richmond, mother to Henry VII. By his advice the coun-tess founded St. John's and Christ's colleges, Cambridge. In 1502 he was chosen chancellor of that university, and became a liberal encourager of learning. In 1504 he was appointed to the bishopric of Rochester, from which he would never remove to a better see. He was a zealous opponent of the Reformation, and could not be induced by Henry VIII. to concur with that monarch's divorce of Queen Katharine. Great efforts were made to bring him to acknowledge the king's supremacy, which proving in-effectual, he was sent to the Tower. While in confinement, the pope made him a cardinal, which so enraged the king, that he caused him to be tried for high treason, when he was conco or trea nor mgn treason, when he was con-demned and beheaded in 1855. s. as Beverley, Yorkshire, 1459. He wrote a "Commentary on the Penitential Psalms," a "Defence of the King's Book against Luther," a "Temeral Ser-mon for the Lady Murgaret, "&c. A collective edition of his works was published at Wurtz-bwerth 1654. burg in 1695.

FISHER, Mary, a member of the Society of Friends, who conceived the idea of going to Constantinople to convert the grand seignor. The sultan, Mahomet IV., heard her patiently, and then caused her to be sent back to her own country, where she married a preacher of her own sect. This couple afterwards went to Languedoc, to preach the tenets of Quakerism among the Protestants there. Lived in the 17th

FISHER, Payne, an English poet, whose principal claim to remembrance arises from his having held the laureateship during the rule of Cromwell, notwithstanding that he had served on the royalist side in the Civil War. He had, however, abandoned the king's cause when affairs became desperate, joined the republicans, and celebrated their victories in some Latin poems. He had been a student both at Oxford and Cambridge, and, besides his poetical com-positions, wrote a "Synopsis of Heraldry."

positions, wrote a "Synopsis of Heraldry."

B. in Dorsetshire, 1616; D. in poverty, in 1693.

Firzderald, Lord Edward, fits-ger'-ald, was the son of James, first duke of Leinster, and Lady Emily Lennox, daughter of the duke of Eighbrund. Richmond. Entering the English army, he fought in the American war, but in 1790 quitted fought in the American war, but in 1790 quitted the service, and took his place in the Irish Parliament. When the French revolution broke out, he supported its principles, and in 1783 hastened to Paris. Here he married Pamela, the daughter, it is said, of Louis Philippe Joseph, duke of Orleans, and Madame de Genlis. On his return to Ireland, Fitzgerald was desirous of effecting a separation of that country from England, and induced the French Directory to Tunjish him with a flest and troops. A landing Daniel of the amendment of the country from Fish, Simon, fast, an English lawyer, who, are Sammeliem, 1782; p. at Manulch, 1820. of effecting a separation of that country from Fish, Simon, fast, an English lawyer, who, England, and induced the French Directory to an account of his active support of the princi-furnish him with a feet and troops. A landing was attempted on several occasions; but all efforts only proved the futility of the scheme, and Fitzgerald was seized, tried, and condemned to death, but died of his wounds before the timefixed for his execution, 1783; n. October 15th, 1763—His wife, distinguished for her wit and beauty, had been educated with the daughters of the duke of Orleans, by Madame de Genlis, and married a second time, Mr. Pitcairn, the American consul at Hamburg, from whom, however, she separated soon afterwards. D. almost in want of common necessaries, 1831.

want of common necessaries, 1891.
Firzacrapos, John, fits'-yib-lon, carl of Clare, and lord chancellor of Ireland, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and at Oxford. He rapudly rose in the legal profession, till he became Irish chancellor, in 1798, with the title of Baron Fitzgibbon; and in 1795 was raised to the peraga as the earl of Clare. He was an eminent lawyer, and an carnest promoter of the Union in the Irish Parliament, z. 1749, z.

1802.
FITZHERBER, Maria, fits-her'-bert, was the youngest daughter of Waller Smythe, Esq., of Brambridge, and was twice a widow before she was twenty-five years of age. In 1786 she became acquainted with George IV., then prince of Wales, and was, in the same year, privately married to him at Carlon House, in the prince sense of her lance and borther. This marriane was invalid by the law of the land, and the prince afterwards may led the princes Caroline of Brunswick. This allance proving unlappy, IMF. Fitzherbert again lived for several years with the prince as his wife. His gross irregardite, however, drove her into retirement, and she went to Brighton, where she lived, not only in the enjoyment of the affection and respect of a large circle of friends, but retaining the good opinion of George III. and William IV. z. 1756;

opinion of George III. and William IV. n. 1759; n. at Brighton, 1837.
FITZIAMES, James. (See BERWICE, Duke of.)
FITZEOY, Admiral Robert, R.N., Ni-roj, an English naval officer, who, from 1838 to 1830, ms. employed in surveying the S. American coasts of Patagonia, Terra del Puego, Chili, and Peru. Another expedition was planned, and in 1831 he sailed again, and surveyed the southern shores of S. America, circumnavigated the globe, and returned after an absence of four rears. In 1841 he became member of parliament for the city of Durham, and in 1843 was appointed governor and commander-in-chief of the colony of New Zealand. In 1846 he was replaced by Sir George Gray, and, on his return to England, wrote a pampliet in justification, of the course of policy he had pursued in the colony. In 1850 he published "Sailing Directions for S. America, &c.," accompanied by charts, which show the results of his surveys. In 1855 he was appointed chief of the meteory-logical department of the Board of Trade, a department which was then established for the purpose of giving notice, on the coasts and elsewhere, of approaching storms, in which office he was of immense service to fishermen and sailors. B. 1805. D. by his own hand, 1865.

B. 1000. D. Dy his own hand, 1865. Firz-Strephen, William, fit-sit-fen, a monk of Canterbury, who wrote the life of his master, Thomas à Becket, in which he gives a curious description of London, and which is the earliest extant. D. 1191.

FITZWILLIAM, William Wentworth Fitzwilliam, earl, fits'-william, an English statesman, who took his seat in the House of Lords in 1709, and for a time ceted with the Whigs, but on Mr. Fox approving of the French revolutionary ideas, he joined the Duke of Portland and Mr. Pitt, and was appointed lord-libetenant of Ireland. In the discharge of the duties of this office, he favoured the agitation for Catholic enancipation, and this not being approved by his colleagues, he was recalled to make way for Earl Camden. On Pitt's death, in 1804, he became president of the council, an office he continued to hold till the Green'ille administration fell, in 1807. He did not, after that time, take much share in public sflairs. He was possessed of very large estates, and this, and his family councerions, gave him an immense amount of influence; to which circumstance, more, perhaps, than to his own abilities, he was indebted for the position he held in the national councils. 2. 1748: p. 1833.

FLACUS, Caius Valerius, flük'-kus, a Latin poet, who lived in the reign of Vespasian. A poem of his on the Argonautic expedition is extant, the best edition of which is that of Burman, 1724.

Falcors, or Falkooverz, Mathias, a Lutera divine, who assumed the name of Flaceus Illyrieus, on account of his having been born in an ancient part of Illyrieum. He became a disciple of Luther and McIanchton at Wittnberg, where he taught the Heurew and Greek anguages, of which he was there appointed professor. He was the principal author of the Centurine Magdeburgeness, and a great defender of the principles of Luther against those who were for moderate doctrines; on which account he settled at Magdeburg, and afternals removed to other places. B. at Isiria, 1830; D. at Frankforf, 1878. He wrote "Cluvis Scare Scripture," 2 vols. folio; "Catalogus Testium Veritatis," folio; "De Translation Imperit Romain ad Germanos," and "De Electione Episcoporum, quod aque ad Plebem princas," 8vo.

Franker, Nicholas, Ma'-mel, a notary of Paris, Franks, Nicholas, Ma'-mel, a notary of Paris,

FLANKI, Nicholas, Jid-mel, a notary of Paris, who accumulated, by some unknown means, a vast property, which he appropriated to benevate purposes and the endowment of hospitals and churches. The multitude ascribed his great wealth to his possessing the philosopher's stone; whilst others attributed to him the authorship of some works on alchemy. However this may be, he certainly founded no less than the contract of the contract ethen in sing beg it extensive function to less than four hospitals in Paris. p. 1418.

ALTHOR, METALINIO, MET

FLAMINIUS, Caius, fla-min'-i-us, a brave and warlike Roman consul, who was drawn into a battle near the lake Thrasymenus, by the artifice of Hannibal. He was slain in the ment, with an immense number of 217 m.o.

F or Flamininus,

a celebrated Roman consul, who, n.c. 197, was chamberlain was executed. Lived in the 5th sent against Philip, king of Macedonia, and century. against the Achian league, it letotally defeated __FLAMAN, John, Max-man, an eminent Eng-Philip on the confines of Epirus, and made al Locris, Phoeis, and Thessaly tributary to the Roman power. He proclaimed all Greece inde-pendent, at the Istimian games. This celebrated action procured him the name of father and deliverer of Greece. He was afterwards sent ambassador to Prusias, king of Bithynia, where, by his prudence and artrice, he caused Hannibal, who had taken refuge at this court, to kill himself, rather than be given up to n's enemies the Rollans. Finalities was found dead in his bed, after he had imitated, with success, the virtues of his model, Sciplo.— Lucius, the brother of the preceding, signalized himself in the wars of Greece.—Finalities, a tribune, who, at the head of 300 men, saved the Roman army in Sicily, 258 B.C., by engaging the Carthaginians, and cutting them to pieces.

FLANSTLID, flan-steed, an English astro-nomer, who, when very young discovered a strong predicction for mathematical learning, and, in 1609, calculated an eclipse of the sun which was to happen the next year. He also calculated five appulses of the moon to the fixed stars. He sent the same to the Royal Society, for which he received the thanks of that learned body. Soon after this, he visited London, and then went to Cambridge, where he entered himself of Jesus College. One of his best friends was Sir Jonas Moore, who introduced him to the king, and in 1674 procured for him the place of astronomer royal. The same year he entered into orders. In 1675 the foundation of the royal observatory at Greenwich was laid, and he being the first resident and astronomer and in being the first seatest and assistant royal, it was called Flamsteed House. In 1725 appeared his great work, entitled "Historia Celestis Britannica," in 3 vols. folio. In the "Philosophical Transactions" are many of his papers, and in Sir Jonas Moore's "System of Mathematics" is a tract by him on the Doctrine of the Sphere. B. at Derby, 1646; p. 1719. It was to the mass of lunar observations made by Flamsteed, that Newton was indebted for the means of carrying out and verifying his immortal discovery of gravitation.

FLAVIAN, flui'-vi-an, patriarch of Antioch, in which see he was confirmed by the council of Constantinople in 382. This act, however, occasioned a schism, numerous bishops adhering to Paulinus, and others to Flavian. The prudence of the latter at length restored peace to the church. He was a zealous opposer of the Arians. D. 404, having governed his church twenty-three FLAVIAN, patriarch of Constantinople, to which he was elected on the death of Proclus, in 447. He condemned the Eutychian heresy, in a synod held at Constantinople; but the followers of Eutychius afterwards got Flavian banished to Lydia, where he died.

FLAVITAS, flav'-i-tas, patriarch of Constantinople. When Acaeius, patriarch of Constantinople, died, the emperor Zeno was weak enough to leave a blank paper under the altar, in expectation that an angel would write upon it the name of a person to succeed him. Fla-vitas, by bribing the grand-chamberlain, gained admittance into the church, and inscribed his own name in the letter; on which he was chosen patriarch. He died about three months

Flaxman, John, Max-man, an eminent Eng-lish seulptor, who from his boyhood discovered a remarkable genius for modelling in clay. In 1787 he visited Rome, where, during a residence of seven years, he executed his celebrated designs in outline from Homer, Æschylus, and Dante. These were engraved and published, Dante. These were engraved and published, as were some which he made from Hesiod. While at Rome, he also executed the splendid group from Orid's "Metamorphoses," entitled "The Fury of Athamas," consisting of four figures, larger than life. For this work he neutros, irrigor tima nie. For eins work ne received £600, a sum insufficient to defray even the cost. It was executed for the earl of Bristol. At this time he also produced his "Cephalus and Aurora." In 1794 he returned to England, and executed the monument for Lord Mansfield now in Westminster Abbey: for this he received £2500. After this he produced a large number ot nne works, and has been pronounced "the greatest of modern sculptors." n. at York, 1755; p. in London, 1826. Dyron says that "Flaxman trunslated Dante the best," and Allan Gamiljeham says that "the propeny of his panell and chisel were of the highest rank."

FLECHIER, Esprit, flat-she-ai, a famous French bishop, who was greatly admired as a preacher at Paris, and whose funeral orations placed him on a level with Bossuet. In 1679 he published his "History of Theodosius the Great;" in 1685 he was made bishop of Lavaur, on which Louis XIV. said, "I should have rewarded you much sooner, but that I was afraid of losing the pleasure of hearing your discourses." Shortly after, he was promoted to the see of Nimes. As a bishop, he was exemplary, and when a famine raged in 1709, his charity was unbounded, and manifested to all persons, without any respect manifested to all persons, without any respect to religious persuasion. D. at Pernes, near Carpentras, 1632; D. at Nimes, 1710. His works re, "Miscellaneous Works," 12mo; "Panegyries of the Saints;" "Funeral Orations;" Sermons; 'Y the lives of Cardinal Ximenes and Theodosius the Great; "Posthumous Works." They were all published together at Nimes in 1782, in 10 vols. 8vo.
FIRENUM, Ribard, Jeds-'mo, an English poet and dramatist, noticed here, not on account so much of his own productions, as on account and dramatist, noticed nere, not on accounts on much of his own productions, as on account of his name having been borrowed by Dryden, to serve as a scourge for the punishment of Shadwell. Ho was poet laurente to Charles II, and wrote several miscellaneous pieces; a short treatise on the English Stage; "Love's Domi-nion," a dramatic piece; "Braina; or, the mion," a dramatic piece; "Ermina; or, the Chaste Lady;" and several other performances, which are now all but forgotten, even by the antiquarians in literature. Of his birth nothing is known. He is believed to have died about

1078 FLEMMING, OF FLEMMYNGE, Richard flem'-FIEMMING, or TEMMINGE, Accided jeen-ming, an English prolate, who received his education at University College, Oxford, and, in 1498, bothained a probend in the cathedral of York. He, for a time, zealously defended the dectrines of wickliffe, but afterwards as strenu-nsly opposed them. In 1420 he became bishop of Lincoln, and soon after was sent deputy to the council of Constance, where he distinguished himself by his eloquence. At his return, he executed the decree of that assembly for dig: afterwards, and the cheat being discovered, the up Wickliffe's bones and burning them, was afterwards raised to the see of lora by the pope; but Henry VI. refusing to concur in his advancement, he was obliged to remain at Lincoln. B. in Yorkshire; D. at Lincoln, 1431. He founded Lincoln College, Oxford.

FLEETWOOD, Charles, fleet-wood, one of the parliamentary generals during the civil war, was the son of Sir William Fleetwood, cup-bearer to the son of Sir William Fleetwood, sup-bearer to Charles I; but on the breaking out of the quarrel between the king and the parliament, young Fleetwood declared for the latter. He commanded a regiment of eavalry in 1644; held the rank of lieutenaut-general at the battle of Worcester, to the gaining of which, by Cromwell, he largely contributed. He married the Pro-tector's daughter after the death of her first husband, Ireton, and was appointed commander nussand, freton, and was appointed commander of the forces in Ireland, in 1652, and commissioner for the settlement of the affairs of that country, which he reduced to subjection, and was named lord-deputy there by his father-inlaw. He strongly opposed Cromwell assuming the title of king in 1657, and was soon after superseded in Ireland by Henry Cromwell, the Protector's younger son.

He was lecturer at St. Dunstan's, was installed canon of Windsor in 1702; and in 1706 suc-ceeded bishop Beveridge in the sec of St. Asaph, from whence he was translated to Ely in 1714. He was greatly admired as a preacher, and was esteemed and honoured on account of the exemplary and blameless life he lived. His sermons are the best known of his writings, although he also composed several learned works on theological subjects, and on some points of what is now known as political economy. the Tower of London, 1656; p. at Tottenham, Middlesex, 1723.

FLETCHER, Richard, fletch'-er, an English prelate, who, in 1583, was made dean of Peterborough; and, in 1587, attended Mary queen of Scots at her execution, with a view of converting her to the Protestant religion. In 1580 he was preferred to the bishopric of Bristol, whence he was translated to Worce-ter, and lastly to London. On the death of his first wife he married again, and this gave such offence to Ouen Elizabeth, that she suspended him from his episcopal functions. B. in Kent; D. 1503. FLETCHER, John, an English dramatic poet,

FIGURE John, an English dramatic poor, who received his education at Cambridge, and wrote several plays in conjunction with Ecanmont. We do not know whether to consider it a fair inference, that, because the plots of many of his plays were taken from works in the Spanish, Italian, and French languages, he was acquainted with these; but be that as it may, it is certain that he possessed other merits sufficient to establish a fair claim to the reputation which time and posterity have alike awarded him in the literature of his country. Out of the fifty-two plays composed under the united names of Beaumont and Fletcher, it is stated names of Beaumont and a stare in the production that Beaumont had a share in the production to foolly seventeen. If such was the case, the Srice and the could extite such generous fautx, André Hercule de, fur'-a, a cérdinal friendship which could extite such generous fautx, André Hercule de, fur'-a, a cérdinal and prime minister of France, was, at first, DD 2 was afterwards raised to the see of York by creditable to both. In addition to his other the pope; but Henry VI. refusing to concur works, he assisted Een Josson and Middleton in his advancement, he was obliged to remain in "The Widow," and is believed to have been also a literary partner with Shakspeare, Massinger, and some other authors. B. 1576; D. of a plague which happened 1625, and was buried in St. Saviour's Church. Southwark. (See BEAUMONT.)

FERICIPE, Phiness, consin to the above poet, was educated at Eton and Cambridge. In 1621 he obtained the living of Illigary, in Norfolk, where he died in 1650. He is best known by a poem entitled "The Purple Island," which is an allegorical description of man, in the manner an anegorical description of man, in the manner of Spenser, reprinted at London, in 1783. He also wrote a work, now very rare, entitled "Locustes, or the Apollyonists," a sattreagainst also wrote a work, now very rare, cannea. "Locarets, or the Apollyonists," a satire against the Julies, the Julies, and the Julies was also a divine and a poet, and wrote "Christ's Victory," To this work Milton is said to have confess of that the owed the idea of his "Paradise Lost." He was born in 1558, and died in 1623.

FLUTCHER, Andrew, a Scottish political writer, was the sen of Sir Robert Fletcher of Saltoun, Protector's younger son.

Oliver, he concurred in the appointment of Richard as his successor; but soon after joined in inducing him to resign, and thus pave in material min rotsign and this pieter way for the Restoration, an event, however, which he did not lone survive. D. 10c2.

Lothian in the

Solidal prilament, in which he so strongly which he did not lone survive. D. 10c2.

Figure on D. Milliam, in D. Baglish prelate, became chapitan to William and Mary, was bridged in the west of England with the duke of Ellow of blon, and roctor of An-tin's, London.

Mountainth, but was damised for shooting a gentleman who had remonstrated with him for stealing his horse. One of Fletcher's biographers says, that "he was a man of breeding and nice honour, in whose constitution anger was ex-tremely predominant." After this he was engaged in the Hungarian service against the Turks. At the Revolution he returned to his own country, and was a member of the conven-tion for settling the government of Scotland. n. at Saltonn, 1653; p. in London, 1716. His publications, which are wholly political, are filled with the boldest and most honest denumcations of the oppressive measures beneath which his country, in his time, groaned. His character is thus given by a contemporary: "A gentleman, steady in his principles, of nice honour, with abundance of learning; brave as the sword he wears, and bold as a lion,—a sure friend and an irreconcilable enemy,—would lose his life readily to serve his country, and would not do a base thing to save it." It is in his r to the marquis of Montrese, entitled "An unt of a Conversation," that occurs the rated saying errone usly attributed to the of Chatham; "I knew a very wise man that believed that if a min were permitted to make all the ballads, he did not care who should make all the laws of a nation."

FLETCHER, Abraham, an ingenious English mathematician, was bred to the business of a tobacco-pipe maker. He learned to read and write by his own application, and also taught himself arithmetic, mathematics, and botany. At the acc of thirty he became a schoolmaster, to which he added the professions of astrologer and doctor, and acquired a fortune of £3000. E. in Cumberland, 1714; p. 1793. He published a compendium of practical mathematics, under the title of the "Universal Measurer," I vol.

chaplain to Louis XIV., then became, in 1698, bishop of Fréjus, and was nominated by the old king, when near his death, as tutor to his successor, Louis XV. Flenry gained great influence over the mind of his pupil, and in 1726 succeeded the duke of Bourbon as prime minister, being in the same year also made cardinal. He showed his wisdom in the internal administration of the kingdom, diminishing the taxes, and systematizing the finance department, but was not successful in maintaining the influence of France abroad. Stanislas, king of Poland, whose claims ought to have been supported, was abandoned in the war which he undertook to recover his crown. By the treaty of Vienna, 1736, Fleury, however, obtained from Austria Loraine and Bar, stipulating that these should, at the death of Stanislas, revert to France. In the War of Succession, 1741, the cardinal was not destined to see the arms of his country successful; but he did not live till the end of the conflict. B. at Lodève, Languedoc, 1653;

FLINDERS, Captain Matthew, flin'-ders, a distinguished English navigator, who early entered into the merchant service, but quitted it soon into the merchant service, but quitted it son for the navy, which he joined as a midshipman in 1795. Having distinguished himself in an exploring expedition through Bas's Straits (see Bass), he was, on his return to England, promoted, and in 1801 salled, as captain of the Investigator, for Australia, and, commencing at Cape Leeuwin, surveyed the eastern coast, as far Jackson, where, having refitted, he explored Northumberland and Cumberland islands, and the great Barrier Reef of coral rocks. the proceeded to Torres Straits, examined the Gulf of Carpentaria, thence to the island of Timor, and thence to Port Jackson, where he arrived in 1803. From the rotten state of his ship, he was no longer able to continue his sursmp, he was no longer able to continue as survey; accordingly, he embarked for England in the Porpoise, for the purpose of laying the results of his investigations before the lords commissioners of the admiralty. In this ship, however, he was wrecked on a coral reef, in sailing for Torres Straits; but, through his own intelligence and enterprise, not only saved the crew, but eventually was the means of rescuing them, when, in a vessel called the Cumberland, them, when, in a vessel called the Cumorn lind, no larger than 29 tons, he set out for England. He crossed the Indian Ocean, and reached the Illed of France, where he and his people were made prisoners of war, notwithstanding that he held a French pass, enjoining that his should be respected wherever it should be found. on account of the scientific objects in which its captain was engaged. Here he was detained a prisoner for six years. At length he was re-stored to his liberty and his country, with all his plans and charts, excepting one of his log-books, which had been either lost, kept, or destroyed. By this time the French had issued a volume and an atlas, marking a vast number of the parts surveyed by Flinders as those which had been visited by a navigator of their nation. Deem visited by a navigator of their hation. Flinders, however, was enabled to assert his own rights; but, broken in health, lived only to revise the last sheet of his work, having died on the very day that his book was published. a sat Donington, Lincohshire, 1780. D. 1814. The work of Flinders is entitled "A Vorigae to Terra Australis, in the years 1801, 1802, and 1803, in His Majesty's ship Isol, 1902, and 1909, in this majesty's saip Investigator, and subsequently in the armed vessel Porpoise and Cumberland schooner," 2 vols. with atlas: London, 1814. (See Brown, Dr. Robert.)

FLOOR, Henry, flud, an Irish orator, was the son of the Right Hon. Warden Flood, chief justice of the King's Bench, in Ireland. He received his education at Dublin and Oxford, and was, in 1752, created M.A. at the latter university. He entered the Irish parliament for the county of Kilkenny, and afterwards for the borough of Callan, where his eloquence acquired for him an uncommon popularity in his native country, which he lost when he obtained a seat in the British parliament. n. 1732; p. 1791. Mr. Flood published an ode to Fame; and several of his speeches have been also printed. He bequeathed the bulk of his property, after the death of his wife, to the university of Dublin, for the purpose of found-university of Dublin, for the purpose of found-ing a professorship, purchasing manuscripts and books, and for granting premiums. Fronkan, John Feter Clarks de, for-e-an, a French writer, educated under Voltaire, who procursed him the place of page to the duke the procured him the place of page to the duke who gave him a captain's commission in his who gave him a captain's commission in his regiment of dragoons. He devoted himself, however, principally to letters, and produced a number of works, chiefly of the romantic kind, His first was "Galathée," published in 1782, which was followed by his "Théâtre," conti-ing "Les Deux Billets." Le Bon Ménage," "Le Bon Père," "La Bonne Mère," and "Le Bon Fils;" His "Voltaire et le Serf du Mont Bon Fils." His "voitane et le Serr qu mong Jura" gained him the prize given by the French Academy, of which society he became a member. His "Estelle" is reckoned equal to "Galathe;" and his "Numa Pompilius;" "Gonsalvo de Cordova," and his "Pables," which rank next to those of La Fontaine, are also highly esteemed. For his "Numa" he was sent to prison during the state of Eubergierre. In his coffware. the reign of Robespierre. In his confinement the region a poem on the story of "William Tell," and finished another, entitled "Ebrahim." He gained his liberty after the fall of Robespierre, and died at Sceaux, 1794. B. in Languedoc, 1755.

FLORIAN, Marcus Antonius, half-brother of the emperor Tacitus, assumed the purple after the death of the latter, and caused himself to be acknowledged by the senate. Probus, however, having been proclaimed by the legions of the East, Florian marched against him; but experiencing a check in one of his first encounters, his soldiers killed him. He reigned but two months. D. 278.

FLORIO, John, flo'-re-o, who styled himself "The Resolute," was descended from a family of Italian refugees which had settled in London, where he was born in the reign of Henry VIII. He taught French and Italian at Magdalen Colego (Norfor, and was appointed tutor to Prince Henry on the accession of James I, to the English throne, and likewise held the office of clerk of the closet to the queen. He wrote a variety of works with somewhat funciful tiss, the best of which are, "First Fruits," "Second Fruits," "Garden of Recreation," and an English and Italian Dictionary, D. 1835.

FLOURIS, Francis, forte, a Flemish historical painter, surnamed the "Plemish Raphael." He was held in high estimation by Charles, and Phillip II, of Spain, and amassed a very He taught French and Italian at Magdalen Col-large fortune. Amongst his best works are the 1372 against the count of Armagnac; and, 1375, "Twelve Labours of Heredies," and a "Last against the duke de Berri. B. 1331; D. 1391. Judgment." B, at Antwerp, 1503; D. 1570. Forr, Gaston de, duke Of Kemoura, Frenchman Judgment," n. at Antwerp, 1899; p. 1870.

FLORUS, Lucius Annœus, flor-us, a Latin historian, of the same family as Seneca and Lucan. He wrote an "Abridgment of the Roman History," in four books, which is concise and elegant, although incorrect in many points. He lived between the years 70 and 140, reaching the summit of his fame in the reigns of the emperors Trajan and Hadrian.

FLOURENS, Marie Jean Pierre, floo'rai, a distinguished French physiologist, universally known as one of the most distinguished savans of his day, and as the author of many learned works on physiological science, was professor of comparative physiology in the Museum of Natural History in Paris; professor in the College of France; peer of the Empire; perpetual secretary of the Anademy of Sciences in the same city, a member of the Royal Society of England, and of the Academies of Edinburgh, Stockholm, Munich, Madrid, Turin, and of almost every other capital in Christendom. The best and most remarkable of all the works by M. Flourens is his book on the "Duration of Human Life, and the quantity of Life on the Globe," in which he maintains that one hundred vears is the natural duration of human of his day, and as the author of many learned dred years is the natural duration of human life, and that by living a sober—that is, a well-ordered, well-conducted, reasonable life—men may seeure that degree of longevity; but that it is impossible to prolong existence beyond that period, use whatever means they may. B. at Maureilhan, Hérault, 1794.

Fo, or Foe, fo, the founder of a religious sect, which, in the empire of China, reckons a great number of followers, whose tenets appear to be much the same as those of Buddha. He reformed the religion of the Brahmins, denied the distinction of castes, and the superiority of any one class of men, and taught a doctrine, of which the fundamental precepts are, not to lie, to do to others as we would be done by, to kill, no living creature, to abstain from wine, to avoid all impurity, and to believe in future rewards and punishments. His doctrines only began to be prevalent in China 200 years no. If men priests are called bonzes, and live in monas-teries, travelling also considerably about the compire, and living for the most part on almothe distinction of castes, and the superiority of empire, and living, for the most part, on alms. B. at Benares, or in Cashmere, about 1027 B.C.

Fort, for he, the first Chinese emperor and legislator. He is said to have founded that kingdom 2963 years n.c. Nothing certain is known of his reign; but there are attributed to him the institution of marriage, the invention of fishing, hunting, music, and writing. He acknowledged and worshipped a supreme deity.

Lived about 3000 B.C.

Forx, Gaston III., Count de, Viscount de Béarn, Join, succeeded his father, Gaston II., at the age of twelve, and rendered himself remarkable for his valour and magnificence. He is accused, however, of possessing a violent temper, and having caused the death of his own son. This young prince, unjustly suspected of having attempted to poison his father, was imprisoned by the orders of Gaston, at the instigation of Charles the Bad, and left to perish, in his dungeon, of hunger. The life of Gaston was passed in continual wars. In 1345 he was fighting against the English; in 1356 in Prus-

Forx, Gaston de, duke of Nemours, afrenchman who, in 1512, senceeded the duke of Longuerille in command of the army in Italy, and on account of his daring exploits, was called the "Thunderbols of Italy." Hersised the siege of Bologna, relieved Brescia, and laid siege to Bologna, relieved Brescia, and laid siege to Ravanna, where, on the Ilth of april, 1512, he fell in the arms of victory. Byron, in the "Childle Harold," calls him the "gallant young De Folx," and draws a moral as to the evanesand character with human farme from the state of cent character of human fame, from the state of the monument raised to his memory on the spot where he fell, and which, the poet says, he found with-

"Weeds and ordure rankling round the base." De Foix was the son of John de Foix, Viscount Narbonne, by his wife, Mary of Orleans, sister of Louis XII., and was born in 1439, and was thus only twenty-three years of age at his death.

Forx, Odet de, lord of Lautree, a famous French general, was likewise present at the battle of Ravenna, where he was wounded, and was appointed governor of Milan by Francis I. He was opposed to the famous general Colonna, who drove him out of Italy. He returned in 1523, however, and took Pavia, and besieged Naples, where he died. His body was conveyed to Spain, and was buried, twenty years after, in the tomb of the great Gonsalvo of Cordova.

FOLARD, Jean Charles de, fo'-lar, a French officer, who, in 1702, became aide-de-camp to M. de Vendome, who undertook nothing without consulting him. For his services, he was rewarded with a pension and the cross of St. Louis. He was wounded at the battle of Cassano, and taken prisoner by Prince Eugene some time after the battle of Blenheim. Being some time ener the status of Bienneum. Being exchanged, he was sent to Malta, to assist in its defence against the Turks. He afterwards served under Charles XII. of Sweden, and was present at the siege of Frederickhall when that prince was killed, December 11, 1718. He then returned to France, and served under the charles and the siege of the status of the siege of t duke of Berwick. B. at Avignon, 1609; p. 1752. He wrote "Commentaries upon Polybins," 6 vols. 4to; "A Book of New Discoveries in War," and "A Treatise on the Defence of Places."

Folcz, Johann, folts, a famous German poet belonging to the class of authors called master-singers, who, in the 14th century, succeeded to he position previously occupied by the minne-singers, or Suabian bards. These master-singers, who belonged generally to the class of master-ordsmen, usually met in taverns, and their merit was to invent new species of measures, subject to certain rules and laws. Folcz was especially eminent in this line, having originated several of these styles of versilica-tion. He occupied the position of a barber in Nuremberg, and was born at Ulm in the 15th century. A collection of his pieces was printed at Nuremberg in 1474.

FOLENGO, Theofilo, fo-len'-go, an Italian poet of the macaronic and burlesque schools, whose poetical cognomen was Merlino Coccaie, by which name he is best known. He was of a meangeant of the rest inc Data state to Peties, which make he is Dest Khown. He Was of a was passed in continual wars. In 1345 he was a layers, during which he indisped for sevewas passed in continual wars. In 1345 he was religiously the petition of the rest was passed in the rest of the rest in the rest of the rest was passed in the rest of the rest was passed in the rest of the Jacqueries in the fatility did not poetry deriving its name from court against the revolt of the Jacqueries in the fatility dish macaroni, and which consisted Poley Fontaine in interweaving with a staple of Latin verse words and phrases of the vernacular tongue, and made to fit into the construction and metre by Latin terminations. In this species of composi-Latin terminations. In this species of composi-tion Folongo was very successful. He likewise wrote a burlesque called "Orlandino," pub-lished at Venice in 1529; and, returning to a settled and so-called religious life, he in 1627 printed a piece entitled "Choos del Triperano," in prose and verve, a whimsical and licentifous work, descriptive of the various incidents of his life, and cuding with the record of his conwersion. He subsequently, while living in a monastery in the Neapolitan dominions, composed a poem in ottava rima, called "La Umanità del Figlio di Dio," which appeared in 1533. n. 191; n. 1514.

Foley, Sir Thomas, fo'-lc, a distinguished naval officer, and the friend of Nelson, was descended from an ancient family of Pembrokeshire. He was a lieutenant in the Prince George when Prince William Henry, afterwards William IV., was a mid-hipman on board. He was made post-captain in 1790; was appointed to the St. George, flag-ship of Admiral Gell, in 1794, at the commencement of the war with France and Spain. On the passage to the Mediterranean, immediately after, he assisted at the recapture of the St. Jugo, a large Spanish ship, with upwards of two millions of dollars on board. Foley afterwards served under Admiral Hotham, and distinguished himself in an action with the French Toulon fleet and in capturing the Censeur and Ca Ira ships of the line. He was captain of the Britamia in the famous battle off Cape St. Vincent, on the 11th of February, 1797, where he displayed signal brayery. In 1703 he was transferred to the bravery. In 1793 he was transferred to the Goliath, which was sent to reinforce Nelson in the Mediterraneen; and in the battle of the Nile, August 1, 1793, led the British line into Within two minutes after the first shot was fired by the French, Foley opened upon them from the Goliuth, which he steered alongside of the Conquerant, the second ship in the enemy's van, in fifteen minutes dismasted his opponent, and then aided in subduing the mis opportent, and that direct in studing the vessels in the rear. After a sisting in the blockale of Multa, Foley was in 1803 in command of the Elephont, if, belonging to the floct under Sir Hyde Purker, and on beard of his ship Nelson hoisted his fir g when about to make his celebrated attack on the Danish fleet and fortifications at Copenhagen. Foley accompanied forting the whole of the desperate action which followed. It was to Captain Foley that Nelson made the famous remark, when the "Leave off the action! Foley, you know I have only one eye, and am entitled to be blind sometimes. I really do not see the signal," added he, putting the glass to his blind eye; and continued the battle, with what result is well known, Captain Foley was made a colonel of marines in 1897, was promoted to rear-admiral's rank in 1897, in 1811 was appointed commander-in-chief in the Downs, which position he continued to hold during the remainder of the war. In 1812 he was made vice-admiral; in 1815 was nominated knight commander of the Bath: and sculptor, who, from Dublin, went to London, in 1834, and became a student in the Royal Academy. His first exhibitions were "Innocence" and "The Death of Abel;" both of which in 1830, appeared on the walls of the Academy, and 1930, appeared on the wans of the academy, and attracted much attention. Next year appeared his "Ino and the Infant Bacchus," which further increased his fame; and from that time he may be said to have taken his place amongst the best sculptors of the day. Besides those works already named, he produced "Lean and Cordolla," "Venus rescuing Eneas," "Prospero Cordona, "venus rescuing maeas, "rrospero narrating his Adventures to Miranda," and several others, displaying a rich faculty of invention, and truly classic taste in execution. He also produced many portraits and monu-mental memorials, which greatly helped to extend his reputation. In 1858 he was elected a member of the Royal Academy. B. at Dub-

Folkes, Martin, fokes, an English philosopher and antiquary, who, after receiving a private education, was sent to Clare Hall, Cambridge. At the age of twenty-three he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1723 was nominated one of the vice-presidents. In 1741 he succeeded Sir Hans Sloane as president of that learned body, and was, about the same time, elected a member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris. He was also created doctor sciences at rays. He was also created doctor of laws by both universities. n. at Westminster, 1690: n. in London, 1754. Mr. Folkes wrote besides a number of papers in the "Philosophical Transactions," "A Table of English Siver Coins, from the Norman Conquest 1745." A second edition of this work appeared in 1763.

FONBLANQUE, John de Grenier, fon'-blawng, a distinguished English barrister, was descended from a noble family in the south of France, some members of which had emigrated to England on the revocation of the edict of Nantes. In 1793 he published a "Treatise on Equity," which was enlarged and reprinted with notes in 1799.

and again in 1805. p. 1759; p. 1837.

FORDLYQUE, Albany W., fon'-blank, son of the above, was brought up to the law, but was never called to the bar. He early began to direct his attention to political questions, and, on Leigh Hunt and his brother parting with the "Examiner" newspaper, it passed into the proprietorship of Mr. Fonit passed into the proprietorship of Air. Fon-blanque. In the columns of this journal his talents were fully displayed. In 1887 he published a selection of his papers from the "Examiner," and entitled them "England under Seven Administrations," which were much admired. In 1859 he was appointed director of the statistical department of the leased of Trafo. When his supenitual cane of director of the statistical department or tan Board of Trade, when his superintendence of the "Examinor" may be considered to have virtually coased. n. 1797.
FONTAINE, John de la, jow-tain, a French poet, was educated first at Rheims, and atterwards under the lathers of the Oratory.

He was a man of great simplicity of manners, eredulous, fearful, and uncommonly absent-minded. He lived for some time with the superintendent Fouguet, who allowed him a pension. After-wards he resided in turn with the duchesses of Bouillon and Orleans, and Mesdames d'Hervart nominated knight commander of the Bath; and wards he resided in turn with the duchesses of obtained the grand cross of the same order in Doullion and Orleans, and Mesdames d'Hervart 1820. On May 1, 1830, Sir Thomas was appointed to the command of Portsmouth, and de Sabilère. As an illustration of the lazi-pointed to the command of Portsmouth, and died there on January 3, 1831; n. 1757.

Folia, John Henry, R.A., an eminent and the port of the port

Fontaine

my cat, my dog, and La Fontaine." He was married, but his wife had as little knowledge of the management of a household as himself. He wrote some licentious tales, which are little wrote some incentious tales, which are little read; but his fables are very generally put into the hands of young people. They are natural, poetical, and entertaining. He also wrote "Les Amours de Psyche," a romance, some comedies, letters, &c., to be found in his miscellane, z. at Château Thierry, 1821; z. 1895. In his Later years, La Foutaine henlined seriously towards religion, and many of his more unworthy works he, at the instance of his confessor, sup-pressed. As a fable-writer he is unsurpassed, is compositions in this path being remarkable for their great simplicity and exquisite beauty.

FONTAINE, Nicholas, a voluminous French author, connected with the Jansenists, was the son of a scrivener at Paris, where he was born son of a scrivener at Paris, where he was born in 1825. His principal works are, "Lives of the Saints," "History of the Bible," in short chapters, which has often been reprinted under the title of the "Bible de Royaumont;" "Memoirs of the Solitaires of Port Royal," and a "Translation of the Homilies of St. Chrysostom on Paul's Epistles," which latter was con-demned by de Harlai, archbishop of Paris, as teaching the Nestorian heresy. D. at Melun, FONTAINS, Pierre François Leonard, an architect, who has been called the Father of the modern French school, early began the study of modern French sensor, early began the satisfy a his art, and, in 1785, carried away the second prize for architecture. He now became a pen-sioner of the Academy, to be maintained at Rome, and having presented drawings of the "imperial city," as it was in the time of the Casars, he received an extraordinary prize of 3000 francs. After the Revolution, and the elevation of Napoleon I. to the consulate, he and Percier, a brother architect, were employed to restore Malmaison. Under the imperial rule, he was further employed to restore all the palaces and complete the Louvre and the Tuiplanets and complete the lower and the deries, which, with numerous other works, occupied him and Percier throughout the whole of the rule of Napoleon I. On the fall of the empire, he was named architect to Louis XVIII., which place he held till 1848. He next became president of the Council of the Civil Buildings. and by his vast experience was thus enabled still to direct some of the most important public works in France. B. at Pontoise, in the department of the Seine-et-Oise, 1762; D. in Paris, 1853.

FONTANA, Domenico, fon-ta'-na, an eminent architect and mechanic, who raised the Roman obelisk from the dust in the front of St. Peter's. a work deemed impracticable, and which many others had attempted in vain. B. at Mili, on the Lake of Como, 1513; n. at Naples, 1607.

FONTANA, Prospero, an historical painter, who was preceptor to Ludovico and Hunnibal B. at Bologna, 1512; D. at Rome, Caracci. 1597.—His daughter Lavinia was also an excellent painter of portraits, and was patronized by PopeGregory XIII. n 1552; n.1614.—There were several others of this name, among whom may be mentioned-1. Felix Fontana, an eminent naturalist and physical philosopher, B. at Pomarlo, in the Tyrol, 1730; p. 1805. 2. Gregory Fontana, the brother of Felix, a mathematician. B. 1735; D. 1803. 3. Francis Fontana, an astronomer of Naples, to whom the invention of the telescope was for some time erroneously ascribed, but who made improvements in various instruments. B. 1580; D. 1656. 4. Carlo Fontana, an Italian architect of some distinction. B. 1634: D. 1714. 5. Gaetano Fontana, a Modenese astronomer, with whom Cassini corresponded, and by whom he was regarded as always to be depended on in his observations and calculations. B. 1645; D. 1719. FONTE, Moderata, fon'-tai, a Venetian lady, who wrote two peems; one entitled "Il Floridoro," the other on the "Passion and Resurretion of Jesus Christ." She also produced a work in prose, in which she assorts that women are not inferior in understanding to men. n. at Venice, 1555; p. 1592.

Fontenelle

FONTINAY, Therese de Cabarrus, Marquise de, fon-te-nai, a Spanish lady, who became first the wife of M. Devin, marquis of Fontenay, a connsellor in Paris, and afterwards the wife of Tal-alive. The Church, however, refused to racify her marriage, and she continued to struggle against the feelings of society, in a vain endeayour to be received into it, until 1816, when she retired to a private retreat, where she passed the remainder of her days in tranquillity. She was very beautiful, and extremely engaging by her great wit. v. at Saragossa, Spain, 1773; p. at Chimay, 1835.

FONTENELLE, Bernard le Bovier de, f.a'-/virowrenesses, bernard to bevier de, 732-441-nel, a celebrated French writer, whose father was a counsellor of Rouen. Young Fontenelle was also bred to the legal profession, which, however, he abandoned for literature. His first efforce were directed to the stage, and although they were superintended by his uncle Thomas Corwere superintended by his tunce Thomas Con-neille, he did not succeed. In 1683 he published his "Balogues of the Dead," which were will received. His conversations on the "Flurality of Worlds," which appeared in 1850, further added to his reputation; and the year following he published the "History of Oracles," which is a translation, or very nearly so, of a world on the same subject by Van Dule. He was admitted a member of the French Academy in 1991 and in 1997 of the actions of Science. 1691, and, in 1697, of the Academy of Sciences. He subsequently became secretary of the latter, and filled that office with honour from 1699 to 1741. In this capacity he wrote a history of the Academy, and distinguished himself by the excellent enlogies which he composed upon its deceased members. n. at Rouen, 1937; n. at Paris, 1757. Besides the above works, he wrote a "History of the French Theatre," "Elements of the Geometry of Influities," "Moral Discourses," &c. Pontenelle is said by some critics to have been especially distinguished for the clearness and simplicity of his style, and to have possessed, in an eminent degree, the power of making scientific matters intelligible to all readers. As a man of the world, he shone by the sharpness of his wit and the smartness of his repartees; although he was also remarkable for his moderation and reserve in an age able for his moderation and reserve in an age when there was not much of these qualities. He would say, "If I had my hands full of truths, I should take care how I opened them." He has been severely criticised, however, by some writers. Arseno Houssaye, in his sparkling work on the "Men and Women of the Eighteenth Century," says of him that "he always wanted a compliment; a slave to his vanity, he made himself the slave of the first comer. The roof his days here and there; with Thomas Corneille, with M. le Hagnais, with M. Aube (you know him with the Haganas, with M. Aube (you know min--that M. Aube celebrated by Rulhères). Again, he always dined out—with Madame de Tencin, with Madame d'Epinay, with Madame Tenem, with Madame d Argenton; in fine, everywhere except at home. This style of living could not fail of being economical. He, therefore, although a poet without patrimony, died with an income of 35,000 livres (he belonged to all the paying Academies), without speaking of 75,000 livres in ringing coins, which, when about 87, he had concealed in his mat-tress, doubtless to repose upon in the other world. Let no one say now, that all poets are improvident—but Fontenelle was not a poet. Now I repeat, that whilst he was thus hiding away his money, his cousin, the nephew of the great Corneille-the nephew of his motherwas begging at a neighbouring door. Besides, was organize a neighbouring door. Besides, were there not twenty other unfortunates to succour at that time in the great family of men of letters, whence he had issued so rich and glorious? Malillatre dying of hunger! And so many other hidden miseries, which the eve of charity always discovers: so many other nelle, you would have been pardoned for much prose, and many a verse, for some open-handed charity." charity." On seeing his hearse pass, Piron ex-claimed, "This is the first time that M. de Fontenelle has left home not to go and dine in the

City."
FOOTE, Samuel, foot, an English dramatic writer and actor, whose father was justice of preace for the county of Cornwall, and whose mother was sister to Sir John Dinely Goodere, of Herefordshire. Foote was educated at of Herefordshire. Foote was educated at Worcester College, Oxford, whence he removed to the Temple for the purpose of studying the law; but this he quitted for the attractions of naw; out this is equited for the attractions of the stage. His first performance was in the character of Othello. In 1747 he opened the "little theatre in the Haymarket" with a dra-mattle piece of his own, called "The Diversions of the Morning," which had a great success, and which was a representation of real characters, whose very voice, gait, and gestures were strikingly imitated. His next piece was called "An Auction of Pictures," in which he represented some of the most noted individuals of the day. He still continued to play at one or other of the theatres, and frequently produced new pieces. In 1760 he brought out the "Minor" at his own house in the Haymarket; but, in 1766, had the misfortune to break his leg, which he was obliged to have amputated. The duke of York, out of compassion, now procured for him a patent for life for the theatre in the Haymarket. In 1776 he attacked the duchess of Kingston in a piece which was suppressed by authority. Soon after this, a charge was brought against him which broke his heart, orougus against nim which broke his heart, although he was honourably acquitted by the jury. B. at Truro, Cornwall, 1729; D. at Borer, on his way to France, 1777. His remains were interred in Westminster Abbey. Foote had an infinite fund of comic humon, both in writing and conversation; but he took unwarrantable liberative.

which sheltered him in this world was never manner. His farces have procured him the obser than the roof of hospitality, he passed title of the Englit', Aristophanes. Dr. Johnson his days here and there; with Thomas Cornellie, said, that for loud, obstreperous, broad-faced mirth, he had no equal.

FOOTE, Sir Edward James, an English naval officer, who entered the service of his country early in life, and obtained post rank in 1794, and was at the battle of Cape St. Vincent in 1797. In 1799 Nelson committed the blockade of Naples to his charge, and in that capacity he, in concert with Cardinal Ruffo, made a treaty with the insurgents, which Nelson afterwards annulled. Foote became rear-admiral in wards annuled. Foote became rear-admiral in 1812, vice-admiral in 1821, and died in 1833. B. in Kent, in 1767.

Forbes, William, forbs, the first bishop of Forms, William, forts, the first bishop of Edinburgh, after studying at several universities, went to England, where he was offered the Hebrew professorship at Oxford, which he declined. When Charles I, in 1834, erected Edinburgh into an episcopal see, he appointed Dr. Forbes to fill it; but the bishop appointed Dr. Forbes to that it; but the bishide enjoyed this dignity only three months. B. at Aberdeen, 1585; D. 1634. He wrote "Conside-rationes modestie et pacificæ Controversiarum de Justification," &c., Svo, reprinted by Fabricius, at Frankfort, in 1707.

Formes, Patrick, bishop of Aberdeen, and a munificent patron of the university of that city, of charty always discovers; so many ounce souls that were breaking their wings against munificent patron of the university of that city, the corners of some confined room or the which owes to him the reinstitution of the prorafters of a garret. Ch! Monsieur de Fonte- [resorships of theology, civil law, and medicine, which had become dormant. He was descended from a noble family, took orders in 1592, and was raised to the episcopal bench in 1618 by James VI. of Scotland and I. of England. B. 1564; D. 1635.—His second son, John Forbes of Corse, was professor of divinity and ecclesiastical history in King's College, Aberdeen; but in consequence of supporting the introduction of episcopacy into Scotland, and his refusal to subscribe the "Solemn League and Covenant," was ejected from his chair, in 1640, and went to Holland, where he remained a few years, and afterwards returned to Scotland, and lived in retirement at his estate of Corse. He wrote "Historico-Religious Institutions;" a work generally admired, even by those who opposed his views of church government; "Irenicum," published at Aberdeen in 1629; and in 1646 he printed at Amsterdam a "Commentary on the Apocalypse," which had been written by his printed at Amsterdam a "Commentary on the Apocalypse," which had been written by his father. In 1593; In 1643. FORDES, Alexander (Lord Forbes of Pitsligo), is said to have been the original of Six Walter Scott's Baron of Bradwardine in "Waverley." He adhered to the Stuarts, led a troop of horse in the rebellion of 1745, retired to France after the battle of Culloden, but returned to his country in 1749. He was the author of "Moral and Philosophical Essays." B. 1678; D. 1762.

FORBES, Duncan, an eminent Scotch judge, and an excellent writer, who was educated first at Edinburgh, and afterwards at Utrecht, Leyden, and Paris. In 1709 he began to practise as an advocate at the Scotch bar, and gained considerable reputation. In 1717 he was appointed solicitor-general of Scotland, in 1725 lord advocate, and in 1737, president of the Court of Session. In the robellion of 1745 he zealously opposed the Pretender; but the ingratitude with which he was treated by the government, who even refused to reimburse some expenses which he had incurred, preyed liberties in mimicking persons merely on upon his mind and brought on a fever, of which account of natural failings and peculiarities of he died, 1747. B. at Culloden, 1685. His lordship was a man of great piety and learning, and well versed in the Hebrew Scriptures, as appears well versed in the neurew scriptures, as appears from his "Letter to a Bishop on Hutchinson's Writings and Discoveries," in 1732; "Thoughts concerning Religion, Natural and Revealed," 1735; and "Reflections on Incredulity;" the whole collected into one volume, 12mo, 1750. whole collected into one volume, 12mo, 1755, As a man, Forbes is highly spoken of. "I knew and venerated him," says Bishop Warburton, "one of the greatest men that ever Scotland bred, both as a judge, a patriot, and a FORDES, Sir William, of Pitsligo, was the founder, in conjunction with Sir James Hunter Blair, of the first banking establishment in Scotland, and long known and implicitly trusted under the title of Sir William Forbes and Co.'s Bank. He was a member of the Literary Club frequented by Johnson, Garrick, and Burke, and printed an account of the life and writings of Dr. Beattie. B. 1739; D. 1806.

Forbes

FORBES, James, an Englishman engaged in the civil service of the East India Company, is noticed here on account of his work entitled "Oriental Memoirs, selected and abridged from a series of Familiar Letters, written during seventeen years' residence in India," published in 1813. This work is illustrated by coloured plates of animals and plants, reacted by coloured places of animals and plants, executed with great spirit and beauty. Mr. Forbes was made a fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian societies. B. in London, 1749;

D. 1319.

FORRES, Edward, an eminent naturalist, who forms, Edward, an eminent materials, who from a child was a collector; so that by the time he was seven years of age, he was possessed of a museum of natural curiosities. For some time he was connected with the studio of the late Mr. Sass, in London, but, in 1832, went to the university of Edinburgh, where, under the instructions of Professors Jameson and Graham, he first became acquainted with the true principles of natural science. After being there some time, he made an excursion into Norway, and afterwards published his observations on the plants, rocks, and mollusca of that country, in a plants, rocks, and monusca of that country, in a volume entitled "Notes of a Natural-History Tour in Norway." He now became a contri-butor to the "Magazine of Natural History," whilst pursuing his studies both in zoology and In 1836 he was chiefly instrumental in bottaly. In 1300 he was energy instrumental mestablishing the Edinburgh Botanical Society, to which he became the foreign secretary. In 1337 he visited the shores of Algiers and the 1337 he visited the shores of Algors and cut Mediterranean, and the next year published his "Mollusca of the Isle of Man;" in 1339, a! paper on the "Mollusca of Algiers," and another on the "Distribution of the Pulmonifera of Europa." In 1841 appeared his "History of. Star Fishes," and in the same year he was appointed naturalist to her Majesty's ship Beacon, commissioned to transport from Lycia the marbles discovered by Sir Charles Fellows. In this voyage he discovered the greas law, that among marine animals zones of depth corre-spond to parallels of latitude. He subsequently became professor of botany in King's College, London, and, in 1844, became assistant-secretary to the Zoological Society. He was next appointed palreontologist to the Geological Society of Britain, and professor of natural history in the School of Sciences, in Jermyn Street. In 1854 he was elected president of the Geological Society, and also professor of natural history in the university of Edinburgh. This was the highest object of his ambition, which, however, he seemed only to have attained to die. B. in the Isle of Man, 1815; D. at Edinburgh, 1854.

Ford

FORBES, Sir John, a distinguished Scotch physician, who graduated at Edinburgh in 1817. After practising some time as a physician at Penzance and Chichester, he settled in London, where his translation of the works of Avenbrugger and Laennee, on the use of the stethoscope, first brought him prominently into notice among the medical profession. In 1828 he published a work on the "Climate of Penzance." and was one of the original founders of the present British Medical Association. It is to be regretted that this association, which had for its principal object the obtaining of authentic information regarding the medical topography of England, has not been so successful in its object as might have been expected. Subseobject as might have been expected. Subsequently, Sir John became one of the editor of the "Cyclopadia of Practical Modicine," to which he contributed largely himself. He also became the editor of the "British and Foreign Medical Review," afterwards designated the British and Foreign Medical Medical Review," in this capacity he laboured to spread sound views upon all medical subjects; and by exercising an independent judgment himself, he endeavoured to induce others to do the same; so that, by the accumulation of many same; so that, by the accumulation of many different views upon any speculative point, a sound opinion might be arrived at. Whilst thus actively engaged, he was appointed physician in ordinary to her Majesty's household. and physician extraordinary to his late royal highness Prince Albert. For his labours in medical science, the university of Oxford conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws, and he was a fellow of the Royal Society. In every enter-prize which has had for its object the education of the people, or the dissemination of sound knowledge of every kind, he took an active part, and was one of the members of the com-mittee of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge. In 1849 he published "A Physician's Holiday; or, a Month in Switzerland;" in 1852, "Memoranda of a Tour in Ireland:" and in 1856, "Sight-Seeing in Germany and the Tyrol." All these works are marked by shrewd Tyro. All older volumes and lad act of she was sense, coupled with a fine taste for the descriptive and picturesque. E. 1787.

FORDIN, Claude, Chevalier de, for ba, a

French naval commander, who served in the East Indies, and was with Duquesne, in 1633, at the bombardment of Algiers. He was also admiral to the king of Siam for two years, and greatly distinguished himself afterwards in Europe, in connexion with Jean Bart, rising into favour with Louis XIV. B. 1656; D. 1733. His "Memoirs" were published in 1730, in

2 vols, 12mo.

Force, Jacques, Duke de la, force, son of François, lord de la Force, was a child, in bed with his father and elder brother, when these latter were murdered in the massacre of these latter were nutuered in the massace of St. Bartholomey but being unperceived by the assassins, he escaped. He signalized himself under Henry IV., and afterwards joined the Protestants against Louis XIII. Subsequently, he made his submission to the king, and was argument and the summatter and the summatter and the army, and created a duke. He took Pignerol, and defeated the Spaniards at Carignan, in 1630, D. 1652, aged 39,

Ford, John, ford, an eminent English dramatic poet, of whom very little is known, but of Fordun's history, says that "all the Seots that, in 1822, he became a member of the Middle historians who have wrote since Fordun's time Temple, and adhered to his profession of the have been very much beholdened to his dililaw. In his 20th year, he published a poem gence; and yet there are very material difference where the second of the poem of the profession of the second of the poem of the profession of the second of the poem of the poem of the profession of that, in 1602, he became a member of the Middle Temple, and adhered to his profession of the law. In his 20th year, he published a poem entitled "Fame's Memorial," but there is little in the effusion to indicate the high talent which in the educator to indicate the high talent which he afterwards displayed in dramatic poetry. Subsequently, he commenced writing for the stage, for which he produced, either wholly or in conjunction with others, upwards of sixteen plays. In Charles Lamb's "Specimens of Eng-lish Dramatic Poets," the following excellent non Diameter Poets," the following excellent criticism appears, relative to this author: "Ford was of the first order of poets. He sought for sublimity, not by parcels, in metaphors or visible images, but directly where she has her full residence,-in the heart of man, in the actions and sufferings of the greatest minds. There is and the elements." Gifford also says, "I know few things more difficult to account for than the deep and lasting impression made by the more tragic portions of Ford's poetry." Others, however, are not so lavish of their praises upon his works. B. at Heington, Devenshire, 1586. Of his death nothing is known. It is supposed, however, that, about 1640, he retired to his native place, and there ended his days.

Fordvce Ford

Ford, Sir John, the son of Sir John Ford, knight, served the office of high sheriff of Sussex, knight, served the once of night shern of Sussex, and displayed his loyalty to Charles I., who knighted him at Oxford, in 1643. He commanded a troop of horse in the civil wars, and was imprisoned on suspicion of aiding the king's escape from Hampton Court, but obtained his release through the interest of general Ireton, whose sister he had married. He possessed much mechanical ingenuity, and invented a system of machines for raising the water of the Thames to the higher streets of London, which was afterwards applied to the draining of marshes, mines, &c. He projected a scheme for con-structing a river from Rickmansworth to London to supply the city with water, besides other beneficial improvements. n. in Sussex, 1605; n. 1670, in Ireland, where he had gone to work a patent he had obtained to coin copper money in that part of the kingdom.

FORD, Richard, an English writer and traveller, who, having graduated at Trinity College, Oxford, was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn, but did not practise. In 1830 he visited Spain, where he resided for some time at the Albambra, and, on his return, took up his residence in Devonshire, and became a contributor to the "Quarterly Review." In 1845 he published "The Handbook of Spain," which was highly "The Handbook of Spain," which was highly commended. In 1948 appeared his "Gatherings from Spain," which was, on its publication, pronounced "the best English book, beyond comparison, that has ever appeared for the illustration, not merely of the general topography and local curiodities, but of the national character and manners of Spain." In 1829 ("Thronorachia, the Ib.") ("Thronorachia, the Ib.") ("Thronorachia, the Ib.") "Tauromachia; the Bull-lights of Spain." 26 superb drawings by Luke Price, with descrip-tions by R. Ford, were given to the public; but the work is rather pictorial than literary, and is certainly splendid of its kind. B. in London. 1796; p. 1859.

FORDUN, John de, for'-dun, a Scotch historian, and priest in the church of Fordun, who wrote a history of Scotland, which was printed by Hearne at Oxford, in 5 vols. 8vo, and by Goodall at Edinburgh, in 1 vol. folio. Camden, speaking as a very scientific treatise.

ences betwixt his account of several things and theirs." Lived in the 14th century.

FORDYCE, David, for'-dice, an ingenious Scottish writer, who was educated at the University of Aberdeen, and became professor of moral philosophy in the Marischal College there. Though licensed as a preacher, he never became a stated minister. In 1750 he made a tour to a stated minister. In 1750 he made a tour to Italy, and on his return, the following year, was drowned on the coast of Holland. n. at Aber-deen 1711. He wrote "Dialogues concerning Education," 2 vols. 8vo; the "Elements of Moral Philosophy," which first appeared in cation," which have considerable merit, are written in some degree after the style of Shaftesbury, but without being tainted with the sophistries of that author.

FORDYCE, James, an eminent Scotch divine, brother of the above, was educated at the University of Aberdeen, and was first settled as a minister at Brechin, and afterwards as a minister at Brechin, and afterwards at Alloa. While here, he distinguished himself by some elegant pulpit compositions, particularly one preached before the General Assembly of the Church of Sotland, on the folly, infamy, and misery of unlawful pleasures, for which the University of Glasgow. conferred on him the degree of D.D. About conterred on and the degree of D.D. About 1762 he removed to London, where he became assistant to Dr. Lawrence, of Monkwell Street, and afterwards his successor. Here he drew crowded audiences by his cloquence and the beauty of his sermons. In 1782 he resigned his beauty of his sermons. In 1782 he resigned his situation, and went to live first in Hampshire, situation, and went to live first in Hampsinic, and next at Bath, where he died in 1796. In at Aberdeen, 1720. He published a "Sermon on the Eloquence of the Pulpit," printed with his brother's "Theodorus," "Sermons to Young Women," 2 vols. 12mo; "Addresses to Young Illen," 2 vols.; "Addresses to the Delty," a

Nen, 2 volume of poems, and single sermons.
Fornyce, Sir William, brother of James
Fordyce, was an eminent surgeon, which profession he practised for many years, with much success, in London. He was the author of several medical works, including one on "Fever," a second on "Ulcerated Sore Throat," and a third on "The Cultivation of Rhubarb for Medicinal Purposes." B. 1724; D. 1792

FORDYCH, George, an eminent Scotch physician, was educated at the University of Aberdeen, where he obtained the degree of M.A. at the age of 14. In 1759 he settled in London, commencing lecturing on the materia medica and practice of physic, in which he acquired an practice of principals, in which he acquared an unrivalled reputation. In 1770 he was chosen physician to St. Thomas's Hospital, and, in 1776, a follow of the Royal Society. In 1787 he was elected, specialis gratid, a fellow of the College of Physicians accompanyed distinctive and property of the property of the college of Physicians accompanyed distinctive and the college of Physicians accompanyed distinctive and the college of Physicians accompanyed distinctive and the college of the college of Physicians accompanies and the college of th of Physicians, a very unusual distinction. B. near Aberdeen, 1736; D. 1802. Dr. Fordyce is known by his "Essays on Four," an "Essay on Digestion," "Elements of the Practice of Physic," and miscellaneous papers. He was also an excellent experimental chemist, and published "Elements of Agriculture and Vege-tation." This work has always been esteemed

Former

Fortescue

FORMEY, John Henry Samuel, for-me, a the Dyssus of the Ancients," several Papers in Prussian writer, who was for some years pastor the "Philosophical Transactions," &c. of a French church in Berlin, where he became or related the term is bettined to professor of philosophy in the French college. On the restoration of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Berlin, he was appointed secretary to the philosophical department, and afterwards sole secretary. He was also made a privy councillor. 3, at Berlin, 1711; p. there 1797. Formey conducted, in conjunction with Beau-sobre, the "Bibliothèque Germanique." He also wrote "Le Philosophe Chrétien," "Pensées sobre, the "Bibliotheque Germanique." He also wrete "Le Philosophe Chreften," Pensées Raisonnables," "A Philosophe Chreften," Pensées Raisonnables, "A athie-Emile," a aximst Rousseau; the "History of Philosophy Abridged," an "Abridgment of E-clean-tieal littory" (these two have been translated into English). "Researches on the Elements of Matter," "Considerations on the Tuc-ulans of Cheen," "Considerations of Cheen," "Considerations of Cheen," "Considerations on the Tuc-ulans of Cheen," "Considerations of Cheen," "Cheen," "Chee siderations on the Tusemans of there, we. Forman, Simon, for-man, a notorious astro-loger, with which profession he combined that of physician, and was connected with the infamous countess of Essey in the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, Although it does not quite appear that he directly assisted in the perpetration of the crime, it is clear, from the records of the trial, that he was consulted by the countess and Mrs. Anne Turner, as to the means of accomplishing it. B. at Quidham, Wiltshire, 1552; p. suddenly in a boat on the Thames, 1611. He left several MSS., some of which are in the Ashmolean Museum, and others in the British Museum.

Formosus, formo'sus, bishop of Porto, in Italy, succeeded Pope Stephen V. in 891. He condemned Photius, excommunicated Lambert, emperor of Italy, and then nominated in his place, Arnoul, emperor of Germany. D. 856. The fiery Stephen VI., his successor, had his body disinterred, in order to put him on his trial. He was restored to his grave in 89s, under John IX.

FORSKAL, Peter, for'-skal, a Swedish natura-list, who studied at Göttingen, and afterwards at Upsal, where he became a pupil of Linnœus. In 1761 he went at the request of the king of Denmark, with Niebuhr and others, to Arabia, penmars, with Niebuhr and others, to Arribiat to make discoveries, but died at Jerim, in that country, in 1763. B. 1736. He printed a tract, entitled "Thoughts on Civil Liberty," and from his papers, Niebuhr published "Descriptions Auimalium in titnero orientall," 4to, "Flora Egyptiaco-Arabica," 4to, "Lones, Berum Na-tronium annas in titnero serientid." turalium quas in itinere orientali depingi curavit

Forskal," 4to.

Forsten, John Reinhold, fors'-fer, a cele-brated German naturalist, who, in 1743, entered the University of Halle, where he studied divinity, and thence went to Russia, in expectation of considerable preferment; but being disappointed, proceeded to England, where, for some time, he taught the French and German languages at Warrington. In 1772 he accompanied captain Cook on his voyage round the world. On his return to England, in 1775, he worat. On his return to Engana, in 17/3, he was honoured by the University of Oxford with the degree of LLD. His son having published, contrary to the engagement entered into with government, an account of plants discovered in this voyage, he was treated with such coolness, that he quitted England and went to counters, tank ne quited Engiand and went of Halle, where he was made professor of natural risk king's Bench. He was zealously stizehe history. B. in Prussia, 1729; D. at Halle, 1799. in the was the author of "Observations made in communication, and accompanied him in his eril a Vorgage Roumi the World," "History of the nover exercised the office. He subsequently Vorgages and Discoveries in the North," "On went to Flanders, and while abread write his

the "Philosophical Transactions," &c. Forster, John George Adam, son of the above, accompanied his father in his voyage in 1772-5 After his return, he became professor of natural history at Cassel, whence he removed to Wilha, in Poland, and next to Mentz, where he was appointed president of the university. He was nominated by the people of Mentz their representative at Paris, in the beginning of the Revolution. B. at Dantzie, 1751; D. 176. He wrote, "A Voyage Round the World," 2 vels, 4to; a Defence of the same : gainst Mr. Wales, 4to; "A Philosophical and Picturesque Journey along the Banks of the Rhine," 2 vols. 8vo: and "A Journey through England,"

Forster, John, a Protestant divine, who assisted Luther in the translation of the Bible, and accompanied Melanethon to the council of Trent. He was a teacher of Hobrew at Wittomberg, and left behind him an excellent dictionary of that language, which was published at Bale in 1564. p. at Augsburg, 1491; p. 1550.

FORSTER, Nathaniel, an enginema divine and author, received his education at Oxford, and was sneessively made probend of Bristol, vicar of Roedale, fellow of the Royal Society, and encof the royal chaplains. He wrote "Reflections on the royal emplaints. The woods "Lenegrous on the Antiquity Government, Arts and S ioness of Egypt," "A Dissertation on Josephus's Account of Canata," end. clated a "H.Jerow Bible without Points," E. 1717; D. 1757.

FORSER, John, a modern English writer, was bred to the bar, but, by his devotion to literature, became an eminent author and journalist. For twenty-four years he was a constant contributor to the columns of the "Examiner. and for twelve of that period he had the sole charge of its editorial department. He was also a contributor to the "Edinburgh Review," the "Forign Quarterly," and other serials, and for a short time acted as editor of the "Daily News," after the retirement of Mr. Dickens. n Shore time access as cannot on the Long-News," after the retiremt in of Mr. Dickens. He is, however, best known by his works, en-titled "The Statemm of the Commonwealth of England," and "The Life and Advintures of Oliver Goldsmith." The former was r-published in the "Cabinet Cyclopedia" of Dr. Larding. and the latter has been much admired. He also wrote the lives of Daniel De Foe and Churchill, and in 1639 published "Historical and Bio-graphical Essays;" "The Arrest of the Five Mombers by Charles I.," in 1860; and "Sir John Eliot, a Biography," in 1961. B. at Newcastle, 1512.

FORT, Le. (See LEFORT, Francis.)

FORTESCUE, the Rt. Hon, Chichester Samuel Parkinson, took first-class honours at Oxford in 1811, and the Chancellor's prize for the English essay in 1816. Since 1817 he has represented the county of Louth, Ireland. From 1854 to 1855 he was an Irish Lord of the Treasury; undersecretary of state for the colonies from 1857 to 1858, and from 1859 to 1865 under Lord Palmersion; and chief secretary for Ireland from 1865

sion; and chief secretary for Ireland from 1835 to 1836 under Earl Russell. In 1835 he resumed the duties of the last-named post in the administration formed by Mr. Gladstone. B. 1833.

FORTSCIN, Sir John, for-fee-ks, an English judge, who was, in 1442, made chief justice of the King's Bonch. He was zealously attached to Henry VI., and accompanied him in his critic to Scotland. Henry much him chancellor, but hen over exercised the office. He subsequently work to Planckers and which about the latest the second provided the control of the provided and the second provided the second provided the second provided the second provided to the second provided provid iamous pook entitled "De Laucious Legum Anglia," which, however, was not published till the reign of Henry VIII. This admirable treaties, ecording to Henry, excels every work on the subject. He returned to England with Queen Margaret, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Tewkesbury, in 1471. Edward IV. granted him a pardon, on which he retired to the sect at Vibrarden is discontant. his seat at Ebrington, in Gloucestershire. B. in his seat at Edyington, in Gioucestersure. n, in Devonshire, 1995; n. 1485.

Foscolo

FORTUNE, Robert, for-tune, a Scotch naturalist, born of humble parents, and who was sont to China for the purpose of obtaining new plants, with instructions to pay all possible attention to the horticulture and agriculture of attention to the horticulture and agriculture of the people of that country. This he accord-ingly did, and, in 1847, published the result in "Three Years Wanderings in the Northern Provinces of China." He also published "Two Visits to the Ten Countries of China," and "A Residence arrong the Chinese;" all excellent works of their kind. z. at Berwick, Scotland, FOSBROOKE, Thomas Dudley, fos'-brook, was educated at St. Paul's School and Pembroke College, Oxford, where he became a M.A. in 1792 In 1794 he was appointed to the living of Horsley, and in 1810 was made curate of Walford, and in 1830, vicar. His works are, a poem on the "Monastic Life, as it existed in England;" "British Monachism; or, Manners and Custons of the Monks and Nuns of England;" to which are added "Manners and Customs of Ancient Pilgrims, Anchorites and Hermits, and Women who had made Yows of Chastity." These are his principal works, which give a comprehensive riew of the manners and customs of monastic life. His book on "British Monachism" is called by Sir Walter Scott "a learned work;" and Southey, in the "Quarterly Review," after no-ticing some of its errors, states, "that it would be highly unjust were we not to state that it contains a great deal of curious and recondite information; and that, wherever the subject permits, the author gives proof, in the liveliness of his expressions, of a vigorous and original mind." He also wrote several other works; among which we may notice his "Oyelopedia of Antiquity and Elements of Archaeology," of Antiquity and Elements of Archæology, which, at the time of its publication, was pronounced a work as original as it is important, elegantly written, and full of interesting information, with which every person of liberal education ongshir to be acquainted. B. in London, 1770; D. at Walford, 1842.

Fosolar, Francesco, Jos-kaw-re, doge of Venice, to which office he was elected in 1423, was, perhaps, the greatest and the most un-happy of all those who held the office of chief magistrate in the Venetian republic. He occupied the position of doge for thirty-four years, led the armies of the state in many hard-fought fields, added Brescia, Bergamo, Crema, Ravenna, and other places to the territory of the republic, besides wisely and honestly administering the government at home. He greatly improved the city, and made the name of Venice a potent one in the community of nations; and yet was called upon to endure the utmost ingratitude from his countrymen, and to make sacrifices of personal feeling more trying than it is possible to con-ceive. He twice wished to resign the dogeship, on each occasion being compelled to retain the office, and at last having an eath exacted from him that he would continue doge as long as he famous book entitled "De Laudibus Legum lived. He had had four sons, one only of whom, Giacopo, remained to him, and he, with high hopes and much public rejoicing, was married to a daughter of the house of Contarini, one of the noblest in Venice. A short time only had elapsed, however, when troubles began. Giacopo was denounced to the Council of Ten as having taken bribes from foreign powers; was tried before his own father, and, there being no cyidence against him, the torture was applied in order to extort a confession, the doge being compelled not only to order its application, but to stand by and see it administered. Under to stand by and see it administered. Under exeruciating agony, a confession of guilt was obtained, and Giacopo was banished, first to Napoli di Romana, in Greece, but afterwards allowed to remain nearer home, but beyond the boundaries of the state. While quietly living at his appointed place of exile, a Venetian senator was murdered by unknown hands. Giacopo forces of manufactured by antibody hands. Glacopo Foscari was suspected of complicity in the crime, was again tried, again tortured by order and in presence of his father, and again banished, besides being condemned to a year's im-prisonment. Unable, however, to resist the desire to return to his country, he determined to do so under any circumstances. He accordingly wrote a letter to Sforza, duke of Milan, imploring his intercession with the council on his behalf, and took care that this letter should his benan, and took care that this letter should be conveyed, not to Duke Sforza, but to the Council of Ten. Once more was he brought before that terrible tribunal, over which his father presided; but on this occasion he did not deny the charge made against him—that of soliciting the interference of foreigners in the affairs of the state; but boldly declared that he had written the letter, and had contrived that it should be conveyed to the Council in order that he might be brought back to Venice, even if as a malefactor. This was disbelieved, and the torture was applied to him for the third time. All attempts to shake his firmness were unavailing; he adhered to his statement, and a fresh sentence of banishment and imprisonment was passed upon him. Before being conveyed to his foreign gaol, however, he was allowed to see his family; and his father, now an old man of 84, hobbled upon crutches into the dungeon where his unhappy son was confined. On Giacopo making a last appeal to him to obtain at least a commutation of the to him to obtain at least a commutation of the sentence to imprisonment within the walls of Venice, "Go," replied the stern magistrate, but wretched father, "go, Giacopo; submit your-self to the will of your country, and ask no more of me." The effort, however, was too great; on being carried from the room the old man swooned, never recovered, and in two days breathed his last, in 1457, in his 84th year. The son was sent to a prison at Candia, where he, too, shortly afterwards died. The charges against Giacopo are believed to have been all false, at least no real proof was ever adduced against him; and it is most likely they had their origin in private malice, the desire of the Council of Ten to curb the power of the doge, whom it was not convenient altogether to dispense it was not convenient altogether to dispense with making that body willing to entertain the accusations against his son, in order that they might, through him, strike at the father. These incidents have furnished Lord Byron with the subject of his drama entitled "The Two Foscari."

Foscolo, Ugo, fos'-ko-lo, an eminent Ionian

who received his education at Padua, and before he was twenty, produced a tragedy called "Il Tieste." Soon afterwards he obtained employment as secretary to Bonato Battaglio, who was sent as ambassador to Bonaparte, to induce him to favour the independence of the republic of The ambassador was unsuccessful in his mission, and Foscolo went to Lombardy, where he devoted himself to the cultivation of literature, and produced his celebrated "Letters of Ortis," which established his fame. He now enrolled his name in the list of the first Italian legion that was formed, and was in Genoa during the siege of 1799. He continued with the Italian army till 1805, when he was sent to Calais with the troops professedly designed for the invasion of England; but he soon afterwards quitted the army, and in 1809 became professor of literature in Pavia. The language processor of interature in Payra. The language of his introductory lecture, however, offended Bonaparte, and the professorship was suppressed. In 1812 he produced his "Ajax," which being supposed to convey a satire on Napoleon I., he deemed it prudent to withdraw to Florence. Afterwards, it is asserted, he enter the product of the convey as the convey as the convey of the conve gaged in a conspiracy to eject the Austrians from Italy, and was forced to take refuge in Switzerland, whence he went to England, where Switzersand, whence he went to Lingsand, where he was received among the literary and fashion-able circles. He continued to apply himself to literature, and published—"Essays on Po-trarch," "Disputations and Notes on Dante," and was a contributor to the Edinburgh, Quarterly, and other reviews. *s. at Zante, about 1777; p. at Turnham Green, near London,

Charles de la. foss, a French Fosse. painter, and pupil of Le Brun, who, after studying in Italy, returned to Paris, and gained a great reputation by several public works. A pension was granted him, and he became rector of the Academy of Painting, in Paris. The duke or the Academy of Painting, in Paris. The duke of Montage invited him to England, and employed him in ornamenting his house, now the British Museum. S. at Paris, 1640; p. 1716. Fossa, Antoine de la, uephew of the above, was Lord of Aubigné, from having boucht the setate of that name. He was secretary to the Marquis de Crequi, and, when his patron was stain at the hattle of lurgare his brought his slain at the battle of Luzara, he brought his heart back to Paris, and celebrated his fall in verses. He afterwards was connected with the due d'Aumont, but is chiefly known from the tragedies he wrote. One of these, "Manlius Capitolinus," is considered by the French as not altogether unworthy of Corneille; but, as a rule, the versification of La Fosse is exceedingly laboured; indeed, he himselfowned that in writing he had far more trouble in finding expressions than thoughts. He was a great master of Italian, and for an ode written in that language he was received into the Academy degli Apatisti, at Florence. He executed a translation of Anacreon, which, with some miscellaneous poems, was published in 1704. B. 1658; D. 1708.

1708. FOSFER, John, fost-ter, an English architect, who, after studying abroad for a number of years, returned, and erected several works of considerable merit. The principal of these are St. Johns Market, in Liverpool, several churches in that city, and the Custom-house. He was made a fellow of the Royal Society, and was considered to have a vast amount of architectural knowledge although it was messarchitectural knowledge, although it was questioned whether he had the capacity to turn it to proper account. B. in Liverpool, 1787; D. 1846.

FOSTER, James, D.D., an eminent dissenting divine, who was at first minister of an inde began preaching in 1718. He subsequently be-came a Baptist, and had the charge of a chapel in that connexion at Trowbridge, Wilts, and was elected successor to Dr. John Gale, in a chapel in Barbican, London, where he officiated for about twenty years, lecturing at the same time in a chapel in the Old Jewry. When Lord Kilmarnock was executed for his share in the rebellion of 1745, Foster attended him to the scaffold, and it is said that this melancholy scene made such an impression upon him as to partially derange his faculties, from which he never altogether recovered. He was the author never attogether recovered. He was the author of several works, among which are, "A Defence of Revelation," in answer to Tindal; "Tracts on Heresy," "Discourses on Natural Religion and Social Virtue," &c. B. at Exeter, 1697; D. 1753.

FOSTER, Sir Michael, an eminent English lawyer, was called to the bar at the Middle Temple, and in 1735 was elected recorder of Bristol. He was appointed one of the judges of the King's Bench in 1745, when he was knighted. He printed a tract on the power of the church, ne printed a trace on the power of the church, in reply to Bishop Gibson's Coder, and a report of the trial of the Jacobite rebels in 1746, B, at Marlborough, Wilts, 1689; D. 1763. Sir Michael Foster is entitled to remembrance for the independence and fearlessness with which he asserted the liberties of the subject.

FOSTER, Reverend John, an English divine, who was bred a manufacturer; but disliking that line of life, he devoted himself to study, and in 1792 commenced preaching among the Baptists in various parts of the country. Forced to discontinue preaching, from a glandular affection of the neck, he retired to Stapleton, near Bristol, where he devoted himself to literature, and became one of the principal conliterature, and became one of the principal con-tributors to the "Electic Review." He is best known to the world, however, by his "Essays on Decision of Character;" 'On the Applica-tion of the Epithet Romantic;" and 'On the Evils of Popular Ignorance." These works have received well-merited praise, not only for the admirable precision of the style in which they B. near Halifax, Yorkshire, 1770; D. at Stapleton, 1843.

FORTER, Birket, a modern English artist, who ably illustrated "Christmas with the Poets," "Cowper's Task," Longfellow's works, and many other volumes. As a simple, truthful, and poetical delineator of landscape, he stands deservedly high. B. 1812.

FOTHERGILL, John, foth ergil, an eminent English physician, who, having served his time to an apothecary, went to Edinburgh, where, in 1736, he took his doctor's degree. In the same year he became a pupil in St. Thomas's Hospital, London, and, in 1740, went abroad. On his return, he settled in the metropolis, and, in 1748, acquired a great reputation by a tract entitled "An Account of Sore Throat attended with Ulcers." This disease was at that time very fort, as plenipotentiary from the court of Verperalent and fatal. In 1754 be became a sailies. In 1743 he was taken prisoner near nember of the Edinburgh College of Physicians, Hanover, but soon obtained his liberty. 3, and, in 1763, a fellow of the Royal Society. When the differences broke out between England and her American colonies, he laboured to prevent hostilities, and had conferences with Dr. Franklin for that purpose, but without effect. B. in Yorkshire, 1712; D. 1780. His works, consisting chiefly of medical pieces, have Leen printed in 3 vols. 8vo, with his life preteen printed in 3 vois, 8vo, with his life pre-fixed. He was at the expense of printing Pur-ver's translation of the lible, and of an edition of Percy's "Key to the New Testament," for a seminary of Quakers in Yorkshire.—His brother Samuel was a prominent preacher among the Quakers, and died in 1773.

FOUCAULT, John Bernard Leon, fou-kolte', a French philosopher, who showed how an ocular proof of the rotation of the earth may be given by setting a pendulum in motion across a gradby setting a pendiulum in motion across a graduated circle, the earth moving under the plane of the pendiulum's motion. He also invented the gyroscope. B. at Paris, 1319; D. 1568.
FOUCHÉ, JOSEPH, duke of Otranto, foo'-shed, French minister of police under Napoleon I., was sottled as an advocate at Nantes when the revolution of 1789 broke out. He threw himself with ardour into the struggle against the king, and was, in 1792, elected a member of the National Convention. In November of the next year, he accompanied Collot d'Herbois (see that name to Lyons, and was overwhelmed with accusations in regard to the frightful cruelties practised there by his colleague and himself. After the fall of the Convention, he himself. After the fall of the Convention, no was protected by Barras, and, on the 18th Thermidor, year 7, he was made police minister. In this post he displayed great activity and acuteness, and rendered important services to Bonaparte on the 18th Brumaire. The latter, however, had not much confidence in his minister's integrity, and dismissed him from office in 1802, restoring him, however, his portfolio in 1805, which he preserved till 1810. In this year he was superseded, although the reasons for his fall have never been clearly understood. After the Bussian campaign, he was appointed by the emperor to the government of the Illy-rian provinces—a very difficult task. He there showed great moderation, and was successful in his mission. During the "hundred days" he again administered the police, and subsequently again annimisered the ponce, and subsequently was appointed, after Waterloo, president of the provisional government, and, in that capacity, treated with the allied powers. Louis XVIII. retained him for a short period at the head of the police, but afterwards deputed him ambas-sador at Dresden. He was afterwards exiled, and died at Trieste, 1820; B. at Nantes, 1763. The general opinion of Fouché is, that he was an able, but unscrupulous minister. His "Memoirs" appeared in Paris in 1824, but were declared not to be trustworthy by his family.

FOUQUET, Charles Louis Augustus, foo'-kai, count of Belleisie, secured, by his gallant conduct at the siege of Lisle, where he commanded a regiment of dragoons, the favour of Louis XIV., after whose death he was disgraced, and confined in the Bastille. In the war of 1733 he was appointed to command in Germany, and became the confidant of Cardinal Fleury. In 1741 he was created marshal of France, and, the year following, attended the diet of Frank-

1684; D. 1761.

1693; b. 1761.
Fouls, Robert and Andrew, foo'-lie, two learned printers of Glasgow, of which they are believed to have been natives. Robert began printing about 1740; and in 1744 completed list "immaculate" edition of Horace, and was shortly afterwards joined in partnership by his brother Andrew. They continued to carry on business with great success for about thirty years, the works produced by them being re-markable for the beauty and accuracy of their execution. They printed editions of nearly all the Greek and Latin classics, besides one of the New Testament in Greek: and it is said, so confident were they of the correctness of their typography, that they bung up final proof sheets of one of their classic works—perhaps the "immaculate". Horace already mentioned-in the public hall of the university and offered a reward to any one who could point out an error. They ultimately ruined themselves in an attempt to establish an academy for the instruction of youth in painting and sculpture, the immense expense incurred in sending pupils to Italy to study the works of the ancients being more than their means could support. Andrew died in 1775; and Robert in FOUNTAINE, Sir Andrew, foun'-tain, an emi-nent English antiquary, was educated at Christchurch, Oxford, where he specially studied the Anglo-Saxon language, and was author of a piece inserted in Dr. Hickes's "Thesaurus," "Numismata Anglo-Saxonica et nica." He had also a taste for the entitled, "Nu Anglo-Danica." angio-Danica. He had also a taste for the fine arts, and made a noble collection of antiques and curiosities. He drew the designs for the original illustrations to the "Tale of for the original illustrations to one least of a Tub," by Swift, with whom he was very intimate, as he was with other wits of the age, and is commended by Montfaucon for his antiquarian knowledge. William III. conhis antiquarian knowledge. William III. con-ferred the honour of knighthood upon him, and in 1727 he was appointed warden of the Mint. B. at Narford, Norfolk; D. 1753.

Fougurgars, James, for Acair, a Flemish painter, the disciple of Velvet Brenghel, and so excellent in painting landscapes, as to be ranked with Titian. B. at Antwerp, 1580;

FOUQUIER-TINVILLE, Antoine Quentin, foo-ke-air-tin-veel, one of the most infamous of Re-curvan-peer, one of the most harmous or the French revolutionists, was a native of Herouelles, near St. Quentin. He became an associate of Robespierre, by whom he was appointed public accuser during the Reign of Terror, and in that office displayed the most refort, and in that once displayed the sangulary nature. He spared none. The young the aged, the rich, the poor, without regard to guilt or innocence, were hurried by regard to gain or innocence, were nurried by him to the scaffold with perfect indifference, on one occasion no less than eighty persons being devoted by him to death within four hours. His hand was not stayed by the fall of Robespierre, and on the day of the latter's arrest, he coolly remarked, as he affixed his signature to the condemnation of about forty-two individuals, "Ah! Robespierre arrested! What does it matter? Justice must have its course." At length, however, his iniquitous career was stopped, he had himself to appear before the tribunal where he had condemned so

FOUCHE, JOSEPH (DUKE OF OTEANTC).

FRANKLIN, BENJAMIN.

FLINDERS, CAPTAIN MATTHEW.

POX, CHARLES JAME:

Pranelin, Sir John.

Fox

many others, and was guillotined on the 7th of May, 1795.

Fourszox, Antoine François de, foor-kroi, a distinguished French chemist and natural philosopher, who, having chosen the medical profession for his occupation, devoted himself of the study of those sciences which are more immediately connected with it, especially especially the content of the mistry. In 1784 he was appointed professor of the results of the second of the seco this science at the Jardin du Roi, and became associated with Berthollet, Lavoisier, and others. in researches which led to vast improvements, whilst they suggested a new chemical nomen-clature, entitled "Méthode de Nomenclature Chimique." On the breaking out of the Revolution, he became entangled in the politics of the period, and was elected a deputy from Paris to the National Convention. In 1794 he became a member of the Committee of Public Safety, and next year was received as one of the Council of the Ancients. In 1799 Bonaparte gave him a place in the Council of State, when the affairs relating to public instruction were placed under his management. In this impor-tant trust he ably acquitted himself. In the various departments of chemical science and various defautions of changes are no sum and an applicable works. Dr. Thomson, lowever, says that "the prodigious reputation which he enjoyed during his lifetime, was more owing to his cloquence than to his eminence as a chemist; though even as a chemist he was far above mediocrity." B. at Paris, 1755; D. 1809.

FOURCEON, Charles René de, a distinguished French military engineer, who served with honour in various campa gns, and attained the honour in various eampa gns, and attainet na rank of marchail de camp, and was the author of "A Treatise on Perpendicular Fortification," Observations Microscopiques," "Reflections sur la Marces," and planned a scheme for connecting the rivers Scheldt, Moselle, Sambre, Mense, Oise, and the Rhine by means of causls. B. at Paris, 1715; p. 1791. Many of the principle leid deure by Fourgrow, were afterwards ples laid down by Foureroy were afterwards adopted by Lalande.

FOURIER, François Marie Charles, foor'-e-ai, was the founder of the system of communism was the rounder of the system of communism known as Fourierism, which is also called Phalansterianism, and is said to have many secret adherents. The doctrine is nothing more than a kind of socialism, which, in England at least, possesses very little vitality amongst the educated classes. B. at Besançon, in the de-partment Doubs, 1772; p. 1837. Fournes, Jean Baptist Joseph, was educated at Auxerre, in a college of the Benedictines, and, in 1739, was appointed professor of mathematics in the school where he had studied. At the breaking out of the Revolution, he became member of the Committee of Public Safety at Auxerre, and was twice delivered from imprison-ment by his fellow-townsmen. In 1794 he became one of the subordinate professors in the Came one of the superdinace processors at the Polytechnic school, and subsequently accom-panied the French expedition to Egypt. On his return, he was appointed prefect of the depart-ment of leère. He afterwards became prefect of the Rhone, which post he resigned in 1815. He was subsequently appointed secretary to the Academy, and president of the council of the Polytechnic school. B. at Auserra, 1768; D. at Paris, 1830. He was the first who imparted a taste for Egyptian antiquities to the Chambilions poliions.

FOURNIER, Pierre Simon, foor ne-ai, an emi-ter in 1691. B. at Westerleigh, Gloucestershire, 1632; D. 1714. Besides several sermons and tracts, he wrote the "Principles and Practices of certain Moderate Divines of the Church of or certain adougrate Divines of the Church of England, abusively called Latitudinarians, Svo, 1670; "The Design of Christianity," 8vo, 1671 (this is an excellent book, and has been several times printed); "Libertas Evangelica, or a Discourse of Christian Liberty," 8vo. FOWLER, Charles, an English architect, who,

FOWLER, Charles, an English architect, who, after having been employed in an office at Exeter, went to London, where he entered the office of Mr. Luing, whilst the Costom-house was building. His first public work was the Courts of Bankruptey, which were succeeded by other works, the principal of which were markets. Amountst these may be specially named Cvent Garden market, in London, and the Corn market at Tavistock. He also creeted the bridge over the Dart at Totnes, the Devon Lunatic Asylum, and several other works, but was of year event multic invoctance. In at Col. not of very great public importance. B. at Col-lumpton, Devoushire, 1792.

Fox, Edward, Joks, an English bishop and statesman, was educated first at Eton and next at King's College, Cambridge, of which, in 1528, he was elected provost. Cardinal Wolsey took him into his service, and obtained for him the appointment of ambassador to Rome, in conjunction with Gardiner, to promote the divorce of Henry VIII. He was afterwards sent in the same capacity to France and Germany; and in 1538 was promoted to the see of Here-ford. B. at Dursley; D. 1538. This bishop was a great friend to the Reformation. He wrote "De Vera Differential Regine Protestatis et Ecclesiasticz, et quæ sit ipsa Veritas et Virtus utriusque Fox, Richard, an English prelate, who was educated first at Boston school, and afterwards at Magdalen College, Oxiord, whence, on account of the plague, he removed to Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. He next went to Paris, where he gained the friendship of Dr. Morton, bishop of Ely, who recommended him to the earl of Rich-mond, afterwards Henry VII. On the accession of that monarch, Dr. Fox was made privy counsellor, and preferred to the see of Exeter. He was also sent on several embassies, and, after obtaining different church preferments, was advanced to the see of Durham, whence he was removed to Winchester. B. of poor parents, near Grantham; D. at Winchester, 1528. He founded Corpus Christi College, in Oxford, and the free schools of Grantham, and Taunton in Somerset-

Fox, or Foxe, John, an English divine, who was educated at Brusenose College, Oxford, whence he removed to a fellowship in Magdalen College. In 1545 he was expelled on a charge of heresy, which reduced him to great distress.
At length, Sir Thomas Lucy, of Warwickshire, took him into his house, as tutor to his children. Afterwards, he removed to London, and was. employed by the duchess of Richmond as tutor to the earl of Surrey's children; but his lifeFox FOX being in danger on account of his principles, he liament for Hendon, Wiltshire. After filling withdrew, with his wife and other Protestants, to the continent. Mr. Fox settled at Bale, and earned his subsistence as a corrector of the press for Oporious, a printer, whilst, at the same time, meditating his great work, entitled "The Acts and Monuments of the Church; or, Book of Martyrs." On the accession of Queen Elizabeth, he returned to England, and, by means of secretary Cecil, obtained a prebend of Salisbury. In 1563 he published his "Acts and Monuments of the Church," in one large volume folio. In the edition of 1584 it made two volumes; and, in the subsequent issues, three. lumes; and, in the subsequent issues, circu-This book was highly esteemed by Protestants, though stigmatized by the Roman Catholics as "Fox's Golden Legond." n. at Boston, Lin-colnshire, 1517, p. in London, 1587, and was buried in the church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, of nouries in the church of St. Giles, Cirplegate, of which he was some time vicar. Besides his "Acts and Monuments," he wrote several books, and a play in Latin called "De Christo Triumphanta." Bishop Burnet, a most painstaking searcher into original documents, soft the "Bock of Martyrs," that he had compared these "Acts and Monuments" with the records; and that he had never been able to discover any errors or prevarications in them, but the utmost fidelity and exactness.

Fox, George, the founder of the sect of Friends, or Quakers, was at first placed with a shepherd, and afterwards bound an apprentice to a shoemaker. In 1643 he became a religious to a snoemaker. In 1645 he became a rengious itinerant, and, about 1647, commenced publicly to preach, inveighing not only against the pre-vailing vices, but the officiating ministers and religious services; affirming that the light within, or Christ in the heart, is alone the means of salvation, and the true qualification for the of salvation, and the true quantization for the ministry. He suffered frequent imprisonments and other rough treatment, which he generally seems to have brought upon himself, by his indiscretions in opposing the clergy, and pass-ing strictures on them in their public ministry. The name of Quakers was given to him and his followers first at Derby, on account of the strange contortions and shakings which accompanied their preaching. In 1869 he married the widow of a Wesh judge, but still continued his course of itinerant preaching, and visited Holland, Germany, and America. B. at Draylon, Leicestershire, 1824; D. in London, 1899. His "Journal" was printed at London in 1894, his "Epistles" in 1893, and his "Tracts" in 1706, and is folio: The name of Quakers was given to him and his all in folio.

Fox, Sir Stephen, an English statesman. who began his political career in the service of the Northumberland family, and then attached himself to the fortunes of Charles II. when in exile. At the Restoration, he was made clerk of the Green Cloth, and paymaster of the Forces, and received the honour of knighthood. After the death of Charles, Fox was dismissed by James, but received into favour by William III., whom he subsequently displeased by opposing the formation of a standing army; but was again reinstated in his offices by Queen Anne. He founded several alms-houses, and was the first who proposed the establishment of Chelsca Hospital as a military asylum. B. 1627; D. 1716.

Fox, Henry, the first Lord Holland, was the second son of the preceding, and also became eminent as a statesman. He was educated at sundry subordinate offices, he was, in 1746, appointed secretary at war, which he continued to hold till 1756, when he gave way to Mr. Pitt, afterwards the great earl of Chatham. In 1757 Fox became paymaster of the forces, and, having acquired a considerable fortune by the perquisites of office and applying the interest of money in hand to his own use, he incurred a large share of obloquy, and was denounced in an address from the citizens of London, as the "defaulter of unaccounted millions." deriailter of unaccounted millions. He was in 1763 created a peer, by the title of Baron Holland, of Foxley, in Wilts; and in the latter part of his life built a fantastic villa at Kingsgate, near Margate, Kent. He left three sons —namely, Stephen, his successor in the title and estates; Charles James, the celebrated orator and statesman; and Henry Edward, a general in the army. B. 1705; D. at Holland House, Kensington, July 1, 1774. Fox, Charles James, a distinguished English statesman and orator, the third son of the first Lord Holland, received his education at Westminster, Eton, and Oxford, where his devotion to classical literature laid the groundwork of his future eminence as an orator. He was designed by his father to occupy a high place in the political arena of his country, and with that view he procured for him a seat in parliament for the borough of Midhurst, when he was no more than nineteen years of age. He made his first speech in 1769, in which he supported Colonel Luttrel against Mr. Wilks, in the Mid-dlesex election. In 1770 he became junior lord of the Admiralty in the administration of Lord North; but he resigned this post in two years, and in 1773 was appointed one of the lords and in 1773 was appointed one of the breasury. In the following year he was dismissed from his post, and in a short time appeared in the ranks of opposition to the ministry. His powerful oratorical talents were now exercised in denouncing the measures which led to the American war, and which finally resulted in the separation of the transatiantic colonies from England. In 1782 the administration of Lord North fell, when Fox became one of the secretaries of state, which office, however, he resigned on the death of the marquis of Rockingham. A new administration was formed under the earl of Shelburne, which, however, had but a brief tenure of exist-ence. When the Coalition ministry was formed, Fox resumed his former office. He now brought in For resumed ms former office. He now prought in his India Bill, which, having passed the House of Commons, was thrown out by the Lords, and was the proximate cause of the resignation of the ministry of which he was a member, Mr. Pitt now entered upon office, when Prox arrayed himself at the head of the opposition, and a low courset commenced between those and a long contest commenced between these two illustrious individuals. Worn out with the excitement of debate, he, in 1788, repaired to the exottement of deoate, ne, in 1708, repaired to the continent for the purpose of renewing his health, or perhaps of restoring the tone of wounded spirits constantly engaged in the harassing conflict of opinion; and, after passing a few days with Gibbon at Lousanne, he entered the classic land of Italy, George III., however, having been studiently taken iil, he was soon recalled from whatever repose and enjoyment he had promised himself in that region where "Full flashes on the soul the light of ages;" and he returned to his parliamentary duties. Eton, and in 1735 was elected a member of Par- In 1786 the question of the Indian administra-

416

active part. Next came the question of the regency, which, Fox argued, belonged by right to the prince of Wales; and then the French revolution, the principles of which he also discussed with his usual feeling, fervour, and vehecussed with his uscal feeling, ferrour, and vehence. It was upon this question that the memorable quarrel took place between him and Burke. "I know the price of my conduct," exclaimed the latter; "I have done my duty at the price of my troud. Our friendship is at an ond." In youn did Fox appeal, with tears in his In vain did Fox appeal, with tears in his eyes, to the memory of twenty-five years of un-interrupted intercourse. The words were publiely spoken, and the breach was never healed. Notwithstanding this separation, however, Burke shortly afterwards declared that Fox "was a man made to be loved." Between 1797 "was a man made to be loved." Between 179 and 1802 Fox lived chieffy in retirement, when he formed the plan of his "History of the Reign of James II." In 1802 a dissolution of parliament took place, when Fox, who had before at for Westminster, was again returned for the same "ancient city." Shortly afterwards he same "ancient city. Shortly attended in visited Paris, with the view of collecting materials for his historical work, when he was introduced to Napoleon I., who paid him marked attention. On the death of his great rival, Pitt, in 1806, Fox became secretary of state for foreign affairs under Lord Grenville; but his days were now numbered. Brief, however, as these were destined to be, he exerted himself for the abolition of the slave-trade, which was one of the many be-nevolent objects which lay near to his heart. He also endeavoured to negotiate a peace with France; but being afflicted with water in the chest, he did not live to accomplish his plans. B. 1749; D. 1806. It is upon his speeches and his statesmanship that the fame of Fox rests; and the former of these have been highly praised, and commended to students of oratory praised, and commended to students of oratory as models for study. This has especially been the case with the first part of his speech on the Westminster Sortilary, "which Brougham recommends to Macaulay "to pore over till he has it by heart." The criticism of Coleridge on the eloquence of Fox, is, "that his feeling was all intellest, and his intellest all feeling." Sir James Mackintosh calls him a "Demosthenian speaker," but Brougham says, "there never was a greater mistake than the fancying a close resemblance hetween his along demonster that of resemblance between his eloquence and that of Demosthenes." The mother of this celebrated man was Lady Georgina Caroline, eldest daughter of Charles, second duke of Richmond, of the Lennox family.

Fox, William Johnson, an eloquent English Unitarian preacher, who becoming popular as an advocate of the repeal of the corn-laws, and other liberal opinions in politics, was elected member of parliament for Oldham in 1847 and in 1852. He is best known, however, as a in 1852. He is best known, however, as a periodical writer, and from his connexion with the "Westminster Review;" for which he wrote the opening article of the first number. He also wrote for the "Monthly Repository" and the "Weskly Dispatch" newspaper. His separate works are, "Lectures to the Working Classes," 40 s. of which were published between 1846 and 1851. He likewise produced a volume on "The Beligicous Ideas," and several other smaller performances. Mr. Fox resigned his seaf in parliament, and retired from public his seaf in parliament, and retired from public his seat in parliament, and retired from public life, in 1862. As a member of the House of Com-

tion of Warren Hastings came on, in which, mons, he frequently brought forward motions from its commencement to its close, he took an with a view to the promotion of secular educawith a view to the promotion of secular educa-tion throughout the country. B. near Wrentham, Suffolk, 1786; p. 1864.

Fox, Maximilien Sebastien, foi, a famous French general, who began his career at the age of fifteen, after having studied at the college of Soissons and the military school of La Fere. He made his first campaign as secondlieutenant of artillery under Dumouriez in 1792; made two campaigns under Moreau; and served under Bonaparte in Italy. The peace of Campo Formio suspended his military career, and then studied law at Strasburg. In 1793 he again joined the army, and continued in active service in Italy, Switzerland, and Germany, till the peace of Amiens. He was sent to Turkey in 1807, and assisted the Porte in making preparations for the defence of the Dardanelles. next went to Portugal, where he took part in many battles, always distinguishing himself for courage and military skill, rose to the rank of lieutenant-general, succeeded Marmont as commander-in-chief after the battle of Salamanca, and accomplished an able retreat to the Douro. He was wounded in the battle of Orthez, and on the retirement of Bonaparte to Elba, was employed by the Bourbons. On the return of the emperor, however, he again joined him, fought bravely at Waterloo, where he received his lifteenth wound, notwithstanding which he continued at his post till the close of the engagement. Foy afterwards devoted himself to the study of history and of political and military science; and in 1819 was elected a member of the Chamber of Deputies, in which member of the channer of Deputies, in which assembly he distinguished himself as an orator, especially in defence of his old companions in arms, and became a great public favourite. On his death, it was found that his wilow and family were left in indigent circumand family were left in indigent circumstances, when a liberal subscription was made for their relief and for the crection of a state to his memory. He left two volumes of speeches, and from his MSS. his widow afterwards published an able and impartial." History of the Peninsular War." B. at Ham, in Picardy, 1775; D. 1825.

Fas. Diaxoto, fra de-al-vo-lo, a Neapolitan robber, whose real name was Michael Pozzo, been life as a stocking-maker, after which been life as a stocking-maker.

began life as a stocking-maker, after which he became a friar, and in this capacity was the leader of a gang of banditti in Calabria. In 1796 he assisted cardinal Ruffo, who headed the counter-revolutionists in favour of the Bourbons of Naples. For this he received a pardon for of values. For this he reserved a parton for his crimes, and a pension of 3600 dueats, with which he was enabled to purchase an estate. He now lived in peace till 1800, when he rose again in favour of the expelled Bourbons. He entered Sperlonga, and threw open the prisons, when he was joined by large numbers of lazzaroni; but, after a severe engagement with the Bonapartists, he was taken prisoner, condemned, and summarily executed in the same year. B 1769. Auber, the French musical composer, has written an opera founded on the adventures of written at opera founded on the adventures or this bandit.

Francia, Francesco, fran'-che-a, a distin-guished Halian painter, who, from being a gold-smith and engraver on metals, rose to enninence as an artist. Having been employed by Raphael to place a picture of his in a church at Bologna, he was so struck with its beauty, and so dis-heartened at his own inferiority, that he sank into despair and died, 1518. B. at Bologna, 1450. His real name was Francesco Raibolini.

Francis

FRANCIA, Jose Gaspar Rodriguez, fran'-she-a, the famous dictator of Paraguay, was the son of a small French proprietor in that country, his mother being a creole. He was originally intended for the church, but, after taking his degree as doctor of laws at the diversity of Cordova, he devoted himself to lave, and became on eminent and successful pleader. He continued his legal avocations for thirty years, having won a high reputation for learning, honesty, and independence, occuping his leisure with philosophical and mathematical studies, to which he continued addicted all his life. Soon after the Spanish South American colonics threw off their allegiance to the parent state, Dr. Francia was, in 1811, appointed sceretary to the independent junta of Paraguay; and in 1813, on the formation of the new congress, was named consul of the republic, with Yegros for a colleague. From that time he devoted him-self to the welfare of his country, the affairs of which he administered with singular ability. He repaired the state of the finances, and maintained peace and order in Paraguay, while the other colonies were torn with dissensions and desolated with war. In 1817, the people, in gratitude for the services he had rendered them, placed in his hands unlimited power, under the title of dictator, which he continued to exercise till his death, in 1640. B. at Assun-cion, 1757; D. 1840. FRANCIS I., fran'-sis, ki 1g of France, succeded to the throne in 1515, on the death of Louis XII., who died without male issue. Scarcely had he ascended, when he, as grandson Scarcely had he ascended, when he, as grandson of Valentine of Milan, put himself at the head of an army to assert his rights over the Milanese. The Swiss, who opposed him in his entry into the duchy, were defeated at Marignano (or Melegnano) September 13, 1515, and Milan fell immediately after this victory. After a short war with England, the famous interview between Henry VIII. and Francis took place, in 1520, in Flanders, and which, for the magnificence displayed on the occasion, was called "the Field of the Cloth of Gold." In the same year, of the Glorn of Gold." In the same year, Charles V. of Spain having inherited the empire after the death of Maximilian, Francis laid claim to the imperial dignity, and declared war against his rival. In this struggle, however, he met with nothing but reverses. After the defeat of Marshal Lautree at Dicocca, in 1522, and Bayard's death, Francis was himself, in 1525. beaten at Pavia, and taken prisoner. The fight had been a stout one, and the king wrote to his mother, "All is lost, except honour." Led captive into Spain, he only recovered his liberty at the cost of an onerous treaty, signed at Madrid in 1526; but which was not entirely carried out. He immediately recommenced the war in Italy, met with fresh defeats, and concluded a second treaty at Cambrai, in 1529. He once more invaded Italy, in 1536, and, after various success, consented to a definite arrangement at Crespi, in 1544, by which the French were excluded from Italy, though Milan was given to the duke of Orleans, the second son of Francis. bouillet, 1547, and was succeeded by his son, Henry II. Francis was a friend to arts and literature, which flourished during his reign; and he was called the Father of Letiers. Justice, also, began to be better administered in his reign in France, although the Calvinists suffered great persecutions. He founded the Royal College of France, the Royal Library, and built several naises.

Faxrois II, king of France, was the eldest son of Henry II. and Catherine do Medicis, and succeeded his father in 150. The year previous he had married Mary Stuart, queen of Soots, and in 1500 he died, leaving no issue. Francis, duke of Guise, and Charles, cardinal of Loraine, held the principal authority in this reign, and, by the abuses of which they were guilty, had a principal share in easing the religious wars to which France now became a prey. Francis was principal share in causing the religious wars to which Frances now became a prey. Francis was succeeded by his brother, Charles IX. 1914. Francis L, emperor of Germany, was the son of Leopold, duke of Loraine. He inherited this duchy from his father, in 1729, and six years afterwards exchanged it for that of Tuscany, which the death of the last of the Medicsis had rendered vacant. In 1736 he married Maria Theresa, the daughter of the emperor Charles VI. On the death of the latter, he disputed the imperial dignisty with the elector of Bavaria, whom France supported, and who took the name of Charles VII.; he was, however, defeated, and Francis reigned peaceably for twenty years. 1708; p. 1765. His churacter was tarnished by avarice. He had sixteen children, and the unfortunate Marie Autoincits.

Francis II., emperor of Germany, and I. of Austria, succeeded his father, Loopold II., in 1792, is emperor of Germany, king of Bohemia, Hungary, &c. At the very commencement of his reign he had to sustain a war against France, in which he was defeated, and was, in 1797, obliged to sign the treaty of Campo Formio, which deprived him of the Netherlands and Lombardy. Another war taking place with the same power, he was not more fortunate than in the first, and was beaten at Marengo, and lost, by the treaty of Lomeille, in 1801, all his possessions onto Ribnie. In a third campaign, undertaken in 1805, the French were victorious over his armies at Eichingen, Uin, and Auster-litz; and the treaty of Presburg still further diminished his territory. Renounding now, the title of emperor of Germany, he took that of Eckmull and Wagram led to the peace of Schönbrunn; to cement which more strongly, his daughter Mairia Louiss was in 1810, given to Napoleon I. Notwithstanding this alliance, however, he, in 1813, joined the coalition against his son-in-law, and contributed considerably to his overthrow. The treates of 1815 put him again in possession of the greater portion of his territory, and he reigned peacedly till his death in 1835. b. 1768. He was succeeded by his son freedinand, who, in his turn, a delicated in lavour of his nephew, Francis Joseph, in 1888.

Francis I., king of the French Ren Proceedings of the Strancis I., king of the Fren Schilles, was the FIRACIS I, Ring of the Two Smittle, was the son of Ferdinand I, and twies, during the life-time of his father, carried on the government of the kingdom under the name of viceroy; first, in 1812, when a constitution was granted to Sielly; and afterwards, in 1820, during the troubles which broke out in Naples and Palerma. He mounted the throme in 1826, and died 1830, without having achieved anything tronarkable. He was succeeded by Ferdinand II. (Bombe), who, dying in 1859, was followed by Francis II., who was oxpelled from Naples by general who was expelled from Naples by general

Garibaldi in 1860, and after taking refuge in who were famous for their scripture subjects, Gaska, which was captured by general Cialdini, executed withgreat beauty and fine coiour. The the people of Naples and Skelly united them. father died in 1816 and the son in 1642. selves to the kingdom of Italy under Victor Emmanuel. Francis retired to Rome, where he continued to foster and encourage partisan expe-ditions into his old states, which generally resolved themselves into sanguinary brigand raids, the most atrocious murders and robberies being committed in his name.

FRANCIS, St., an Italian, the founder of the order of Franciscan friars, was the son of a order of Franciscan Irians, was the son of a rich merchant, named Bernardino. He was at first intended by his father for commercial pursuits, and, with that iven, stadled the French language, which he acquired so perfectly, that he was sumamed Francis. At the age of 24, however, he gave himself up entirely to the religious life, and gained a number of followers, to whom he prescribed that they should possess nothing of their own, should live on alms, and spread themselves over the face of the globe to convert sinners and unbelievers. He himself, Syria. It is said that he had a remarkable vision, in which he saw an angel descend from heaven, with the marks of crucifixion on his body, and that he himself felt the pains of crucifixion at the same moment, and preserved the same marks in his flesh. B. at Assisi, Umbria, 1182; p. 1226,-There are other saints, in the Roman Catholic calendar, of this name. Francis, Sir Philip, the supposed author of Francis, Sir Phinp, the supposed author of the celebrated "Letters of Junius," was the son of a clergyman, and educated at St. Paul's School, London. When he was but sixteen, he was placed in the office of Mr. Fox, then miniswas pinced in the office of all. Fox, then minis-ter, and subsequently was fortunate enough to be retained by Mr. Pitc, when this statesman came into power. Afterwards, he was private secretary to general Bligh, then to the earl of Kinsoul, and, in 1763, reedwad an appointment in the War Office, which he held nearly ten orars. In 1778 he was named one of the civil members in council for the government of Bengal, and remained in India till 1780, when, having had a duel with Warren Hastings, he returned to England. Here he, in 1784, was returned to the House of Commons, and remained a member till 1807, when he retired from parliament, evincing his interest in public affairs by his pamphlets and newspaper contributions. In 1816, great attention was drawn to him as being the author of the "Letters of Junius," Mr. John Taylor having published an ingenious pampilet, in which strong evidence was given in support of this opinion. B. at Dublin, 1740; in support of this opinion. B. at Dublin, 1710;

b. in London, 1818. It may be added, in connexion with Sir Phillip's supposed authorship of these celebrated letters, that Lords Brougham, Campbell, Mahon, and Macaulay, have not hesitated to declare their conviction that he was that "great unknown;" and to these high names may be added other legal and literary authorities, who entertained the same belief.

TRANGY OF FRANGYEM, Frank. There

FRANCE, OF FRANCEEN, frank. There were several Dutch and Flomish artists of this name, among whom may be mentioned-1. name, among wnom may loo mentached—1. Jerome, Ambrose, and Sebastian, of the Flemish school, who flourished in the 16th century, and tokained considerable reputation—2. John Baptist, a native of Antwerp, who pathed historical subjects and saloon interiors with great spirit and exquisite colouring. 3, 1600—3. Francis two eminent Dutch painters, father and son, Francke, Augustus Herman, frank, a German divine, who became professor of the Oriental languages, and afterwards of divinity, in the University of Halle. Here he laid the founda-tion of an orphan-house, which, in 1727, con-tained upwards of 2000 children and more than tained upwards of 2000 children and more than 200 preceptors. He also carried into effect a mission for propagating the gospel in Mahbar. As a thucke, 1663; p. 1727. His works are, Sermons and Books of Devotion; "Methodus Studii Theologieji;" "Introductio ad Lectionem Prophetarum;" "Commentaria de Scopo Librorum Veteris et Novil Testamenti;" "Manndisto ad Lectionem Scripture Sacra;" "Observations Biblica". Some of his practical books have been translated into English.

FENNELLY Thomas & Add His an Prodich

Francklin, Thomas, frank-lin, an English divine, who was educated at Westminster School, whence he was removed to Trinity School, Whence he was removed to Thing College, Cambridge, where he obtained the degree of D.D. He was also chosen professor of Greek in that university. In 1758 he was appointed to the vicavage of Ware, to which was afterwards added the rectory of Brasted, in Kent. He subsequently became chaplain in crdinary to King George III. n. in London, 1721; n. 1781. Dr. Francklin translated Phalaris, Sophoeles, and Lucian into English, and laris, Sophocies, and Lucian into Engines, and wrote three plays: "The Earl of Warwick," and "Matilda," tragedies; and the "Contract," a comedy. He also published a volume of sermons on the relative duties, and permitted his name to be prefixed to a translation of Voltaire's works.

François de Neufchateau, fran-kwaw dai neu-rha-to, a French poet, dramatic writer, and politician, was a member of the Legislative Assembly in 1792, and in 1797 was minister of the interior, and member of the directory. Under the rule of Napoleon he became a count, a senator, and grand officer of the Legion of Honour. After the restoration of the Bourbons, he gave himself up entirely to literary pursuits. Fran-cois, who was bred a lawyer, was a man of eminent ability, as well in statesmanship as in the character of author, and left a variety of works behind him which are still popular in France. B. at Neufchateau, Loraine, 1750; D. 1828.

FRANK, Johann Peter, frank, a distinguished German physician, who was professor at Göttingen, Pavia, director-general of hospitals in Lombardy, and clinical professor at Vienna. Bonaparte invited him to France, but this he refused. He wrote a number of works on medirelised. He wrote a number of works on meaning and the first state of the most important of which are his "System of Medical Police," "Choix of Opurations apparteant à la Middeine," These three works, making 32 vols. Swo, are only a portion of the fruits of Professor Frank's industry,

B. in the Duchy of Baden, 1745; D. 1821.
FEANKLIN, Benjamin, frank-lin, an American patriot, and one of the most distinguished of modern philosophers, was the son of a scap-boiler and tallow-chandler in the city of Boston. bonic and tanow-candide in the city of Boston. He was designed for the ministry; but his father requiring his assistance at home, took him from shool, when only ten years old, and set the future philosopher to "the cutting of wiles for the endles filling moulds," and other duties necessary to his business. Disliking this occupation, however, he was placed under his

419

chler brother, who was a printer in Boston, but with whom he disagreed. He then removed to New York, whence he went to Philadelphia, where, after serving as a journeyman some time, he attracted the notice of Sir William Keith, the governor, who persuaded him to commence the governor, and persuant mint of commence business on his own account. With this view he proceeded, in 1725, to England, to procure printing materials; but on his arrival he found, that the governor had deceived him by false promises; on which he worked as a journeyman in London. He now produced his a journeyman in London. He now produced his "Disscriation on Liberty and Necessity, Plea-sure and Pain," which was the means of intro-ducing him to Mandeville, the author of "The Fable of the Bees." In 1726 he returned to America, and entered into partnership with a person named Meredith in the printing trade, which he afterwards conducted alone in the city of Philadelphia. In 1730 he was united to a lady, whom he had courted before going to England; and, about the same time, con-tributed to the forming of the public library at Philadelphia, and subsequently established an insurance office and other useful institutions in the same town. In 1732 he published his "Poor Richard's Almanae," which became noted for the pithiness of its proverbs, and wherein for the pinniess of as proveres, and waters, were inserted those maxims so generally known by the title of "The Way to Wealth." In 1736 he was appointed clerk to the General Assembly at Pennsylvania, and, in the year following, postmaster of Philadelphia. He was now a prominent member of the community. In 1742 he established the first public library in Philadelphia, and, two years later, proposed and carried into effect a plan of association for the defence of Pennsylvania. About this time he commonced his electrical experiments, of which he published an account, and had the honour of making several discoveries in this branch of philosophy, the principal of which was the identity of lightning with the electric fluid. Hence he invented the lightning-conductor. In 1747 he was chosen a representative in the General Assembly, in which he distinguished himself by several acts of public utility. By his means a militia bill was passed, and he was elected colonel of the Philadelphia regiment, but the honour of this appointment he declined. In 1757 he was sent to England as agent for Pennsylvania. Whilst in that country he was chosen fellow of the Royal Society, and honoured with the degree of doctor of laws by the universities of St. Andrews, Edinburgh, and Oxford. In 1762 he returned to America, but two years afterwards revisited England in his former capacity, when he underwent his examination at the bar of the House of Commons concerning the Stamp Act. In 1775 he returned to America, and was elected a delegate to the Congress. In the contest between Great Britain and her transatlantic colonies, he took an active part in the declaration of independence. In 1778 he arrived in France as minister plenipotentiary from America, and signed a treaty offensive and defensive with that power, and which produced a war between France and England. In 1783 he signed the definitive treaty of peace recognising the independence of the United States, and hising the interpretation of the connectioners, and in 1785 returned to America, where he was triumplantly received, and chosen president of the supreme council. It was on this occasion that he received the following tribute of admittance of the connection of the connection of the supreme council. ration from an American even still more distinuished than himself in the annuls of his country—"Lount Fromo, Systember 25, 1785, —DEAR SIR,—Amid the public gratulations on your safe return to America after a long absence, and the many eminent services you had rendered it,—for which, as a benefited person, I feel the obligation,—permit an individual to Join the public voice in expressing his sense of them, and to assure you that, as no one entertains more respect for your character, so none an salute you with more sincerity or with greater pleasure than I do on the occasion—theorem of the same and the same shall you with more sincerity or with greater pleasure than I do on the occasion—from the first of the same shall be sufficient to same written by numseir.

Franklin, Sir John, a distinguished English navigator, who, in 1800, entered the rayal navy as a midshipman. In 1806 he was present at the battle of Trafalgar, in 1814 at that of New Orleans, and in 1819 was appointed to head an arreated arradition from Huleavik Par to an overland expedition from Hudson's Bay to the Arctic Ocean. After suffering many hardships, and being frequently on the verge of death from hunger and fatigue, he reached home in 1822, when, in the following year, he married a Miss Porden, the daughter of an married a aliss forces, the daugnter of an architect, and the authoress of several poetical effusions. In 1825 he submitted to Lord Bathurst a plan "for an expedition overland to the mouth of the Mackenzie River, and thence by sea to the N.W. extremity of America, with the combined object also of surveying the coast be-tween the Mackenzie and Coppermine Rivers." This proposition was accepted, and, six days after he left Liverpool; in the same year, his wife died. In 1827 Captain Franklin arrived at Liverpool, where he was married a second time, and in 1820 had the honour of knighthood conferred upon him. In 1845 Sir John set out on a third expedition with two ships, called the Erclus and Terror, and spent his first winter in a cove between Cape Riley and Beechy Island. After that period many expeditions were desafter this period many expectations were can particled, both from England and America, in search of Sir John, of whom there were no tidings, and not until 1854 did the intelligence reach England that the brave navigator and his heroic companions had, in all probability, perished in the winter of 1850-51. This intelligence, however, wanted confirmation, and Lady Franklin, who deserves all praise for the intelligence. gent persistency of her efforts, resolved to have the mystery cleared up as to whether her gallant the mystery cleared up as to whether her gamma-husband had really met the fate which it was generally believed he had done. Accordingly, a last expedition was fitted out, and the melancholy news was, in 1857, at length confirmed by the return of Captain McClintock, in the yacht Fox, after a persevering search for the lost adventurers. This officer brought with him indisputable proofs of the death of Sir John and the loss of his crew. Several articles belonging to the unfortunate explorers were found at Ross Cairn and Point Victory. At the latter place a record was discovered, wherein it was stated that Sir John Franklin had died on the 11th of June,

Frederick

1847. Other traces were found on the west coast opposition to Otho. In 1220 he was crowned of King William's Island, as the various sur-by Pope Honorius III. at Rome. He afterwards of King William's Island, as the various sur-vivors of the expedition had strayed from each other, perhaps in search of food, or the means of escaping from their dreary and desolute situa-tion. To Sir John Franklin, however, belongs the merit of having discovered the north-west passage, the first expedition in quest of which was sent out in 1553, the last being said to have terminated only with the discovery of his remains. B. at Spilsbury, Lincolnshire, 1758.

France (See Lovar, Simon Fraser, Lord.)

FRAUNCE, Abraham, frauns, an English poet, educated at Cambridge, at the expense of Sir Philip Sidney, afterwards studied law at Gray's Inn, London, and was called to the bar of the Court of Marches in Wales. He is better known, however, as an author than as a lawyer. His principal writings are—" Lamentations of Aminprincipal writings are—"Lamentations of Amin-tas for the Death of Phillis," "The Countess of Pembroke's Ivy Church and Emanuel," and a translation of Heliodorus's "Ethiopies." The dates of his birth and death are unascertained.

FRAUNHOFER, Joseph, froun'-ho-fer, an emi-nent Bavarian optician, who, in his 20th year, was received into the great manufactory for the construction of mathematical and philosophical instruments, near Munich. Here he distinguished himself by making many experiments on light, and, by his reputation, increased the resources of the establishment, which ultimately became his property. He was a member of several learned societies, and had conferred upon him by the king of Bavaria the order of Civil Merit, and, by the king of Denmark, that of the Dannebrog. B. at Straubing, 1787; D. 1826. FREDEGONDA, fred-e-gon'-d', a peasant girl in the service of Andowers, the queen of Chilperic I., who fell in love with her and eventually narried her in 565. Chilperic had previously divorced Andowera, and married Galowintha, whom, it is said, Fredegonda poisoned to attain her end. p. 597.

FREDERICK, fred'-e-rik, the name borne by a vast number of sovereigns and rulers of different countries, the most eminent of whom were-

FREDERICK I., surnamed Barbarossa, emperor of Germany, the son of Frederick, duke of Suabia, succeeded to the imperial throne on the demise of his uncle, Courad III., in 1152. He was an energetic and warlike prince, and in the second year of his reign, settled the disputes between Canute and Sweyn, competitors for the Danish crown, the former of whom he held as his vassal. He next marched into Italy to settle the tumults which distracted that country, and the tumuits which distracted that country, and was crowned at Rome by Adrian IV., who, dying in 1189, no less than three actipopes were chosen, who were all opposed by the emperor. The Milanese, profiting by these divisions, each caroured to shake off the imperial yoke, on which Frederick again entered Italy, took Milan, and entering Rome, set Calixtus on the papal throne instead of Alexander. The Venetians, however, maintained the cause of the latter nowever, maintained the cause of the latter with so much vigour, that Frederick was obliged to make his submission to Alexander. He next embarked against the infidels, obtained some victories, took Iconium, and penetrated into Syria, where he was drowned in 1190. B. 1121.

went to the Holy Land, and concluded a truce with the sultan of Babylou, which so provoked Pope Gregory IX., that he anothematized him. In the city of Jerusalem he put the crown on his own head, because no priest would even say the mass. On this Frederick returned to Europe and laid siege to Rome, which originated the famous parties of the Guelphs and the Ghibellines, the former being on the side of the pope, and the latter on that of the emperor. Gregary was obliged to make peace, but, in 1236, he was renewed, which proved unsuccessful to the emperor, whose German subjects revolted against him. He lost Parma by an insurrection, and was defeated before it; but he afterwards was victorious in Lombardy. B. 1194; D. at Fiorintino, 1250.

FREDERICK III., called Le Beau, son of Albert I., duke of Austria, was chosen emperor in 1314 by some of the electors, but the majority elected Louis of Bavaria, who defeated and took prisoner Frederick at Muhldorf, in 1322. The latter then renounced his claim, and n. 1330. Some historians do not reckon Frederick as one of the emperors, but others set him down as the third Frederick.

FREDERICK, IV., called "the Pacific," ascended the throne in 1410, and was crowned at Rome in 1452. His reign was passed in forming plans for the pacification of the empire. He is said to have died of a surfeit of melons, or in conscquence of an amputation of his leg. He left it to his son Maximilian to carry out the device inscribed upon his palaces and books, A, E, I, O, U; which characters are generally supposed to represent the motto, Austria est Imperare Orbi Universo. B. at Innspruck, 1415; D. 1493.

KINGS OF DENMARK, SWEDEN, AND POLAND.

FREDERICK I., king of Denmark and Norway, succeeded his nephew Christiern, or Christian II., on the deposition of the latter, in 1523, and entered into an alliance with Gustavus I., king of Sweden. After taking Copenhagen, he gained over all the nobility, and introduced Lutheran-ism into his dominions. B. 1471; D. 1533.

FREDERICK II., the son and successor of Christiers or Christian III., was a great friend of learning, and the patron of Treho Bruhe, and other men of science. He waged a long war with Sweden, which ended in 1570, and received the order of the Garter from Elizabeth, queen of England, and gave his daughter in marriage to James VI. of Scotland and I. of England. B. 1534; D. 1589.

FREDERICK III. succeeded his father Christiern IV., in 1643. The most remarkable event of his reign was his changing the constitution from an elective to an hereditary monarchy. B. 1609; D. 1670.

FREDERICK IV. ascended the throne on the death of Christiern V., in 1699. He leagued against Charles XII. of Sweden, who forced him to make peace; but when Charles fled to Tur-key, Frederick drove the Swedes out of Norway, and concluded a favourable peace, retaining possession of the duchy of Schluswig. B. 1671; D. 1730.

FREDERICK V., grandson of the preceding, came to the throne in 1746. The character of his FREDERICK VI, the grandson of the proced-ing, and son of Henry VI, was elected king of right may be inferred from the following to the Romans in 1106, and emperor in 1210, in mark, which, on his deathed, he made to his successor, Christiern VII.: "It is a great consolution to me, my son, that I have not injured any person, and that my hands are not stained with one drop of blood." He was twice married: first to Louisa, daughter of George II. of England, and then to Juliana, daughter of the в. 1723: duke of Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel.

Frederick

р, 1766.

FREDERICE VI., king of Denmark, ascended the throne in 1838, although, from 1784, he was associated in the government with his father, associated in the government with its most, who had lost his reason. On his accession, he had to repair the damages done by the English in their bombardment of Copenhagen in 1807, and to wage a war with the Swedes, who attempted to possess themselves of Norway. He succeeded in defeating them, and peace was signed at Jönköping, in 1809. Allying himself with Napoleon, Norway was, in 1814, given to Sweden, under Bernadotte; Pomerania and the isle of Rugen falling to Denmark. B. 1768;

n. 1839.

Frederica VII., king of Denmark, succeeded Christian VIII. in 1948. In his reign an usuccessful attempt was made, in 1849, to wrest the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein from Denmark. B. 1808; D. 1863.

FREDERICK, king of Sweden, was the cldest son of Charles, landgrave of Hesse-Cassel. He married the sister of Charles XII., on whose death in 1718, the states of Sweden elected her queen, and, in the year 1720, consented to her resigning the crown to her husband. He had a long and unsuccessful war with Russia, which ended in a peace disadvantageous to Sweden. D. without issue, 1751.

FREDERICK AUGUSTUS I. (See AUGUSTUS FREDERICK I., king of Poland. FREDERICK AUGUSTUS II. (See AUGUSTUS FREDERICK II.)

Sovereigns of Peussia.

FREDERICK WILLIAM, generally called the "Great Elector" of Brandenburg, succeeded his father, the elector George William, in 1640, and, in 1642, freed Prussia from feudal subjection to the king of Poland. He is considered as the the king of Folind. He is considered as the founder of the Prussian power, and from his example much of the military spirit which characterizes that nation is believed to have sprung. In 1643 he made peace with Sweden, and subsequently entered into a league with that power in 1655 against Poland. 1672 he joined the imperialists in opposition to Louis XIV: but, in 1673, he made a separate treaty with France, and, in the following year, again joined the allies; on which the French prevailed upon the Swedes to attack his dominions. Frederick, however, defeated the in-vaders, drove them out of Prussia, and took waters, drove them dut of Prissa, and took several places from them, which, however, by the treaty of St. Germain, in 1679, he was obliged to restore. He now turned his attention to the improvement of his states, and, by afford-ing protection to the French Protestant refugees, added to the industrial power of his dominions 20,000 manufacturers, and laboured to extend the agricultural arts in every direction. He founded the library at Berlin, and a univer-sity at Duisburg; and, at his death, bequeathed to his son not only a country enlarged beyond the boundaries in which he found it, but a

Frederick

Hague to the camp of the prince of Orange, then at Breda. The Dutch prince was surprised at this signal instance of self-command, and received him with these words: "Cousin, your flight is a greater proof of heroism than would be the taking of Breda. He who so early knows how to command himself, will always succeed in great deeds." These words remained for ever deeply impressed on Frederick's mind.

FREDERICK I., king of Prussia after 1701, but as elector of Brandenburg Frederick III., succeeded to his father's dominions in 1688. great object of hisambition was to be recognised grean object of insamonion was to decognized as king of Prussia, and in 1701 he attained his object. On that occasion he put the crown on his own head, and on that of his royal consort. He also founded the order of the Black Eagle, and augmented his dominions partly by pur-chase, and partly by negociations with various powers. B. 1657; D. 1713. This prince founded the University of Halle, the Royal Society of Berlin, and the Academy of Painting. His second queen, Sophia Charlotte of Han-over, was the sister of George I., and a woman

Preductor William I, son of the above, and father of Frederick the Great, commenced his reign in 1713, after having married a daughter of the elector of Hanover, afterwards George I. of England. In 1715 he declared war against Charles XII, of Sweden, and in conjunction with Denmark took Stralsund; but on the death of Charles, in 1718, he made peace. B. 1688; D. 1740. The habits of this sovereign were entirely military, and he laboured unweariedly to pro-mote the discipline of his troops. One of his strongest peculiarities was an extraordinary love for tall soldiers; and in order to procure these sons of Anals, he had agents employed in all parts of Europe. He held science and litera-ture in profound contempt; but money he worshipped, and men of a military character after his own ideal, he respected and encouraged. The consequence was, that he left an abundant treasury and a well-appointed army of 66,000

FREDERICK II., king of Prussia, commonly called "The Great," was the son of the caused The Great, was the son of the preceding, and received but an indifferent education, owing to his father's contempt of letters and predilection for military discipline. On attaining the years of manhood, he evinced so strong an inclination for literature and music, that he incurred the displeasure of his parent, whose treatment induced him, in 1730, to make the attempt of esaging from Prussia. The scheme, however, being discovered, he was confined in the castle of Custrin, his younger companion, Katte, being executed before his face. After a confinement of several months. he obtained his pardon, although it seems well authenticated that his father had resolved to take away his life, which was only saved by the intercession of Charles VI., emperor of Germany. In 1733 he married the princess Elizabeth of Brunswick, in obedience to his father's command, when he employed himself in literary pursuits, and also with the study of music, until his accession to the throne. In 1740 he succeeded to the crown, and taking advantage of the defenceless state of Maria Theresa, queen of Hungary, he marched into Silesia, which was added to his dominions by the treaty of Breslau. the boundaries in which he south is a large of the control of the treaty of Breshu, coder to avoid the possibility of being entrapped in 1744 the war was renowed against the queen by an immoral society, this prince field from the of Hungary, and the same year Frederick took

FREDERICK THE GREAT,

FROBISHER, SIR MARTIN.

FROISSART, JOHN.

FRY, ELIZABETH.

Prague, which, however, he was forced to eva-Prague, which, however, he was lorced to eva-cuate on the approach of a Saxon army unde the prince of Lovaine. In 1745 he defeated that prince at Frieldurg, and them marche-into Rohemia, where, at Sorr, he defeated at Austrian army superior to his own. Short after, he took Dresden, where, after laying is under heavy caxotions, a treaty of peace was conducted, which enabled Frederick to retain possession of Silesia, and end the second Silesian war. The eleven years of peace which suc-ceeded this event were devoted by Frederick to the internal administration of his dominions the composition of some literary works, and the framing of the "Frederician code of laws." In 1750 Voltaire visited Prussia, and was received with the most flattering marks of attention by the king; but the friendship which subsisted between them was at last broken, and the French philosopher quitted Prussia abruptly, and in disgrace. In 1756 a treaty was con-cluded between England and Prussia, which roduced another between France, Austria, and Russia. "The Seven Years' War," as it is called, began by Frederick marching into Saxony, and taking the camp of Pirna, The following year he gained a great battle at Prague over the Austrians, on which he laid siege to that city, and after reducing it to great straits, he was compelled by Marshal Daun, who straits, he was compelled by Marshal Daun, who defeated him at Kolin, to retire into Saxony. Frederick was now surrounded by enemies: the French entered Hanover, the Bussians and Swedes advanced towards Prussia, and the Imperialists pursued him into Saxony. Still undaunted, he attacked and defeated the French and Austrians at Rosbach; then marching into Silesia, beat another army at Lissa, and recowered Breslau. The Russians and Swedes retreated precipitately from Prussia; and the Hanoverians took the field under the prince of Hanoverians took the field under the prince of Frunswick. In 1758 he received a large sub-sidy from England; and the same year entered Moravia, where he laid siege to Olmutz, which was relieved by Marshal Daun. He then marched against the Russians, who had laid siege to Custrin, and defeated thom, after a bloody battle, at Zorndorf. Not long after this, however, he was surprised and beaten by Daun, at Hochkirchen. The next year the king was defeated after a very obstrate and doubtful defeated, after a very obstinate and doubtful engagement, at Kunnersdorf, by the Russians; and in 1760, the confederates entered Brandenburg, and took Berlin. Frederick, however, by defeating Daun at Torgau, put a new face upon the campaign, and the Russians and Swedes were compelled to quit his territories. In 1763 peace was restored between him and Russia and peace was restored between him and thissis and Sweden, and in 1763 a treaty, much in his favour, was concluded with the empress-queen, by which Silesia was confirmed to Prussia, and which concluded the "Seven Years" War." Still which concluded the Seek I class war. Sain ambitious of extending his dominions, in 1772 the partition of Poland was planned, and he obtained for his share all Polish Prussia, and a large portion of Great Poland. From this period the kingdom of Prussia was divided into East and West Prussia. In 1778 he opposed the design of the Emperor Joseph to dismember Bavaria, and marched in person against that nonarch; but no action took place, and by the treaty of Teschen, in 1779, the Austrian court renounced its design. In 1786 he concluded a treaty of amity and commerce with the United States of America; but his days were fast drawing to a close, for the same year he died, at his favourite palace of Sans Souci, in the forty-seventh year of his reign. B. 1712. Frederick was courteous in his manners, and an acute politician. His works, published in his lifetime. are in four vols, 8vo; and since his death, fifteen more have been printed. The principal are, the "Memoirs of the House of Brandenburg," a poem on the "Art of War," the "History of his Own Time," and the "History of the Seven his Own Time," and the "History of the Seven Venry Van." (For hill details connected with this king and his father, see Carlyle's "Life and Times of Frederick the Great," a writ. w'v'i gives an interesting account of the eventful times in which this monner hived. FREDERICK WILLIAM II, king of Prussia, was the nephew of the great Frederick, and suc-eccided him in 1786. He gave himself up to pleasure, secretising his ministers and generals to the captices of his mistresses. He also allowed himself to be explod by the myslical vagaries of the seciety of the "Illuminati," and under his feebe vule. Prussia soon lost her under his feeble rule, Prussia soon lost her place amongst nations. After having played a careely honourable part in the war which broke at in 1797 between Turkey and Russia, he pro-osed, in 1792, a coalition against the French epublic. Advancing, at the head of 80,000 acn, as far as the plains of Champagne, the world was expecting to see him march on Paris, when he suddenly retired, falling back on the the aid of Russia, the second division of Poland; nade peace with France in 1795, and D. 1797. . 1744

FREDERICK WILLIAM III., king of Prussia, on of the above, commenced his reign in 1707 by maintaining a strict neutrality in the various lliances with and against France which re-ulted from the ambitious designs of Napoleon L n 1805, however, he yielded to the solicitations of Russia, allying himself with the ezar against he French emperor. The rapid campaign of 506, and the defeat of the Prussians at Jena. 506, and the defeat of one Frussians as sem, pencel the gates of Burlin to the enemy, in hose hands it remained till 1809. In 1807 to battle of Friedland led to the humiliating cace of Tilst, by which Frederick lost half his eminions. Restored to his capital, the king iligently endeavoured to repair the cvils of ar; but new disasters overtook him, and his ingdon suffered greatly during the struggle om 1812 to 1814. Forced, in the former year, contribute a force of 30,000 men to Napoleon's rmy, he subsequently joined his troops with hose of Russia. The allies having triumphed wer the French at Leipsic, Frederick William, 1814, entered Paris with the ezar Alexander, e also accompanied the latter to England in ie same year. On the return of Napoleon om Elba, he once more joined the allies, feer the victory of Waterloo, in which the russians under Blucher (which see), played ut important part, Prussia, once more at peace, radually recovered the losses she had susnined, under the wise and paternal sway of rederick, whose constant efforts and modera-on contributed greatly to the maintenance of eace. Throughout his life, he was a warm efunder of the Protestant religion, and a the Protestate religion, and attended his omise, however, to bestow a representative unstitution on his people. The establishment the provincial estates only affected very ghtly the absolute power, which, it is true, he wielded with ability, and with a kind of paternal affection for his people. It may finally be said of him, that, a waverer between the absolutist party and the liberal party, he secured, as is the lot with most undecided men, the respect and adherence of neither. B. 1770; D. 1840.

Frederick William

FREDERICK WILLIAM IV., king of Prussia, on the death of his father, succeeded to the throne in 1840. He served, as a simple officer, in the campaigns of 1813 and 1814, and evinced, in one campaigns of 1813 and 1814, and evinced, at an early period of his life, a very great love for the arts, which he preserved throughout his career. During the first years of his reign, his subjects anxiously demanded the reform of the government, requiring the liberal constitution which had been promised them in 1815, in return for the great sacrifices they had made during the continental war. In 1847, at a general diet of the Prussian states, many of these reforms were granted, and it was thought these reforms were granted, and it was mongare that the kingdom might secape the troubles of the next year's revolution. In March, 1848, however, the people and the trops came that collision, the king was obliged to change the ministry, to issue a general amnesty, and to commence a war in favour of Schleswig against Denmark, and to salute from his balcony the corpses of the insurgents who had been killed in the streets of Berlin. These humiliations were somewhat softened by his hopes of becoming the head of a united Germany, and by the success of his army in putting down an in-surrection of the Poles in Posen. The mingled irresolution and absolutism of Frederick William, however, led subsequently to other conflicts in June and August of the same year; and it was not until two coups-d'état that the king, assisted by his army, succeeded in retaining his authority almost unimpaired by the concessions he had made. In the war between the Western powers and Russia, Frederick William preserved a strict neutrality, although carnestly solicited by each party to espouse its side in soncited by each party to espouse ris said in the conflict. In his reply to the demands of the car, he said: "There is hardly anythin I will not do for the emperor Nicholas, whom love; but if I remember that he is my fatherin-law, neither do I forget that Prussia is not the sister-in-law of Russia." In 1956, in consequence of an attack on Neufchâtel by some Prussian partisans, war was in danger of breaking out between Switzerland and Prussia; but this was avoided, and a treaty concluded, in May, 1857, in reference to the king's claims on that place. In the complications relative to the Danubian principalities, Prussia followed the lead of France and Russia as opposed to England and Austria. Towards the end of 1857, a severe illness, resulting in the loss of some of sovere limess, resulting in the loss of some of his faculties, caused the nomination as regent of his bruther William, who, on the king's death in 1861, succeeded him as William I. n. 1795. FERDREIOR WILLIAM NOMOLAS CHARLES, prince of Prussia, the nephew of Frederick William IV., and son of William I., heir to the Prussian throne, married, in 1858, Victoria, the Princess Royal of England. B. 1831.

FREDERICK, Colonel, son of the unfortunate Theodore, commonly called king of Corsica, was bred to the military profession, and obtained the rank of colonel, with the cross of the Order of Merit, from the duke of Wurtemberg, for whom he acted as agent in England. Being greatly reduced in circumstances, he shot him-solf in the portal of Westminster Abbey, in 1796, B. at Savanuah, 1813. 424

Fremont

He wrote—1. "Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire de Corse," 1768, Svo; 2. "The Description of Corsica, with an Account of its Union to the Crown of Great Britain," &c., 1793, 8vo.

FREGOSO, Baptist, frai-go'-so, a doge of Venice, in 1478, who was deposed and banished venice, in 1873, who was adopted and commind for his arbitrary and oppressive conduct. He wrote on Memorable Actions, the "Life of Pope Martin V.," on Learned Women, &c.—There are others of this family who have played various parts in Italian history.

FREIND, John, frinde, an English physician. who, having distinguished himself by some able who, naving distinguished filmself by some able works, was, in 1704, appointed chemical pro-fessor at Oxford, and, in the following year, accompanied the earl of Peterborough in his expedition to Spain, as physician to the army, On his return, in 1707, he published a vindica-tion of the earl's conduct in Spain, which gained him considerable reputation. The same year he took his doctor's degree, and published his chemical lectures. In 1711 he was chosen a member of the Royal Society, and, the same year, accompanied the duke of Ormond to Flanders. In 1716 he was elected a fellow of the College of Physicians; and, in 1722, sat in Parliament for Launceston. The year following he was sent to the Tower, on suspicion of being concerned in Atterbury's plot, but was soon released on bail. At the accession of George II. released on old. At the accession of George II., he was appointed physician to the queen. n. at Crofton, Northamptonshire, 1675; p. 1728. Amongst other works, he wrote "The History of Physic," 2 vols. 8vo; and all his writings were collected and published in Latin by Dr. Wigan, 1 vol. folio.

1 vol. 1010.

FERIND, Dr. Robert, brother of the above, was master of Westminster school, and wrote some excellent Latin and English poetry, besides having taken a part in the celebrated controversy regarding the epistics of Phalaris, He also published an edition of "Ciero de Ontfore" B. 1671; D. 1754.

ERECECT LIDE Clarke formers to produce

FREMONT, John Charles, fre-mont', a modern American politician and traveller, called "the Pathfinder of the Rocky Mountains," greatly distinguished himself by his courage and perseverance in extensive explorations, which opened to America "the gates of the Pacific empire." An account of these explorations was published in 1856, and upwards of 50,000 copies of the work were sold as soon as they were issued. 1859 the whole of his expeditions were published, superbly illustrated with woodcuts and steel plates. This work was superintended by the author, and contains a résumé of the first and second expeditions, which he made in the years 1842-43 and 1844, as well as his other four, which embrace a period of ten years, passed amid the emorace a period of ten years, passed annu tho wilds of America, and describing his adventures in Oregon, California, the Rocky Mountains, Mexico, and other parts of that distant country. In 1857 he contested the presidency with Bu-channa; but the latter was elected by a con-siderable majority. Fremont was always asso-riated with that party in America which is pposed to negro slavery. In the early part of the war consequent on the secession of the Southern States from the Union, in 1881-02, he held several commands in the Federal army, but his achievements did not add to his fame; and it will principally be by his merits as an explorer, which are undoubtedly great, that John Charles Frement will be remembered.

FRERE, Right Honourable John Hockham, freer, an English diplomatist, who filled several important posts, the most noted of which was his ministry in Spain during the Peninsular war. It is by his writings that he is best known. When a boy he produced, in imitation of a Saxon war-song, a poem on the victory of Athelstan at Brunenburgh, which was written during the confroversy occasioned by the poems attributed to Rowley. This poem is a work of very high merit, and, at the time of its appearance, clicited warm commendation. Frere also wrote and published what is called "The Whistlecraft Poem," which is supposed to have suggested the "Don Juan" of Byron. He was considered by Sir Walter Scott a perfect master of the ancient style of composition, and was one of the founders of the "London Quarterly Review," as well as a contributor to the "Etonian" and "Anti-Jacobin." B. in Norfolk, 1769; D. 1818, at his residence in the Pieta, Malta, where he lived for a number of years. FRERET, Nicholas, frai-rai, a learned Frenchman, who was chosen a member of the Academy of Inscriptions, and afterwards its perpetual secretary. Presenting to this body a disserta-tion on the origin of the Franks, his opinions were not pleasing to those in authority, and he was sent to the Bastile. On his release, Fréret occupied himself with antiquarian researches, and prepared a very large number of works on the chronology of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Indians, the old Greeks, and even the Chinese. Some of these have been published in Paris. B.

in Paris, 1688; p. 1749.

FREEDON, Elie Catherine, frai'-rawng, a French critic, educated among the Jesuits, was, at first, a professor at the college of Louis le Grand, but subsequently allied himself with Desfontaines, whom he assisted in his literary undertakings, and against the philosophers of the 18th century. In 1749 he commenced his "Letters on certain Writings of the Times," which extended to 13 volumes. He then began his "Année Littéraire," which he continued to produce, year after year, from 1751, until his death, in 1776. B. at Quimper, 1719. Fréron's critical works were much read; but owing to some strictures which he passed on Voltaire's writings, that author attacked him with great writings, the author acticed him what greed asperity, and ridiculed him in his satire of the "Pauvre Diable," and in his comedy of "L'Ecossiase." Besides the above works, Fréron wrote—"Miscellanies," "Les Vruis Plaisirs," and part of a translation of Lucretius.

FRERON, Louis Stanislaus, son of the above, noted for having produced, in 1789, in conjunction with Marat and others, a violent revolutionary journal, which bore the name of the "Orateur du Peuple." He became prominent at the Revolution, was a member of the Convention, voted for the death of the king, and, after making himself notorious during the Reign of Terror, became a bitter opponent of Robespierre. Bonaparte appointed him sub-Robespierre. Bonaparte appointed him sub-prefect of St. Domingo, where he went along with general Leclere, but died in 1802, soon after his arrival. p. 1765.

FRENEL, Augustin Jean, fres'-nel, a French scientific writer, who was at first an engineer, connected with the roads and bridges in the department of Drôme, where he remained till 1815. At this period he quitted active employment, and ardently followed scientific studies. Subsequently, he published "Memoirs on the 425

Polarization and Double Refraction of Light." and in 1821 was appointed examiner of the Polytechnic School at Paris. To him are due many improvements in lighthouses, and he was one of the first to introduce lenticular lights. B. at Broglie, Eure, 1789; D. at Ville d'Array, 1827, just after the Royal Society had sent him the Rumford medal for his discoveries on light.

FRENOY, Charles Alphonse du, fres'-noi, a painter and poet, who visited Rome for the purposes of study. Here he copied the works of the best masters, and planned his Latin poem on the "Art of Painting." n. at Paris, 1611; D. there, 1665. His poem was printed after his death, with a French translation by De Piles. There are three English translations of it; one by Dryden, another by Graham, and another by Mason.

FREWEN, Accepted, froo'-en, an English pre-late, who, in 1622, accompanied Prince Charles, afterwards Charles I., to Spain, as chaplain. In 1631 he obtained the deanery of Glouester, and, in 1643, the bishopric of Lichfield an I Coventry. At the Restoration he was translated to York, and died at Thorpe Castle in 1654. B. in Kent, 1589.

in Acn., 1899.

Faex, John Cecil, fri, a German physician, who boasted of being the lirst who defeated thoses in philosophy in the Greek language in Europe. His "Openeula" was printed after bit death by Baleurens. B. 1859 p. 1031.

Faextrac, Friedrich Gottlieb, frie-dag, was a bargomaster of Nurenherg, and wrote "Rhinobarthe Company".

ceros Veferum Scriptorum Monumentis de-scriptus," 1747; "Analecta Literaria, de Libris varioribus," 1751; "Oratorum et Rheforum Grecorum quibas Statam honoris causa posito faccunt," 1752; and "An Account of Scarce and fuerunt," 1752; and "An Account of Searce and Valuable Books," 1776. B. 1723; D. 1776. FREYIAG, Gustay, a modern German author, who, in 1847, in conjunction with Julan Schmidt, founded a literary journal, which soon attained to a large circulation. He subsequently attained to a made electron of poems, and an historic comedy, "Kuntz der Rosen," which was followed by two dramas and another comedy. All these are remarkable for their well-drawn characters, and the lively and natural tone of the dialogue. He is best known, however, in England, by his "Soll und Haben," a novel which was translated into English, in 1853, under the title of "Debit and Credit," and which attained a high degree of popularity. B.

white attainers a fight degree of popularity. B. at Kreuzburg, Silesia, 1816.
Freezier, Amedée François, frez-e-ai, a French engincer, who was employed in making a survey of the Spanish colonies of Peru and Chili, in 1711, of which he published an account in 1716. He was afterwards employed in fortifying St. Malo and other places, for which he was rewarded with the cross of St. Louis. B. at Chambery, 1682; p. 1773. He wrote, "Traité des Feux d'Artifice," "Elémens de Stéréotomie,"

FRISCH, John Leonard, freesh, a German naturalist and divine, who was the founder of the silk-manufactory at Brandenburg, and the first who cultivated mulberry-trees in Germany. has who cultivated numberly-trees in Germany, B. at Sulzbach, 1660; D. at Berlin, 1743. He was the author of "A German and Latin Dictionary," "A Description of German Insects," "Dictionarie Nouveau des Passages François-Allemand et Allemand-François," Svo, &c.

FRISCHLIN, Nicodemus, freesh-len, a distinguished German critic and poet, especially Frisi Frontinus famous for his satirical effusions, was educated by his father, who was a clergyman, cated by his latter, who was a chergyman, at Tubingen, and made such progress, that at the age of thirteen he could write Greek and Latin poctry with elegance. When twenty, he was appointed a professor at Tubingen; and, in was appointed a professor at Intologen; and, in 1530, published an oration in praise of country life, together with a paraphrase of Virgil's "Georgies" and "Eclogues." Having in this work inveighed against courtiers, the satire was felt and resented, and, his life being in danger, he fled to Laybach, in Carniola, where he opened a school, but was compelled to return home in consequence of the insalubrity of the climate. He subsequently lived at Frankfort, and in Saxony and Brunswick; but after making an unsuccessful application to the Prince of Wurtemberg for assistance, he was confined in Wurtemberg eastle, in making an attempt to escape from which, he fell down a steep precipice, the ropes he used having broken, and was dashed to pieces, Nov. 29, 1590. n. in Suabia, 1547. His works, of which he left a great many, consting of tracedies, comedies, orations, criticisms, translations of Greek and Latin authors with notes, grammars, &c., were published in 4 vols. 8vo, between 1598 and 1607.

Frist, Paul, fre'-se, a Milaneso mathematician and philosopher, who obtained the professorial chair of several colleges, and, in 1757, was elected a fellow of the Royal Society of London. He was also a member of several continental learned societies, and published many useful trentises on astronomy, electricity, hydraulies, and other scientific subjects. B. at Milan, 1728:

D. there, 1784.

FRITH, or FRYTH, John, frith, a Protestant Martyr, who was educated at King's College. Cambridge. Through his acquaintance with Tyndale, he embraced the principles of the Reformation, for which he was imprisoned. In 1528 he obtained his liberty, and went abroad. On his return, he zealously promoted the Re-formed doctrines, for which he was burned in Smithfield, in 1533. B. at Sevenoaks, Kent. He wrote several books against popery, collected into 1 vol. folio. PRITH, William Powell, R.A., an eminent modern English painter, studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, and, in 1839, began to exhibit on its walls. Until 1844, his efforts were generally confined to representations from Shakspeare, Sterne, Goldsmith, and Scott; but in that year he produced his "Interview between John Knox and Mary Queen of Scots, respecting the marriage with Darnley." In this effort he was not considered so successful as he had been in the subjects to which he had preand been in the students to which he had pra-viously mostly confined himself. He therefore returned to his former walk, and, in 1815, pro-duced his "Village Pastor," which obtained his election as an associate of the academy. His next greatest painting was "An English Merry-making One Hundred Years ago, which is electional a specific work. This was first ex-ectional a specific work. This was first exesteemed a superior work. Am was mas ea-hibited in 1846. From that time he kept him-self continually before the eye of the public; and, in 1852, exhibited his "Life at the Sea-side," which had the honour of being bought by her Majesty. In this year he was cletted an R.A. In 1855 appeared "Maria tricks Malvollo," and, in 1856, "Many Happy Returns of the Day." His most successful picture, however, was that of "The Derby Day," which may be said to have been the most popular painting in the exhibition of 1858. This was followed by the "Railway Station," and other works illustrative of modern life and manners in England. The style of Mr. Frith is equal, whilst his touch is light and graceful. All his per-formances are finished with the greatest care. B. in Yorkshire, 1819.

FROBENIUS OF FROBEN, John, fro'-be-ne-us, a German printer, who lived at Bâle, and was greatly esteemed by Erasmus, whose works he printed, as he also did those of Augustine and Jerome. D. 1527.

FRODISHER, Sir Martin, fro-bish-or, an enterprising English navigator and naval hero, bred early to the sca. The discovery of a northwest passage to India was an object which constantly exercised his thoughts; and after applying to several merchants to engage in the enterprise, he obtained the patronage of the earl of Warwick and other noblemen, who enabled him to fit out three small vessels, with which, in 1576, he sailed from Deptford. After exploring different parts of the Arctic coast, he entered the strait which bears his name, and then returned to England, bringing with him some black ore, which is said to have contained gold. In consequence of this, he was, in 1577, sent out again to search for ore, with a quantity of which he returned. A third voyage was undertaken the following year, with a number of ships to bring home the riches supposed to exist in the newly-discovered countries; but, on the return of the expedition, it was discovered that the precious metals had no existence where they had been sought. Between that year and 1585, we have no intelligence as to the employment of Frobisher; but in this year we find that he served under Drake in the West Indies, and in 1588 had a share in the defeat of the Spanish armada. The same year he was knighted. n. at Donester, Yorkshire; killed in assaulting a fort near Brest, in 1594. An account of his voyage was printed in Hakluyt's collection. Some articles left by him in the Arctic regions were discovered by an exploring party in 1962, in tolerable preservation, the traditions of the natives clearly indicating Sir Martin as the navigator who had left them.

FROLLA I., or FRUELA, fro'-e-la, king of Spain, son of Alphonso I., began his reign in 757. In 780 he obtained a victory over the Saracens of Collain but he guiled his heartin Galicia, but he sullied his character by the murder of his brother Samaran. This was avenged by another brother, Aurelius, who slew Froila in 768.

FROILA II. succeeded his brother Ordono in 923. He was a cruel prince, and his tyranny caused the province of Castile to revolt against him, when he was deposed. D, of a leprosy in

925.

FROISSART, John, frwois-sart, a celebrated French historian and poet, who wrote a work which he called a "Chronicle," and wherein are maranted the transactions of France, Spain, and England, from 1320 to 1430. The best edition, as it is the latest, is that of M. Buchon, pullished in Paris, 1834. It is esteemed an authority on the subject of which it treats. n. at Valenciennes about 1337; D. about 1410. Froissart, though an ecclesiastic, was given to galety. His Chronicle was translated into old English by Lord Berners, and afterwards by Mr. Thomas Johnes.

FRONTINUS, Sextus Julius, fron-ti'-nus, a celebrated geometrician, who made himself known by the books he wrote on aqueducts and strataems of war, dedicated to Trajan. Lived in the gens of war, we have let century a.D. Front of a Roman orator, who was preceptor to Lucius Verus and the latter appointed him consul, and erected a statue in his honour.

426

FROST, William Edward, A.R.A., Frost, com-menced his studies as an artist at Sass's aca-demy, Bloomsbury, London, and thence entered the Royal Academy, where he completed them. In 1839 he carried off the gold medal by his picture of "Prometheus bound by Force and Strength." In 1843 he entered the lists of the cartoon competition, and exhibited his "Una alarmed by the Fauns and Satyrs," and obtained by it one of the premiums of £100. In 1843 he also exhibited his "Christ Crowned with also exhibited his "Christ Crowned with Thorns," which attracted marked attention. From this period he continued to produce many beautiful pictures, when, in 1846, he painted his "Diana surprised by Actson," which procured him the dignity of A.R.A. In the course of the following year his "Una and the Wood-Nymphs" appeared, and was purchased by Queen Vic-toria. His merits had now become well known, when, year after year, he continued to issue some fine conception, which eminently displayed the many graces of his pencil. z. at

Wandsworth, Surrey, 1810.

FROWDE, Philip, froud, an English poet, where Latin cfinsions in the "Muse Anglicane" are elegant. He also wrote two tragedies, the "Fall of Saguntum," and "Philotas."

D. 1738.

D. 1783.
FRINGENTIS, St., froe-men'-tis, the first who preached the gospel in Zhihopia, of which country he was ordained bishop by St. Athanastas in 331. n. at Tyre, n. about 25. TRY, Mrs. Elizabeth, fri, was the third daughter of John Gurney, Esq., of Earlhan Hall, near Norwith, and belonged to the Sodety of Friends. In 1800 she became the wife of Mr. Joseph Fry, a London merchant, and in 1810 a preacher among the Friends. In 1813 she visited the prisoners in Newyate, and by her beneficence and judicious conduct active effected great improvements in the condition of the miserable objects who there came under her notice. In 1817 she was so far successful in her philanthropical projects as to succeed in esta-blishing a ladies' committee for the improvement of the condition of the female prisoners in Newgate, and by energy and perseverance had the gratification of converting a sink of iniquity into an abode of order and sobriety. A school and a manufactory were instituted within the walls of that dreary abode of sorrow, and comwants of that dreary about of sorrow, and com-parative happiness took the place of miscry. She was examined before the House of Com-mons on her plans of prison discipline; and, proceeding from one step to another, next turned her attention to the reformation of the characters of convicts. From 1833 to 1836 she Guensey, and between 1837 and 1842 visited many of the principal towns of the continent, with the view of improving the system of prison discipline. B. near Norwich, 1780: D. at Ramsgate, 1845.

FRYRELL, Anders, fruxe'-el, a distinguished Swedish historian, who was reared for the church, but devoted much of his time to the cultivation of literature. After producing an opera, he commenced his career, in 1823, as an historian, by the publication of a work entitled historian, by the publication of a work entitled "Narratives from Swedish History," upon a plan similar to that seen in "Tales of a Grand-lather," by Sir Walter Foott. From that period he continued to occupy a high place in the literature of Sweden, and greatly extended the plan of the above work. His views of the position of the aristocracy of his country, however, led him into controversy, although it did not withdraw him from his historical studies. He is known to English waders we a translation. is known to English readers by a translation. made by Mrs. Mary Howitt, of two volumes of his extended "Narratives," published in 1844. his extended "Narratives," published in 1844. B. at Hesselskog, in Dalsland, 1795.

FUCHS, Leonard, fooks, a German physician and botanist, who received the honour of knight-hood from Charles V. of Spain. His greatest work is "Historia Plantarum," printed at Bâle in 1542. He also wrote several medical books.

E. in Bavaria, 1501; D. 1566.

FURSSLI, John Caspar, foos'-se-le, an ingenious Swiss artist and author, who wrote a History of the Artists of Switzerland, or Lives of the Helvetic Painters," which is considered an excellent work. D. at Zurich, 1706; D. 1781.—His son, John Caspar, an eminent

D. 1731.—118 Son, John Caspar, an eminent entomologist, resided at Leipsic, where he pub-lished some valuable works on entomology. B. at Zurich, 1745; D. 1756. Fucer, Frederick Henry, foo'ger, an emi-nent German painter, who first studied his act in the Dresden Academy; but, proceeding to Vienna, discovered such talents as to induce his Patrons to send him as an imperial pensioner to Rome. Here he stadied eight years, when he visited Naples, and painted a series of frescoes in the library of Queen Caroline at Coserta, 1734 he was recalled to Vienna, where he became professor in, and vice-director of, the academy. He was distinguished, not only as a fresco, but also as an oil and miniature painter. freeco, but also as an oil and ministure painter.
Some of his pictures consisted of subjects taken from the mythology of Homer; others from Roman history; and he made twenty illustrations of the "Messiah" of Klopstock. Many of his works have been engraved by Gennan artists. n. at Helbron, Wartemberg, 1751; D. at Vienna, 1818.

D. at vienna, 1010.
Fugger, food-ger, the name of a rich and illustrious family of Suabia, descended from a weaver, who originally lived in the environs of Augsburg, about 1300. They were at first successful in selling cloths, but afterwards extended their dealings, and became merchants, accumulating an immense fortune. Reaching the height of their affluence, at the commencement of the 16th century, they rendered considerable of the 18th century, they rendered considerable services to the emperors Charles V. and Maxi-milian, by making them large advances. These princes bestowed titles of nobility on the Fugger family, and they soon became connected with the best blood of Germany. Promotel to the highest dignities of the empire, they did not any the more neglect the pursuit of commerce. Their riches were always forthcoming for the improvement of their birthplace, Augsburg, where they creeted some handsome monuments, and founded some philanthropical institutions. The best known of them are the three brothers, Ulric, James, and George; and, afterwards, Raymond and Antony, both sons of George, Antony received, for his loans to Charles V., the countship of Kirchberg and the seignory of Weissenhorn, which afterwards remained in he possession of his family. He was a great encourager of learning.—Antony and Raymond to have had so strong a memory as to have been bore, to a great extent, the expenses of the able to tell, in their exact order, the names of expedition of Charles V. against Algeria, ob. the signs then placed over every tradesmant's taining from him the permission to coin money. One day, at an interview with the emperor, Antony, as a mark of his regard and esteem, threw into the fire all the title-deeds and securities which Charles had deposited with him. Several of this family still exist, and Augsburg owes its position on the continent, as a financial centre, to the energy and talent of the Fuggers.

Fulbert Fulvius

FULBERT, fool-bair, a French bishop, but a native of Italy, and a pupil of Pope Sylvester II. On going to France as a public lecturer, he gained a great reputation, and, in 1007, was presented with the bishopric of Chartres. He was zealous against Berengarius on the Eucharist, and introduced the worship of the Virgin into France. He was one of the most learned men of his time, and his works are extant. n. 1028 .- (For FULBERT, a canon at Paris, see

ABELARD.)

Fudd, Charles Frederick, ful-di, an ingenious Lutheran divine, who wrote a "Dictionary of German Roots," "An Inquiry i.t.o Language," "On the Origin of the Goths," "On the Cimbri," "On the Delties of the Germans," and "A Chart of History." He was also an excellent mechanic. B. at Wimpfen, Sualia, 1724; p. 1788.

FULKE, William, foolk, an English divine, who was made master of Pembroke Hall, and, who was made master of Pennoroke Fran, and, subsequently, Margaret professor of divinity. B. in London; p. 1589. Of his works the most noted is his "Commentary upon the Rhenish Translation of the New Testament," printed in 1580.

FULLER, Nicholas, fool'-ler, a learned divine, who obtained a prebend in the church of Salisbury, and the living of Bishop's Waltham, in Hampshire. B. at Southampton, 1557; B. 1622. His "Miscellanca Theologica," printed at Oxford in 1616, is a valuable body of sacred criticism.

FULLER, Thomas, an eminent English historian and divine, who was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge. In 1631 he was chosen College, Cambridge. It loss he was chosen fellow of Sidney College, and, after fulfilling his clerical duties in several places, obtained a prebend of Salisbary. He was also presented to the rectory of Broad Windsor, in Dorsetshire, thence removed to London, and became lecturer at the Savoy. During the civil war he adhered to the royal cause, and became chaplain to Lord Hopton, who left him at Basing House, which was shortly after besieged by Sir William Waller; but the garrison, being suszined by the courage of Fuller, made so vigorous a re-sistance, that Waller was obliged to retire. On the ruin of the king's affairs, he was chosen lecturer of St. Bride's, Fleet-street. About 1648 he obtained the rectory of Waltham, in Essex; and between that time and the Restoration, published a number of books, the principal of which is "The Church History of Britain," folio. At the Restoration he was made chap-door, after one walk between Temple Bar and the Royal Exchange.

FULLER, Sarah Margaret, countess of Ossoli.

(See Ossoli.)

FULLER, Isaac, an English painter in the reign of Charles II. He painted the "Resurrection" at All Souls' College, Oxford; another at Magdalen College, and a picture at Wadham College, which is the best. He studied in France under Pertier. p. in 1672.

Fulton, Robert, fool-ton, an American mechanician and engineer, whose name is inti-mately associated with the improvement of steam navigation. In his eighteenth year he entered, in Philadelphia, upon the duties of life as a painter of landscapes and portraits for sub-sistence; but in 1786 he visited England, where West, the historical painter, took him by the hand, and for some years kept him in his house, His genius, however, seems to have been less directed to the beautiful in art than the mechanical in science. Accordingly, on quitting the house of Mr. West, he sought the acquaintance of the duke of Devonshire, then engaged with his canals, and in 1794 look out a patent for an inclined plane, designed to set aside the use of locks. He also invented an excavating-machine, a mill for sawing marble, and took out patents for making ropes and spinning flax. With all these projects, however, he seems to have met with little success, when he went to Paris, where he resided seven years under the roof of Mr. Barlow, the representative of the United States government. Here he directed his atten-tion to other pursuits, but still of a mechanical kind, when, after some experiments made with small steamboats on the Seine, and another visit to England, he proceeded to America, where, in 1807, he commenced the construction of a steam-vessel, with which he succeeded in navigating the Hudson river. His fame was now established: but he did not live to reap the reward which his perseverance deserved. 'B. at Little Britain, Pennsylvania, 1765; D. at New York, 1815.

Fulvia, ful'-ve-a, an ambitious woman of rouvily juc-need, an annurous woman or Rome, who, after being twice married, became the wife of Mark Antony. When Cicero's head had been cut off by order of Antony, she ordered it to be brought to her, and, with the greatest barbarity, bored the orator's tongue with her golden bolkin. Antony divorced her to marry Cleopatra; upon which she attempted to per-suade Augustus to take up arms against her husband. When this scheme did not succeed, she retired into the East, where Antony received her with great coldness. This totally broke her heart, and she soon after died, about 40 B.C. (See ANTONY.)-A woman who discovered to Cicero the designs of Catiline and his brother conspirators.

FULVIUS, ful'-ve-us, a name common to some eminent Romans, the most remarkable of whom folio. At the Restoration he was made chap-lain-extraordinary to the king, restored to his was a senator, intimate with Augustus. He prebend, and created D.D. a. at Aldwinkle, Misclosed the emperor's secrets to his wife, who Northamptonshire, 1608; p. 1663. Besides the made them public to all the Roman matrons; above, he wrote the quaint but valuable work, and for this he received so severe a reprimand "The Worthies of England," in folio; "The from Augustus, that he and his wife hanged History of the Holy War," folio; "The Holy themselves in despair.—Servius Fulvius Nobi-State," folio; "Pisgab-sight of Palestine," liot, a Roman consul, who went to Africa after folio; "Abel Redivivus, or Lives of Eminent inc defeat of Regulus. He was successful in se-Divines," 4to; sermens and tracts, He is said shipwrecked on his return with 200 Roman FURETIERE, Anthony, foo-ret'-e-air, a learned Frenchman, who deserted the legal profession and became abbot of Chalivoy and prior of Chuines. In 1622 he was admitted to the French Academy, but twenty-three years afterwards was expelled, upon the charge of having unfairly profited by the common labour of the Encyclopædists to compile the dictionary which Encyclopacists to complie the dictional, which bears his name. This was printed in 1690, in 2 vols, folio. B. at Paris, 1620; D. 1688.

Furius, Bibaculus M., fu-ro-us, a Latin poet of Cremona, who wrote annals in Iambie verse, and was universally celebrated for the wit and humour of his expressions. It is said that Virgil minimated his poetry, and even borrowed some of his lines. Horace, however, has ridicaled his verses. Lived in the 1st century n.c. Furnius, fur-ne-us, a friend of Horace, who was count, and distinguished himself by his elegant historical writings.

elegant historical writings.
Fürst, Walter, foorst, one of the founders of Swiss freedom and independence. Heading some brave men, he took and destroyed several forts belonging to the Aestrians; which was the first step, in 1307, to the restoration of Switzerland as an independent nation. (See Tell and

MELCHTHAL.)

Fusent, or Fuesset, Honry, foos'-se-le, the econd son of John Caspar Fuessli, author of "Lives of the Helvetic Painters," was educated for the church, and, in 1761, entered into holy orders. Having written, in conjunction with Lavater, a pamphlet reflecting on the conduct of a magistrate, it was deemed politic that he should leave his country; when, being furnished with letters of introduction from the British minister in Prussia, he visited England, where, for some time, he supported himself by translating works from the German, French and Italian, into English. Gaining the acquaint-ance of Sir Joshua Reynolds, he showed some of his drawings to that distinguished artist, who recommended him to devote himself entirely to painting. This recommendation was not lost upon him, and, in 1770, he visited Italy and changed his name into Fuseli, which he ever afterwards retained. After an absence of eight years, he returned, and, with other artists, was engaged by Alderman Boydell to assist in forming his Shakspeare Gallery. He also employed himself in edding the work of Lavater on Physiognomy, and assisted Cowner, who was then translating Homer, with some remarks and He subsequently became an assocorrections. ciate of the Royal Academy, and, in 1790, was chosen a royal academician. In 1799 he supeffects a royal extensional. In 1700 fit etip-phed some pictures towards the formation of a Mitton Gallery; but the idea did not take with the public. In the sumo year he became pro-fessor of painting to the Royal Academy, and, in 1803, keeper. Meanwhile, he did not he-gleet his literary pursuits. In 1805 he didled Pil-lington's "Uses of the Painters," and subsequently was elected a member of the first class in the academy of St. Luke's at Rome. B. at Zurich, 1741; D. in London, 1825, and was buried in the crypt of St. Paul's. Fusr. (See Fausr.)

ciation, it is sounded as g in go.] 429

Gabbiani, Antony Dominie, gab'-be-aw'-ne, an Italian painter of considerable merit, was patronized by Cosmo III., Duke of Florence, who sent him to study at Rome. After his return to Florence he executed several pictures for the churches and palaces of that city, his finest works being the "Assumption," and the celebrated picture of "St. Filippo," in the church of the Oratorio. He was killed by a fall from a scaffold, while engaged in painting the cupola of Castello in 1726. B. at Florence in 1652. Gabinus, gü-bin'-e-us, a Roman consul, who made war in Judea, and re-established tran-quillity there. He suffered himself to be bribed, and replaced Ptolemy Auletes on the throne of Egypt. On his return, he was accused of receiving bribes. Cicero, at the request of Pompey, ably defended him. He was banished. however, and D. at Salona, about 48 D.C.

GABRIEL SIGNITA, ya'-bre-el, a learned Maro-nite, and professor of the oriental languages at Rome and Paris, at which last place he died in 1648. He assisted Le Jay in his Polyglot Bible. and published a translation of the Arabic geography, with the title of "Geographia Nubiensis," 1619, 4to. p. 1577; p. 1618.

GABRIELLI, Caterina, gab'-re-ail-le, a celebrated vocalist, who, after acquiring greatfame in Italy, went to Bussia in 1772, and ranked high in court favour. She visited England in 1775, and Dr. Burney says that when "she was on the stage she filled the attention of the spectators so much that they could look at nothing else while she was in view." She subsequently went to Venice, and in 1780 to Milan.

where she shared the public favour with Mar-chesi. n. at Rome, 1730; p. 1793. Gacox, Francis, gat-kawaa, a French satirist, who attacked, in his writings, Bossuct, Ronsseau, and Lamotte. He became a priest of the Oratory, and gained the prize of the academy for poetry in 1717. B. at Lyons, 1667; D. at his priory of Baillon, in 1725.

Gadurax, John gud'-bur'e, an astrologer, who attracted much attention towards the end of the 17th century. He had originally been a tailor, was afterwards assistant to Lully, the fortune-teller, and, like his master, published almanacks and prognostications. He was apprehended on suspicion of being an accomplice of Titus Oates, but was afterwards liberated.

of Titus Cates, but was afterwards liberated. If dided on his way to Barbadoes; but the date is uncertain. n. 1627; p. 1692.
GARKENER, Joseph, gairt ner, an eminent German naturalist, who, though destined for the church, applied himself to the study of medicine. He travelled through several parts of Europe, and in 1759 went to Leyden, where he attended the botanical lectures, and applied himself to vegetable anatomy. He subsequently visited England, and communicated some interesting papers to the "Philosophical Transactions," the principal of which is a "Momoir on the Fractification and Propagation of Conferve," &c. Here he gained the friendship of some of the most eminent men of the age, and was made F.R.S. In 1768 he went to St. Petersburg, and was there appointed professor of botany and natural history. After filling that position with great credit, and exploring the Ukraine, making botanical discoveries, he returned to his native land in 1770. In 1778 he [Where g is used in the explanatory pronun-descriptions of fruits, to illustrate his "Carpology," the first volume of which he dedicated to Sir Joseph Banks. B. at Caln, Wurtemberg, 1732; p. in London, 1791. He left a number of valuable MSS.

GAGE, General Thomas, gaij, the commanderin-chief of the British troops in North America, and the last governor of Massachusetts for the English crown. Shut up in Boston after the battle of Lexington, Gage, whom Congress had declared a public enemy, caused martial law to be proclaimed. After the affair at Bunker's Hill, he was forced to embark for England, where he died in 1787.

GAGNIER, John, gal-ne-ai, a learned French orientalist, who, bred a Roman Catholic, embraced Protestantism, and settled in England. He was patronized by many eminent persons, and received the degree of M.A. at Cambridge and Oxford. In 1706 he published an edition and Oxford. In 1760 he published a central of Ben Gorion's "History of the Jews," in Hebrew, with a Latin translation and notes, In 1723 he edited Abulfeda's "Life of Mohammed," in Arabie, with a Latin translation and notes, folio. He succeeded Dr. Wallis in the Arabic professorship at Oxford. B. at Paris, about 1670; D. 1740.

GAILLARD DE LONGUMEAU, gail-lar, bishop of Apt, in Provence, employed his almoner, Moreri, to execute a Universal Historical Dic-tionary, the plan of such a work having been first conceived by him. D. 1605.

Garllard, John Ernest, a musical composer of some merit, who accompanied Prince George of Denmark to England, and became chapel master to the queen dowager Catharine, the relict of Charles II. at Somerset House. He studied English with considerable success, and composed a jubilate, three anthems, and a Te Deum, which were performed at the chapel-royal and at St. Paul's on thanksgivings for victories. He also wrote music, operas, and pantomimes for the theatre in Lincoln's-inn-fields, one of his latest works in this line being the music to the "Royal Chace, or Merlin's Cave," in which occurs the famous song, "With early which occurs the famous song, "With early horns," B. at Zell, 1637; D. 1749. GAIMAS, gal'4-ing, a Goth, who became a general in the Roman army under Arcadius,

He put Eutropius, the favourite of that emperor, to death, also the prefect Rufinus. Causing himself to be named commander of the cavalry and Roman infantry, he governed the weak Arcadius. At length declared an enemy of the state, he took up arms, was defeated, and perished by the hands of the Huns, with whom he had sought an asylum, A.D. 400.

GAINSBOROUGH, Thomas, an eminent selftaught English landscape-painter, whose early studies were pursued in the woods and fields of Suffolk, rather than in the senoois or are. There, from his earliest years, he began to copy rather than in the schools of art. a stile, a rock, a tree, or any object which struck his fancy; so that by the time he had attained the age of fourteen, he had ventured upon the art of colouring, and was sent to London. Here he commenced portrait-painting; a path in which he acquired such eminence as to enable him, in his nineteenth year, to marry a young lady who had a fortune of £200 per annum. About 1745 he went to Ipswich, thence to Bath in 1760; and, in 1774, to London again. He painted some of the portraits of the royal figurity, and was one of the thirty-six members chosen at the foundation of the Royal Academy. But however he may have excelled in portraits, his landscapes that his fame rests. he is said to have united the brilliancy of Claude with the simplicity of Ruysdeel. In both portrait and landscape he has been ranked with Rubens, Vandyck, and Claude; but, however this may be, the great originality of his genius is indisputable. "If ever this nation," says Sir Joshua Reynolds, "should produce genius sufficient to acquire to us the honourable distinction of an English school, the name of Gains-borough will be transmitted to posterity as one

Sudbury, Suffolk, 1727; D. 1788.—His eldest brother was also a good artist; and another, who was a dissenting minister at Henley, in Oxfordshire, was an ingenious mechanic.

Galba, Servius Sulpicius, găl'-ba, a Roman, who, by unremitted diligence, rose gradually to the highest offices of the state. He dedicated the greatest part of his time to solitary pursuits, chiefly to avoid the suspicions of Nero, who, however, because Galba expressed disapprobation of his conduct, ordered him to be put to death. He however escaped the executioner, and was publicly saluted emperor. His conduct now greatly displeased the people; and when, after being raised to the throne, he refused to pay the soldiers the money which he had pro-mised them, they assassinated him, in 68. The mised them, they assassinated him, in 68. The popularity which had been lavished upon Galba popularity which had been lavished upon Gaios when a private man, totally disappeared when he ascended the throne. This, however, it is not difficult to understand. The simplicity of his habits, the incorruptibility of his character, and the austority of his life, had engendered council strike which decompted the propagated. frugal tastes which degenerated into avarice and parsimoniousness-characteristics little suited to luxurious voluptuaries such as the Romans in Galba's time had become. — There are many others of this name mentioned by ancient writers, but of inferior celebrity.

writers, but of inferior celebrity.

Glair, Thomas, guid, an English divine, who, in 1969, was chosen Grock professor at Cambridge, and in 1672 master of St. Paul's school. He was a member of the Royal Society, of which he became one of the honorary secretaries, and in 1697 was promoted to the deanery of York.
He published a collection of the Greek mytholocide. "Ultrigue Dection William Survivasa" gists, "Historiæ Poeticæ Antiqui Scriptores Græcæ et Latinæ," "Jamblichus de Mysteriis," "Herodoti Halicarnassensis Historiarum," an edition of Cicero, "Historiae Anglicanae Scrip-tores," "Historiae Britannicae, Saxonicae, Antores, "Historia Britannica, Saxonica, An-glo-Danica," a volume of sermons, "Antonini Iter Britanniarum," &c. B. at Seruton, York-shire, 1636; D. at York, 1702.

GALE, Roger, the eldest son of the above, sat in Parliament for Northallerton, and became the first vice-president of the Society of Antiquaries, and treasurer to the Royal Society. and treasure to the hoyar Society. B. 1672; b. 1744. He published some valuable books, the principal of which was an edition of his father's "Commentary on Antoninus."—Samuel, his brother, was also eminent for his knowledge of antiquities. n. 1682; p. 1754.

Galen, Bernard van, ga'-len, a warlike bishop of Munster, who was originally in the service of the elector of Cologne, and theu took orders and became prince-bishop of Munster. The pope having refused to confirm his elevation, Galen resolved to secure his power by keeping up a garrison of soldiers devoted to his interests. was in vain that the citizens protested against this measure—the bishop adhered to his resoit has long ago been decided that it is upon lution, and hostilities were about to commence when the atlention of the warlike churchman when the attention of the warlike churchman was directed to a war against the Turks, in which he held an important command. In 1665 he attacked Holland, and although pacified on that occasion by the interference of France, he again, in 1672, formed a league against the Dutch, in concert with France and England; and subsequently, in conjunction with Denmark. engaged in a war against Sweden. B. 1605; D.

1678.

GALENUS CLAUDIUS (Galen), ga-le'-nus, a cele-Galerius (Galen), gale nie nie, a cele-brated Greek physician, who visited the most learned seminaries of Grocce and Egypt, and at last went to Rome, where he rendered himself famous by his profession. Many, astonished at his cures, attributed them to magic. He was very intimate with Marcus Aurelius, the conperor, who entrusted him with the care of his son Commodus. B. at Pergamos about 130; D. about 200. It is said that he wrote 300 volumes, the greatest number of which were burnt in the Temple of Peace at Rome, where they had been deposited. Galen was second only in merit as a physician to Hippocrates; and to these two medical philosophers of the ancients the moderns are indebted for many useful discoveries.

useful discoveries. G. Valerius Maximianus, gå-lø-ga-test, a Roman emperor, was a herdsman of Dacia, and entering the army as a private sol-dier, became, by his valour, a general. Diccle-tian gave him his daughter in marriage, and in 292 adopted him and Chlorus as his successors. In 296 he commanded in Mesopotamia, where he was, at first, defeated by Narses, king of Persia, but soon retrieved his reputation by a great victory. He instigated Diocletian to persecute the Christians, and on his abdication, in 305, Galerius rose to supreme power. At the close of his life he desisted from persecuting the Christians, and requested their prayers. D. 311.

GALGAOUS, gal-guested their prayers. D. 311.
GALGAOUS, gal-guested with uncommon valour the Romans under the command of Agricola. After Romans under the command of Agricola. After several skirmishes, the two armies, in 84, came to a pitched battle, in which Galgaeus was de-feated with prodigious loss, dying on the field. Tactus puts in his mouth a noble speech made Taccus pass in in mount a none speech made to his troops previous to the battle.

GALTANT, Ferdinando, gall-e-aw'-ne, an Italian antiquary and writer, whose principal work, on money, "Della Moneta," was published in 1750. He was one of the first to discover the archeological riches of Herculaneum. In 1759 he was appointed by the king of Naples secre-tary to the French embassy; and, during his residence at Paris, his company was universally courted. He wrote there "Dialogues on the Corn-trade," which, from the strength of their argument and pleasant style, excited considerable notice, though anonymous. In 1779 he returned to Naples, where he filled many high offices of state. Besides the above works, he wrote a." Commentary on Horace," a treatise on the "Natural Duties of Princes to Belligerent Powers," &c. B. at Chieti, Abruzzo, 1728; D. at Naples, 1787. It is said of Galiani, that he presented to Pope Benedict XIV. a collection of Naples, 1707.

Sented to Fope Benedict XIV. a collection of stones found about Vesuvius: and accompanied discovery about the pendulum to clock work. The stones found about Vesuvius: and accompanied discovery about the pendulum to clock work. The them with the inscription—"Peatissine part, father of Galille wrote some esteemed works on music. The pendulum to the control of the co

Galiler, Galileo, ga-leel'-ai-e, commonly called gal'-i-le'-o, a distinguished Italian astronomer, who may be said to have been the founder of experimental science. He was intended for the medical profession; but, having a strong predilection for the exact sciences, at the age of 25 he became mathematical professor the age of 26 in obscime mathematical processor at Plsa, whence, in 1052, he removed to Padua, His first discovery was the equality of the periods of vibration of a pendulum held by a fixed point; and, subsequently, he invented an imperfect kind of thermometer, which seems to have answered his purposes. In 1909, having heard that Amean had invended a gless by which heard that Amean had invended a gless by which objects at a distance were rendered as visible as if near, he directed his attention to the subject and constructed the Galilean telescope, by which the science of astronomy has been brought to the utmost perfection. His first instrument was resented to the doge of Venice, who confirmed is professorship for life in the university of Padua, with the largest salary which had ever radia, with the largest same which had ever been there given to a mathematical profes-sor. By this noble instrument he found that the Via Lactac is an assemblage of fixed stars; and, by assiduous application of his invention, made many other important discoveries in the heavens. His assertion, however, of the earth's motion gave such offence to the inquisitors, that, in 1615, he was cited to Rome, and required to deny what he had before asserted, that the sun is the centre of our system, and that the earth is merely a planet having a diurnal revolution upon its own axis, and an annual re-volution round the sun. In 1632 he published at Florence his "Dialogues on the Ptolemaic and Copernican Systems of the World," for which he was cited to Rome; his book ordered to be publicly burnt; the author sentenced to be imprisoned, to make a recantation of his errors, prisoned to make a recamciation of his errors, and, by way of penance, to recite the seven penitential psalms once a week. A portion of the abjuration of this great man we here transcribe, to show to what extent he was forced by inquisitorial power to deny the truth of the by inquisitorial power to deny the truth of the great principles which, through the compre-hensive grasp of his own mind, had brought conviction to himself. "With a sincere heart and unfeigmed faith, I abjure, curse, and detest the said errors and heresics [namely, that the earth mover round the man, &c.]. I swear that, for the future, I will never say or assert any-thing, verbally or in writing, which may give rise to a similar suspicion against me." Rising from his knees after this solemn act, he is said to have whispered to a friend, "It moves, for all that." Galileo now obtained his liberty, all that." Galileo now obtained ins inerty, and retired to his house near Florence, where he continued his observations till he became beind by internet application. D. at Pisa, 1564; D. near Florence, 1642. His principal works are, "The operations of the Compass," "On the Swimming of Bodies," "Muchai Respective of the Swimming of Bodies," "Muchain Sidereus," "On the Treplation of the Moon," "Discourse of the Solar Spots," "Muchamatical Discourses and Demonstration," "Treadings" "The Spots of the Solar Spots," "Michematical Discourses and Demonstration," "Treadings" "The Spots of the Solar Spots," "Michematical Discourses and Demonstration," "Treadings" "The Spots of the Solar Spots," "Michematical Discourses and Demonstration," "Treadings" "The Spots of the Solar Spots," "Michematical Discourses and Demonstration," "Treadings" "The Spots of the Solar Spots," "Michematical Discourses and Demonstration," "The Spots of the Spots Discourses and Demonstrations," "Treatise on the Mundane System."—His son, Vincenzo Galilei, was the first who applied his father's to dignities by merit. He was in great favou with the regent, Princess Sophia, sister of the czars Peter I. and Ivan, and, during her regency, possessed supreme power. The intrigues of possessed supreme power. The intrigates of the regent, however, against her brother Peter being discovered, she was confined in a monastery, and Galitzin exiled. B. 1633; D. 1713.

Galitzin Gama

GALITZIN, Michael Michaelovich, of the same family as the above, served under Peter the Great, both by land and sea. In 1725 he was made field-marshal, and afterwards president of the College of War. B. 1674; D. 1730.

GALL, Francis Joseph, gault, a distinguished German physician, who founded the science of phrenology, by which the talents and tendencies of the mind are affirmed to be manifested cies of the mind are affirmed to be manifested by certain external developments evinced on the surface of the cranium. He settled in Vienna, and afterwards travelled through the north of Germany, Sweden, and Denmark, lecturing upon his system. In 1807 he established himself in Paris, as being the best centre for the dissemination of his opinious, and became physician to Prince Metternich. In 1810 that nobleman guaranteed the expense of publishing that have been desired upon the following the control of the property of th the phrenological work of Gall and Spurzheim, B. at Leifenbrunn, Wurtemberg, 1758; D. at Paris, 1828.

Galland, Anthony, gal-la, a learned French writer, who was sent by the French minister Colbert to the East, and on his return to France was made a member of the Academy of Inscriptions, and professor of Arabic in the Royal College of Paris. He wrote several dis-sertations on Greek and Roman medals, and other archeological matters; but the work by which he is best known is the translation from the Arabic of the "Arabian Nights' Entertainments." B. in Picardy, 1616; D. at Paris, 1715.

Gallienus, Publius Lucinius, gal'-li-e'-nus, son of the emperor Valerian, reigned conjointly with his father for seven years, and ascended the throne as sole emperor 260 A.D. In his youth, he evinced military genius in an expedition against the Germans and Sarmatæ; but when he came to the throne, resigned himself to pleasure and indolence. His time was self to pleasure and indolence. His time was spent in the greatest debauchery; and two of his officers at length revolted, and assumed the imperial purple. This roused him, and he marched against them, without showing the least favour either to rank, sex, or age, putting all to the sword. These cruelties irritated the people and the army; thirty of his generals, known as the Thirty Tyrants, assuming the purple. Gallienus resolved boldly to oppose his attractive, but it the wides of his yearons. adversaries: but in the midst of his preparations was assassinated at Milan by some of his officers, 263 A.D.

Gallus, gill-lus, a name common to many colobrated Romans, the most distinguished of whom are the following —Caius, a friend of Scipio Africanus, was famous for his knowledge of astronomy, and his exact calculations of of astronomy, and in seaso cardenous of eclipses.—Cornelius, a Roman knight, who rendered himself famous by his poetical as well as military talents. He was passionately fond of the slave Lycoris, or Cytheris, and celebrated her beauty in his poetry. She proved ungrateful, and forsook him, which gave occasion to till, zite forsook him, whited gave occasion was a finding of the heart of the heart, but was killed favourite with Augustus, by whom he was a defending his sourceign when exposed to liminappointed governor of Egypt; but he forgot the beneits he had received, pillaged the province, trious Fortugees navigator, to whom belongs and even conspired against his benefitor, for the merit of having discovered the route to the

which he was banished by the emperor. This disgrace operated so powerfully upon him, that he killed himself in despair, A.D. 26. Some few fragments remain of his poetry. He particularly excelled in elegiac composition.—Caius Vibius Trebonianus, who succeeded Metius Decius, slain by the Goths, 251. He became indo-lent and cruel, and beheld with the greatest indifference the revolt of his provinces, and the invasion of his empire by the barbarians. was at last assassinated by his soldiers, 253,-Flavius Claudius Constantius, a brother of the emperor Julian, raised to the imperial throne under the title of Casar, by Constantius, his relation. He conspired against his benefactor, and was condemned to be beheaded, 35 t.

and was concenned to be beneated, ob a. Garr, John, gaulf, a Scotchman, who began life as a tradesman in London, but commenced the study of the law, which he forsook for the literary profession. For some time he acted in the capacity of agent to a company for esta-blishing emigrants in Canada, but quarrelled with the government, and was suspended by the Canada company. On his return to England, he devoted himself to literature, and supported himself by the labours of a most prolific pen.
The bare enumeration of his works would occupy a considerable space; but the following criticism from the "Gentleman's Magazine" of 1839 will give an idea of his style, and the fields in which he worked:—"There is a thorough quaintness of phrase and dialogue in Mr. Galt's best works, which places him apart from all other Scotch novelists; much knowledge of life, variety of character, liveliness and humour, are displayed in his novels, and render them are displayed in his hovels, and render them justly popular. The public will not soon forget his 'Ayrshire Legates,' his 'Annals of the Parish,' or his 'Entail.' His biographies, and many of his later works manufactured for the booksellers, are of a very different character. B. in Ayrshire, Scotland, 1779; D. 1839.

GLIVANI, Aloysio, gal-raw-ne, the discoverer of galvanism, was a celebrated Italian physiologist, and, in 1762, became lecturer on anatomy at Bologna, obtaining a considerable reputation. By experiments on frogs, he discovered that all animals are endued with a peculiar kind of electricity; and he followed up this discovery with so much perseverance and success, as to give his name to certain electrical properties, which have excited universal attention. His

The famous Volta followed Galvani in his researches, and discovered further wonders in this branch of science. Galvani, on the death of his wife, in 1790, fell into a state of melancholy, and p. 1798; B. at Bologna, 1737. Besides the above work, he wrote several memoirs upon professional subjects.

GAM, David, gam, a brave Welsh officer in the army of Henry V., whom he accompanied to France. Having returned from recompiliting the enemy on the eve of the battle of Agin-court, he reported that there were enough of the enemy to be killed, enough to be taken prisoners, and enough to run away. He was knighted by Henry on the field, but was killed

East Indies by sea. In 1407 Emanuel, king of most eloquent men of Germany. No one could Portugal, sent him to endeavour to double the match him in controversy; he confounded the Cane of Good Hope, which he accomplished, most skillul of his opponents by his sercaems, and then sailed along the eastern coast of and was most ready to satirize those who held Africa, having proceeded as far as Calleut, the highest positions; and hence, probably, the where he arrived in May, 1498, and was received bitterness with which he was persecuted. He by the prince of that place with great pomp and ceremony. After an absence of two years, he returned to Lisbon, where he arrived in September, 1499. In 1502 he went out with twenty ships, and returned, the following year, with thirteen, which he had captured in the Indian seas. On this occasion he was created count of Vidiqueyra. In 1524 he was appointed, by John III., vicercy of Portuguese India, after the death of Albuquerque, and he sailed and took possession of his government, but did not long survive his honours after his arrival at his destination. B. at Sines, Portugal; D. at Cochin, 1525. Camou. Camoens celebrated his adventures in

GAMBIER, James, Lord, gum'-beer, a British admiral, who went to sea at an early age, and, admirat, who went to sea at an early age, and, in 1788, was appointed to the command of the Raleigh, 32. In this frigate he was engaged against the French in 1791, and assisted in the reduction of Charleston, S. Carolina. He was present at Lord Howe's memorable victory on the 1st of June, 1794, commanding the Defence, 74; and after filling various posts, was intrusted, in July, 1807, with the command of the flect despatched to Copenhagen. This city was bombarded for three days, when the enemy capitulated, and 19 sail of the line, 23 frigates and sloops, and 25 gunboats, were taken and conveyed to England. He was now created a baron, and, in 1808, had the command of the Channel feet. In 1809, Lord Cocharne (afterwards the earl of Dundonald), who was under Lord Gambier's orders, attacked and destroyed, with his fire-ships, several French vessels in the Basque Roads by the Isle d'Aix, and Lord Cochrane was desirous of completing the destruction of the remainder of the enemy's fleet, but the commander-in-chief did not consider the attempt practicable. A court-martial sat on the conduct of the latter, but he was acquitted. In 1814 he negotiated a peace with the United States of America, at Ghent; and, on the accession of William IV., was advanced to the rank sion of whilmin V, was advanced to the rains of admirtal of the flect. In at the Bahama Isles, of which his father was lieutonant-governor, 1766; p. at Iver, near Uxbridge, 1833, (Sze "Antobiography of Lord Dundonald," and "Life of Lord Gambler," by his daughter,) Gans, Edward, 90s, an emhent German Jurist, who, besides being a voluminous writer on legal questions, especially the historical features of the Roman code, enjoyed the reputation of being one of the best lecturers in Germany. He was appointed extraordinary pro-fessor at the university of Berlin in 1825, and some years afterwards attained to the position of ordinary professor in the same university. He visited France and England after the revolution in the former country in 1830, and becoming imbued with liberal ideas, lectured to immense audiences on themes connected with modern history, which drew upon him the dis-pleasure of the Prussian government, which subjected him to a good deal of annoyance, without, however, being able to silence him.

was of Jewish extraction, but embraced Christianity. His principal works are—"Scholia on Gaius's Roman Law;" "System of the Roman Civil Law;" "The Law of Succession, its Historical Development, and its importance for the History of the World." He also edited the works of Hegel. B. at Berlin, 1798; D. suddenly, from an attack of apoplexy, 1830.

Gandon, James, gan'-don, a distinguished English architect, who was a pupil of Sir William Chambers, and was the first to receive the architectural gold medal of the Royal Academy. He edited the "Vitruvius Britannicus," and afterwards went to Ireland, where he remained during the rest of his life. The Four Courts, the Royal Exchange, the Custom-house, the portico of the House of Lords, and other elegant structures in Dublin, were designed by him. He was a fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries and of the Irish Royal Academy. B. 1740; D. 1824.

GANDY, James, gan'-de, an English painter, the pupil of Yandyck, whose style he so successfully imitated that h's pictures are considered little inferior to those of his master. The great duke of Ormond took him to Ireland under his patronage, and Gandy there executed a variety of pieces which are in the Ormond collection, B. at Exeter, 1619; D. 1689.-His son, William Gandy, attained to considerable eminence as a portrait painter.

Gleanon, Claude, gar'-a-mawng, a French engraver and letter-founder, was the first who superseded Gothic or black-letter printing, substituting in its place the Roman character. B. at Paris: D. 1561.

Galasse, Francis, ga-rass', a French Jesuit of considerable talents, but very scurrilous in his writings against many of his contemporates. In 1625 he published "a Summary of the Principal Truths of the Christian Religion," which was condemned by the Sorbonne. He was also the author of Latin poems, and some controversial works. D. of the plague, which he caught at Poictiers, while visiting the sick in the hospitals, 1631; B. at Angoulème, 1585. GARGAM, Pedro Antonio Correa, gar-kam, a Portuguese lyric poet, who is held in the highest estimation by his countrymen. He clothed his odes in the language of the 16th century, and many of them breathe the finest spirit of poetry. His epistles and satires are considered among the best in modern literature, and several plays which he wrote are conceived in excellent taste. He laboured to improve the taste of his countrymen; but an early death prevented the accomplishment of what an earnest ambition might have achieved. B. at Lisbon, 1724; D. 1772.

GARCHASSO, OF GARCHASSO DE LA VEGA, gar'-the-las'-so, a poet, native of Peru, who accompanied the emperor Charles V. in his military expeditions, and died of a wound which he received in Provence in 1536. It is a strange circumstance, that this poet, whose verses told only of the delights of peace and the pleasures without, however, being able to silence him. of repose, should have lived the live and died the He was the friend of Hegel, Thibaut, and other death he did. His poems were translated into celebrated men of the time, and was regarded English by Wiffen. B. at Cazeo, Peru, 1503, as one of the most learned, most wive, and His works were printed at Naples in 1604, 8vo. Gardiner, Stephen, gar'-di-ner, a distinguished English prelate and statesman, the illegitimate son of Dr. Woodville, bishop of Salisbury, and brother to Elizabeth, queen of Edward IV. He was educated at Trinity Hall. Cambridge, whence he went into the family of the duke of Norfolk, and afterwards into that of Cardinal Wolsey, who made him his secretary. In 1527, in company with Edward Fox, he went to Rome for the purpose of persuading the pope to consent to the divorce of Queen Catharine by Henry VIII. Though unsuccessful in his mission, he greatly assisted Henry in the prosecuston, he greatly assisted from in the prosection of his design, and became secretary of state, and in 1531 bishop of Winchester. He wrote "De Verà Obedientia," in defence of the king's supremacy, and drew up articles accusing Henry's last queen, Catharine Parr, of heresy; but the queen avoided the storm, and he fell into disgrace. At the accession of Edward VI. he opposed the Reformation, and was committed first to the Fleet, and afterwards to the Tower, where he remained a prisoner during the remainder of the reign: he was also deprived of his bishopric; but, on the accession of Mary, he was restored to his see, and, in 1553, appointed lord chancellor and prime minister. He had a deep knowledge of human nature; but his conduct towards the Protestants was cruel and sanguinary. B. at Bury St. Edmund's, 1483; D. 1555. He was a learned man, but of little principle, crafty, and ambitious. Lloyd, in his "State Worthies," says that he was to be traced like the fox, and like Hebrew, was to be read backwards.

Gardiners, James, a British military officer, equally distinguished for his piety and for his bravery, entered the Dutch service at the age of 14 as an ensign, after which he obtained rank in the English army, and was present at the beatile of Ramiltos, where he was wounded, in 1730, he had risen to the rank of lieutenant-cloned; and atthehead of a regiment of dragons, of which he was the commander, he was sticked to the army of Sir John Cope which fought, and was defeated by, the Highlanders under the Chevalier, Pines Charles Edwind Study, and was defeated by, the Highlanders under the Chevalier, Pines Charles Edwind Study, and was defeated by, the Highlanders under the Chevalier, Pines Charles Edwind Study, and was defeated by the Highlanders under the Chevalier, Pines Charles Edwind Study, and Pines Charles Edwind Study, and the same of Sir and the second of the control of the second of the secon

MINION a THE OF CONSIDER CHARMET, B. BILLCHITT, ALTER CHARMET, ALIAN, LOTT, gard's-ner, a. British admiral, son of a military officer resident in the north of England. Alan entered the navy as a midshipman at the age of 12, and after passing through the various subordinate grades, obtained post-explain's rank in 1766, when he hoisted his pennant on board the Preston of 50 gms, in which he served some time on the Jamaica station. He commanded the Maidstone frigate in the American war, and afterwards the Sultan, 74, in which last-named ship he served to the Duke, 98, in which he was then transferred to the Duke, 98, in which he was the first to the Duke, 98, in which he was the first to the Duke, 98, in which he was the first to the Duke, 98, in which he was the first to the Duke was the proposed to the Duke, 98, in which he was the first to the Duke was the proposed to the Duke, 98, in which he was the first to the Duke was the proposed to the Duke, 98, in which he was the first to the Duke was the proposed the propos for his conduct on which occasion he was highly applauded by his chief, Admiral Rodney. Gardner hoisted his flag as rear-admiral on board the Queen in 1793, and, as commander on the Leeward Islands station, made an unsuccessful attempt on Martinique. His next important service was under Lord Howe, and on the memorable 1st of June, 1794, displayed signal bravery, and was shortly afterwards made a baronet and major-general of marines. mutiny having broken out in the ficet at Ports. mouth early in 1797, Gardner went there with the view of suppressing it, but losing his temper, and having recourse to severe measures, mutineers became exasperated, and he had difficulty in escaping with his life. He was created an Irish peer in 1800, and in 1807 took the com-mand of the Channel fleet as the successor of Earl St. Vincent. Gardner was a member of three successive parliaments: first for Plymouth, in 1790, and in 1796 and 1802 for Westminster, with Fox for his colleague. He was created a British peer by the title of baron Uttoxeter, and died at Bath in 1809; B. 1742.

died at Bath in 1809; 3.1/12.

Carrathor, Joseph, ad-re-bal'-de, a modern Italian patriot and general, was brought up at Nice among sailors and fishermen, and, at an early age, in his father's coasting vessel, distinguished himself by his courage and coolness. Implicated, in 1834, in the Italian insurrectional movement, he was compelled to fit, and take refuge in Marsedlles. After passing two years here, chiefly in the pursuit of mathematical studies, he embarked in an Egyptian corrects, to serve as a naval officer in the fleet of the Bey of Tunis. Disappointed in his expectations, however, he set out for Rio Jameio, and fought, with great bravery and success, in the service of the government of Uruguay against Buenos Ayres. His influence over his troops was something wonderful; and for the bravery he and his Italian followers displayed at Sallo, the government of Montevideo decreed that the Italian legion should take the right, the post of honour, even when with native troops, in over 9 u.

even when with native troops, in every en ment. The war in Italy, in 1848, brought Garibaldi back to Nice. A portion of his legion accompanied him, and took a prominent part in the campaign against the Austrians in the Southern Tyrol. At Rome he was the soul of the resist-ance; and Marshal Vaillant, the French comance; and Marsias variance for the operations during the siege of that city, did justice to the energy and skill of his adversary. On May 9, at Palestrina, he defeated the Neapolitan army, though vastly superior in numbers to his own. A few days later, at Velletri, where he was severely wounded, he again won the honours of the day. Finally he sustained, by his courage and resources, for a whole month, the attacks of the French army. In the last council of war held at Rome, Garibaldi proposed the employment of extreme measures, but they were not approved. He then left the sacred city with the remnant of his little army, traversed the enemy's lines, and withdrew to the neighbourhood of San Marino. There his troops disbanded; his wife, who was with him, died; and he himself escaped with difficulty to Genoa. After a few months he returned to America when he he returned to America, where he engaged energetically in trade and industry, becoming a energements in trade and inclusing the manufacturer of soap and candles in Staten Island, New York. In 1854 he returned to his native land, and for five years he new lived in retirement with his sons on the isle of

434

Caprera, off the coast of Sardinia, where he under the assumed name of Lyddal, he ap-farmed on a small scale. In the Italian war of peared as Aboan, in the tragedy of "Oro-1659, he played a conspicuous part against the noko." The applianse he met with induced Austrians, and seemed to be abiquitious, by the him to make his appearance in London, at the marvellous rapidity of his operations. After the peace, the proliminaries of which were signed at Villefranca, he had the command of the army of Central Italy, but subsequently retired from the field, and laid down his arms. He was, however, soon recalled from his re-tirement, having been elected a member of the Parliament at Turin. In May, 1860, Garibaldi landed at Marsala, in Sicily, at the head of 1000 volunteers, was speedily joined by a large num-ber of the inhabitants of the island, and after defeating the Neapolitan troops at Calatafini, took Palermo. He then passed over to the mainland, lauding near Reggio, and in a few days entered Naples almost alone, his approach having been sufficient to induce Francis II. to quit the city. The king took refuge in Gaëta, Garibaldi was proclaimed dictator; the people soon voted themselves subjects of Victor Emmanuel, and the latter having been met by Eminance, and the latter having been met by Garibaldi on his way to attack the fortress of the deposed monarch, was saluted by him as "King of Italy"—a title afterwards confirmed by the Italian Parliament, and acknowledged by the European Powers. After this, Garibaldi again retired to Caprera, whence he issued in 1882, and proceeding from Sicily, made an attempt to reach the frontier through Naples, in order to march upon Rome; but this was in opposition to the wish of the government, and Garibaldi was attacked at Aspromonte by a party of Italian troops, wounded, taken prisoner, his followers dispersed, and himself conveyed a prisoner to the fortress of Varignano, near Spezzia. This event produced a profound sensation throughout Europe; the warmest sympathy was expressed for the illustrious captive, and some of the most eminent surgeons in the world—English, French, German, Russian, and Italian—attended him. An amnesty was shortly after granted to Garibaldi and his followers, who were set at liberty. In 1864 he visited England, where he met with an enthusiastic reception. In where he mot with an enthusiastic reception. In 1866 he took part in the brief war between Italy and Austria, and, in 1807, engaged in an ill-advised and unsuccessful attempt to free Rome from the Papal government. In at Nice, 1807, GARNET, Henry, gow'-net, an English Jesuit, memorable for being concerned in the Gunpowder plot, was educated at Winchester school. He took the Jesuit's indict at Rome in 1878 and 1878

1875, and returned to England in 1886, as pro-vincial of his order. He was executed for high treason in 1806. He confessed the crime for which he suffered, but was placed by the Jesuits among their martyrs.

GARRICK, David, gar'-rik, a celebrated English actor, descended from a French family of the name of Garrie or Garique, who fled to England on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. His father, Peter Garrick, was a captain in the army, and generally resided at Lichfield. David received his education partly at the grammarschool at Lichfield, and partly under Dr. Johnson, with whom, in 1737, he went to Lon-don to seek his fortune. He was for some time under Mr. Colson, an eminent mathematician, and afterwards entered into partnership with an elder brother in the wine trade. This business he soon quitted for the stage. His first appearance was at Ipswich, in 1741, where, theatre in Goodman's Fields, where, in the character of Richard III., he appeared in 1741, and achieved a decided success. The other theatres were quickly deserted, and Goodman's Fields became the resort of the people of fashion, even from the west-end, till that theatre was shut up. He next formed an engagement with Fleetwood, the patentee of Drury-lane, and, in 1742, appeared for three nights as Bayes, Lear, and Richard III. In the summer of 1743 he played in Dublin, with Mrs. Woffington, to such full houses, that the heat of the weather and the crowds occasioned a fever, which was called the Garrick fever. In 1747 he became joint-patentee of Drury-lane Theatre. and, in 1749, married Mademoiselle Violetti, an Italian stage-dancer. In 1763 he and Mrs. Gar-rick made a visit to Italy, and at Paris he saw the celebrated Mademoiselle Clairon, whose tuture eminence he predicted. He returned f. England in 1766, and, in 1766, brought out t. "Clandestine Marriage," a comedy written by the neonjunction with the elder Colman. In 1769, ie celebrated a fête in honour of Shakspeare, called "The Jubilee," at Stratford-upon-Avon, and after-wards made an entertainment of it at Drurylane, under the same title, where it had a prodigious run. In 1776 he sold his interest in the theatre for £35,000. The last character he performed was Don Felix in the "Wonder." which he acted in 1776 for the benefit of de-cayed actors. B. at Hereford, 1716; D. in Lon-don, January 20, 1779, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, where a handsome monument was erected to his memory by pri-ste friendship, Mr. Garrick was hospitable and generous, but vain and fond of flattery. He wrote seweral dramatic pieces, prolognes, epilognes, songs, and epigrams. In the last he excelled. It is, however, upon his skill in histrionic representation that his fame rests. In this he has never been qualled. "That young man," said Pope, after seeing his Richard III., "never had his equal is an actor, and will never have a rival." In ragedy and comedy he was alike at home, and Dramatic Art and Literature," "forms an epoch in the history of the English theatre, as he shiefly dedicated his talents to the great characters of Shakspeare, and built his own fame on the growing admiration for the poet. Before his time, Shakspeare had only been brought on the stage in mutilated and disfigured altera-tions. Garrick returned, on the whole, to the true originals, though he still allowed himself to make some very unfortunate changes. . . . Whether he always conceived the parts of Shakspeare in the sense of the poet, I, from the very circumstances stated in the culogies on his acting, should be inclined to doubt. He wasted heavy to a related by the could be shaded to the control of the could be shaded to the co excited, however, a noble emulation to represent worthily the great national poet. This has ever since been the highest aim of actors, and even at present the stage can boast of men whose histrionic talents are deservedly 'amous." Mrs. Garrick survived her husband orty-three years, and died at her house in the Adelphi, 1822, in the 98th year of her age. Girre, Sir Samuel, garth, an English poet establishment of dispensaries; but was opposed by the apothecaries, whom he soverely lashed in his poem of the "Dispensary," for their venal spirit. In 1697 he spoke the Harveian oration before the college. On the accession of George I, he was knighted, and appointed king's phy-sician in ordinary, and physician-general to the army. B. in Yorkshire, 1671; b. 1719. His poems do not possess any extraordinary merit.

Gascoigne

Gates

GASCOIGNE, Sir William, gus'-koin, an emi-nent English judge, who rose to be chief justice of the King's Bench in the reign of Henry IV. He was a man of integrity and independence, refusing to pass sentence on Archbishop Scroope, as a traitor, and sentencing the prince of Wales, afterwards Henry V., to be imprisoned for indecorous conduct before him on the bench. E. at Gawthorpe, Yorkshire, 1350; D. 1413.

GASCOTGNE, George, an old English poet, who served under the prince of Orange in the wars of the Low Countries. He wrote masques of the progresses of Queen Elizabeth, and some of his poems are not without merit. D. at Stamford, 1577.

GASKELL, Mary EHzabeth, gäs'-kel, the wife of the Rev. William Gaskell, a Unitarian minister, resident at Manchester, at once made her resident at Manchester at the second at the secon ter, readent at Manchester, at once made her-sel popular by her first novel, entitled "Mary Barton," which appeared in 1848. This fiction forcelly depicted the struggles of the working cotton-spinner with the evils of poverty, and contrasted the spiendic condition of the mil-owner with that of the worker. It also illus-trated the evil of strikes, and presented such a vivid image of real life in one particular phase of society, that the authoress was at once raised into fame. After this Mrs. Gaskell became a contributor to "Household Words" and other periodicals, and in 1850 published her Christmas story of "The Moorland Cottage." In 1853 appeared "Ruth," her second novel, and in appeared "Ruth," her second novel, and in 1855, "North and South," an almost verbatim reprint from "Household Words," She also published other collections of her writings, all of which have enjoyed great popularity, and given her a prominent place among the writers of fiction of the 19th century. She likewise wrote amemoir of her friend Miss Brontë (Currer Bell), the author of "Jane Eyre," and contributed to the columns of the "Daily News," Her maiden name was Stromkin. B. about 1822; D. 1865.
GASSICOURT, Charles Louis, Cadet de, gas'-se-

koor, a French writer on chemistry, natural koor', a French writer on chemistry, natural history, and other subjects, was educated for the bar, and in early life wrote several political retailses, one of which was on the "Theory of Elections," and another on "The Private Life of Mirabeau." He subsequently occupied himself principally in the study of chemistry and physics, and in 1930, published a "New Dictionary of Chemistry, "which became a test-book in the Polytechnic school. He accompanied the French army with Austria in 1800 and wrote French army into Austria in 1809, and wrote an account of the campaign; and also some "Letters on the English Nation," and a trea-tise on the application of physical sciences to military purposes. He was reporting sceretary to the Board of Health, of which he was the principal organizer, and likewise assisted in instituting the Lyceum, afterwards the Atheneum, at Paris. p. 1769; p. 1823.

GASSENDI, Peter, gas-sen'-de, a celebrated French philosopher and mathematician, who, 436

and physician, who greatly contributed to the at a very early age, discovered an acute and inat a very early age, discovered an acete and in-quisitive mind, and made such progress in learning, as to be appointed teacher of rhetoric at Digno before he was 1s. Two years atter-wards, he became professor of divinity and philosophy at Aix, when he ventured to oppose the system of Aristotle, and his lectures were published under the title of "Exercitationes Paradoxica adversus Aristotelem." This work procured him the friendship of the celebrated Peirese, president of the university of Aix, by whose interest he was preferred to a canonry in the cathedral of Digne. In 1628 he visited Hol-land, with the avowed object of cultivating the friendship of the philosophers of that country; and, on his return, applied himself ardently to and, on his return apprete minear graining to astronomical studies. In 1631 he was the first to observe a transit of the planet Mercury over the disc of the sun, which had previously been calculated by Kepler. In 1645 he was appointed royal professor of mathematics at Paris, where he applied so intensely to his studies and to astronomical observations, that an illness was the consequence, and he was forced to retire to Digne for the restoration of his health. In 1647 he published his principal work, entitled "De Vita et Moribus Epicuri." This was, in 1649, followed by his "Syntagma Philosophiæ Epicurer," which was an attempt to reconstruct the Epicurean system of philosophy out of the remains left by its masters. In 1653 he went back to Paris; but his labours brought a return of his disease, of which he died, in 1655. B. at Chautersier, near Digne, 1592. Gassendi is deservedly ranked among the first mathematicians of his age. He opposed the philosophy of Descartes with success, and obtained a number of followers, who were called after his name. His other works are, the Lives of Tycho Brahe, Copernicus, Purbachius, and Regiomontanus; a "Commentary on Diogenes Lacrtius;" and astronomical and philosophical pieces, the whole collected into 6 vols. folio, 1658 GASTRELL, Francis, gas-trei, an English pre-late and able polemical writer, was a native of Northamptonshire, and was educated at West-minster School, and Christ Church, Oxford. He was Boyle lecturer, and preacher at Lincoln's Inn; took his degree of D.D. in 1700; was chaplain to Harley, speaker of the House of Commons, and became canon of Christ Church in 1702. He was chaplain to the queen in 1711, and was raised to the episcopal bench, in 1714, as bishop of Chester. His Boyle's lectures he published, in 1699, as one discourse, as a defence of Christianity against the Deists; and was called the "Christian Institutes," and of a work entitled "Conversations concerning the Trinity," and several others. B. 1662; D. 1725.

and several others. B. 1692; D. 1725.

GARES, HORATO, an American general, who received his military tuition in England, and sevred in the West Indies, and also in Ohio, under General Braddock. Being wounded, he retried for some time from the army, and settled on an estate which he purchased in Virginia. When the war of American independence comwhen the war or American independence con-menced, he espoused the cause of the revolu-tionists, and received the appointment of adjutant-general in the army. In 1770 he was appointed to the command of the army operat-ing on Lake Champlain ; but, in the following year, he was superseded, although, in the months afterwards, he was again appointed to oppose General Burgoyne, whom he defcated, and, at Saratoga, forced to capitulate with his whole army. This success surrounded Gatewith a halo of popularity, and attempts wermade to place him above Washington. These, however, were frustrated, and, in 1780, he was appointed to the command of the southern mry. He met Cornwallis at Canden, in South Carolina, and suffered a complete of-fact. For this he was superseded, and his conduct subjected to a court of faquiry; he was, however, honourably acquitted. After this he retired to his estate in Virginia, where he resided till 1800, when he removed to New York, where the feedom of the city was enforced on him. He now became a member of the legislature; but, before he quitted Virginia, he emancipated his slaves, and confered upon the necessitous and infirm a provision for life. This was a noble act, and redounds more to his glory than the capturing of Burgoyne at Saratoza. p. in Eucland 1728: b. 1806.

some guny cuan the capturing of Burgoyne as Saratoga. In in England, 1728; p. 1808.

Gattaler, in England, 1728; p. 1808.

College, Cambridge, was preacher at Lincohi's Inn, and in fell was uppointed to the rectory of Rotherhithe. He published in 1618 a singular treatise on the "Nature and Use of Lots," which excited a great deal of controvers, and which he had to defend by another work, published in 1633. He was offered the mastership of Trinity College, Cambridge, but his mirm health made it impossible for him to accept the post. He travelled in the Low Countries, and zealously defended the reformed doctrines against the Catholies, especially in his treatise entitled "Transubstantiation declared by the Candon of the Catholies, and though a control of the Catholies, and though a pupille and ledgest properties of the catholies, and though a pupil and coloquent preacher, was forced to abandon the pulpit from a spitting of blood to a Gaurat, Antoine, go'-beel, a learned French missionary, who, in 1723, was sent to China, and there acquired the Chinese and Mantchoo languages, becoming interpreter at the control Pekin. He held this position thirty years, and gained the respect and esteem of the emperor. at Gaillac, near Alby, 1689; p. at Pekin, 1755. No European, perhaps, was better acquainted with Chinese literature than Gaulithe wrote an "Historical and Critical Treatise on Chinese Astronomy," and a "History Genghis Khan." He also translated the "Chon (King," which comprises the historical traditions of China and its sovereigns, and produced other works.

GAURIUS, Jerome David, gow'-be-oos, a colobrated German physician, who contracted an intimate friendship with Boerhaave, and succeeded him as lecturer on botany and chemistry at Leyden, in 1781, and in 1781 obtained the medical professorship, His principal works are a treatise on the "Method of Prescribing, or of Writing Recipes;" "Principles of Nosology;" and "Institutiones Pathologic Medicinalis;" B. at Heidelberg, 1705; D. at Loyden, 1750.

GALDEN, John, gaw'dan, an English bishop, who, being appointed chaplain to Robert, earl of Warwick, preached before the House of Common in 1484, and gave so much satisfaction to the members, that they presented him with a silver tenkard, and added to it, in the following year, the rich living of Bocking, in Essex. In 1643 he was nominated one of the assembly of divines at Westminster, but did not sit smoug them. He wrote spants the Covenant, but compiled with it to keep his preferment. In 1643 he published a pamphlet against bringing the king to trial. He had also committed to divines at Westminster, but did not sit among them. He wrote against the Covenant, but complied with it to keep his preferment. In 1649 he published a pamphlet against bringing the king to trial. He had also committed to his care the collating and publishing of the king's meditations, to which he gave the name of "Eurow Beardury, or the Portraiture of his Sacred Majesty in his Solitude and Sufferings." This book had a wonderful effect upon the public mind; but it has been doubted, and still whether it was the production of Gaaden or the monarch himself. Macanlar, however, says:—"In that year (1692) an honest old clergyman, named Walker, who had, in the time of the Commonwealth, been Gaudier's curate, wrote a book which convinced all sensible and dispassionate readers that Gauden, and not Charles I, was the author of the 'Iron Basillice'." In 1609 he became preacher at the Temple; and when Charles IL was restored, he was preferred to thesee of Exeter, and in 1602, to that of Worcester, where he passed the remainder of his days. B. at Mayland, Essex, 1605; b. at Worcester, 1608. Besides the above, Gauden wrote several other works on the literarchy of the Church of England, and sermons.

archy of the Church of England, and sermons. Gararura, Aloisius Edouard Camille, pole-to-da, a French abbé and educational writer, who are serviced as a prices at Konne, and went, in 1730, to Paris, where he occupied himself entirely with the instruction of the young. In order to diminish, to those of tender age, the difficulty of learning scientific subjects, he roduced the clementary studies to a kind of game, and afterwards adopted the plan of nutual instruction, the same as that used by Lancaster and Bell. During the Revolution he look refuge in England, and his system was very successful there. He returned to France an 1802, where he continued the application of its principles. p. in Italy, of French parents, 746; p. at Paris, 1818. He is the author of n 1802, where he continued the application of its principles. n, in Italy, of French parents, 746; n, at Faris, 1818. He is the author of complete course of elementary education; amongst which are, "Geographical Lessons by Means of a Geome," A Reasonable and Moral Game for Children," "A Complete Course of "astructive Games for Children,"

GAUTIE, Theophic, opt-te-at, a modern rench poet and thie-stew, who in 1830 produced his first volume of verses. He afterwards secame connected with some of the foremost abbleations in Paris—"Figano," "Revue de 2nis," "Presse," "Revue des deux Mondes," and the "Musée des Fennilles." Many poems also have been virtuelles." Many poems also have been virtuelles." Meny poems also have been virtuelles." Meny poems also have been virtuelles." Meny poems also have been virtuelles." It in ubsequently became the editor of the literary "suitleton of the "Monitour." n. at Tarbos, GAVARNI, ga-var'-ne, the name by which ne of the most popular of French caricaturistsis known. His real name was Paul Chevalier, and he begran life as a meedeanical draughtisman, but in 1835 discovered his genius for burlespae, in hitting off the peculiarities of manners and persons. He at once rose into fame, and taking the passing and ever-varying modes of Parisian life for his subjects, produced an endless variety of cariestares, unequalled for the originality and tone they display. He visited England for the purpose of sketching the lower classes in London, and depicing the strange and unsightly scenes in which they too eften form the most prominent part of the picture; but he altogether failed in his object. Besides illustrating the universally-known pages of "Charivari," and other periodicals, he leat the aid of his penell to the works of popular authors. The most successful of these were the designs for the "Wandering Jew" of Eugene Sue, and the "Diable à Paris" of Malzac. A selection from his "Sketches of Parisian Life" was rande and published in Paris in 1840. They are comprised in a vols. 8vo, to which notes were empended by Théophile Gautaier and others. z.

at Paris, 1901; p. 1.966.
GAVESTON, Piers, gaiv-ston, a favourité of Edward II., whose pride and prodigality ruised the ire of the English nobility. The king was forced to send him into exile, but recalled him. Ite was the son of a gentieman of Gascony, and the fact of his being a foreigner embittered the harter draised by his own misconduct. Behended in 1312.

GAX, John, gai, an English poet, who received his cincation under a Mr. Luck, a man of wit and a poet, in the town of Barnstaphe. He was alterwards apprenticed to a silk-more or in London, but distliking the occupation in a few years, he bought the remainder of his time. His first poem, entitled "Barnst Sports," appeared in 1711, was elicited to Mr. Pope, and gained him the fricadship of that poot, which lasted till death. In the following year he was appointed secretary to the duchees of Monmouth, and, two years later, produced "The Pair," a poem, About the same time he printed his mock hereic, entitled "Ttvin, or the Artof Walking the Streets of London," in the composition of which he was assisted by Swift. In 1714 appeared his "Shepherd's Week," asseries of pastorals, intended to ridicule Phillips, but which passess more merit as a genuine picture of rustic life than as a satire. The same year he became secretary to the earl of Clarendon, and accompanied that nobleman on his embassy to Hanover. On the death of Queen Anne, he returned to England, but his expectations of preferment from the new court were doomed to disappointment. In 1720 he probablished his poems by subscription, which produced him £1000; but embarking in the famous South-Sea bubble, he lost the whole, and was reduced to such a state of despendency as to prove nearly fattal to his health. He next produced the tragedy of the "Captive," which met, with the desiration and well with the produced the tragedy of the "Captive," which met, with a favourable recopion, and occasioned which had a success considered by many infinitely beyond what it deserved both in a dramatic and moral point of view. It ran for sixthere nights, and threw the author and his friends into cestasies. Though it was not arountie with the town, however, it was not so at court; and when he produced his sequel to it, under the title of "Polly," it was pro-hibited by the lord-chamberlain. Of the bad effect of the "Bergar's Opera" upon the public morals of the period, there can be no doubt. Indeed, the following fact is one of the strongest Indeed, the following act is one of the strongest attestations of the truth of this that could be given. "In the year 1773 Sir John Fielding told the bench of justices that he had written to Mr. Garriek concerning the impropriety of performing the Beggar's Opera," which never was represented without creating which field was represented window creating an additional number of thieves; and they particularly requested that he would desist from performing that open on Saturday evening. Such also were the fears of the church as to the effect of this play, that Dr. Herring, as to the effect of this play, that Dr. Herring, then archibshop of Camterbury, preached a ser-mon against it." Whilst these fears were at work, however, Dean Swife was writing in favour of it in the "Intelligencer." Although the "Polly" was prohibited, Gay was no loser by it. on the contrary, by its publication he put into his pocket about £21200, and was adopted as a member of the family of the duke and duchess of Queensberry. B. at Barnstaple, Devoushire, 1838; D. Dec. 11, 1732, and was interred in Westminster Abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory by his patrons, with an epitaph written by Pope. Besides the works already mentioned, Gay wrote some lesser dramatic pieces, ballads, and poems, making 2 vols. 12mo. Hazlitt thus sums up the merits of Gay, as displayed in his principal productions:—"His fables are certainly a work of great merit, both as to the quantity of invention employed, and as to the elegance and facility of the execution. They are, however, spun out too long. The description and narrative are too diffusive and desultory, and the moral is sometimes without point. They are more like tales than fables. pastorals are pleasing and poetical, but his capital work is his 'Beggar's Opera.'" Dr. Johnson says, "he had not in any degree the mens divinior, the divinity of genius." Gay, however, was the originator of a new species of composition; for we owe to him the ballad

open.

GAYANGOS, Pasquale de, ga-yan'-coe, a distinguished modern Spaniard, who early began to devote himself to the study of Oriental literature, and with a view to realize, a complete acquaintance with the mediawal history of his country, applied himself ardenally to the Arabic. Duting a visit to Algiers, he married an English alay, a circumstance which doubtless led him to make himself well acquainted with the English language, in which the most important of his works were composed. In 1835 ho became a contributor to the "Westminster Review," and subsequently to the Edinburgh and other reviews. He also lent his add to the "Penry Cyclopedia," and wrote some of the articles for Userli Knowledge Society. For several years the Biographical Dictionary of the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge Society. For several years he resided in England, and there published his "History of the Mohammedan Dynasties in Spain," &c., which was a translation of a native work from copies in the British Museum. On his leaving England, he proceeded to Spain, where he became professor of Arabic at the Athenesum of Madrid. B. 1890.

GAT-LUSSAC, Nicholas François, gai-loos'-sale, a celebrated French philosopher, who, in conjunction with M. Biot, ascended in a balloon, lent by the government of France for the purpose, to the height of 13,000 feet above the Scine, and ascertained that the influence of terrestrial magnetism there is nearly as great as it is on the carth: that the electricity of the is on the carth; that the electricity of the atmosphere increased as they rose, and was always negative; that the hygrometer discovered increased dryness, and that the thereometer sank from 64° Fahrenheit on the carth, to 51°. He made another ascent alone, and attained an elevation of 4½ miles, where he had great difficulty in breathing, and the thermometer fell to 26° Fahrenheit. After sailing six hours through the atmosphere, he descended at a village twenty miles from Rouen. The re-sult of this aerial flight was the discovery that air obtained at the highest point, was composed of the same elements as that found on the surface of the earth. These experiments brought Gay-Lussac greatly into notice, and he rose both in fame and position. In 1804 he became a member of the society of Arcucil, and was intro-duced to Humboldt, with whom he prosecuted an investigation of the polarization of light and other subjects. He also devoted much of his time to the study of chemistry, and to him we are indebted for the discovery of the hydro-sul-phuric and oxychloride acids. In 1830 he became a member of the Chamber of Deputies. and, in 1839, was created a peer of France. He enjoyed several official appointments, and was professor of chemistry at the Jardin du Roi. B. at St. Leonard, Haute Vienne, 1778; D. at Paris, 1850.

GANTON, Edmund, gai'-ton, a humorous writer, was a native of London, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School and St. John's Col-Merchant Taylors School and St. John's Col-lege, Oxford, of which he became a fellow. He wrote a variety of works, among which were "Pleasant Notes on Don Quixote," which have "Picasant Notes on Don Quixote," which have often been reprinted, and possess considerable humour; "The Art of Longevity, or a Dietical Institution," "Wil Revised, or New Excellent Way of Divertisement," arranged in questions and answers, and originally published under the name of Asdryasdust Tossoffacan. B.

1609; n. at Oxford, 1666. Gaza, Theodore, ga'-za, a Greek grammarian, who, when his native place was taken by the Turks, in 1430, escaped to Italy, where he studied the Latin language with so much assiduity, that he became an elegant writer and speaker of it. He was, for several years, a professor at Ferrara, and became rector of that uni-versity. Thence he went to Rome, under the versity. Thence he went to Kome, under the patronage of Pope Nicholas V. and Cardinal Bessarion. n. at Thessalonica, about 1405; p. at Rome, 1478. He wrote a Greek grammar, a treatise on the Greeian months; translated Aristotle on Animals, Hippocrates' Aphorisms, and athas works into Latin; and some of and other works into Latin; and some of Cicero's into Greek.

Genera, get-ber, an Arabian, or according to other writers a Greek physician and astronomer, who wrote a commentary on the "Syndaxis Megale" of Ptolemy, and other works which were chiefly on alchemy. Dr. Johnson supposes that the word "gibberish" is derived from the cant of Geber and his followers. Lived about the 8th century.

GED, William, ged, a goldsmith of Edinburgh, who, in 1725, endcayoured to introduce a method of printing with blocks and plates, containing of printing with blocks and plates, containing torian, who for many years was the principal letters for a whole page or sheet, now known as ornament of the university of Upsal. In 1810 stereotype plates. He entered into an engages he visited England with strong prejudices ment with the university of Cambridge, to print against the people of that country; but, in a

Bibles and Prayer-books by this means; but the project failed. On his return to Scotland, however, he printed an edition of Sallust with his plates. The plan was subsequently successfully adopted by M. Didot of Paris, and is now in universal use amongst printers in England. n. 1749.

GEDDES, Alexander, ged'-dez, a Roman Ca-tholic divine, who was educated at an obscure school in the Highlands of Scotland, and, in 1758, removed to the Scottish college at Paris. In 1764 he returned to his native country, and officiated to a congregation in the county of Angus, but, the year following, became chaplain in the family of the earl of Traquair. In 1769 he undertook the charge of a congregation at Auchinhalrig, in Banfishire; and, after various changes, went to London, where, in 1786, he published proposals for a new Translation of the Bible. In 1790 he gave a general answer to the queries, counsels, and criticisms communicated to him since the publication of his proposals. In this undertaking he was liberally supported by Lord Petre. The first volume of this work by Lord Ferre. The first volume of this work appeared in 1792, comprising the Pentateuch and the book of Joshua; but the translator had taken such unwarrantable liberties with the text, and treated many important subjects with so much indecency, that he was suspended from his ecclesiastical functions. To these he replied in pamphlets written with coarseness and illiberality. In 1797 appeared the second volume of his version. In 1800 he published which is now forgotten. B. in Ruthven, Banff-shire, 1737; D. 1802. GEEFS, William, geefs, a distinguished modern Belgian sculptor, who studied at Paris, and in 1830 exhibited his first work, entitled "A Young Herdsman of the Early Christian Times strewing Flowers upon a Tomb." The performance gave high promise, and he did not disappoint the expectations which had been formed of his genius. He obtained commissions from the Belgian government for several monuments to those who fell in the struggle for Belgian inde-pendence, and, by his admirable execution of the works intrusted to him, added to his fame.

These are his greatest performances but he works intrusted to him, added to his fame. These are his greatest performances but he also employed his chisel hi maginative paths, and executed a "Group of Sleeping Children," purshased by Queen Victoria; the "Infant St. John;" "Melancholy;" "The Lion in Love," "Melancholy;" "The Lion in Love, which was greatly admirted in the Great Exhibition of 1851; "Paul and Virginia," and several other works. n. at Antwerp, 1805.

GENTRAID, Falve, jej-frav, a negro, sen of Micholas Geffund, one of the founders of the independence of Hayli. He joined the rebellion against Boyer in 1835, and two years later was made general of division. During the whole of his career he shewed great filtrary talent. This drew on him the entiry of Faustin Solonque, emperor of Hayti, 1832–1858, and Geffrard, fearing arrest, constitution, and was made president in 1850. n. 1806.

1806.

GEIJER, Erik Gustaf, yi'-jer, a Swedish his-439

Gelasins

Genghis Khan

letter printed in 1855, he says :- "I came to England with strong prejudices against the people but there is no honester man in the world than the selfish, industrious English-man, from the merchant to the day-labourer." He edited several periodicals, in one of which, the "Iduna," appeared his poems of "The Viking" and "The Last Champion," which still hold their place among the best selections of Swedish poetry. In 1817 he became professor of history at the university of Upsal, which situation he held till 1846, when he resigned it. B. in the province of Wermeland, 1783; D. at Stockholm, 1847. The most important work of Geijer is his "Svenska Folkets Historia," which has been translated into English by Mr. J. H. Turner, and published in London.

Gelasius I., Pope, je-lui'-se-us, succeeded Felix III. in 492. He had an acrimonious contest with the patriarch of Constantinople, and condemned the practice of communicating only with bread, as was the custom of the Manichean sect, and made it imperative on the laity to use both bread and wine in the Lord's Supper.

D. 496.

GELASIUS II. succeeded Pascal II. as pope in of Rome, aided by the emperor Henry V., drove him from Rome, and Maurice Bourdin, as Gregory VIII., was elected in his stead. Gelasius, after an unsuccessful attempt to regain the pontificate, retired to France. D. at the abbey of Cluny, 1119.

Gell, Sir William, jel, a learned classical antiquary, was educated at Emmanuel College. Cambridge, of which he afterwards became a fellow. He was knighted in 1803, on his return from a mission to the Ionian Islands; in 1820 he was appointed chamberlain to Queen Caroline, and shortly afterwards went to Italy, where line, and shortly afterwards went to Italy, where he remained during the rest of his life, residing partly at Rome and partly at Naples. He was the author of "Topography of Troy and its Vicinity," llustrated and explained by drawings; "The Geography and Antiquities of Hanca," "Hisneary of Greece;" "Hinerary of the Morea;" "Pompiana, or Observations upon the Topography, Edites, and Ornaments of Pompeii," "The Topography of Rome," &c. 1777. p. 1277. p of Pompeii;" "T B. 1777; D. 1836.

Gellert, Christian Furchtegott, gel'-lert, a German divine and poet, who supported himself for many years as tutor in private families, but afterwards became professor of philosophy at Leipsic. He is best known by his fables and tales, which are very pleasing. His works have been collected in 10 vols. 8vo. B. at Haynichen, GELLIERAND, Henry, jal'-le-brand, an emi-nent mathematician, was born in London, edu-cated at Trinity College, Oxford; took orders, but devoting himself to mathematical studies, was, in 1627, elected professor of astronomy at Gresham college. In 1631 he was brought before the court of High Commission for publishing an almanae in which he had substituted the names of Protestant martyrs for those of the saints; but the information was dismissed, similar almanaes having been printed before. He was the author of some valuable works on longitude, on the variations of the magnetic needle, on navigation, and on trigonometry. в. 1597; р. 1636.

Gellius, Aulus, jel'-le-us, a Roman gram-marian, who published a work which he called

"Noctes Attice," because written at Athens during the winter nights. It was originally composed for the improvement of his children. and abounds with many grammatical remarks. Lived in the 2nd century, A.D.

Gelo, or Gelox, je-lo, the most celebrated of this name was a son of Dinomenes, who made himself absolute at Syracuse, 485 years before the Christian era. He conquered the Carthaginians at Himera, and became very popular by his great equity and moderation. He reigned seven years, and his death was universally lamented at Syracuse. His brother Hiero succeeded him.

GEMELLI CARRERI, Francesco, jai-mail'-le karrain'e, an Italian traveller, who, from 1680 to 1698, made long and difficult voyages to all parts of the world. He visited Europe, Asia, and Africa, advancing as far as the great wall of China, and travelled through Mexico. In 1609 he published an account of his travels, under the title of "Giro del Mondo," (a Tour of the World) B. at Naples, 1651; D. 1725.

GENINIANI, Francesco, jem'-in-c-a-ne, a distinguished musical composer and finished performer on the violin, was the pupil of Scarlatti and Corelli, and went to London in 1714. where he received the patronage of George I., before whom he performed several of his own compositions, with Handel accompanying him on the harpsichord. He composed a great variety of musical pieces, all of them distinguished for their excellence and for the skill required in their execution. He had a great passion for buying pictures, but, being poor, he had often to part with his purchases at a loss—which of course still further increased his difficulties. He was an author as well as a composer, and published, among other works,
"A Sure Guide to Harmony and Modulation,"
"A Treatise on Good Taste," "Rules for Playing in Good Taste," "The Art of Playing on the Violin," &c. B. at Lucca, about 1630; D. at Dublin, 1762.

GEMINUS, jem'-i-nus, an astronomer and mathematician of Rhodes, who flourished about 70 B.C.

Gemistrius, George, je-mis-thus, surnamed Pletho, a learned Greek philosopher, who ably defended the followers of Plato against those of Aristotle, and the Greek Church against the Latin. He wrote various controversial and theological works, and D. 1491. B. 1390.

GEMMA, Reinier, commonly called Frisius, gend-ma, a Dutch physician and mathematician. who became medical professor at Louvain. He wrote a number of works on mathematics, geometry, and medicine. B. at Dockum, Fries-land, 1508; D. at Louvain, 1555.—His son Cornelius also wrote on the same subjects.

GENGHIS KHAN, jen'-gis kan, the son of a petty Mongolian prince, who, after some years petry Mongonan prince, who, after some years of desultory warfare with various Tartar tribes, in 1210 invaded the Chinese empire, and took its capital by storm. In 1218 he led his army into Turkestan, and succeeded in capturing the cities of Samarcand and Bokhara, which he pillaged and burned, and destroyed upwards of 200,000 individuals. Continuing his career of savage devastation for several years, in 1225 savage devasation for several years, in 1225 the went against the sovereign of Tangut, to whom he gave battle on a plain of ice, formed by a frozen lake, defeated him, and slew 300,000 of his men. Conquering-wherever he went, Genghis extended his territory until it not only comprised within its boundaries Northern China, but Eastern Persia, and the whole of Tartary. In achieving the conquest of these "barren acres," it is computed that this warrior

"harren aures," it is computed that this warrior destroyed upwards of 5,000,000 of the human race. B. in Tartary, 1163: D. 1297.
GENUIS, Félicité Stéphanie, Countess de, stavite, celebrated for her literary talents, became, at four years of age, a canoness in the noble chapter of Aix. From this time she was called la Comtesse de Laney. At the age of seventeen, a letter which she had written accidentally came into the hands of Count de Coults who was a channel with the hearts of Count de Genlis, who was so charmed with the beauty of trains, who was so enamed with the deality of its composition, that he made her an offer of his hand and fortune, which she accepted. Through this union she became nicec to Madame de Montesson, who was privately married to the duke of Orleans, whose son, the duke of Chartres, in 1782, chose Madame de Genlis to superintend in 1782, chose Madame de Genlis to superinteia. the education of his children. About this period she produced "Adela and Theodore," "The Evenings of the Castle," 'Annals of Virtue," and "The Theatre of Education," all of which were well received. In 1791 she paid a visit to England with her pupil, Mademoiselle d'Orleans, but on their return to France, they were ordered immediately to quit the territory. After a short time they went to Switzerland; but, driven from thence, they at length found an asylum in the convent of St. Clair. In 1800 Madame de Genlis returned to her own country, Madame de Genis returned to her was country, and, in 1895, Napoleon I, gave her apartments in the arsenal at Paris, with a pension. On the fall of the empire and the return of the Bourbons, her affection for her former friends returned; and when Louis Philippe ascended the throne, every attention was paid to her wants and comforts. She employed herself almost continually in writing, and her works are very numerous, embracing nearly every style of literature. B. near Autun, 1746; D. 1830. GENYARO, Joseph Aurelius, jen-no'-ro, an ominent Neapolitan lawyer, who, after practising at the bar, became the chief magistrate of his native city. He wrote on legal subjects, and native city. He wrote on legal subjects, and his works are remarkable for their purity of style and depth of crudition. His principal production is "Respublica Jurisconsultorum," production is "Mespublica Jurisconstituting," which ingeniously teaches, in the form of a novel, the dry and intricate system of civil law, n. at Naples, 1701; n. 1703. Gennaro was one of the commission appointed by the minister Tanucci to prepare a uniform code, called the "Carolin Code," for the whole kingdom.

GENOVERI, Antonio, jen'o-caise, an Italian philosopher, who for some time read lectures philosopher, who for some time read lectures philosophy at Napies, with great reputation. He was attacked, however, by numerous enemies for publishing his "Metaphysics" in which he expressed his admiration of the works.

which he expressed his admiration of the works of Galileo, Grotius, and Newton. Galilani, archibishop of Tarento, protected him; and Bartolomeo Intieri, a wealthy Italian, established for him a professorship of political philosophy. p. at Gashgiltone, 1712; p. 1703. Genesarto, jen's-serite, a Tunous Vaudal prince, who pussed from Spain to Africa, where he took Carthage. He laid the foundation, in Africa, of the Vandal kingdom, which was composed of Numidia, Mauritania, Carthage, Corstea, Sardinia, and the Balearie Isles. In the course of his military expeditions, he in vaded Italy, and sacked Rome in 455. p. at Seville about 406: p. 477. Seville about 406; D, 477,

INE, Armand, zhen-son'-ne, an advocate of Bourdeaux, who, at the Revolution, assailed the government with great vehemence, and was the first to enunciate the vile doctrine that suspicion was a sufficient ground on which to condemn a person to death. Having, however, voted for referring the sentence of the king to the primary assemblies, and had the courage to demand punishment for the assassins of September, Gensonné incurred the hatred of Robes-pierre, and was included in the destruction piere, and was included in the destruction which overtook the whole Girondist party, having been guillotined, with twenty-one of his colleagues, on October 31, 1793. B. 1758.

GENTLESCH, Horatio, jeu's-be'-be'-be, an Italian artist, who palatted the ceilings in Greenwich Hospital. B. at Pisa, 1583; b. in England, 1547.—His daughter Artemista was also a good artist. She lived chiefy at Naples. GENTIUS, jen'-te-us, a king of Illyricum, who imprisoned the Roman ambassadors at the request of Perseus, king of Macedonia. This offence was highly resented by the Romans, and Gentius was conquered by Anicius, and led in triumph with his family.

triumph with his fanalty, few'-tel-man, an actor and dramatic writer, was a native of Ireland, who played first in Dublin, and afterwards at Bath. Edinburgh, Bianchoster, Liverpool, and Chester successively. Foote engaged him at the Haymarket, London, where he appeared the Haymarket, London, where he appeared during three seasons, when he was dismissed, and returned to Dublin. He wrote a variety of dramatic pieces, besides "The Dramatic Consor," "Character: an Epistle," "Royal Fables," in imitation of Gay, and other poetical effusions of considerable merit. B. 1728; D. 1784.

GEOFFREN OF MONNOUTH, jef-fre, author of the "Chronicon, sive Historia Britonum," a singular work, but full of legendary tales about the early kings of Britain. Geoffrey was arch-deacon of Monmonth, and was made bishop of St. Asaph in 1152; but afterwards retired to St. Asaph in 1152; but afterwards retired to Abbingdon monastery, of which he was abbot. The first edition of his History was published at Paris in 1508, in quarto, and reprinted there in 1517, and at Heidelberg in 1537; an English trunslation, by Acron Thompson, of Queen's College, Oxford, was published in London in 1718. Geoffrey died in 1154. When married, when fifteen years of age, a weellby night-class munificatives who in a weellby night-class munificatives.

who married, when meet years of age, a wealthy plate-glass manufacturer, who in a short time left her a widow. Endowed with high graces of person and mind, her house became the rendezvous of all the most celebrated persons of the age, and to many literary brated persons of the age, and to many herrory men she rendered important services. Stanislas Poniatowski, who saluted her as his mother, caused her to go to Warsaw, after his accession to the Polish throne. She expended large sums of money to support the "Encyclopedia," and many acts of delicate generosity are recorded of her. p. at Paris, 1699; p. 1777.

GEORGE I., (Lewis) king of Great Britain, was the son of Ernest Augustus, elector of Hanover, by Sophia, daughter of Frederic, elector Pala-tine, and grand-daughter of James I. of Eng-land. He was created duke of Cambridge in 1706, and succeeded Queen Anne in 1714. In the following year a rebellion broke out in Scotland in favour of the Pretender, which was soon suppressed, and several of its leaders forfeited their lives upon the scaffold. In 1718 a war was threatened with Charles XII, of Sweden, on account of the king of England having purchased from the Danes the duchies of Bremen and Verden, which had been take from Sweden in 1712. The death of Charles, however, prevented the rupture taking place. In the previous year parliaments were made septennial. In 1720 the failure of the famous South-Sea scheme occurred, and thousands of families were ruined. This caused disturbances among the people, and the king, who was then on a visit people, and the king, who was then on a visit to his Hanoverien possessions, had to be hastly recalled. In 1723 a conspiracy against the government was discovered. It had been planned for the purpose of bringing in the Pretender; and Atterbury, the bishop of Rochester, was involved in it. In 1725 war was rekindled between the king of Spain and the emperor on one side, and England, France, Prussia, and afterwards Sweden, on the other. In 1726 the siege of Gibraltar was commenced; but the dispute was soon terminated by nego-tiation, when George proceeded on a journey to the continent. He was on his way to his Hanoverian dominions, but had only reached Osnaburg when he was struck down with apo-plexy. B. 1600; p. at Osnaburg, 1727. George I. mas a person of plain and simple tastes, of a grave carriage in public, but sufficiently gay and familiar in his private intercourse. His marriage was unhappy, and his unfortunate queen, Sophia Dorothea, a daughter of the duke of Zell, was immured in the castle of Ahlen, in Hanover, from 1694 till 1726, when she died, on a charge never proved, and gene-rally disbelieved, of an intrigue with Count Konigsmark. He left by her one son, George, by whom he was succeeded, and one daughter, Sophia Dorothea, who, in 1706, was married to Frederic II. of Prussia.

GEORGE II., (Augustus) son of George I., married, in 1705, Princess Caroline, of Brandenburgh-Anspach, who died in 1737. In 1714 he came to England with his father, and was, pre-vious to his accession to the throne in 1727, vious to his accession to the firther in 121, created Prince of Wales. At this period, the country was in a state of great prosperity; and peace being restored in 1729, the administration of the internal affairs of the kingdom occupied a large share of attention. In 1739, however, war was declared against Spain, when Admiral Vernon was sent with a squadron to the West Indies, where he demolished Porto Bello, but failed in his attempt on Carthagena. In 1743 the king headed his army on the continent, and gained the battle of Dettingen. In 1745 the Pretender's eldest son, Prince Charles-Edward Stuart, landed in the Highlands of Scotland, Stuart, landed in the Highlands of Scotland, and was joined by several of the clans; but, after obtaining various successes, his followers were defeated by the duke of Cumberland at Culoden, in 1746. This opisode in British history has been a prolific home with Jacobit prints. Whilst continued, however, the people of England testified their attachment to the Hanoverian dynasty by numerous public demonstrations of loyalty. In 1748 the war with Spain was ended by a treaty of peace, concluded at Aix-in-Chapello. In 1751 died Frederick, prince of Wales, between whom and his derick, prince of Wales, between whom and his father there never existed any cordiality. In 1755 war broke out between England and France, which was at first very unpromising; Braddock was defeated and killed in North was sent to relieve it, was shot. About this time. Mr. Pitt, afterwards carl of Chatham, became prime minister, and public affairs began to assume a much more promising aspect. In 1758 a treaty was entered into between England and Prussia, and the French power was nearly destroyed in the East Indies. In America Louisburg was taken, and the capture of Quebec, where Wolfe fell, was followed by the conquest where wolle lell, was tollowed by the conquest of Canada. Cape Breton had already been re-covered; in the East, Clive had captured Cal-cutta, won the battle of Plassy, and was driving the French from every possession which they held in that quarter. The island of Guadaloupe and the settlement of the Senegal were taken. Admiral Hawke defeated the French fleet under Admiral Hawke occared the Frence neet under Conflans, and the British flag waved trium-phant in every part of the world. In the midst of this blaze of glory, George II. died suddenly, at Kensington, by the bursting of the right ventricle of the heart, 1760. B. at Hanover. 1683

GEORGE III. (William Frederick), king of Great Britain, was the grandson of George II. and the eldest son of Frederick, prince of Wales. He was the first sovereign of the Hanoverian dynasty born in England, and as-cended the throne on the death of his grandcended the throne on the death of his grand-father, in 1760. At an extraordinary council in the following year, he stated that, "ever since his accession to the throne he had turned his his accession to the throne he had turned his thoughts towards a princess for his consort; and that, after mature deliberation, he had come to a resolution to demand in marriage the Princess Charlotte of Mecklenburg-Streiltz." He was accordingly married in the same year, and the joint coronation of the king and queen took place on the Sth of September. From this period till 1783, when Lord Bute retired from the administration of the country, the public mind was kept in a constant state of actisation by nodifical somits, normplets, and public mind was kept in a constant state or, and agitation by political squibs, pamphlets, and libels, which, on the whole, may be considered to have been favourable to religious liberty. In that year, however, Mr. Grenville was appointed premier, when he brought in those measures relative to the American colonies which finally resulted in their independence and the formation of the federal government of the United States, At this time the king had his first attack of that illness which ultimately obscured his latter days, and led to a legislative enactment, which, by sign manual, empowered the queen, or some other member of the royal family, to assume the ounce memoer of the royal family, to assume the grandianship of the heir-suparent, and be re-gent of the kingdom. This measure caused a change in the administration, when the mar-quis of Rockingham was placed at the head of the Treasury. His cabinet, however, was dis-solved in 1768, and the duke of Grafton sucsolved in 1799, and the duke of Gratton suc-ceeded to the head of sfairs. In 1770 the duke of Grafton was succeeded by Lord North, and, in 1772, on account of the duke of Cumberland marrying Mrs. Horton, the Royal Marriage Act was passed. This act prevented the members of the royal family from marrying before the age of twenty-fave, without the approval of the king, and, oven after that age, without the approbation of both houses of Parliament. In 1782 Lord North resigned, and the Rockingham party again took office; but this administration France, which was at first very unpromising: enjoyed but a short tonure of power, when Lord Braddock was defeated and killed in North Shelburne was placed at the head of affairs, America, and Minorca was taken, in the Medicine with Mr. Pitt, the son of the earl of Chatham, rancan, for allowing which Admiral Byng, who as chancellor of the Exchequer. In the following year the Coalition ministry, respectively headed by Mr. Fox and Lord North, pushed themselves into office; but the king was so averse to them, that when the famous India bill of Mr. Fox was thrown out by the Lords, he commanded Mr. Fox and Lord North, by messenger, as a personal interview with them would be offensive to him, at once to deliver up their seals of office. This bold act of the king, along with the energy and firmness he displayed, ob tained for him considerable popularity. In 1786 a woman named Margaret Nicholson made an attempt with a knife to assassinate his majesty at the garden entrance of St. James's palace. The coolness of the king on this occasion was a subject of general admiration. The woman was found to be insane, and was sent to Bedlam. In 1789 he had a return of his mental malady, which lasted for three months, and when the cloud had passed off, the king, with his family, and amid the acclamations of the people, proceeded to St. Paul's, to return solemn thanks for his recovery. In 1795 another at-tempt was made to assassinate him whilst proceeding to the House of Lords to open Par-liament in person; a small bullet passed through the window of his carriage, but he sustained no injury from it. In 1793 the Irish rebellion broke out, and the distress of the people had reached its height. The dissatisfaction of that country was very great, and another attempt was made upon the life of the king. This oc-curred in the theatre of Drury-lane. He had just entered his box, and was in the act of bowing to the audience, when a man who sat in the middle of the pit, near the orchestra, fired a pistol at him, and the bullet entered the roof of the royal box. On this occasion the loyalty of the audience rose to the acme of enthusiasm.

Amid repeated cheers, "God save the King," was three times sung by the whole house, with the following additional impromptu stanza made by Sheridan :-

From every latent foe,
From the assassin's blow,
God save the king!
O'er him Thine arm extend,
For Britain's sake defend
Our father, prince, and friend,—
God save the king!

The man who procused this act was called Hatfold, had been in the army, had received Hatfold, had been in the army, had received legit as hore-wounds in the head, was proved to be insuns, and was discharged, and admitted an out-pensioner of Chelsea Hospital. He was subsequently, however, transferred to Bettliem Hospital, in 1800 the Act of Union between Great Pirtain and Teland was passed; but the Great Pirtain and Teland was passed; but the Great Pirtain and Teland was passed; but the Respital in 1800 the Act Tils caused in the retirement of Mr. Pitt from office, when the Addington ministry assumed the government of the retirement of Mr. Pitt from office, when the Great'llle party, with Mr. Fox, one more entered into power, but in 1808 he died, when the Great'llle party, with Mr. Fox, one more entered into office. In the following year this administration of the king regarding Cutholic emancipation; but his majesty remained immovable. "Although I have firmness," said he, "sufficient to quit with the proposition of the have not resolution to beat the oath I have have not resolution to beat the oath I have taken, in the most solerum manner, army coronation." This led to the downfall of the Great-wille and Fox administration, and the accession of Perceval to power. In 1810 the king commenced the 50th year of his reign, when a ubilee of great splendour took place. His faculties now rapidly began to decay. In the following pear he lost the Prmcess Amelia, his favourite daughter, an event which seriously affected his spirits, whilst his former malady returned with greatly increased severity. In 1811 a regency bill was passed; and, from that time, the life of the king may be regarded as little more than mere existence. In 1818 his queen died; but with this event he was never made acquainted, and the duke of York was appointed to the office of custos to his person. At the close of 1819 his appetite became weak, and every symptom of a coming dissolution began to exhibit itself. He had, however, already been dead to the world, having, for some years, been deprived of intellectual consciousness. In 1785; D. 1820, in the 60th year of his reign. George III, was religious and sincere, temperate in his habits, and inflexible in his will. His tastes were of partiarchal simplicity. He loved music, and patronized its professors; he appreciated art, and knighted Sir Joshua Reynolds; he assisted science, and afforded neontagement to Byron and Cook, the navigators. He was a good king, a considerate husband, and a kind father; whilst the morality of his court produced the happlest effects upon the momens and customs of the people over whose destinies he so long swayed the seaper.

George IV. (Augustus Frederick), was the eldest son of the preceding monarch, by Queen Charlotte, Notwithstanding the excellent example of his father, and the strictness with which his education had been conducted George IV., when prince of Weles, full early into habits of dissipation, which debased the better parts of his nature and greatly marred the intellectual endowments with which he was gifted. In his eighteenth year he began to associate with the Whig nobility, and formed political connexions with Fox, Sheridan, and others, who led him into scenes of gallantry, which soon made his name notorious in the mouths of the people. His first attachment was to a Mrs. Robinson, an actress, with whom he fell in love when she was performing Perdita in the "Winter's Tale," Of this scandalous connexion the public prints were full, when, on a sudden, he abandoned this lady for another, and this for another, until he not with Mrs. Fitzherbert, a Catholic widow ady of good family, with whom he formed a more permanent connexion. She, however, was more permanent connexion. She, however, was seven years older than himself, and is said to have been privately married to him. (See Firz-Herrert.) His dissipation, and the building of Carlion House, had now steeped him to the lips n debt, when he was driven into mean expelients for the purpose of putting off, or meeting he pressing demands of his creditors. Thesehowever, were insufficient for his purposes, when he determined to apply to his father, who. however, was so exasperated at his conduct, hat he refused to render him the smallest assistince. He, therefore, curtailed his expenditure, and for nearly twelve months persevered in his virtuous resolution. He sold off his racing stud, and lived in retirement till 1787, when his ircumstances were brought under the notice of arliament. On this occasion the house voted £161,000 to satisfy his creditors, £20,000 to finish Carlton House, and the king added, from nmish Carleon House, and the king added, from the civil list, £10,000 per annum to his son's income. Relieved, for a time, from his pecu-niary embarrassments, he once more assumed his habits of extravagance. For Mrs. Fitz-herbert he had built a splendid mansion at Brighton, which place he raised from obscurity brighton, when place he raised from tosethry into a fashionable watering-place, and surrounded himself with many notorious characters; among whom the most prominent was the countess of Jersey. Under these circumstances the king and his ministers were desirous that the prince should marry; and as he was again weighed down by debt, he consented to an alliance with his cousin, the Princess Caroline Amelia Elizabeth, daughter of the duke of Brunswick. The marriage occurred in the Brunswick. The marriage occurred in the April of 1795, and a place was provided in the household for Lady Jersey. The princess soon discovered the nature of her husband's connexions, not only with the countess of Jersey, but also with Mrs. Fitzherbert, which naturally excited her resentment, when seems of discord, and mutual recrimination and dislike, were the result. In 1796 the princess of Wales gaye birth to a daughter, and, shortly afterwards, the prince sent her proposals for a separation. These were at once acceded to, and George III. undertook the guardianship of the young princess, whilst her unhappy mother retired to a private residence at Blackheath. The conduct of the prince had now so effectually estranged the affections of his father from him, that, when Napoleon I. threatened the invasion of England, Napoleon I. threatened the invision of Engiand, he allowed him only the coloneley of a regiment of dragooms; but, when the incapacity of George III. occurred, he was permitted to assume all the rights of royalty. In 1814 the prince received a visit from the empeor of Russia, the king of Prussia, and other foreign potentates, and treated them with truly royal hospitality. In 1816 his daughter, the princess Charlotte, was married to prince Leopold, of Saxe-Coburg, afterwards king of the Belgians; but she died in the following year. In 1817 an unsuccessful attempt was made upon the life of the prince-regent, when on his way to open the session of Parliament; and in 1820 the Catostreet conspirators were tried and executed for plotting against his life and the lives of the leading members of the administration. On the death of his father, in 1820, he ascended the throne as George IV., and, in the following year, was crowned, with great magnificence, in Westminster Abbey. Previous to this, a process had been instituted in the House of Lords for the purpose of depriving his wife of her rights and purpose of depriving his while of her rights and privileges as quoen of England. This circum-stance, for a time, brought him into great un-popularity. In the same year of his coronation, he paid a visit to Iveland and Hanover; and, in the following year, similarly visited Scotland. The great public event of his reign, however, was the passing of the bill for sholishing the political disabilities of the Roman Catholics, which took place in 1829. During the latter part of the king's life, he lived much in retirement, and ultimately held his courts entirely at Windsor. As old age came upon him, he suffered much from gout and other infirmities, always exhibiting an excessive abhorrence if in the least exposed to the public gaze. B. August 12, 1762; D. at Windsor Castle, June 26, 1830. On the same day proclamation was made of the succession of William IV.

George of Denmark, Prince, was the husband of Queen Anne of England, and was married to her in 1683. There is little to be married to her in 1953. There is notice to he said of him. Lord Dartmouth observes, in his notes to "Burnet's History," "that his behaviour at the Revolution showed he could be made a tool of upon occasions, but King William treated him with the utmost contempt. When Queen Anne came to the throne, she showed him little respect, but expected everybody else should give him more than his due." Again—"After thirty years living in England, he died of eating and drinking, without any man's thinking himself obliged to him; but I have been told that he would sometimes do ill offices, though he never did a good one." Anne bore him nineteen children, of whom only five lived to be baptized, B. in Denmark, 1653; D. at Kensington Palace. 1708.

George, St., was, according to tradition, a young and handsome prince of Cappadocia, who suffered martyrdom under Diocletian. He has been made a kind of Christian Perseus, and a thousand prodigies are reported of him. He slew an immense and powerful dragon, and saved a king's daughter, as the monster was about to devour her. It is in the performance of this deed that he is represented, on horseback, armed with a lance, and piercing a dragon, He was famous in the East, and it was thence that his fame came to the West. This legendary saint is more particularly honoured in England, Russia, and Genoa. The English and Genoese take him as their patron, whilst the Russians adopt St. George and the Dragon as the principal figure in their arsenals and armories, and have given his name to the first of their military orders.

GERARD, Thom, jai'-rard, the founder and first grand master of the order of St. John of first grand master of the order of $8, John of Jerusalem, or the Knights of Maita, m. at Amalil, Naples, or, according to others, at Martigues, Provence, about 1049; p. about 121.

Gerrare, Baltharar, abai-vard, the assessing of William I, prince of Orange. He medicate this design seven years, and at last shot the prince with a pistol at Dult. He declared he committed the number "to explate his sins," the prince being at the head of the Protestants. at Wilfefans, Burgundy, 1555; executed 1551. The roward of dérard's crime was paid to his heirs by Philip II. of Spain, the duke of Parma informing that sovereign, that though the "poor man" was dead, his parents deserved the payment of that " merced, the laudable and generous deed had so well deserved." The sentence pronounced upon Gérard was that his right hand should be burned off that his flesh should be form from his bones in six different places, that he should be disembowelled alive, that his heart should be torn from his bosom and flung in his face, and his head chopped off. This sentence was exc-cuted to the letter.

GERABD, François Pascal Simon, a cele-Grand Market Reset is mon a cele-brated modern painter, who went from Italy to Faris, where he became a pupil of M. David. From 1736 to 1810, appeared his "Belisarius," "Exycho receiving the first Kiss of Love," "The Three Ages," the "Battle of Austerlitz," and "Ossian." All the first her and women of the Francia empire were painted by him; and, in the space of thirty years, he executed more than a hundred full-length portraits, besides an immense number of less size. Amongst others who sat to him were Moreau, Murat,

Gerard Gesner

Letitia Bonaparte, Mesdames Tallien and Récamier, the emperors Napoleon I. and Alexander of Russia, Prince Talleyrand, Louis Bonaparte, and the empress Josephine. He left behind him several unfinished works. B. at Rome, 1770;

several unfinishet works, n. m. grand unfinishet north of Barayn, John, jer'-ard, an English botanist, who, bred a surgon, settled in London, and became gardener to Lord Bardeigh. He compiled a "Catalogus Arborum, Fruiteum, et all the surgest arborum, and seotlearum, and the surgest and the surgest and the surgest and the surgest arborates." piled a "Catalogus Arborum, Frutieum, et Plantarum, tam indigenarum quam exoticarum, in horto Joh. Gerardi," and is the author of the "Herbal, or General History of Plants," published first in 1597, and afterwards several times reprinted. B. at Nantwich, Cheshire. 1545; p. 1607.

Gerbier, Sir Balthasar, jer'-be-ai, a painter who excelled in miniature, was a native of Antwerp, but, being patronised by George Villiers, duke of Buckingham, came to England, was employed by the royal family, and was knighted by Charles I, who entrusted him with a mission to Brussels. He retired to Holland a mission to Brussels. The Futured to England during the civil war, but returned to England at the Restoration, and died in 1607. B. 1592. GERBULLON, Jean François, zhair-bee'-quawn, one of the most celebrated of the French Jesuit one of the most celebrated of the French Jesuit missionaries in China. He wrote "Historical Observations on Great Tartary;" and accounts of some of his travels are inserted in Du Halde's "History of China." He was in great favour with the Chinese emperor, to whom he was appointed mathematical instructor, and wrote two books on geometry, which were printed at Pekin in the Chinese and Tartar languages. B. at Verdun, 1654; p. at Pekin, 1707, superiorgeneral of the French missions in China.

Germanuot (ne Frence missions in Unita. Germanuoto (ter Frence missions) (Unita. Son of Drusus and Autonia, nieevo of the emperor Adrustus, was adopted by his unde Tiberius, and was married to Agrippian, daughter of Agrippa and grand-daughter of Augustus. He was raised to the most important offices of the state, and when Augustus (sed, having the comstate, and the sed of the mand of the army in Germany, the affec-tion of the soldiers led them to unanimously salute him emperor. He refused this honour, continued his wars, defeated the celebrated Arminius, and was rewarded with a triumph at his return to Rome. Tiberius declared him emperor of the East, and sent him to appease the seditions of the Arminians. But the success of Germanicus here was soon looked upon with an envious eye by Tiberius; and he was secretly poisoned at Daphne, by Piso, A.D. 19, in the 34th year of his age. The news of his death was received with the greatest grief. He had had receives with the greatest grief. Ho had had into children by Agrippina, a woman of eminent virtue. One of these, Caligula, disgraced the name of his illustrious father. Germanicus has been commended, not only for his military accomplishments, but also for his learning, humanity, and extensive bonevolence.

GERRARD, of Haerlem, jer-ard, one of the early Dutch painters, and one of the first, after Journal of the painters, and one of the first, after Journal of the painters, and an excellent colourist, B, at Haerlem, 1460; D. 1488, when only 28 years of age.

GERSON, John Charlier de, zhair-sawng, an eminent French divine, who was educated in the college of Navarre, and became chancellor and canon of the church of Paris. He was deputed to go to the council of Pisa, where he largely contributed to the election of Pope AlexanderV. He energetically denounced the murder of the duke of Orleans by the powerful duke of Bur-gundy, and distinguished himself at the council of Constance. B. at Gerson, Champagne, 1365; D. 1429. His works, amongst which are "Consolations of Theology," and "Mystical The-ology," are highly and deservedly valued. They were published in 1708, in 5 vols. folio.

GERSHACKER, Friedrich, ger-stek-er, a modern German writer, the son of an actor, was apprenticed to a merchant at Cassel. Having been ticed to a merchant at Cassel. Having been used, however, to a more exciting life, he resolved to emigrate to America, and having studied agriculture for two years, embarked at Bromen for New York. After some months' stey in that city, he found it necessary to put his hand to anything that offered, and was by turns a stoker in a steamboat, sailor, farmer, silversmith, woodcutter, and inukeeper. Re-turning to Germany, after an absence of six years, he published several books recounting his experience in the United States, many of which were translated both into English and French. In 1849 he undertook a new voyage, with the twofold object of collecting information for emigrants, and new materials for his writings. This time he visited Rio Janeiro, Buenos Ayres, Valparaiso, and California, and went back to his "Vaterland" in 1852, after having touched at the Sandwich and Society Islands, and seen a great deal of Australia. These new travels were published, first in the journals, and afterwards in a collected form, under the title of "Voyages." Gerstäcker is one of the closest observers and most interesting writers of Germany; his tales and travels have met with universal favour, and translations of his best productions have appeared, from time to time, in the "Boy's Own Magazine," and other popu-

in the "Boy's Own Magazine," and ther popu-lar periodicals. n. at Hamburg, 1816. GREVAISE, Nicholas, zhair'-ranis, a Fronch missionar, who went to Siam, and, on his re-turn, published the natural and political history of that country. About 1974 he visited Rome, and was appointed bishop of Horren. He then and was appointed bisnoto in force. He then set out for Guiana, where, with all the other members of the mission, he was murdered by the natives, 1729. B. at Paris, 1622.—His brother, Armand François, was abbot of La Trappe, they, Armand François, was abbot of La Trappe, and wrote, amongst other biographical and theological works, the "Lives of Abdard and theological works, the "Lives of Abdard and Heloise." B. at Paris, 1609, D. 1755.

General, S. of Canterbury, jer-vase, and historian of the thirteenth century, was a monk, and wrote a "Chronicle of the Kings of England," from 1120 to 1200, and a "History of the Archibishops of Canterbury," from St. Augustine to Archibishop thuser, who died 1205.

Generals, of Tilbury, jer-raise, am historian of the thirteenth century, was a native of Til-of the thirteenth century, was a native of Tilof the univeenth century, was a nutive of Til-bury, in Issex, and is supposed to have been the nephew of Henry II. He composed a commen-tary on Gentrey of Monomouth's chronicle; it tripartite "History of England;" a "History of the Holy Land;" "Originess Burgundiorum;" "Mirublia," and a chronicle with the title 'Ostiis Imperialibus." He was marshal of the kingdom of Arles, which office he obtained through the interest of Otho IV.

GESNER, Conrad, ges-ner, an eminent German physician and naturalist, whose parents were too poor to give him an education, which he acquired by the liberality of some of his fellow-citizens. After studying at Stuttgart, he went to Paris, and supported himself by teachGesner ing grammar. He subsequently became Greek being the tutor of Michael Angelo. B. 1449; o. professor at Lausanne, and at Bale took his 1488.—His two brothers, Benedetto and David, doctor's degree in physic, and then returned to and his son Ridolfo, caually distinguished them. doctor's degree in physic, and then returned to doctors degree in physics and the reducted to Zurich, where he practised as a physician, and gave lectures in philosophy. His fame as a naturalist circulated over Europe, and he maintained a correspondence with learned men of all countries. He wrote "On the Collection of Plants," a work of great merit; "Historia Animalium," which is considered his greatest performance, and procured him the name of the "Modern Pliny;" "Bibliotheca Universalis," which has gone through several editions; and produced other works on botany and medicine. B. at Zurich, Switzerland, 1516; D. 1565.

Gibbon

GESNER, Solomon, a Swiss poet and painter whose father was a bookseller and printer, and brought him up to the same business. In brought him up to the same business. In 1758 he published a short piece, in pocicie prose, entitled "Night," which was followed by the pastoral of "Daphnis." His next work was the "Idylls;" and his reputation was increased and extended by his poem of the "Death of Abal," which has been translated into several languages. Besides his great merit in poesy, he was a good painter and engraver, and, in 1765, published ten landscapes, engraved by himself from his own designs. These were followed by others. He was also the author of a "Letter on Landscape, Painting" more for a "Extre on Landscape, Painting "more for a "Extre on Landscape, Painting" more for a "Extre on Landscape, Painting "more for a "Extre on Landscape, Painting" more for a "Extre on Landscape, Painting "more for a "Extre on Landscape, Painting" more for a "Extre on Landscape, Painting "more on the painting "more Landscape-Painting," poems, &c. p. at Zurich, 1730; p. 1788.

GESNEE, John Matthias, a profound German scholar and critic, who, on the recommendation of , was appointed rector of the school at Weimar, which situation he filled eleven Thence he removed to Leipsic, and lastly to Göttingen, where, on the foundation of its university, he was made professor of rhetoric, librarian, and inspector of public schools. His most esteemed works are editions of some of the classics, and an excellent Latin "Thesaurus," 4 vols. folio. B. at Roth, Anspach, 1691; D. 1761.

GETA, ge-ta, a son of the emperor Severus, brother to Caracalla. After his father's death, in 211, he reigned at Rome, conjointly with his brother; but Caracalla, envious of his virtues, murdered him in the arms of their mother

Julia, in the same year.

Julia, in the same year.

GENTINE, Grone, get *lib., an ingenious English lady, was early married to Sir Richard Gethin, of Gethin Grott, Ircland. Soon after her marriage she died, in 1897, and her remains were interred in Westminster Abboy, where a beantifull monument was creeked to her memory.
After her death appeared a work entitled "Releving Gethinium, or gron. Damnins of the liquis Gothiniams; or, some Remains of the most ingenious and excellent Lady Grace Gethin, lately deceased," &c. 1700, $\pm$to. Provision was made for a sermon to be preached in the abbey, annually, on Ash-Wednesday, to commemorate to her honour. She was the daughter of Sir George Norton, of Abbotsleigh, Somerset.

Secretary Notice, or Advocating and Secretary Secretary

selves as painters.

GIBBON, Edward, gib'-bon, one of the most distinguished of English historians, was descended from an ancient family of Kent. was first placed at a private school at Kingston. and next at Westminster school, whence he was removed to Magdalen College, Oxford. While there, he read books of emtroversial divinity, particularly those between the Papists and Protestants, and conceived that the truth lay Accordingly, on the side of the Romanists. in 1753, he renounced heresy at the feet of a Roman Catholic priest in London. His father was greatly concerned at this, and to reclaim this sent him to Lausanne, in Switzerland, under the care of Mr. Pavilliard, a Calvinist minister, by the converge of the was convinced of the was greatly concerned at this, and to reclaim him whose instructions he was convinced of errors of the Romish church, and on the Christmas-day of 1751, just eighteen months after his conversion to Romanism, received the sacrament according to the Reformed communion. While at Lausanne he pursued his classical studies with ardour, labouring to acquire, at least, a creditable acquaintance with the Greek, Latin, and French languages. He here fell in love with the daughter of a minister, a charming creature, called Susan Curchod, but was dissuaded from entering into the married state by the force of paternal remonstrance; and he lived single the remainder of his life. The lady afterwards remainder of his life. The ludy afterwards became the wife of the famous Necker and the beening the who of the lamous weeker and the mother of Madame de Staël. In 1753 he re-turned to England, where he began to collect a noble library; and in 1761 he published, in French, a small volume entitled "Essai sur l'Etude de la Littérature" This production retured to in Internative.

This production was not much noticed in England at the time; but he says in his "Autobiography"—"The publication of my history, fifteen years afterwards, revived the memory of my first production, and the essay was eagerly sought for in the shops; but I refused the permission of reprinting it, and when a copy has been discovered at a sale, the primitive value of 28. 6d. has risen to the fanciful price of 20 or 30 shillings." He was, at this time, a captain in the Hampshire militia, which he resigned at the peace of 1763, when he visited Paris, and thence went again to Lausanne. He next travelled into Italy, and in 1767 assisted M. Deyverdun in writing the "Momoires Litteraires dela Grande Bretagne." Of these memoirs he says, "I will presume to say that their merit was superior to their reputation; but it is not less true that they were productive of more reputation than emolu-ment." In 1770, he published in English a pamphlet, entitled "Critical Observations on the Sixth Book of the Æneid." the design of which was to refute Bishop Warburton's hypothesis as to the descent of Encas. The same thesis as to the descent of Aencas. The same year, by the death of his father, he came into the possession of the family estate; but it was much involved. In 1774 he was returned to Parliament for Liskeard; but though he sat eight years, he never distinguished himself as a Formatine painter, with moment or a good-smith, but, having a stong passion for pull-speaker, always giving a silent yet for the ing, cultivated that art with success. At Flo-rence, in the church of Santa Maria Novello, is his great work, the "Decline and Fall of the his picture of the "Massaure of the Innocents," The his picture of the "Massaure of the "Innocents," The tended to six volumes 40. "It was at Irong," and in the gallery of the Louve at Paris, "The tended to six volumes 40. "It was at Irong," Visication of St. Ann to the Virgin'? Dut, per heads to be called the sources most to be celebrated for musing amidst the runs of the Capitoly, while

GIEBON, EDWARD.

GIFFORD, WILLIAM.

GAY, JOHN.

GALILEI, GALILEO.

GARIBALDI, JOSEPH.

the barefooted friars were singing vespers in bridge, and other works. B. at Aberdeen, 1.88; the temple of Jupiter, that the idea of writing the decline and fall of the city first started to my mind." Splendid, however, as is this his-tory, it must be observed that its author opened a masked battery against Christianity in several places, but especially in two chapters of the first volume, on the growth and progress of that religion. Several writers attacked the historian, nengron. Several writers attacked the historian, to one of whom only, Mr. Davis, who had charged the author with want of fidelity, Mr. Gibbon vouchsafed a reply. He was employed by ministers in writing a memoir in justification of this country's going to war with France, for the part taken by that court in the American for the part taken by that could in the American contest. This piece was written in French, and was greatly admired. For this he obtained a seat at the Board of Trade, which he lost on the abolition of that board by Mr. Burke's bill. In 1783 he returned once more to Lausanne, where he employed himself in completing his history. When he had concluded a work so grand in its subject, and so majestic in its treatment, he thus beautifully describes his emotions:—"It was on beautifully describes his emotions:—"It was on the day, or rather night, of the 27th of June, 1787, between the hours of eleven and twelve, that I wrote the last lines of the last page in a summer-house in my garden. After laying down summer-nouse in grander. After mying down my pen, I took several turns in a bureau, or covered walk of acacias, which commands a prospect of the country, the lake, and the mountains. The air was temperate, the sky was serene, the silver orb of the moon was reflected from the waters, and all nature was silent. I will not dissemble the first emotions of joy on the now assenting the late was consistent of the stab-lishment of my freedom, and, perhaps, the estab-lishment of my fame. But my pride was soon humbled, and a sober melancholy was spread over my mind by the idea that I had taken an everlasting leave of an old and agreeable companion, and that, whatsoever might be the fu-ture fate of my history, the life of the historian must be short and precarious." The French revolution now began to disturb the neighbour-The French ing states, and Mr. Gibbon returned to England, and died in London, 1794. B. at Putney, 1737. After his death appeared his posthumous works, with his memoirs, written by himself, and finished by his friend Lord Sheffield, 2 yels,

GIBBONS, Grinling, an eminent English carver in wood, was the son of a Dutchman who settled in England. Grinling was appointed by Charles II. to a place under the Board of Works, and he was employed in ornamenting several of the royal palaces. He carved the foliage in the chapel of Windsor, the choir of St. Paul's Ca-thedral, and the admirable fout in St. James's Church, Westminster. There is some of his carving in St. James's Church, Piccadilly; but his principal performance is said to be at Pet-worth. D. 1721.

GIBBONS, Orlando, an eminent English musician, who became organist of the Chapel Royal at the age of 21; and, in 1622, was created doctor of music by the university of Oxford. B. at Cambridge, 1583; D. at Canterbury, 1625. He was the best church music composer of his time, and also published madrigals .- His two brothers and son were likewise good mu-

D. 1754.

Ginns, Sir Vicary, was educated at Eton, and at King's College, Cambridge, studied law at Lincoln's Inn, and, through the friendship of Dumning atterwards bord Ashburton, became a Dunning, alterwites note Ashburton, scenar a leading counsel on the Western circuit, and was elected recorder of Bristol. He was engaged in the trial of Horne Tooke, Hardy, and others, for high treason, in 1794, and made himself conspicuous for his talents. He was appointed solicitor-general to the prince of Wales in 1795; soon after became king's counsel; in 1807, was elected to Parliament for Cambridge; was made chief justice of Chester, solicitor and attorneygeneral, and obtained the honour of knighthood. He was made a puisne judge of the Common Pleas in 1812, and chief justice next year. In 1818 he resigned from increasing infirmities.

But Exeter, 1752; D. 1820.

Gusson, Edmund, gib'-son, a learned prelate, who, being sent to Queen's College, Oxford, apwho, being sent to Queen's College, Oxford, applied himself particularly to the study of the northern languages. In 1691 he published a new edition of Drummond's "Polemo-Middiang," and James V. of Scotland's "Cantillena Rustica," with curious notes. The next year he published a facility version of the "Chronicol Saxonicum." with notes. These works were followed by another volume, culifled "Librorum Manuscriptorum in duabus Insignibus Bibliothecis, altera Dugdaliana Oxonii, Catalogus, dedicated to Bishop Tenison, which procured him the patronage of that prelate, who appointed him the patronage of that preface, who appendict him his chaplain. Three years afterwards, his edition of Camden's "Britannia" appeared, with considerable additions; and in 1713 he published his "Codex Juris Ecclesiastici Anglicani, in folio, which procured him the applause of the friends of the church, and much censure from those opposed to it. In 1715, Dr. Gibson was made bishop of Lincoln, and in 1723 translated to London. B. at Brampton, Westmore-land, 1669; D. at Bath, 1748.

land, 1669; D. at Dath, 1743.

Gibson, Richard, known by the name of the "dwarf," an English painter, who studied the manner of Sir Peter Lely. In his youth he was servant to a lady at Mortlake, who, perceiving his taste for painting, put him under De Cleyn for instruction. He subsequently became page to Charles I., and when he married Mrs. Anne Shepherd, who was also a dwarf, the king honoured the wedding with his presence, and gave away the bride. The bride and bridegroom were of equal stature, each measuring three feet ten inches. They had nine children, five of whom arrived at years of maturity, and were of ordinary stature. Gibson died in 1690, in his 75th year, and his wife in 1700, at the age of 89.

Grison, John, R.A., an eminent English sculptor, who, at the age of 14, was apprenticed to a cabinet-maker, but afterwards became a wood-carver. At the age of 16, however, he a wood-curver. At the age of 10, nowerer, he quitted this employment, for the marble works of Messrs, Francis, in Liverpool, who purchas d the remaining portion of his time at the woodthe remaining portion of his time as the weomenical carving for 470. He was now in a congenial atmosphere, and commenced modelling, and working with the chisel. His genius soon began to develop itself, when he was sent, by means of a private subscription, to Rome, for the purpose Gibbs, James, gibs, a Scotch architect, who of studying the works of the great masters, designed the churches of St. Martin's and St. In 1817 he arrived at the "ancient Capitol," Mary is Strand, London; the sente-house, am with letters of introduction to Canova, who gave the improvements of King's College, Cambian a kind reception. He entered the studie of Gilbert this great artist, and, in 1821, took a studio for In 1707 he became the editor of the "Anti-Jacothis great arrist, and, in 1891, took a studio for himself. From that period he resided in Rome, making few visits to his native country. His first work was a group of "Mars and Cupid," which brought him a commission for it to be executed in marble for the duke of Devenshire. It now forms one of the principal features in the It now forms one of the principal learnings in the Chatsworth collection. From this time his fame rose: Jut, to render it the more certain and lasting, he took lessons from Thorwaldsen, the great Danish sculptor. Having, by close application, completely mastered his art, Gibson worked most in the pocitical field of sculpture,

Robert Peel for Westmiuster Abbey, another of George Stephenson, and another of her Majesty Queen Victoria for Buckingham Palace. He was the first modern sculptor to introduce the practice of colouring his statues, an innovation which has occasioned much discussion, but which he defends by instancing Greenan precedents. His tinted Venus, shown at the International Exhibition of 1862, was the subject of national Exhibition of 1862, was the subject of much criticism, but was, on the whole, ap-proved. In 1833 he was elected an A.R.A., and in 1836 a.R.A. Liverpool is especially rich in his works, which are too numerous to admit of recapitulation here. B. at Conway, North Wales, 1791; D. at Rome, 1866.

Gibson, the Right Honourable Thomas Milner, M.P., a modern English statesman, who, in 1837, entered the House of Commons for Ipswich, as a supporter of the government of Sir Robert Peel. In 1839 he became a convert to liberal opinions, and resigned his seat. He then devoted himself to the cause of free trade, and in 1841 was returned for Manchester. In 1846 he became a member of the Privy Council, and vice-president of the Board of Trade. In 1849 he quitted office, and once more became an effective independent member of the House of Commons; and in 1859 again entered the cabinet as president of the Board of Trade in Lord Palmerston's administration. It was to his persevering efforts that the country is chiefly indebted for the remission of three great duties. which considerably tended to circumscribe the dissemination of knowledge throughout the country. These were the stamp on newspapers, the tax on advertisements, and the paper duty, the remission of which Mr. Gladstone announced in his budget of 1860; and although he failed in that year, the repeal was effected in 1861. в. 1807.

GIFFORD, William, gif'-ford, a modern English writer, was the son of poor parents, and was left an orphan before he had reached his 13th year. He was apprenticed to the sea: 13th year. He was apprenticed to the state of the but disliking that occupation, was put to shoemaking, at which employment he continued till he was 20 years of age. By that time he had displayed some indications of genius, when a Mr. Cookesley, a surgeon of Ashburton, sent him to Oxford. After leaving college, he made the tour of Europe, as the travelling companion of a sub displayed the surgeon of the surg of Lord Belgrave; and, on his return to England, settled in London as a literary man. In 1794 he published his "Baviad," a poetical satire, which annihilated the Della Crusca school of poets, of which Mrs. Piozzi formed a leading member. In the following year his "Mæviad" appeared, and exposed the low state to which dramatic authorship had then fallen.

in 1797 he necessite streether of the Anti-Jacobin," established by Mr. Canning and other gewtlemen, and got entangled in a quarrel with Dr. Wolcot, to whom, as "Peter Pindar," he wrote a poetical epistle. In 1802 he published his translation of Juvenal, which Sir Walter nis translation of Juvenia, which Sir Walter Scott says "is the best version ever made of a classical author." In 1805 his edition of Mas-singer appeared, and, in 1816, that of Ben Jonson. Subsequently editions both of Ford and Shirley were published, but not entirely edited by him, his death having taken place before he had completed them. In 1809 he became the editor of the London "Quarterly Review;" and it is in this capacity that he is best known. As a critic, he has been much censured for his severity, with which he mingled no inconsiderable degree of injustice. "He was a man with whom I had no literary sympathies," says Southey; I had no interary sympatines," says Southey; "perhaps there was nothing upon which we agreed, except great political questions. . . He had a heart full of kindness for all living creatures except authors; them he regarded as a fishmonger regards cels, or as Isaac Walton did worms, slugs, and frogs. I always protested against the indulgence of that temper in his against the induspence of that temper in his Heview." Scott says he was good "as a com-mentator;" but, as a critic, the "fault of ex-treme severity went through his critical labours; and, in general, he flagellated with so little pity, that people lost their sense of the criminal's guilt in dislike of the savage pleasure which the executioner seemed to take in inflicting punishment." He held the editorship of the Review till 1824. B. at Ashburton, Devonshire, 1756; D. 1826.

GIFFORD, Andrew, an English dissenting minister and learned antiquary, who was assistant librarian of the British Museum many years. He formed a good library, and bequeathed it to the Baptist academy at Bristol. B. 1700; D. 1781.

GLIBERT, Sir Humphrey, gill-bert, an English navigator, whose mother becoming a widow, married a Mr. Raleigh, by whom she had the celebrated Sir Walter. Humphrey served with reputation in Ireland, and for his services there was knighted. In 1576 he published a discourse to ringarded. In 1976 the pursaissed a discourse to prove the existence of a passage by the N.W. to Cathay and the East Indies. Two years afterwards, he obtained a patent for establishing settlements in North America, and, in 1583, scttlements in North America, and, in 1833, took possession of NewFoundland, where he thought to find silver-mines. On his return from a second vorage thirther, the vessel foundered, and all on board perished, September 9, 1884. B. at Dartmouth, 1839. GLIBER, William, a physician, who discovered exversel of the properties of the loadstone. He was elected a fellow of the College of Physiwas elected a failow of the College of Physi-cians, and became physician to Queen Blizabeth. In 1800 he published a work, entitled "be Magnete, Magneticisque Corporibus, et de Magno Magnete Tellure, Physiologia Nora-in which are many important suggrestions for the improvement of navigation. Indeed, this work contains the history of all that had been written on the subject of the magnete before his time, and forms the first regular system upon it. It may be viewed as he parent of all the improvements that have been therein since made, Lord Bacon, in his "Advancement of Learn-ing," calls it "a painful and experimental work." B. at Colchester, 1540; D. 1603. Gilder, Davies, a distinguished antiquary and man of science, who was president of the Royal Society, and the early and liberal patron of Sir Humphry Davy. His paternal name was Giddy, but he took the name of Gilbert in was Gildy, out he took the hame of Gildert in 1817, on his marriage with the only daughter of Thomas Gilbert, Esq., of Eastbourne, Sussex. He was a man of considerable wealth, which he freely expended on the promotion of science and the encouragement of learning. He was elected member of parliament for Helston in 1804, and subsequently sat for Bodmin from 1806 till 1832. subsequency sat for Bournia from Jove Lin 1952. He wrote a tract entitled "A Plain Statement of the Bullion Question," which appeared in 1811. He was chosen treasurer of the Royal Society in 1820, and succeeded Sir Humphy

Gildas Gilpin

Society in 1820, and succeeded Sir Humphry Davy, at his death in 1829, as president, which office he held till 1831, when he resigned, the contributed to the Antiquarian Society, of which he was a fellow, several curious and interesting papers, particularly in reference to the topography of Cornwall. B. 1767; D. 1839.

GILDAS, gill-das, a British monk, of whose works there is nothing extant but a treatise on the early history of Britain, the best edition of which is that by Gale, in 1897. Lived in the 6th century; but his history is involved in doubt and obscurity—Histop Balle mentions another Gildas, who was a native of Wales, and fourished about 320. He was a monk, and wrote a calendar of saints, yet extant in MS., and Leidan hotices a poet of the same name, who drew up the prophecies of Merlin in Latin verse.

verse.

GILFILLAN, George, gil-fil'-lan, a modern English critic and author, was the son of a minister of the Secession Church in Scotland, and being educated for the ministry, was, about 1837, appointed to the charge of a congregation in Dundee. In 1851 he published, under the title in Dundee. In 1851 he published, under the title of "A Gallery of Litterary Portraits," a sories of critical sketches, which had formerly appeared in the "Dumfries Herald." Besides this, he produced a volume of "Poems and Sorgs," "The Bards of the Bible," "Martyrs and Heroes of the Scottish Covennt." "The History of a Man," &c. z. at Counte, Perthshire, 1813.

GILIMEE, or GELIMEE, gil'-i-mer, last king of the Vandals in Africa, and a descendant of Genseric, took possession of the throne in 531, having deposed his cousin, the feeble Hilderic. Justinian, the emperor of the East, wishing to avenge his ally, or make use of this pretext to attack the Vandals, sent Belisarius against the usurper. This general took possession of Carthage, defeated Gilimer in 534, at the battle Carriage, declared diffiner in 30%, as the attack of Tricameron, and captured the king, who was conducted in triumph to Constantinople, repeatedly exclaiming, as he was led along, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." Justinian made of the kingdom of the Vandals a province of his empire, but gave Gilimer a large domain in Galatia. Lived in the 6th century.

in Galatia, Lived in the 6th century.

Grizz, Alexander, gil, a famous English schoolmaster, who, in 1608, became master of St.
Paul's school, where he educated many eminant persons, and, among the rest, the celebrated Milton. He was the author of several religious treatises and commentaties. E. in Lincolnshire, 1564; D. 1635.

Grizz, Alexander, son of the preceding, whom he first assisted as usher at St. Paul's school, and ultimately succeeded. He retained the he first assisted as usher at St. Paul's school, bendary of Salisbury. Amongst other works, and ultimately succeeded. He retained the position ouly five years, having been dismissed, ancestor, above mentioned; "The Lives of it is said, for excessive severity. He then Latimer, Wickliffe, Huss, and Archbishop Cranestablished a private school in Aldersgate Street, which he lived to conduct for two years only He was eminent for the composition of Latin poetry, and published a volume of his pieces in 1632, under the title of "Poetici Conatus." He contracted a friendship with Milton, and three letters from the great poet to him are extant, and express sentiments of much esteem. B. 1597; D. 1642.

GILL, John, a Baptist divine, who was sprung from parents in humble circumstances, received a very limited education, but by close applica-tion to study, made himself a good rabbinical and classical scholar. He was first established as a preacher at Higham-Ferrars, and then as a preacher at Higham-Ferrars, and that removed to a congregation at Horselydown, Southwark. He wrote a variety of works on divinity, the principal of which are—"Exposi-tion of the Song of Solomon," "The Cause of God and Truth," and an "Exposition of the Bible," in 10 vols, 400, the last-named being his great work. B. at Kettering, Northamptonshire, 1697; D. 1771.

GILLES, Peter, zheels, a French naturalist one of the first who made useful researches into the natural sciences. He visited the shores of the Adriatic and Mediterranean, was sent to the the Adriatic and Mediterranean, was sent to the Levant by order of Francis I, explored the ruins of Chalcedon, and returned from Constan-thople with the French ambassador in 1850. B. at Albi, 1490; D. at Bome, 1858. He wrote "De Vi et Naturâ Animalium," "De Bosphoro Thracio," and "De Topographia Constantino-

GILIES, John, LL.D., gil'-les, was educated at the university of Glasgow, and was for some time a travelling tutor to the sons of the earl of Hopetoun. On the death of Dr. Robertson, however, he was appointed historiographer for Scotland, and distinguished himself by his literary labours. His principal work is a "History of Greener" which is received of the less hear rary labours. His principal work is a "History of Greece," which, in point of style, has been pronounced superior to that of Mr. Mittord. His other works are a translation of the "Ethies and Politics of Aristotle," "A View of the Reign of Frederick II. of Prussia," and the "Orations of Isoorates and Lysias." B. at Brechin, Scotland, 1747; D. 1836.

GILFIR, Bernard, gill-pin, an English divine, who, from perusing the works of Erasmus, was one of the first who embraced the principles of the Reformation. Having travelled on the continent for some time, he returned to England in 1556, and was presented by his uncle, bishop Tonstal, to the archdeaconry of Durham and the rectory of Easington. Being next main and the rectory of Eusington. Being hex-presented to the rectory of Houghton-le-Spring, his labours there, in promoting the reformed religion, became so notorious, that bishop religion, became so notorious, that bishon Bonner gave orders for him to be arrested and sent to London. Glipin prepared himself for the stake, but before he reached London, news came of Mary's death; on which he returned to his parish, to the great joy of his people. Queen Elizabeth subsequently offered him the bishopric of Carlisle, which he refused. B, in Westmore-land, 1517; b, 1588.

GLIEPN, William, an English dirthe and writer, who was the master, for many years, of a school at Cheam, in Surrey, and afterwards became vieur of Boldre, in Hampshine, and pre-bendary of Salisbury. Amongst other works,

Gilpin

Girardin

р. 1804.

GILPIN, Sawry, an English painter, brother of the preceding, began life as a ship painter, but afterwards took to sketching animals, and finally became famous as a delineator of horses. n. at Carlisle, 1733; p. in London, 1807.

GILLRAY, James, gil'-rai, a famous caricaturist and political satirist of the reign of George III. The keen humour and spirit of his works, torne keen numour and spirit of his works, to-gether with his facility of invention, have given him a foremost place in the ranks of caricatu-rists. B. about 1757; D. 1815. Genguéné, Pierre Louis, zhin'-goo-ai-nai, a

French author, who took an active part in the Revolution on the moderate side, and narrowly escaped the guillotine during the domination of the Jacobins. He was sent to Turin as ambas-sador by the Directory, and was made a senator by Napoleon, but not conforming his opinions to by Napoleon, but not conforming in spinions to those of Bonaparte, he was dismissed, and then devoted himself to literature. It constributed to the "Historic Litterature de la France," which had been begun by the Benedictines; but his great work is the "Literary History of Italy," which was published in nine volumes after his death. Sall assisted him in the composition of the last two volumes. B. 1748; D. 1816.

Grocondo, Fra Giovanni, jo-kon'-do, an Italian architect and writer, constructed several buildings at Verona, where he had formerly kept a school, and had Julius Casar Scaliger for a pupil. In 1499 he was invited to Paris by Louis XII., and built the bridge of Notre Dame, Chamber of Accounts, &c. He also assisted Michael Angelo in the works of St. Peter's, at Rome, and published an edition of Vitravius, and another of "Casar's Commentaries." B. at Verona about 1 135; p. about 1521.

GIOJA, Flavio, djo'-ya, an Italian pilot or sea-Groil, Flavio, djo-'ya, an Italian pilot or sea-captain, to whom is asertibed the invention of the compass, which he first used, it is said, in 1830 or 1830. He marked the north with a fleur-de-lis, in honour of the sovereigns of Naples, who were a branch of the royal family of France. B. at Pasitano, near Amalfi, in the 13th century.

GIORDANO, Luca, djor-da'-no, an Italian painter, who was in high favour with Charles II. of Spain, who conferred on him the honour of

Righthood. B. at Naples, 1632; D. 1705. GIORGIONE, or GEORGIO BARBARELLI, Gjor-djo'-nai, one of the carliest painters of the Venetian school, who executed a great number of frescoes, which time has destroyed. It is said that Titian worked under him to obtain his manner of worked under him to obtain his manner of colouring, but Glorgiono percedving his design, dismissed him. His finest work is a painting of "Christ carrying his Gross," at Venice. B. at Castel Franco, 1477; D. 1811. Glotto, or ANGOLATRO, 490-40, an Italian painter, sculptor, and architect, was in his youth a keeper of sheep, but Cimabue (see CMARDY) discovered his talonit, and took him as a pupil. Glotto, following his master in the study of nature, clothed her in more noble forms than he, and was thus the precursor of Rafaelle. Amongst the numerous works of of Rafaelle. Amongst the numerous works of which he was afterwards to be known, and, in this painter may be mentioned a mosaic representing "Peter walking on the Water," in St. ruture, under the title of "Emile." This was Peters at Rome, and a "St. Francis," in the followed, in the next year, by "Au Hasard, mer, ""Exposition of the New Testament," "A Louvre at Paris. In 1334 he superintended the Tour to the Lakes," "Remarks on Forest exection of the fortifications at Florence. B, at Scenery," "Observations on the River Wye," Vespignano, 1276; b. 1336. Glotto was the and "Pictaresque Remarks on the Western friend of Dante, and has transmitted the features Parts of England." B, in Cumberland, 1724; of the poet in a little picture. In return, the friend of Dante, and has transmitted the features of the poet in a little picture. In return, the author dedicated to the painter some verses in his "Divina Commedia." One of the Medici family creeded a tomb to his memory in a church at Florence, and at the foot of his bust placed this line of Poliziano:—

"Ille ego sum per quem pictura extincta revixit.

(I am he through whom the extinct art of painting revived.)

Giraldi, Lilio Gregorio, je-ral-de, an eminent Italian writer, the most esteemed of whose works aca, "Syntagma de Diis Gentium," which is the first treatise on Mythology ever written, and "A History of the Greek and Latin Poets." B.

at Ferrara, 1479; D. 1552. GIRALDI, John Baptist Cintio, au Italian poet and physician, who became secretary to the duke and physician, who became secretary to the duke of Ferrara, and professor of rhetoric at Pavia, He wrote tragedies, poems, and histories; but his principal work is entitled "Ecatomiti; or, A Hundred Novels." p. at Ferrara, 1804; p. 1573.

GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS, jir-üV-dus küm-brens, an old English writer, whose real name was Gerald Barri. He was appointed to several rich benefices under Henry II. and Richard I., and administered the bishopric of St. David, which he vainly endeavoured to obtain for him-When Richard Cour de Lion was setting out on his crusade, Giraldus was named governor of the kingdom in his absence. His principal works are, "Topographie Hibernie," I timerarum Cambrie," "Do Retwa sa egestis," which is a journal of his life, and displays no inconsiderable amount of vanity; "Ecclesie Speculum," in which he censures the manners of the monks. B. near Pembroke, about 1146; D. at monks. B. near remotore, about 1140; B. au St. David's, about 1220.

Graad, Gabriel, *he-ravd, a French abbé, author of a "Dictionary of French Synonyms," a work which has been reprinted, with additions, many times. He was atmoner to the duchess de Berri, and the king's interpreter for the Russian and Slavonian languages. Besides the above, he wrote other works; among which the best known is "Principes de la Langue Française." B. at Clermont, Auvergne, 1677; B. at Clermont, Auvergne, 1677;

p. 1748.

D. 1748.
GIERARD, Stephen, an American millionaire, who came of poor French parents, and being driven from lis home, embarked as a cabib-boy at Bordeaux, and landed at New York. Thence he went to Fhiladdphia, where he got into business, and by his industry and intelligence, combined with his penurious habits, amassed an immense fortune. He left behind him nearly 22.000.000 sterline: and, by his will. did not an immense fortune. He left behind him nearly $2,300,000 stelling; and, by his will, did not leave his fortune to his family, but to found a college at Philadelphia, from which, all ministers of religion were to be creduted. m. at Pérguoux, 1769; m. at Philadelphia, 1831.
GTRAEDT, Emile de, abe-run-dd, a celebrated modern French publicist, who was, up to his 25th year, known as Emile Delamothe. In 1837, however, he claimed the name by which he was extrawards to be known; and in

Fragmens sans Suite d'une Histoire sans Fin." This is the romance of his birth and his early rms sue romance of ms oren and fits entry years. Soon after, he founded two journals— "Le Voleur," and "La Mode." After 1830, M. de Ghardin published successively the "Jour-nal des Connaissances Utles," which aftained, in a few months, a circulation of 120,000; the "Journal des Instituteurs Primaires," of which more than a million copies were sold; an "Atlas de France," and a "Universal Atlas," at a halfpenny a map. All these were published as emanating from "A National Society for Intel-lectual Freedom," and had considerable influence on the progress of popular education. All this, however, did not suffice for his restless activity; and, in 1836, "La Presse" was started, as an organ of conservative policy. The ap-pearance of this paper caused a complete change pearance of this paper caused a complete enange in Parisian journalism, and, attacked on all sides, M. de Girardin fought a ducl with Armand Carrel (see that name), the editor of the "National," which ended faulty for the latter. In 1834 he was elected deputy by the college of Bourganeuf (Creuze), and was accused of electoral corruption. In 1839 he supported the minister Molé against the coalition, and, during the greater part of his career, Guizot had the support of the "Presse." In 1846 this great journalist was excluded from the French chamber, under the pretext that he was not a Frenchman. In February, 1819, he aided the revolution, and penetrating into the Tuileries, presented to and penetrating into the Tulleries, presented to Louis Philippe a notice damunding his abbea-tion and the regency of the duchess of Orleans. After the revolution, M, de Girardin was re-turned to the Assembly for the Lower Rhine, and voted with the "Mountain" party. To him is due, it is said, the gaining over of Victor Hugo to the republican cause; the poet being, with him, the principal clidro of "L'Avene-ment." After Louis Napoleon's comp d'tute of December 2, 1811 M of Gurardin was benished December 2, 1851, M. de Girardin was banished from France; but, two months after, was allowed to return. He again undertook the allowed to return. He again undertook the management of his journal, which he retained management of 185 ournal, which no retained till the end of 1856, when he parted with his portion of the property for a sum which amounted to nearly 233,000 stelling. In 1828 he married Mülle. Delphine Gay (see Manaxe De Grazarrs), who died in 1855. M. de Girardin has left no trace behind him in chamber or assembly; for he is neither the leader of a party, and still less is he an erator; he is a wablishe to caughter the work of the account of the control of the contr a pair, and sun iess is near to can, in is a publicist, a journalist, a great mover of ideas, and his place was in the journal which he created and rendered formidable to every party. There, in "La Presse," one saw M. Guizot, as There, in "La Presse," one saw M. Guizot, as well as the provisional government, each in their turn, supported and opposed. So, too, were the reactionists' movements and the republicans'. General Cavaignae was savagely treated in its columns; Louis Napoleon's candidature for the presidency was there proposed, and supported by every means that could be brought to bear; and once more there was a change in the journal's tone, and it fought hard in the ranks of the socialists and revolutionists. Thus did Girardin raise against himself violent animosities in every party, which he repaid, it is said, by a great contempt for men. In spite, however, of all these changes of opinion, the "Presse" was no less read; and it remained, battle open to all comers. B. in Paris. June 23, 1806,

451

23, 1900.
Grandly, Delphine Gay, Madame Émile de, a French poctes, the wife of the above, received a literary delucation, and at 17 produced some poems, the patriotic character of which procured her the surname of the "luss of the country." In 1822 site obtained a prize from country." In 1822 sue obtained a prize from the French Academy for her "Scurz de Saint Camille;" and, during the three or four follow-ing years, she published many pieces on the Greeks, Romans, Franks, General Foy, Napo-leon, and Charles X.; the latter allowing her from his privy purse a pension of 1500 francs. After several other effusions, she went, in 1827, Arter several other citusions, she went, in 1827, with her mother, Sophie Gay, to Italy, where quite an ovation attended her. In 1831 she married M. de Girardin, and, after this, wrote several fugitive pieces, elegies, and satires. But what, above all, contributed to the reputation of this lady, and to the success of her husband's journal, were her "Lottres Parisiennes," a series, a sorties, consisting ideas, mothished in of sparkling, gossiping letters, published in "La Presse," with the signature of the Viconte de Launay. Madame de Girardin was also the author of several tragedies, comedies, and farces many of which were eminently successful. B. at Aix-la-Chapelle, 1804; D. 1855. GIBABDON, François, zhe'-rar-dawng, a French sculptor and architect, who, after being aided by Séguier, was sent to Rome by Louis XIV., to perfect himself in his art. He succeeded Lo Brun, on the death of that artist, as inspector-general of sculpture. His chief works are the mausoleum of Richelieu, in the church of the Sorbonne; the equestrian statue of Louis XIV. which formerly stood in the Place Vendone, but was destroyed in the Revolution; and these "Rape of Proserpine," standing in the gardens of Versailles. B. at Troyes, 1629; D. at Paris, 1715.

Ginoder, Anne Louis, che'-ro-dai, better known as Girodet-Trioson, a famous French painter, was a pupil of David, and at the age of venty-one gained high academical honous. He afterwards went to flome, and there produced his "Endymion," and "Hipporents refusing the presents of Artaxerses," which are esteomed his innest productions. He also painted a "Seene from the Delago," which is in the Louvre, and which boreaver the prize, although Giroder's old master, David, was one of the exhibitors. Besides these, he painted "The Burlai of Attlia," a full-length portrait of Napoleon I., and a variety of other occalent places, as a Mondargis, 1767; p. 1824.
Geadsprose, the fluth should be William Ewart, glad-stone, the fourth son of a wealthy

Ewart, glad'-stone, the fourth son of a wealthy Liverpool merchant, was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and, in 1832, was re-turned to the House of Commons as member for Newark, in the Conservative interest. In 1834 he was appointed by Sir Robert Peel to a sent in the Treasury, and, in the following year, hecame under-secretary for colonial affairs. In the same year he retired, with his great leader, from office, and, till 1841, continued with Sir Robert Peel in opposition, when, on the return of that statesman to power, Mr. Gladstone be-came a privy-councillor, and was appointed vice-president of the Board of Trade and master of the Mint. In this position he greatly distinguished himself by his masterly defence of the commerwith all its varying shades, during the twenty himself by his masterly defence of the commer-years of his direction, one of the best-edited cial policy of the government he represented, journals of Paris, and, so to speak, a field of and which it was his duty to explain. In Glanvil Glenie 1513 he became president of the Board of Trade, which office he resigned in 1845. In the following year he became secretary of state for the colonies, and adhered to Sir Robert Peel's measure, which proposed a modification of the corn-laws. In 1847 he was chosen to represent the university of Oxford, in which position he found himself so frequently at variance with his friends on the bill for repealing the last of the Jewish disabilities, that, in 1852, he seceded from the Conservative party, and refused to take office under the administrashu retused to take onnee under the administra-tion of the earl of Derby. In the same year he was again returned for the university of Oxford, and clinely contributed to the overthrow of the short-lived Derby government by his masterly speech on the budget introduced by Mr. Disraeli. On the accession of the abbreteen ministry, he became chancellor of the Exchoquer; and under the Palmerston administra-tion, which succeeded it, held the same post; but resigned it in a few days, in consequence of Mr. Roebuck's determination to persevere in his resolution of having a committee of inquiry into the state of the British army before Sebastopol. In 1858 he undertook a mission to the topol. In 1898 he undertook a mission to the Lonian Islands, and in 1859 was again appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer, under the Pal-merston ministry. In the early part of 1860 he brought in his budget, which carried out the principles of free trade in the path of Sir Robert Peel; and, in the following year, he may be said to have completed the work of free-trade legislation by repealing the duty on paper, and removing almost every protective impost which had been left on the statute-book. The commercial treaty with France found in Mr. Gladstone an eloquent defender, and it was mainly owing to his efforts that the bill sanctioning the treaty passed the House of Commons. In 1865 Mr. Gladstone's advanced opinions caused him to be rejected by the University of Oxford, and he was returned for South Lancashire. After the death of Lord Palmerston, he was Chancellor of the Exchequer in Earl Russell's cabinet, which went out of office in 1966, having suffered defeat on Mr. Gladstone's Reform Bill. In 1868 he broughtforward his "SuspensoryBill,"intended to pave the way to the disestablishment and disendowment of the Irish Church. Mr. Disraeli, disendowmentofthe frish Church. Mr. Disrneli; who was then premier, appealed to the country, and Mr. Gladstone's policy being endorsed by the result of the general election, he became premier, and, in 1869, carried his bill against the Irish Church. Mr. Gladstone has gained great reputation as a classical scholar. In 1883 hepublished the first edition of "The State in its Relations with the Churcht"; in 1886, his "Homeric Studies"; and in 1869, "Gurentus Mundi." n. at Iverpool, 1989.

GLENTI, Ranulph de, glan'eni, chief justice of all England, was the grangson of a judge of call England, was the grangson of a judge of

of all England, was the grandson of a judge of the same name who came in with the Conthe same name who came in with the Con-querox. After presiding in the court of Henry II., he resigned, and was sent to prison, at the accession of Richard I., in order to compel him to contribute to the expenses of the Crusada. Ite, nevertheless, accompanied Cearr de Lion to the Holy Land, and was killed at the siege of Acre, at a very advanced age, in 1190. He wrote "Tractatus de Legibus et Consuctation inbus Remi Anglieg," and to him is attributed the famous Wrif of Assize, on "de novel dis-seisin." Beisin."

the Restoration, became a member of the Royal Society, being a zealous advocate for the new philosophy. In 1668 he was presented to the rectory of the abbey church at Bath, at which time he published his "Considerations on the Being of Witches and Witcheraft," in which he certainly betrays a puerile credulity. In 1678 he obtained a prebendal stall in the cathedral of Worcester. B. at Plymouth, 1636; D. at Bath, 1680. Besides the above Glanvill wrote several pieces in defence of revealed religion and experimental philosophy. After his death, his discourses and remains were published.

GLASS, John, glass, a Scotch Presbyterian divine, who founded a sect, called in Scotland Glassites, and in England Sandemanians. In 1727 he published a work to prove that the civil establishment of religion is inconsistent with Christianity, for which he was deposed. He subsequently became the founder of his sect, and wrote several controversial tracts in 4 vols.

wo. B. at Dundee, 1698; D. 1773.
GLAUBER, John Rodolph, glow-ber, a German chemist, who, after considerable travelling, settled in Holland. He was a great follower of alchemy, and expended much of his time in the search after the philosopher's stone. His re-searches were not altogether valueless, for he made some useful discoveries; amongst others, that of Glauber's salts, or sulphate of soda, a neutral purgative. His works are in one volume, an English translation of which was volume, an English translation of which was published in 1688. D. at Amsterdam, 1898. G.EER, Johann Wilhelm Louis, gleam, a famous German lyrie poet, received his education at Halle, and in 1747 was spinited secretary to the Chapter at Halberstadt, and soon after cann of Walbeck. He composed a number of war-songs for the Prussian army, which be of war-songs for the Prussian army, which were very popular, and his lighter compositions obtained for him the designation of the "Anacreno of Germany." He also wrote tales, epigrams, fables, and songs for children, which were greatly in vogue, and have been several times reprinted. A complete edition of his works was published at Halberstadt in 1811-12. in 7 vols. 8vo. B. 1719; D. 1803.

GLENDOWER, OF GLENDWR, Owen, glen'-door, a celebrated Welshman, lineally descended from Llewellyn, the last prince of Wales. For fourteen years he opposed Henry IV., declaring him a usurper of the English throne. B. 1319; D. 1415. In the opening scene of the third act of the First Part of Shakspeare's "Henry IV." occurs an interesting interview between Hotspur and this fiery Welshman, who there describes himself as-

"Not in the roll of common men;"

and further tells us that-"Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made head Against my power; thrice from the banks of Wye,

And sandy-bottom'd Severn have I sent him Bootless home and weather-beaten back."

GLENIE, James, glen'-s, a mathematician, was a native of Scotland, and was educated at St. a native of Scotland, and was conceased as St. Andrews, from whence he removed to a cadet-ship at Woolwich. He was a member of the Royal Society, and was an active opponent of Str Joseph Banks, in 1745, of the duke of Richmond's fortification scheme; for the part he took in regard to which he lost his GLANVILL, Joseph, an English divine, who, at situation. He next went to America, and after being employed for some time on the works at the English poets, lived in the time of Henry III. Halilax, again got into disputes, and had to re-turn to England. He was subsequently appointed preceptor of the Military Academy of pointed preceptor of the Military Academy of the East India Company, which place he like-wise lost through indiscretion. He published a History of Germany, "The Doctrine of Uni-versal Comparison and General Proportion," The Antecedental Calculas, "Observations on Construction, "&c, besides papers in the "Philosophical Transactions." n. 1750; p. 1817.

452

GLISSON, Francis, glis'-son, an eminent Eng-llsh anatomist and physician, who, after study-ing at Caius College, Cambridge, was appointed Regius professor of physic, which chair he filled Régius Professor of pursas, ratus care as for forty years. He went to Colchester on the breaking out of the civil war, from whence he removed to London, and became president of the College of Physicians. He devoted special attention to the disease called rickets, on which he wrote a treatise, and therein described the prolongation of the cellular tissue since called "the capsule of Glisson." He pointed out the peculiarity of muscular fibre to which Haller afterwards gave the name of irritability; and besides various works on physiology and medi-cine, wrote a metaphysical treatise of much pro-fundity entitled "De Natura Substantia Ener-getica, seu de Vita Natura." B. in Dorsetgetica, seu de Vita shire, 1596; p. 1677.

GLOVER, Richard, gluv'-er, apoet and dramatist, the son of a London merchant, was educated at Cheam School, where, at sixteen, he wrote some verses to the memory of Sir Isaac Newton, which obtained considerable applause. On leaving school, he embraced commercial pursuits, under his father, who was engaged in the Hamburg trade. In 1737 he married a lady of fortune; soon after which he published his "Leonidas," an epic poem. His poem entitled "London, or the Progress of Commerce," appeared in 1739. The same year he published a popular ballad, called "Hosier's Ghost," intended to rouse the national spirit against the Spaniards. About this time he distinguished himself as a city politician; and his oratorical talents and knowledge of public affairs were so great, that he was appointed to manage an application to Parliament in behalf of the London merchants; on which occasion his speech at the bar of the House of Commons was printed, and much applauded. In 1753 his tragedy of "Boa-dicea" was brought out at Drury Lane, bul, though supported by Garrick, Mossop, Mrs. Cibber, &c., it did not succeed, having been per-formed only nine nights; his "Medea," some vears after met with greater attention. At the formed only fine lights; his latea, some years after, met with greater attention. At the accession of George III. he was chosen M.P. for Weymouth. B. 1712; D. 1785. Weymouth. B. 1712; D. 1785.
GLOVER, Mrs., a distinguished actress, who, under the tuition of her father, Mr. Betterton commenced her theatrical career at the age of six; and after a highly successful appearance in six; and after a highly successful appearance in the provinces, was engaced by Mr. Harris, of Covent Garden, where she made her debut as Elvina in Hannah More's "Percy," in 1979. She afterwards made the parts of "Dame Heidelberg" and "Mrs. Malaprop" peculiarly her own, her performance of which will long be remembered. Mrs. Glover appeared chiefly at the Haymarket in her later pars, and had few equals in her theatrical walk; her Shakspearian readines also rapided very bith. n. at Newy. readings also ranked very high. B. at Newry,

Camden quotes many of his rhymes, and speaks highly of him. His chief work was a metrical chronicle of English history to the year 1271.

GLOUGESTER, William Frederic, duke of son of prince William Henry, duke of Gloucester (brother to George III.), received the completion of his education at the university of Cambridge. He entered the army, served under the Duke of York in Holland, and subsequently attained the rank of field-marshal. He married his cousin, the Princess Mary, fourth daughter of George III., in 1805, but had no issue by her. The duke usually acted with the Whigs, and was distinguished for his support of popular was distinguished for his support of popular philanthropic measures, especially of the Anti-slavery Society. He, however, opposed the reform bill, introduced by his former political friends. He was of an open disposition and affable manners, and utterly devoid of ostenta-He was chancellor of the university of tion. Cambridge; in which office he was succeeded by the marquis Camden. B. at Rome, 1776; p. 1834.

GLUCK, Christopher, glook, an eminent musician, who, after studying in Italy, visited England, and composed for the opera-house. He next went to Vienna, where he acquired great eminence; in 1774 he went to Paris, and his pieces were performed with such applause that pieces were performed with such applause that he obtained a pension. His principal operas are, "The Fall of the Giants," ("rfte," 'Alceste," 'Iphigenie a Aulide," 'Echo et Narcissa," and "Armide." D. on the borders of Bohemia, in the Upper Palatinate, 1714; D. at Vienna, 1737. Desides his operas, he wrote

Letters on Music."
GMBLIN, John George, me'-lin, a German botanist and physician, who became member of the academy at Petersburg, and was employed by the Russian government to explore, with others, the boundaries of Siberia. The result of his labours was his "Flora Siberica, seu His-The result toria Plantarum Siberiæ," 4 vols. 4to. n. at Tubingen, 1709; p. 1755.

GMELTN, Samuel Gottlieb, nephew of the preceding, took his degree in medicine at his native place, and after travelling in France and Holland, went to Petersburg. The empress of Russia appointed him to travel in Astrakhan, in 1768. He next explored the coast of the Caspian Sea; but, on his journey to Russia, was seized by the Tartars, and died in confinement in 1774. B. at Tubingen, 1743. He wrote "Historia Fucorum," and "Travels through

GMELIN, John Frederick, an eminent physician and chemist, who became professor of chemistry and natural history at Gottingen. He published numerous pieces on the Materia Medica, chemistry, mineralog, and every part of natural history. One of the most celebrated is his edition of the "Systema Nature" of Lin-neus. He was also the author of a "History of Chemistry;" and the world is indebted to him Chemistry; and the word is indebted to film for the discovery of several excellent dyes from mineral and vegetable substances. B. at Tubin-en, 1743; D. at Göttingen, in 1894. Grissera, Augustus Neidhardt, Count, nees'-ain-oo, an able Prussian general, who, at the age of 20, entered into the service of the margrave of Anspach. His first employment was in America, whither he was sent with the auxiliary Ireland, 1781 n. 1880.

GLOCUSTER, Robert of glos'-ter, the oldest of became attached to the Prussian army as a 483

Gobelin

subahers, in 1792; and in 1807 had attained 1678, and was made remarkable by the manner the rank of a heatenant-colonel, and defended the fortress of Colberg against the forces of Bonsparte. For his skill and bravery on that occasion he was promoted; and was afterwards employed in a secret mission to England. In 1813 he was made lieutenant-general, and greatly distinguished himself on the Katzback, at the passage of the Elbe, and at Leipsic; and subsequently, under Blucher, he con-tributed to the victories over the French at Brienne, Laon, &c. On the return of Napoleon from Elba, Gneisenau became chief of Blucher's staff, and greatly contributed to bringing up the Prussians at the battle of Waterloo, and in carrying on the subsequent pursuit. In reward of his numerous services the king of Prussia raised him to the dignity of a count, made him a fieldmarshal and governor of Berlin, and granted him an estate m Silesia. B. 1760; D. 1829. Gobelin, Gilles, gobe'-lö, a French dyer, who is famous for having invented the fine searlet which goes by his name. He resided in the faubourg of St. Marcel, in Paris, where his house still bears his name. Lived in the 16th

GODDARD, Jonathan, god'-dard, an English physician and chemist, who was educated at Oxford, but took his degrees in physic at Cambridge. He was one of the first members of the society afterwards called the Royal, fellow of the College of Physicians, and physician to Cromwell, by whom he was appointed warden of Merton College, Oxford. At the Restoration he lost that situation, on which he removed to Gresham College, of which he was medical professor. Bishop Ward says he was the first Lessor. Bisnop ward says he was the first Englishman who made a telescope. D. at Greenwich, 1017; D. 1674. He wrote on the abuses of the apothecaries, and several papers in the "Philosophical Transactions."

GODEFROI, Denys, god-fivane, an eminent jurist, and a counsellor in the parliament of Paris. Being a Protestant, he was obliged to quit France, on which he settled first at quit France, on which he sottled first its Geneva, and afterwards at Strasburg, where he died in 1021. p. 1549. His works are—"Corpus Juris civilis, cum Notis, "do; "Notis in IV. Libris Institutionum," "Opuscula Varia Juris" "&—"His eldets son, Theodore, became a Catholic, and counsellor of stato in France. D. at Strasburg, in 1642. He wrote on the genealogical history of France.—James, another sou of Denys, adhered to the religion of his father, and became professor of law at Geneva, and a member of the council. z. 1659. He wrote several learned works, and edited Chero and other ancient writers .- Denys, son of Theoand other ancient writers.—Denys, son of Theodore, wrote "Mémoires of Instructions pour servir dans les Négotiations des Affiires concernant les Droits du 16/j. 'fólio . 0.1631.— John, son of the last-mentioned, p. in 1732. He edited Philip de Comines' Memoire, 5 vols. Svo; and wrote the Memoirs of Queen Marsey and Marsey and Memoirs of Queen Marsey and Mar garet, &c.

GODERRY of Viterbo, god'-fre, an historian who lived in the 12th century, was chaplain and secretary to Conrad III. and the emperors Frederick and Henry VI. He laboured 40 years in compiling a chronicle from the creation of the world to the year 1186. It is written in a mixture of prose and verse, and was first printed of his death. His body was found pierced by his own sword, and with many marks of violence; on which account his death was imputed to the papists, and his funeral was performed with great pomp. B. 1021; D. 1078, GODFREY OF BOUILLON, (See BOUILLON, GODFREY DE.)

Godwin

GODIVA, go-di-va, a lady celebrated for an uncommon instance of generosity, the wife of Leofric, carl of Mercia.

GODOLPHIK, Sidney, go-dol'-phin, a poet, born of an ancient family in Cornwall, was educated at Exeter College, Oxford. In 1610 he was elected member of parliament for Helston, where he took the part of the earl of Strafford. afterwards joined the king's army, but was slain in an action with the rebels at Charlord, in Devonshire, in 1643. B. 1610. He wrote several poems, and translated "The Passion of Dido for Phenas," from Virgil, printed in 1658, Svo. He was very intimate with Hobbes, who, in his "Leviathan," thus speaks of him: "I have known clearness of judgment and largeness of fancy, strength of reason and graceful clocution, a courage for the war, and a fear for the laws, and all eninently in one man, and that was my most noble and honoured friend, Mr. Sidney Godolphin." Lord Clarendon says, that great as this eulogy is, it was deserved-

"Thou'rt dead, Godolphin, who lov'dst reason true,

Justice and peace :-- soldier beloved, adjeu!"

GODOLPHIN, Sidney, earl of, a native of Corn-wall, and educated at Oxford, was employed in the public service in the reigns of Charles 11. and James II. In the convention parliament he voted for a regency; notwithstanding which he was made first commissioner of the Treasury;

the public honoured with the order of the Garter; and, two years after, was raised to an carldon. p. 1712.

Godwin, god'-win, a powerful Saxon lord and earl of Kent, who, in 1017, accompanied Canute in an expedition against Sweden, where he behaved with such valour as to receive the daughter of that monarch in marriage, and large grants of land. On the death of Canute, he sided with Hardicanute against Harold, but afterwards espoused the cause of the latter. He was charged with murdering Alfred, one of the sons of Ethelred II., from which he vindicated him-self by oath. On the death of Hardicanute, he joined Edward, who married his daughter; but afterwards he rebelled against his sovereign, and being unsuccessful, fled to Flanders. Having gathered fresh forces, he sailed up the Thames, and appeared before London, which threw the country into such confusion, that the king was obliged to negotiate pears with Godwin, who was restored to his estates. D. suddenly, while dining with the king at Winchester, in 1053.

Godwin, William, was the son of a dis-senting minister, and was himself educated in a dissenting college, and in 1778 became minister of a congregation in London; but soon afterwards took charge of a meeting-house at at fide in 1650.

Goopaax, Sir Edmundbury, amagistrate, who to quit the ministry, and, in 1782 he determined was active in the discovery of the popish plot in literature as a profession, he removed to Lon-

GOLDSMITH, OLIVER.

GRAY, THOMAS.

GEER, CHARLES DE.

GLADSTONE, WILLIAM EWART.

GRANVILLE, EARL.

don as a permanent residence. His first work appeared in 1793, and was entitled "Political Justice," which brought to its author much public notoricty and £700. "Whatever may be its mistakes," says Sir James Mackintosh, in noticing the work in the "Edinburgh Review," "it is certain that works in which error equally dangerous are maintained with far equally dangerous are maintained with lar less ingenuity, have obtained for their authors a conspicuous place in the philoso-phical history of the 18th century." In the panan answry of the Esta century." In the following year appeared his novel of "Caleb Williams," which, whatever may be its merits as a novel, has certainly a political tendency: "a general review of the modes of domestic description, by which was hearned by a state of the modes of domestic description, by which was hearned by a state of the modes of the a general review of the modes of contested despotism, by which man becomes the destroyer of man." For this production he received only £84, although there is hardly another fiction in the English language so intensely interesting. His next work worthy of notice was his "St. Leon," which appeared in 1799, and for the copyright of which he received 400 guineas. It is a supernatural tale, and has none of the merits of his "Galeb Williams," unless it be where he describes Bethlem Galor. In 1801 he where he describes Bethlem Gabon. In 1801 he produced "Antonio; or, the Soldier's Return," a tragedy, which Judger Inflound pronounced "a miracle of dulness," a judarment which was amply proved at its representation; for it was hooted from the stage in the presence of its unhappy author. He next published a "Life of Chaucer," which can elain no presence of the office of Chaucer, which can elain no presence of the office of the next in the dreamness of proxility, if such he merit. In 1805 appeared his "Pleatwood; or, the New Man of Feeling," which, in 1807, was succeeded by his "Faulkner; a Tragedy." This met a similar fate to that which beful his "Antonio," Second other works continued to flow from Several other works continued to flow from the Several other works continued to flow from the profific pen of Godwin; such as his "Bssay on Sepulchres," a "Life of Chatham," the "Lives of the Nephews of John Alitton," and one or two others of a passing kind, till 1817, when his novel of "Mandeville" appeared. This effort was generally pronounced inferior to his former productions in the same path. In 1820, his "Essay on Pamilation" was beneath 1820 his "Essay on Population" was brought out, in answer to the theory propounded by Mathus, and this, in 1824, was succeeded by his Maithus, and this, in 1824, was succeeded by his "History of the Commonweilth of England," &c., which was well received. In 1830, when 74 years old, he produced his novel of "Cloudesley," in 1831 his "Thoughts on Man," and in 1838 his last work, the "Lives of the Neeronancers," He had now filled up the measure of his existence, and haid down his yen to look around him and to die. n. at Wisbeach, Cambridgeshire, 1756; p. 1836.

around him and to die. B. at Wisbeach, Cambridgsshire, 1756; p. 1836.
GODWIN, Mary, wife of the above, better knows by her maiden name of Wollstomeraft, was the daughter of a small farmer. She wrote "Thoughts on the Education of Daughters," a "Moral and Historical View of the French Revolution," Historical View of the French Revolution, and several other works which enjoyed considerable popularity in their day. Her character, however, is pronounced by the "Gentleman's Miagazine" to have been "grossly irreligious, indelicate, and dissolate." Her only daughter became the wife of Percy Bysshe Shelley, the poet. B. either in Noriolk or Yorkshire, 1759;

Peuples," 3 vols. 4to, which has been translated into English. D. at Paris, 1716; D. 1758, Goldon, Charles, gol-do'-ne, an Italian writer, who, at an early age, discovered a propensity to the drama, when his father caused a theatreto be built for him in his house. The Italian The Italian stage was reformed by him; and his comedies. which are numerous, are exceedingly humorous and natural. About 1761 he went to Paris, and became composer to the Italian theatre, besides which he had an appointment at court. B. at Venice, 1707; D. 1793. A complete edition of his works were printed at Venice, in 44 vols. Svo.

Goldscanfire, Madame Jenny, gold-schmit, an eminent vocalist, better known by her maiden name of Jenny Lind, a Swedish lady, who showed a great talent for music when but a child of a great tauent 107 music when but a child of three years of age. After a brilliant career as an operatic singer in Europe and America from 1844 to 1851, she retired from the stage, and married M. Otto Goldschmidt, a pianist. B. at Goldsmith, Oliver, gold'-smith, one of the most distinguished ornaments of English literature, was the son of a clergyman of the Estab-lished Church, who held the living of Kilkenny West, in Ireland. Oliver, at an early age, was consigned to the charge of the village school-master, one Thomas Byrne, a retired quarter-master of an Irish regiment, whose peculiarities are commemorated in the poem of "The ties are commemorated in the poem of "The Deserted Villego," and form one of the finest poetical portraitures in the language. Superapeutily, he was sent to Trinity College, Dublin, and thence to Edinburch, to study physic, where he entered freely into all the social convivalities of the inhabitants. Having because the convenience of come security for the debt of a fellow-student, he was obliged to flee to England; but was arrested at Sunderland, and released by two college friends whom he there accidentally met. He was next sent to Leyden, in Holland, through the generosity of an uncle, Contarine, whose exhaustless goodness and kindhearted-ness to the wayward and thoughtless Oliver do hese to the wayward and thoughtess Oliver do honour to his species. Leaving Leyden, poor but adventurous, Goldsmith, in February, 1755, set out to travel over Europe on foot. On this occasion, and for this enterprise, he was furnished with exactly "one guinea in his pocket, a shirt on his back, and a flute in his hand."

Stockholm, 1821

He partly "disputed his way," by accepting university challenges; and when weary of this, he betook himself to his flute; and "whenever I approached a peasant's house towards night-fall," he beautifully says, "I played one of my most merry tunes, and that procured me not only a lodging, but subsistence for the next day." The remembrance of the festive joy which his merry pipe produced at such times is finely recalled in his poem of "The Traveller." At Louvain he took the degree of bachelor of physic, the highest degree he ever attained. He returned to England in 1756. Being reduced to a lowstate peeuniarily, hebecame usher in a school at Peckham, where, however, he did not long remain, but settled in London, and subsisted by writing for periodical publications. One of his first performances was an "Inquiry into the State of Polite Learning in Europe." He next Down, B. General in Avisional of Avisability, 1405; State of Politic Learning in Bistrope." He next commenced in weekly periodical called "The Gogurar, Anthony Yves, go'-goo-ai, a French Gogurar, Anthony Yves, go'-goo-ai, a French author, who wrote 'Originus des Luix, des Arts, back Sciences, ot de lour Progrès chez les Antes, and the small Luiger. "He, at the sametime, des Sciences, ot de lour Progrès chez les Antes, and contributor to various other publications." Golins Gongora tions; but he emerged from obscurity in 1764, by the publication of his poem entitled "The Traveller; or, a Prospect of Society;" of which Dr. Johnson said "that there had not been so fine a poem since Pope's time." The year following appeared his beautiful novel of "The Vicar of Wakefield." His circumstances were now respectable, and he took chambers in the Temple; but the liberality of his disposithe remple; but the theratity of his disposi-tion, and a propensity to gaming, involved him in frequent difficulties. In 1768 he brought out his comedy of "The Good-Natured Man" at Covent Garden; but its reception was not equal to its merits. In 1770 he published "The Deserted Village," a poem which, in point of description and pathos, is beyond all praise. As description and patnos, is beyond all praise. As a dramatic and comic poet, he appeared to great advantage in the play of "She Stoops to Conquer; or, the Mistakes of a Night," which was produced in 1773, and which is still a favourite with the public. Besides these performances, he produced a number of others; as, a "History of the produced a number of others; as, a "History of the produced a number of others; as, a "History of the produced a number of others; as, a "History of the produced a number of others; as, a "History of the produced a number of others; as, a "History of the produced a number of others; as, a "History of the produced a number of the produced a number of the produced as he produced a number of others; as, a "list-tory of England, in a Series of Letters from a Nobleman to his Son," 2 vols. 12mo. This use-ful and pleasing work was, for a long time, attributed to Lord Lyttleton. "A History of England," 4 vols. Svo; "A Roman History," 2 vols. Svo; "A Grecian History," 2 vols.; "A vols, 8vo; "A Grecian History," 2 vols.; "A: History of the Earth and Animated Nature," 8 vols. 8vo; and other works, all bearing the im-press of an original and truly gentle and beauti-ful genius. In the Pallas, near Longford, Ireland, 1729; In it London, 1774, and was buried in the Temple churchyard. A monu-ment was erected to his memory in Westmister Abbey, with a Latin epitaph by Dr. Johnson, Gollins, James, go't-levos, a learned Urienta-list, who was educated at Leyden, after which he went to France and tanoth the Greek lauhe went to France, and taught the Greek language at Rochelle. In 1622 he accompanied the Dutch ambassador to the emperor of Morocco, who was highly pleased with his conversation. After his return, he succeeded to the Arabic professorship. In 1625 he went to the Levant, and made excursions into Arabia, and, in 1629, returned to Leyden, where he was and, in 1829, returned to Leyden, where he which station he filled with great honour till his death, in 1667. B. at the Hague, 1996. He published an "Arabic Lexicon," a "Persian Dictionary," the "Saracen History of Elmacin," the "Life of Tamerlane," the "Astronomical Elements of Golius, Peter, an elder brother of the preceding, was the author of several works, both in Greek and Latin, and founded a monastery of the Barefooted Carmelites on Mount Libanus. He was afterwards employed on a mission to the East Indies, and died at Surat, about 1673. n, at Leyden. He had a considerable share in editing the grand Arabic Bible printed at Rome in 1671. He also translated some religious manuals into that language.

GOLYDDAN, go-lid'-dan, the bard of Cadwalla-der, the last nominal king of the Britons. Flou-rished in the latter part of the 7th and beginning of the 8th century.

GOMAR, Francis, go'-mar, a zealous defender of the Calvinistic doctrines, who studied at both of the Cavinsate doctames, who studed at both the English universities, and, in 1594, became professor of divinity at Leyden. When Armi-nius was chosen as his colleague, in 1603, a difference arose between them on the subjects of grace and predestination, and Gomar conducted himself in the controversy with great bitterness. In 1611 he resigned his professor-ship, and went to Middleburg, whence, in 1614, he removed to Saumur, and afterwards to Groningen. He distinguished himself by his ardour against the Arminians at the synod of Dort. His works are almost wholly polemical, Dort. His works are amoss whosy potentical.

at Bruges, 1563; n. at Groningen, 1641.

GOMBAULD, John Ogier de, gom'-bolt, a French poet, and one of the first members of the French Academy. His works are tragedles, pastorals, romances, sonnets, and epigrams,

p. in 1666.

Gomm, Field-marshal Sir William Maynard, G.C.B., gom, a British officer, entered the army as ensign of the 9th Regiment, in 1798; soon after which, when only sixteen years of age, he carried the colours of his regiment into action in Holland. He served in the operations in the Helder in 1709, including the action of the 19th September at Bergen. He accompanied the expeditions on the coast of France and Spain, under Sir James Pulteney, in 1801; that to Hanover, in 1805; and that to Straisund and Copenhagen in 1807. He was on active and copennagen in 1807. He was on active service throughout the campaign of 1809, in-cluding the battles of Roleia, Vimiera, and Co-runna. He was present with the expedition at Walcheren, and at the siege of Flushing, in 1809. In 1810 he was ordered once more to the Peninsula, where he served during the remainder of the war: the chief part of the time as assistantquarter-master-general. He assisted at the battles of Busaco and Fuentes d'Onor; at the assault and capture of Badajoz; at the battle of Salamanca; at the action at Villa Muriel; and Salamanca; at the action at viils aurier; and at the battles of St. Sebastian, Vittoria, and Nive. He also took part in the campaign of 1816, including the battle of Water-loo. Sir William Gomm received the gold cross and one clasp for Badajoz, Salamanca, Vittoria, St. Sebastian, and Nive, and the silver war-medal with six clasps for Roleia, Vimiera, Commune Russon, Dunnies Glone, and Nivalla. Corunna, Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, and Nivelle. At Waterloo he was quarter-master-general to Picton's "Fighting Division;" and in 1815 was created a knight commander of the Bath. He long commanded the Coldstream Guards, and was at the head of the brigade, consisting of two battalions, when he attained the rank of major-general. He was shortly afterwards, in 1839 or 1840, appointed to the command of the troops in Jamaica. On his return to England he was appointed to the northern district; and whilst he was holding that command in 1845 he was nominated civil governor and com-mander of the forces in the Mauritius. He attained the rank of general in the army in 1854. He succeeded Sir Charles Napier as commanderin-chief in India in 1851, but resigned in 1855. He is now (1869) one of the four field-marshals of England, B. 1784.

GONDEBAUD, or GUNDOBALD, gon'-de-bo, third king of Burgundy, who ascended the throne on the death of his brother Chilperic in 491. Ho ravaged Italy, and in 499 called a council at Lyons to reconcile the Catholics and Arians, but without success. Soon after this he was defeated by Clovis, king of the Franks, and his brother Godesil; but on becoming tributary to the former, he recovered his dominions. Gondebaud then put his brother to death. He afterwards reigned in peace, civilized his country, and introduced a system of laws still extant by the title of "La Loi Gourbette." D. in 516.

GONGORA. Louis, gon'-gor-a, a celebrated

456

Gonsalvo

Gordon.

Spanish poet, was called by his countrymen the prince of lyric poets. His style, however, is often difficult to comprehend, even to the Spaniards themselves, among whom he has had almost as many censurers as admirers. B. 1562 D. 1627.

Gonsalvo, Hernandez de Cordova, gon-sal'-ve, surnamed the Great Captain, a Spanish com-mander, was descended from a noble family, and distinguished himself in the conquest of Gistingfuished mimself in the conquest of Granada, undeer Ferdinand, and Isabella. Afterwards he was sent to Naples, which he recovered almost entirely from the French. He naxt conquered Apulia and Calabria, and captured Tarento in 1801. Two years after-wards he entered Naples in triumph, and, for his services, was made a constable of that kingdom and duke of Terranova. Ferdinand, however, being jealous of the Great Captain, recalled him, and banished him to his estate in Granada, where he died in 1515. B. 1453.

Goon, John Mason, good, a physician, puet, and philologist, was the son of a dissenting minister, and having been apprenticed to a surgeon, first practised at Coggeshall; but in 1793 he settled in London, as a surgeon and apothecary; and having obtained a diploma from the university of Aberdeen, commenced practice as a physician in 1800. Dr. Good exercised the most indefatigable perseverance in the attainment of knowledge, without allowing the attainment of knowledge, without allowing his literary studies to interfere with the duties of his profession. It is stated of him, that so incessant and multifacious were his labours in 1803, that he was finishing a translation of "Solomon's Song," carrying on his "Life of Dr. Geddes," walking from twelve to fourteen miles a day to see his patients (his business as a mines a dily occes in placents this because as a surgeon then producing upwards of £1400 per annum), editing the "Critical Review," and supplying a column of matter, weekly, for the "Sunday Review," added to which he had, for "Sunday Review," added to which he had, for Sunday Review; added to which he had, for a short period, the management of the "British Press" newspaper. In the winter of 1810, Dr. Good commenced his lectures at the Surrey Institution, which were published in 1826, in 3 vols., entitled "The Book of Nature." He produced many other valuable waves duced many other valuable works, among which is "The Study of Medicine," 4 vols.

which is "The Study of medicine, 2 vol. B. at Epping, in Essex, 1764; D. 1827.
Good, Sir Daniel, gootok, an eminent engineer, for many years chief locomotive engineer to the Great Western Railway Company, and afterwards chairman of that company's board of directors. He was one of the purchasers of the Great Eastern, for the purpose of using her for laying the Atlantic Telegraph cable, which was successfully submerged in 1866. For this and other services he was created a baronet. B. at Bedlington, Northumberland.

GORDIANUS, M. Antonius Africanus, gor-di-GOODLANUS, M. Antonius Africanus, gor-di-d-ma, a son of Metius Marcellus, descended from Trajan by his mother's side, was an ex-ample of piety and virtue. He composed a poem in thirty books, upon the virtues of Titus Antonius and M. Aurelius. Having been pro-moted to the pratorship, and subsequently elected consul, he took the government of Africa in the capacity of pro-consul. After he but attained the 50th were he was accounted from had attained his 80th year, he was roused from man examined his overly year, he was folised from a tranquil rule by the tyranny of the Maxi-mini, and was proclaimed emperor by the re-bellious troops of his province. He long de-clined to accept the imperial purple; but the threats of immediate death forced his compliance. Maximinus marched against him with the greatest indignation; and Gordian sent his son with whom he shared the imperial dignity to oppose the enemy. Young Gordian was killed in battle the 25th of June, 237 A.D., and the father strangled himself at Carthage before he had been six weeks at the head of the empire, 237 A.D. He was universally lamented by the army and people.—M. Antoninus Pius, grandson of the first Gordian, was but twelve years old when he was honoured with the title of Crear. He was proclaimed emperor in his sixteenth year, and his election was attended with universal approbation. In his eighteenth year he married Furia Sabina Tranquillina, daughter of Misitheus, a man eelebrated for his eloquence and public wittens. Gordian conquered Sapor, king of Persia, who had invaded the Roman provinces, and took many flourishing cities in the Bast. For this success the senate decreed him attended to the support of the success the senate decreed him attended in Salated Mistingus, bit Stations in Salated Mistingus his Salated. old when he was honoured with the title of a triumph, and saluted Misitheus, his father-in-law, as the guardien of the republic. Assassi-

rated in the East, 244 A.D.
Gordres, gor-de-us, a Phrygian, who, though originally a peasant, was raised to the throne in consequence of an oracle having told the Phrygians to give the crown to the first man they met going to the temple of Jupiter, mounted on a chariot. The famous Gordian knot took its origin from this chariot. The knot which tied the yoke to the draught-tree was made in such an artful manner that the ends of the cord could not be perceived. From this circumstance a report was spread that the empire of Asia was promised, by the oracle, to him who could untic the Gordian knot. to him who could unite the Gordian knot. Alexander, in his conquest of Asia, passed by Gordium, and as he wished to in-pire his soldiers with courage, and make his enemies believe that he was born to conquer Asia, he cut he knot with his sword, and asserted that the rade was then fulfilled, and that his claims to universal empire were fully justified. Gonzons, George, gord-don, commonly called Lord George Gordon, was the son of Cosmo George, duck of Gordon. At an early age he intered the navy, but subsequently quitted it in account of some dismute with Lord Sandintered the navy, but subsequently quirten in account of some dispute with Lord Send-wich. He afterwards as in parliament for Lug-gershall, and brought himself into notice by his piposition to the bill for granting further tole-ation to Roman Catholies. His intemperance on this occasion proved the cause of the riots in 780, for which he was tried and acquitted. In 780 to wise accommunicated for not appearing 786 he was excommunicated for not appearing s a witness in a cause. In 1788 he was found uilty of publishing a libel against the queen of rance, on which he fled to Holland. A little after this he returned to England, and was account in the district of the state of the actures in Scotland, then under the direction of folm Graham, the master of Wilkie, afterwards ucceeded in his office by Sir William Allan. During the four years that young Gordon tudied under Graham, he had the natural lesire to become an historical painter, but was finally induced to devote his talents to portraitminting. During the entire progress of the scottish Academy, John Watson Gordon exerted himself with commendable zeal to make it what nimed with commendate 22d to make to what it is. It was not until 1827 that Gordon first exhibited in the Royal Academy; continuing his contributions at infrequent intervals until 1835, when he became a regular and important reshibitor. In 1841 he was elected associate of the London Royal Academy. On the death of Sir William Allan in 1850, Mr. Watson Gordon was unanimously elected to the presidential was maininously elected to the presidential chair of the Scottish Academy, and was soon afterwards knighted by Her Majesty, and elected Royal Academician. Sir John exercised his pencil in delineating the features of some of the most distinguished men of his time, among whom may be mentioned Sir Walter Scott, Dr. Chalmers, Mr. De Quincey, the late earl of Hopetoun, the late earl of Palhousie, the Lord reoperoun, the late carr or Daniousle, the Lord Justice-general Hope, the duke of Buccleugh, Principal Lee, the right hon. C. Shaw Lefevre, the late earl of Aberdeen, Lord Cockburn, &c.

457

Göthe Gora

B. about 1790; D. 1804.
Gone, Mrs. Catherine Frances, gore, a distinguished English novelist, who, by her works, did more to familiarize the public mindwith the tone of fashionable manners and conversation than any other writer of her day. Her novels and other works extend to upwards of 150 volumes.

D. in Nottinghamshire, 1800; p. 1861.
Gorer, Arthur, gor'-ge, a Hungarian, who, in 1837, entered the Hungarian life-guards, and, in 1837, entered the Hungarian Hie-guards, and in 1842, was attached to the hussars of the Palatinate; but, in 1845, quitted the army and retired to his own estates, where he lived a quiet life, devoting himself principally to the study of the sciences. In 1848 he appeared as a volumteer in the field, in defence of his country against the Croatians and Slavonians, and was invested with the rank of captain. His time was, at first, chiefly occupied in organizing the Hungarian forces; and, having been sent to operate in the neighbourhood of Pesth, on the Danube, he obtained full powers from the Hungarian prime-minister, Count Batthyani, to adjudicate upon cases of treason and other crimes in a court-martial. This power was first exercised upon Count Eugene Zichy, who had been found guilty of communicating with Jellachich, and upon whom the sentence of death was passed and carried into execution. Gorgei was subsequently called upon to act against General Roth, and was so far successful as to cause that general to lay down his arms. For this Gorgei obtained the rank of colonel. Subsequently he was defeated at the battle of Subseductiny was declared as the bracker of Schwechat, notwiths and ling which, he was appointed by Kossuth as commander-in-chief of the Hungarian armies. Fortune, however, did not smile upon him in the field, and he was shortly afterwards superseded in the command, but had it again conferred upon him. He then won the battle of Nagy-sarlo, and relieved the garrison of Komorn. Hungary was now de-clared an independent state, with Kossuth for its governor, and Gorgei for its minister-at-He next took Buda, but was subsequently forced to retreat before General Haynan. He next rose to be dictator of Hungary; but disaster attended the arms of the patriots, and he submitted to the emperor of Austria, and retired to Klagenfurt. B. at Toporez, 1818.

Gorio, Antony Francesco, go're-o, a learned Italian antiquary, the author of "Musæum Florentinum," or a description of the eabinet of the grand duke of Florence, 11 vols. fol.; "Musæum Etruseum," 8 vols. folio; "Museum Cortenese," folio; "Antent Inscriptions in the Towns of Tuscany," 3 vols. folio. p. in Florence; D. 1757.

GORTSCHAKOFF, gorf-sha-kof, the name of a noble Russian family, several members of which have played prominent parts in the histhere of this house have figured conspicuously before the world, of whom the following particulars may be given :-

GORTSCHAKOFF, Prince Peter, a military commander, took part in the Russian wars against Turkey, and, in 1839, was made governor of Eastern Siberia. In 1839 he became general of infantry, and, in 1851, retired from service. B.

GORTSCHAKOFF, Prince Michael, played a prominest part in many of the Russian wars, and, in 1355, succeeded Prince Menschikoff in the command of the Russian forces in the Crimea, He superintended the defence of Sebastopol, which, however, he was at last forced to evacu-which, however, he was that folded the education ato, making a masterly retreat. в. 1795; р. 1861. Gornsonakorr, Prince Alexander, a diplomatist, represented Russia at various European courts, and, in 1855, negotiated the peace be-tween Russia and the Western Powers. He succeeded Count Nesselrode as head of the chancellerie for foreign affairs. n. 1798. Gossec, François Joseph, gos'-saik, a distinguished French musical composer, the character guistical French musical composer, the character of whose music is light, pleasing, and spirited. He founded the Concert of Amateurs, in 1770, at which the Chevalier de St. George played the first violin. He composed the apotheoses of Voltaire and J. J. Rousseau, and the funeral Hymn for Mirabeau. B. 1753; D. 1829. Gosson, Stephen, gos'-son, an English divine and poet, was educated at Christehurch, Oxand poet, was educated at Christenuren, ford; and held the living of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate. He wrote three dramatic pieces; which he published "Play notwithstanding which, he published "Play confuted in Five several Actions," and "The School of Abuse," against poets and actors.

Görne, John Wolfgang von, ge(r)te(r), the most distinguished name in the modern literature of Germany, was in his fifteenth year sent ture or Germany, was in his intoenth year sent to the university of Leipsic, where, however, he rather indulged in a desultory than a regular course of study. In 1768 he left the university of Leipsic, and went to that of Strasburg, with a view to the legal profession; but chemistry, anatomy, and other kindred sciences commanded to the country of the strain of the state of the st more of his attention than the law. In 1771, more of his attention than the law. In 1771, however, he took the degree of doctor of juris-prudence, and went to Wetzlar, where love for a betrothel day, and the suicide of a young man named Jerusalem, supplied him with subjects for speculation, which resulted in the production of "Werther." This work appeared in 1774, and immediately faxed public attention upon its author. In 1779 he entered the service of the duke of Saxe-Weimar, to whom he had been introduced, and who loaded him with to Kingenhard. Be at Topores, 1818.

Okraits, of Leonitumi, gov[†]-t-as, accidented honours. He was made president of the councardor of the school of Empedocles, was a native cil-claimber, and canobled. He took up his of Leonitumi, in Scilir. A rolden status was residence at Weimar, where he was surrounded arcected to his honour at Delphi. Plato has given by some of the first minds of Germany, and his name to once of his dialogues, Livet alog be, c. where the direction of the theater was confided to his care. Here he brought out the chefts to his care. Here he brought out the early d'autre of Schiller, with splendid ellect, and also produced several of his own dramatic poems. Of these we may mention his "Faust,"—his greatest work; "Goetz von Berlichingen," "Tasso," "Iphigenia in Tauris," "Stella," and "Count Egmont." In 1786 he left Weimar for Italy, and was absent two years, visiting Sicily, remaining a considerable time in Rome. In 1792 he accompanied his prince in the cam-paign in Champagne, and was afterwards created minister. In 1807 he received from the emperor Alexander of Russia the order of Alexander Nevsky, and from Napoleon I. the grand cross of the Legion of Honour. His writings are too voluminous to be enumerated writings are too voluminous to be enumerated here; but we must not forget to mention his "Withelm Meister," a moral fletion; and his "Withelm Meister," a moral fletion; and his "Herman and Dorothea." The lyrice of Göthe are especially beautiful; but his "Faust" is a poom pre-enumently philosophical. a. at Praust" is a poom pre-enumently philosophical. a. at Praust, "Gorzesche, John Christopher, John Sched, a German poet and philosophical uriter, who became professor of philosoph, logic, and metaphysics, at Leipsic. He greatly improved the German language by his works; the private plant of the German language by his works; the private plant of the German language by the greatly improved the greatly in the greatly improved the greatly improved the greatly improved the greatly in the greatly improved the tate vermain language by his worse, and primer pail of which are, "Essay towards a Critical History of Poetry for the Germans," the "Death History of Poetry for the German Language, Toptry, and Eloquence," "The First Principles of General Philosophy," "The German Heatre," "The Principles of General Philosophy," of the German Heatre," "The Principles of the German Heatre," "The Heatre," "The Principles of the German Heatre," "The Principles of Theatre;" "The Principles of the German Language;" "Peems," &c. p. at Königsberg, 1700; p. at Leipsic, 1768.—Madame Gottsched was also a good dramatic writer, p. in 1762.

GOUDELIN, OF GOUDOULI, Peter, goo'-de-lit, a Gascon poet, whose verses have great sprightliness and a delicate simplicity. His works, which are much admired by his countrymen, have gone through numerous editions. B. at have gone invoging humerous ecutions. B. at Toulouse, 1879; D. there, 1629. GOUPFLER, Marie Gabriel Auguste Laurent, count de Choiseul, goot/sen, at the age of twenty-two travelled through Greece and the neighbouring islands; and on his return to France published a beautiful work, entitled "Voyage Pittoresque de la Greec," plendidly illustrated. In 1784, he was appointed ambassador to Constantinople: but the French revolution having disarranged his projects for the continuation of his great work, he went to Russia, where he was made a privy councillor, director of the Academy of Arts, and superinten-dent of the imperial libraries. In 1802 he returned to France, and the year following was chosen a member of the National Institute. He now gave to the world a continuation of his work upon Greece; but became involved in disputes with Lo Chevalier and Las Casas, who had, as he conceived, injured him by publishing their works on the same subject, after having been employed under his auspices. He was made a peer of France by Louis XVIII. B. 1752; D. 1817.

Gough, Richard, gof, an eminent antiquary and topographer, the son of a London merchant, and uppercount, one son of a London merchant, at the age of eleven years translated from the French a "History of the Bible," of which rearry-fre copies were printed at the expense of his mother, who made presents of them to her friends. This was followed by a translation of Fleury's treadise on "The Citstoms of the Israelites," when he was only lifteen. He afterwards studied at Cambridge, and, besides papers in the "Archæologia," the "Gentleman's Magazine," and other publications, he wrote "Ancedotes of British Topography," 2 vols. 460; "The Sopulchral Monuments of Great Britain," 2 vols. folio; an enlarged edition of Canden's "Britannia," 2s. n. 1735; n. 1809.

GOUGH, Hugh, Viscount, G.C.D., entered the army in 1704, and, in the following year, was sent with his regiment to the Cape of Good Hope, which he assisted to capture, and subsequently served in the West Indies. In 1809, as major of the 87th regiment, he was despatched to the Peninsula, where he commanded his corps at the battles of Talavera, Barossa, Vittoria, Nivelle, Cadiz, and Tarifa. For his bravery in these engagements, his armorial bearings were augmented by an additional heraldic device. At Talavera, he was wounded, and had a horse shot under him; but his gallantry was so conspicuous that, on the recom-mendation of the duke of Wellington, he re-ceived brevet rank for services performed in the field, and became lieutenant-colonel. 1830 he was made a major-general, and, in 1837, took command of a division of the Indian army. He had not been long at his post, however, when he was ordered to China, where he took the command of the British troops, when his conduct in the attack on Canton caused him to be made a G.C.D. On the close of the Chinese war, in 1812, he was created a baronet, and re-ceived the thanks of both Houses of Pavliament. Returning to India, he became commander-inchief of the British forces, and entered on the last Mahratta war. After gaining the battle of Maharajpore, and terminating the war, he in of Manarapore, and terminating the war, he m 1845 encountered the Sikhs, whom, with the assistance of the governor-general, Lord Har-dinge, he successively defeated at Moodkee, Ferozeslath, and Sobraon. For his services in this war he again received a vote of thanks from both Houses of Parliament, and, in 1846, was raised to the peerage as Baron Gough. In 1848-49 he was once more engaged against the same enemy, and finally defeated them at Gooierat, though at a great sacrifice of life. lerat, though at a great sacrine of the. For this victory he was again thanked by both Houses of Parliament, created a viscount, with a pension of £2000 per annum from the legislature, and a like sum from the East India Company. In 1840 he returned to England, and retired from active service. In 1854, on the death of the marquis of Anglesey, he became death of the marquis of Angusey, he became colonel of the Noyal Horse-guards; and in 1963 received the baton of a field-marshal on the occasion of the Frince of Wedse coming of age. n. near Limerick, Ireland, 1779; n. 1869.

Goven, John B., a celebrated lecturer upon temperance, who, in his twelfth year, emigraide to America, and became a bookbinder. Having fallen into habits of intemperance, however, he sank to the lowest state of degradation, from which he was ultimately rescued by taking the total-abstinence pledge. He now devoted himself to the dissemination of those principles by which he had felt himself benefited; and acquired a wide-spread fame, both in America and Great Britain, by the dramatic style of advocacy which he adopted in setting forth, upon the platform, the principles he had espoused. B. at Sandgate, Kent, 1817.

Goujon, Jean, goo'-zhawng, a French sculptor and architect, who designed the fine facade of the old Louvre, and other works, which procured him the title of the French Phidias. He curea min the theo the French Findias. He was a Protestant, and was murdered in the massacre of St. Bartholomew in 1572.

THE DICTIONARY

Gournai

Gours I, Mary de Jars, good-nai, a French lady, famous for her wit and talents. She was adopted by the celebrated Montaigne, for whose works, which she edited, she had an enthusiastic admiration. B. at Paris, 1566; D. there, 1645. Her writings were published in one volume 4to.

Gower, John, gour, an early English poet, became eminent as a professor of law in the the timer temple, and is supposed to have been chief justice of the Common Pleas. He was a liberal benefactor to the church of St. Saviour, Southwark, where his monument still remains. B. in Yorkshire, 1325; D. in London, 1402. His works are of the grave kind; whence his friend Chaucer styles him the "Moral Gower." The consist of three parts—"Speculum Meditantis," "Vox Clamantis," "Confessio Amantis." The were printed first by Caxton in 1483. The "Confessio Amantis" is said to have been written by command of Richard II., who, "meeting our poet Gower rowing in the Thames, near London, invited him into the royal barge, and, after much conversation, requested him to book some new thing." Gower, although hardly a poet by nature, had some effect in exciting a taste for verse. According to himself, Chaucer was his disciple, but far excelled him in the true spirit of possy. Goven, John van, go'-yain, a painter of land-scapes, cattle, and sea-pieces, was a pupil of Vandervelde, and possessed great facility and freedom. His works are in consequence more general throughout Europe than those of almost any other master, and such of them as are finished and remain undamaged are highly valued. B. at Leyden, 1596; D. 1656. Govon, Charles Marie Auguste, go-yawng, was educated at the Military College of St. Cyr, and in 1821 obtained the commission of sous-lieutenant in a regiment of chasseurs, from which he was transferred to a regiment of cuirassiers. he was transferred to a regiment of curressers. He gained no promotion under the government of the restoration, but, after the establishment of the Orleans dynasty, Louis Philippe gave Goyon a captain's commission in a regiment of cavalry; and in 1846 he became colonel of the 2nd Regiment of Dragoons. Goyon was thus practically acquainted with the duties of every branch of the cavalry service, but he had never yet been called into the field. It was not till the revolution of 1848 that he first faced an enemy's fire. defended the streets of the Faubourg du Temple, and prevented various parties of the insurgents from effecting a junction at that point. From the time when Louis Napoleon was elected President of the French Republic, Goyon became his most confidential friend, and it may fairly be inferred that the high consideration in which Goyon was that the high consideration in which coyon was held enabled into to being for the President many personal adherents among the superior officers of the French army, in 1850 Goyon was made a general or bigade, and in 1853 was raised to the rank of a general of division. He was appointed adjutant to Napoleon III., in which capacity his duties brought him latto frequent personal communication with the Emperor. In November, 1856, General Goyon was appointed commander-in-chief of the French forces in Rome, which he continued to hold till Pope and cardinals and the populace of Rome. In the year mentioned he was recalled, and raised to the dignity of senator, B. 1802.

GRACCHUS, T. Sempronius, grak'-kus, father of Tiberius and Caius Gracchus, was twice consul and once censor. He made war in Gaul and met with much success in Spain, He married Cornelia, of the family of the Scipios, a woman of great virtue. Their sons, Tiberius and Caius, under the watchful eye of their mother, rendered themselves famous by their attachment to the interests of the populace, which course at last proved fatal to them. With a winning cloquence and uncommon popularity. Tiberius began to agitate for the agrarian law which, by means of violence, was enacted. Being himself appointed one of the commissioners for carrying the law into execution, he was assassinated in the office by Publius Nasica; and Cains, after his death, with more vehemence but less moderation, endeavoured to carry out what his brother had left unaccomplished. out which is brother had the diacomplished. This, in the cul, increased the sodition, and he was murdered by order of the consul Opinius, 121 m.o., about 13 years after the unfortunate end of Tiberius. His body was thrown into the Tiber. Caius has been accused of having mur-dered Scipio Africanus the younger.—Sempronius, a Roman, banished to the coast of Africa for his adulteries with Julia, the daughter of Augustus. He was assassinated by order of Tiborius, after he had been busished 14 years. Julia also shared his fate.—There were others onia and shared in late.—Incre were offices of this name, but they are of inferior note.

Graffox, Augustus Henry Fitzroy, duke of, graf'-ton, succeeded his grandfather in the family honours in 1757; and in 1765 was appointed secretary of state; but the year following relinquished that station, and soon after became first lord of the Treasury, which he held till 1770. During his administration, he was virulently attacked by "Junius." In 1771 the viruently attacked by "Junus." In 1771 the duke was nominated lord privy scal, which office he resigned in 1775, and acted in opposition to the court till 1782, when he was again in office for a short time. After this, he was uniformly an opponent of ministers, till his death. He was the author of a volume of theological essays.

was the author of a volume of theological essays, &c. B.1786; p. 1811.

GRAFTON, Richard, an English historian, who greatly assisted in the compilation of Hall's "Chronicle," and also produced another, entitled "A Chronicle at large of the Affayres of England from the Creation of the Worlde unto Queene Elizabeth," the latter of which was republished, in 2 vols. 4to, in 1809. Grafton was a printer, and carried on that business on an extensive scale, for the time, in London, in the 16th century.

GRAGGINI, Antonio Francesco, gradj-ne, an Italian poet, who was the originator of the Della Crusca Academy; and the author of poems and tales, the latter rivalling, in purity of style, those of Boccaccio. B. at Florence, 1503; D. 1583.

Graham, Sir J., grai-ham, the faithful com-panion and fellow-patriot of Sir W. Wallace, He fell at the battle of Falkirk, July 22, 1208.

GRAHAM, George, an eminent mechanic, who was journeyman and successor to Tompion, the celebrated clockmaker. He distinguished himself not only by the accuracy of his timepieces, but by the invention of several valuable instru-1862, notwithstanding considerable dissatisfaction with his conduct both on the part of the mural arch in the observatory of Greenwich Graham Grant was made under his inspection, and divided by his own hand. He invented the sector, with which Dr. Bradley discovered two new motions in the fixed stars. He furnished the members of the French Academy, who were sent to the north to measure a degree of the meridian, with the instruments for that purpose, and was a member of the Royal Society, to which he com-municated several useful discoveries. B. in Cumberland, 1675; p. in London, 1751, and was Cumberland, 1875; p. m. Longon, 1701, and was interred in Westminster Abbey.

Graham, Right Honourable Sir James Robert George, bart, was the eldest son of Thomas Graham, Esq. of Netherby, who, in 1782, was created a baronet. Sir James reeeived his education at Westminster, and at Queen's College, Cambridge, where he displayed considerable ability, and, at an early age, especially distinguished himself by that kind of practical business capacity for which he was afterwards celebrated. He entered public life as secretary to Lord Montgomerie, in Sicily, which situation he continued to hold under Lord William Bentinck, and was the principal in negotiating an armistice with Murat at Naples. In 1818 he was returned member of Parliament for Hull, upon extreme liberal prinrariament for fruit, upon extreme modes plan-ciples, but did not long retain his seat. In 1823 he succeeded to his father's baronetcy, and in 1826 was returned member for Carlisle. In 1830 he took office under Earl Grey, as first lord of the Admiralty; in 1831 he assisted in framing the Reform Bill of Eurl Grey; and, in 1834, resigned, on account of disagreeing with his colleagues on the appropriation clause in the Irish Church Temporalities Bill. For some years he now held an independent position; but, when Sir Robert Peel, in 1841, came into power, he accepted the home secretaryship. In 1814 he suffered greatly in public opinion, by ordering letters addressed to M. Mazzini to be opened and copied at the General Post-office. His popularity, however, soon rose again by the active and firm part he took with Sir Robert Peel in carrying the repeal of the corn-laws. Shortly afterwards, the government were driven from office on the Irish Coercion Bill. Sir James continued out of place till 1853, when he became again, under the administration of Lord Aberdeen, first lord of the Admiralty, which he retained till the close of the following year. 1855 he held the same office for a few days under Lord Palmerston, but finally resigned. B. in Cumberland, 1792; p. 1861.

GRAHAME, John, of Claverhouse, Viscount Dundee, was "a soldier of distinguished courage and professional skill, but rapacious and profane, of violent temper, and obdurate heart," whose name, "wherever the Scottish race is whose name, "wherever the Scottish race is settled on the face of the globe, is mentioned with a peculiar energy of harred." He com-menced his career in arms as a soldier of fortune in France; subsequently entered the Dutch service; and on his return to Scotland in 1677, was nominated to the command of a regiment of horse that had been raised against the Covenanters, whom he hunted with the utmost energy and vindictiveness. Among other cruel instruments of a tyrannous sovereign, Gra-hame made himself conspicuous by his bar-barity, and has obtained an unenviable notoriety in history, romance, and local tradition.
The services which he rendered to his sovereign were rewarded from time to time by various high offices; and he was finally raised to the peerage by the title of viscount Dundec. E. 1650; killed at Killicrankic, in the hour of vic-tory, in 1680.

Grahame, James, was educated at the university of Glasgow, and became curate of Shipton, in Gloucestershire, and also of Sedgefield, in Durham. He wrote "The Sabbath," a poem variously criticised; but, however heavy it may variously criticises; but, nowever heavy it may be to some, none can dispute the excellent spirit in which it is composed. He also wrote "Biblical Pictures," "Effitish Georgies," and several other poems. Lord Jeffrey, in the "Edinburgh Review," treated his cflusions with considerable provents, and Lord Parene and the first considerable provents and Lord Parene. severity, and Lord Byron calls him "sepulchral Grahame;" but equal judges of true poetry have pronounced different verdicts upon his Musc. Thus Professor Wilson:-

Such glory, Grahame! thou With loftier aspirations and an aim More worthy man's immortal nature, thou, That holiest spirit, that still loves to dwell In the upright heart and pure, at noon of night

Didst fervently invoke; and, led by her Above the Aonian mount, send from the stars Of heaven such soul-subduing melody As Bethlehem shepherds heard when Christ was born.'

B. in Glasgow, 1765; D. 1811.

Grainger, James, grain'-jer, a poet and physician, who served his apprenticeship to a surgeon at Edinburgh. He afterwards acted in that capacity in the army, and, in 1748, took his doctor's degree, and settled in London. His practice, however, was not considerable, and he practice, however, was not considerable, and he engaged as tutor to a young gentleman, whom he accompanied to the island of St. Kitts, at Dunse, Scotland, 1723. He wrote—an "Ode on Solitude," "Bryam and Percene," a ballad, the "Sugar-cane," in blank verse, and translated the "Sugar-cane," in blank verse, and translated the "Sugar's of Tibullus into English verse, His medical works are—"Historia Febris verse, hand a Batawa, an 1764;" and a treatise on the West India Glaceses & W. West India diseases, 8vo.

GRAMONT, Anthony, duke of, gra'-mawng, marshal of France, an illustrious warrior and courtier of the reign of Louis XIV., was descended from the noble family of Gramont of Navarre. and related to Cardinal Richelieu by marrage.

and related to Cardinal Richelieu by marrage, n. 1678—His son Philibert, Count de Gramont, wrote two vols. of "Memoirs."—still popular. Granwy, John Manners, Marquis of, gran-be, a famous English general, was the eldest son of the Duke of Rutland, and commanded with honour during the seven years' war in Germany. After the peace of 1763, he retired into private life greatly helowed he all ranks for his moun. life, greatly beloved by all ranks for his many virtues. B. 1720; D. 1770.

GEANGEN, James, graw'-jer, an English divine, who published a valuable work, entitled "The Biographical History of England," in 4 vols. 8vo. He was vicar of Shiplake, in Oxfordshire, and was seized with an apoplectic fit while administering the Lord's Supper in his church, and died the next morning, 1776. B. 1716.
GEANT, Anne, grant, usually designated Mrs.

Grant of Laggan, a popular and instructive miscellaneous writer, whose maiden name was M'Vioar, her father, after passing some years in America, having been barrack-master at Fort Augustus, in the Scottish Highlands. In 1779 she was married to the Rev. James Grant, who had been appointed minister of the parish induced to publish a volume of poems, which profession, and at various perious preduced nea "Letters from the Mountains" (which have been often reprinted), "Memoirs of an American Lady," "Essays on the Superstitions of the Highlanders of Scotland," "Popular Models and impressive Warnings from the Sons and Danghters of Industry," &c. Nearly the last 30 years of her life were spent in Edinburgh whee sale formed the compact of a highly accomou years of her me were spent in Edinourgh, where she formed the centre of a highly accom-plished circle, numbering among her friends Sir Walter Scott, Lord Jeffrey, Henry Mac-kenzie, and all the Scotch "notables" of the day; and where her amiable character, no less than her literary celebrity, procured her general esteem and regard. B. at Glasgow, 1755; D. 1838. Her "Memoirs and Correspondence" have since been published.

GRANT, Sir Francis, R.A., an artist who spent his entire fortune, and then devoted himself to his art. He became one of the best portrait painters of fashionable life, and was warmly encouraged by Sir Walter Scott. At the commencement of his career he applied himself to mencement of his career he applied himselt to the painting of sporting pieces, some of which were engraved and extensively patronized by sporting men; but he subsequently abandoned this branch of art, and applied himself to portain-painting, and became, por excellence, the artist of "good society." In 1842 he was chosen in A.R.A., and, in 1851, a.R.A. In 1860 how as elected president of the Royal Academy, and was knighted shortly after. B. at Kilgraston, Scotland, about 1800.

Geant, Robert Edmund, M.D., a celebrated zoologist and comparative anatomist, who was educated at the High School, Ediuburgh, where he distinguished himself in Greek and geometry. he distinguished himself in Greek and geometry. In 1808 he entered the literary classes of the university, and, in 1812, was elected president of the Medico-Chirurgical Society of Edinburgh. In 1814 he became president of the Royal Modical Society, and, in the same year, graduated as M.D. His father having now died, he passed some time in visiting the principal capitals of the continent, and, after his return, commenced the practice of his profession in Edinburgh, in 1920. In 1824, in conjunction with Dr. Barclay, he delivered lectures on comparative anatomy, and, during his vacations, devoted himself to original researches upon the animals of the coasts of Scotland. The result of these appeared in the "Transactions of the Wernerian Society. In 1827 he was admitted a licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians at Edinburgh, and, in the following year, was called upon to fill the post of lecturer on comparative anatomy and zoology at the University College, London. From that time he continued to lecture at that institution, and was a large contributor to zoological literature. He was a fellow of the Royal, Linnean, Zoological, Geological, and En-tomological Societies. B. at Edinburgh, 1793.

GRANT, Lieut. General Ulysses S., entered the United States Military Academy, at West Point, in 1839, where he graduated with honours in 1834, and was attached as brevet second licutenant to the 4th Infantry. He was promoted second lieutenant in September, 1845, and served as such through Mexico, under General Taylor, of Laggan, Inverness-shire. She was left a at Palo Alto, Resuca de la Pulma, and Monterey, widow, however, in 1901, and having a large and under General Scott from Vera Cruz to the family to support on but scanty means, was city of Mexico, and was twice promoted for and other constant Scott from vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, and was twice promoted for his bravery. He was made regimental quartermaster April 1, 1847, and when he resigned the service, on the 21st of July, 1851, he was a full captain in the 4th Infantry of Regulars. After his resignation he settled in St. Louis County, Missouri, and moved from there to Galena, Illinois, in 1860. Upon the breaking out of the war of secession, he offered his services to Governor Ya'es, and was appointed colonel of the 21st Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, and served with his regiment until promoted to be a brigadier-general, with commission and rank from the 17th of May, 1861. He was engaged as colonel and acting brigadier-general in several of the contests in south-eastern Missouri: and among his most noteworthy acts was the occupation of Paducah, and stoppage of com-munication and supplies to the Confederates via the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers. The manner in which he conducted the battle of Belmont was highly commended by his own government. After the capture of Fort Henry a new district was created under the denomination of the district of West Tennessee, and General Grant was assigned to the command of it. He subsequently captured Fort Donelson, an important position, where from 7000 to 9000 prisoners were taken, and for which he was made major-general. Subsequently he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general, and, in 1865, terminated the war by the defeat of Lee and the capture of Richmond. In 1863 he was elected president of the United States, as successor to Andrew Johnson. n. in Clairmont County, Ohio, 1822. Granville, George, Baron Lansdowne, granvil, a nobleman of considerable talents, who in 1685 wrote some poetical pieces on the accession of James II. After the Revolution, he lived retired for a considerable time, amusing himself with literary composition. In 1036 was acted, with great applause, his tragedy of "Herote Love," which was followed by the dramatic Love," which was followed by the dramatic poem of "The British Enchanters." On the accession of Queen Anne, he obtained a seat in Parliament, and, in 1710, was made secretary-atwar. The same year, he married a daughter of the earl of Jersey, and was soon after created a peer, by the title of Lord Lansdown, learon of Bideford. The accession of George I. deprived him of his place, and in 1715 he was sent to the him of his place, and in 1715 he was sent to the Tower, on suspicion of being concerned in a plot against the government. He obtained his release in 1717, and afterwards went to Ynnec, where he resided some years. a. in Cornwall, 1607; p. 1735. His works were published in 2 words. 4to, 1732, and included, besides those mentioned above, several other plays and poems. GRANYLLE, John Carterot, Earl of, was the eldest son of George, Lord Carteret, and succeeded to this title at the age of five years. He received his education at Westmister School and Christique, Cox-minster School and Christique, Cox-minster School and Christique, Cox-minster School and Christique, Cox-minster School and Christchurch College, Oxford, and, in 1711, took his sent in the House of Lords. Here he distinguished himself by his carnest support of the succession of the Hanover family, which recommended him to George I., who gave him several important places. In 1719 he was sent ambassador to Sweden, and effected the treaty between that power and Denmark. In 1721 he became secretary of state, and, in 1724, was appointed viceroy of Ireland, where his administration, in a trying season, was generally applianded. He was again no-minated to that office, after the accession of George II, and governed that kingdom with great wisdom till 1730. He was the enemy of Walpole's administration, and moved, in 1731, for the removal of that minister. When this was effected, Lord Carteret became secretary of state, and in 1744, on the death of his mother, succeeded to the titles of Viscount Carteret and Earl Granville, D. 1763. He was a pleasant companion, and a great encourager of learned

Granville

GRANVILLE, Granville Geo. Leveson Gower, Earl, educated at Eton and Christchurch, Oxford, took his degree in 1834. In the following year he was attached to his father's embassy in Paris, and in 1836, and also in 1837, on a new election, was returned member of Parliament for Morpeth. He was now on the high road to power, and in a short time was appointed under-secretary for foreign affairs. In 1840 he was attached to the Russian embassy, and at the subsequent general election, was, in 1841, returned member for Lichfield. In 1846 he was summoned, by the death of his father, to the House of Peers, and, in the administration of House of Peers, and, in the ammissration of Lord John Russell, became master of her Majesty's buckhounds. He subsequently became vice-president of the Board of Trade, and, in 1851, took a large share in "getting up" the Great Exhibition. Under Lord Aberdeen, the became president of the Board of Trade, and under Lord Palmerston, in 1855, filled the same post. He also held several other important posts. In 1856 he represented her majesty at the coronation of the emperor of Russia, and, under the Palmerston administration of 1859, held the office of president of the council. 1868 he became secretary of state for the colonies under Mr. Gladstone. B. 1915.

Grasse, Francis Joseph Paul, Court de, grass, a celebrated French admiral, who played a conspicuous part in the naval wars of the 19th censor tury. When a youth he was captured by Anson, and remained in England for two years a priand remained in England for two years in presence. After many battles with the English in the West Indies, and on the coast of North America, he was defeated by Hood off St. Christopher's in 1782. This reverse was followed in the same year by the defeat and capture of his vessel, the Ville de Paris, by Admiral Rodney, when on his way with a large fleet to attack

Jamaica. B. 1723; D. 1788.

Granian, grav-she-an, a Roman emperor, eldest son of the emperor Valentinian I., was raised to the throne, conjointly with his father, though only eight years old. Afterwards, he be-came sole emperor, in the 16th year of his age. He took as his colleague, Theodosius, whom he appointed over the eastern parts of the empire. His courage in the field was as remarkable as his love of learning and philosophy. He slew 30,000 Germans in a battle, and supported the tottering state by his prudence and intrepidity. His enmity to the pagan superstition of his subjects ultimately proved his ruin. He was forsaken by his troops in the field of battle, fighting against Maximus in Gaul, and murdered by the rebels, 383 A.D., in the 24th year of GRATIAN, a Benedictine monk, who lived in the twelfth century, a native of Tuscany, who is noted for his collection of the canon laws of the church, known as Gratian's "Decretals."

Grav

GRATIUS FALIECUS, grai'-che-us fii-lis'-kus, a Latin poet, contemporary with Ovid. Ho wrote a poem on coursing, called "Cynegeti-con," much commended for its elegance and perspicuity.

GRATTAN, Right Honourable Henry, grad-tan, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he distinguished himself by his ability, and, after taking his degree, went to London, for the purpose of following the profession of the law. In 1772 he was called to the Irish bar, and in 1775, was returned to the Irish Parliament where his fervid eloquence not only procured him the admiration but the love and veneration of his countrymen, whose enthusiasm he raised to the highest pitch. The first public benefit which he was instrumental in conferring on his countrymen, was the partial liberation of Irish commerce which had hitherto because resulty trammelled by vexations restrictions. In 1780 he obtained from the Irish Parliament the resolution "that the king's most excellent majesty, and the lords and commons of Ireland, are the only power competent to make laws to bind Ireland." His speech on this occasion. His speech on this occasion, especially its closing passages, is a fine speci-men of eloquence. The Irish nation now voted him £100,000 "as a testimony of its gratitude" for national services; but, at Grattan's own request, it was made £50,000, which he received. After the union of Ireland with Great Britain, he was chosen member for Malton, and subsequently sat in the Imperial Parliament as the representative for Dublin. He is only now remembered for his eloquence; but Lord Brougham, in a speech delivered in the House of Commons in 1823, says—"He was a man of singular candour, and of great moderation; and suguar canoour, and of great moderation; and from his entrance into public life, to the close of his illustrious career, gave signal proofs of his moderation, of his externe forbearance, nay, of his gentleness." "The purity of his life was the brightness of his glory, says Sir James Mackintosh, n. in Dublin 1750; b. in London 1890 and was buried in Westernetts his home. 1820, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, GRAUN, Karl Heinrich, groom, an eminent Grant musician, who was chapel-master to Frederic the Great. He enjoyed a reputation in Gormany scarcely inferior to that which Handel enjoyed in England; and was the author of an immense number of masses, oratorios, and other musical compositions. B. 1701; D. 1759.

GRAY, Thomas, grai, an English poet, was the son of a money-scrivener in London, and was educated at Eton, whence he removed to Peterhouse, Cambridge. In 1738 he entered at the Inner Temple, but never engaged much in the study of the law. The year following, he accompanied Mr. Horace Walpole in the tour of Europe; but a difference arising between them, Europe; but a diterence arising between their they parted in Italy, in 1741, and Mr. Gray returned to England, where his father died soon after. He now took up his residence chiefly at Cambridge, where, in 1768, he became professor of modern history. n. in London, 1718; n. 1771, and was buried in the family want to Stoke Pogis, in Buckinghamshire. The odes of Gray possess uncommon merit, and his "Elegy in a Country Churchyard" has long been considered as one of the finest poems in the English language. General Wolfe, the night before he made his attack on Quebec, where he fell, declared to his fellow-soldiers, "Now, gouldemen, I would rather be the author of that poem than take Quebec." "I know not," says Sir Exerton Brydges, "what there is of spell in the following simple line—

following simple line—
"The rude foresthers of the hamlet sleep;" but no frequency of repetition can exhaust its touching charm." There are other lines in this delightful poem which we could point out counly charming. "Had Gray written nothing but his Elegy," says Byron, "high as he stands,
I am not sure that he would not stand higher. It is the corner-stone of his glory.... Gray's Elegy pleases instantly and eternally."

GREAVES, John, greeves, a mathematician and antiquary, who, after receiving a grammaand antiquary, who, after receiving a granuma-tical cineation in his native country, was removed to Balliol College, Orford. In 1621 he was chosen fallow of Merton College, and, in 1628, took the degree of M.A. In 1639 he became processor of geometry in Gresham College, and was soon afterwards sent by Archbishop Laud to the East, where he made a large collection of oriental MSS, coins, and medals. He also took a careful survey and measurement of the took a careful survey and measurement of the Egyptian pyramids, and made many astrono-mical observations. After his return, in 1640, he was chosen Savilian professor of astronomy actorford; but was obliged to resign his situation, from the persecution of the parliamentary visitors, in Hampshire, 1602; n. 1632. He wrote "Pyramidographia; or, a Description of the Pyramid's in Egypt;" "A Discourse on the Roman Foot and Denarius;" and other valuable weaks.

works.

works.

GREN, Robert, green, an English poot, we amm of wit and talents, but noted alike for hi, good advice and bad example. He is said to have been the first Englishman who wrote for bread; but whether this be the ease or not, he had great visualty of mind, and a fertile imagination, which he had increased by extensive reading. He crowded simile upon simile, and wrote in accordance with the principles of the Emphean sect, fashlonable in his time. The criticism of Hallam, in his "Likeray History of Europe," is that "Green succeeds pretty well in that forit and gay style, a little redundant in image which Shakspeare frequently gives to his prince and courtiers, and which renders some unimpassioned scenes in his historic plays effective and. sioned scenes in his historic plays effective and sined seenes in his historic plays effective and brilliant." The same critic speaks of his novels, as "deplorable specimens." B. st Ipswich, 1560; b. hi Dondon, 1692.

Ipswich, 1560; b. hi Dondon, 1692.

GEREN, Matthew, an English poott, who was bred a dissenter, which seet he quitted, and ridculed in his poem of "The Spleen." He obtained a place in the Custom-house. B. in London, 1898. b. 1797. His poems, while sees great merit, were published in Docollection, and together, in 1 vol. in 1798.

GEREN, Valentine, a distinguished engraver in mezzofinto, was intended for the legal profession; but left it for the art in which he after wards excelled. He settled in London in 1765; was keeper of the Royal Lorden was not done associate of the Royal Academy; and produces.

1766; was keeper of the Royal Lacademy; and produces many fine engravings from Evynolda, West, thu Dusseldorf Gallery, &c., He was also known as the author of a "History of Worcester," and some other works. n. in Warwickshire; p. 1813 GEEENT, Maurice, Mus. Doc, a celebrate composer of church music, who received his education in St. Paul's choir, under Brind, the organist. He first became organist of St Dunstan's in the West, and subsequently succeeded his former master as organist of St

Paul's Cathedral. On the death of Dr. Croft, he ecame organist and composer to the Chapel Loyal, and in 1788 was appointed master of his majesty's band. Previous to this appointment, he had the degree of Doctor of Music conferred than the Cathedral Combined to Death of the Cathedral Company of David Cathedral Company of David Cathedral Cathedra ne had the degree of Doctor of Music conferred in him at Cambridge, for his exercise on Pope's Ode on St. Cecilia's Day." The fame of Doctor Greene rests on his "Forty Anthems, for one, wo, three, four, five, six, seven, and eight roices." These place him at the top of English ecclesiastical music composers. B. in London 194: p. 1755.

GREENOUGH, Horatio, green-uf, a distinguished American sculptor, who, at an early age, displayed a talent for drawing and modelage, distance it adjusts to revising and model-ling, and adopted sculpture for his profession. With the view of studying his art at its source, is proceeded to Rome, where he remained for ome years; but his health giving way, he was orced to revisit his native country. He soon eturned to Europe, however, and, fitting up a studio at Florence, devoted himself to his art. Here he produced his colossal statue of Washington, now in the grounds of the Capitol at Washington, and the "Pioneer's Struggle," now in the Capitol itself. In 1851 he returned to America to creet his group of the "Rescue," but his health was such as gave no prospect of his being able to continue his professional studies. B. at Boston, Massachusetts, 1805: D. 1852.

GREENVILLE, Sir Richard, green'-vil, a gallant English officer, who served in the imperial army in Hungary, against the Turks, and, on his return, engaged in the reduction of Ireland, In 1551 he represented Cornwall in Parliament, about which time he received the honour of knighthood. In 1585 he undertook an expedition to America, and in 1591 was appointed vice-admiral of a squadron sent out to intercept a rich Spanish fleet. He proceeded as far as the Western Islands, and while there, a powerful squadron was sent from Spain to escort the plate fleet. On their approach the English admiral, Thomas Howard, proceeded to sea; but Greenville, in the Revenge, staying to take out creenvine, in the kevenge, staying to take on board some of his sick crew, was surrounded by the whole Spanish fleet. He defended his ship with the utmost bravery, and, after receiving several wounds, was about to sink her, but was carried on board the Spanish her, but was carried on nource the expenses admiral's ship, where he died three days after, 2, in Devonshire, 1540.

GERGOEX, gregi-ore, king of Scotland, contemporary with Alfred, succeeded to the throne in 876. He delivered his country from the Danes, control the accusting of Companying of Com acquired the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, performed many brilliant exploits in Ireland, and built the city of Aberdeen. D. 898.

Ireland, and built the city of Aberdeen. D. 983.
GEBORY THE GEREN, Pope, was appointed prefect of the city of Rome, and held other civil dignities; but, being inclined to a religious life, he retired to the monastery of St. Andrew, of which he became abobt. On the death of Pelaguas II., in 590, he was elected pope.
E. 544; D. 693. He sent Augustin the monk to convert the English to Christianity.
GERGORY II., St., succeeded Constantine in the pontificate in 715, and died in 731.

GREGORY III., a native of Syris, succeeded to the pontificate in 731, and died in 741. He sent legates to Charles Martel to demand succour against the Lombards, which embasy is considered to be the origin of the apostolic nuncios in France.

Gregory

GREGORY IV., a native of Rome, succeeded to the pontificate in 827, and was greatly esteemed for his learning and picty. D. 844.

GREGORY V., a native of Germany, and a kinsman of the emperor Otho, was elevated to the pontificate in 996. An anti-pope, named John XVII., was set up against him by Crescentius, consul of Rome, but was expelled by the

tus, constit of rooms, but was expended by the emperor. D. in 399.

Gregory VI., a native of Rome, was elected pope in 1044. Finding the lands and revenues of the church greatly diminished by usurpa-tions, and the roads infested by robbers, he acted with such vigour, that a powerful party was raised against him by those who had been accustomed to live by plunder. At a council held at Sutri in 1046, Gregory abdicated the pontificate.

GREGORY VII. was the son of a carpenter of Soano, in Tuscany, and succeeded to the pontifi-cate in 1073. This pope formed vast projects for the reform of the church, and in attempting to execute them assumed unexampled powers. But he was embroiled with the emperor Henry IV., and after a violent struggle, retired to Salerno, where he died in 1085.

GREGORY VIII. succeeded Urban III. in 1187 and died the same year, after having exhorted the Christian princes to undertake a new cru-He is not to be confounded with the an i-pope Bourdin, who assumed the same name in 1118. B. at Benevento.

GREGORY IX. was nephew of Innocent III., of the family of the counts of Segni. He was elected pope in 1227, and caused a new crusade to be undertaken, in which the emperor Frederick II. engaged, notwithstanding which he twice excommunicated that prince. D. 1241.

GREGORY X., of the illustrious family of Visconti, was elected pope in 1271, at which time he was in the Holy Land. He assembled a council at Lyons, to promote a union between the Eastern and Western churches, and other objects. p. 1276.

GREGORY XI., Peter Roger, a native of Limousin, in France, was a nephew of Clement VI., and son of the count of Beaufort. He was elevated to the pontificate in 1370, was a patron of learning, and endeavoured to reconcile the princes of Christendom, and to reform the reliprinces of Christendom, and to reform the reli-rious societies. He transferred the papal see from Avignon to Rome, where he died, 1878. Gangory XIII, Angelo Coratio, a native of Venice, was raised to the pontificate in 1408, during the schism in the Bast; Benedic XIII. being the other pope. Both were deposed by a council held at Pisa, and Alexander V. elected in their stead. Gregory submitted, and laid aside the pontifical dignity. D. 1417. Garsoow XIIII, a native of Bologna, suc-ceded Pius V. in 1872. He embellished Rome with many fine buildings: but that which more with many fine buildings; but that which more with many map disclings; but that which more particularly marks his government, is the reform of the calendar which goes by his name. He contributed greatly to correct and amend Gratian's "Docretals," which he enriched with learned notes. D. 1855.

GREGORY XIV., Nicholas Skondrate, succeeded Urban VII. in 1890. He was the son of a senator of Milan, and involved himself in among which is one entitled "Epistola ad Regem Persarum, Schah Abbas, cum Notis Hegalsoni," 8vo, 1627. p. 1623. Gregory XVI., Mauro Capellari, was elected pope in 1831. He was a man of respectable character, but bigoted and exclusive. p. 1846, and was succeeded by Pius IX.

Gregory

Garcory, Goorge Florence, commonly called Gregory of Tours, a Romish saint, was chosen bishop of Tours in 573, and, in 573, distinguished himself in a connoil at Paris. He is said to have converted Chilperic from Pelaglanism. B, at Auvergne, 544; D. 595. Gregory was the author of a History of the Franks, in 10 books; and other works.

GREGORY NAZIANZEN, bishop of Constantinople, wrote poems to furnish the Christian youth with subjects for study when Julian prohibited Christians from reading the books of the Gentiles. In 378 he was appointed by the council of Antioch, to go to Constantinople to suppres-Arianism, and was there chosen bishop. He afterwards resigned that see and retired to his native country, where he died, in 389. B. about 325, near Nazianzus, in Cappadocia.

Gregory Nyssen, the younger brother of St. Basil, was bishop of Nyssa, in Cappadocia, but was deposed by the Arian faction. Ho but was deposed by the Arian faction. He drew up the Nicene creed, by order of the council of Constantinople. D. about 395. Its works were published at Paris in 1615, in 2 vols. folio.

GREGORY, James, a celebrated mathematician, Margory, Janes, a ceterrated mathematican, who, at an early age, discovered a genius for the mathematics, which he cultivated with eagerness in the Marischal college of Aberdeen. In 1663 he published his "Optica Promota," in which he announced the invention of the reflecting telescope, which spread his name over Europe. Soon after this he made a tour to Europe. Soon after this he made a tout to Italy, and resided some years at Padua, where he published his "Vera Circuli et Hyperbola Quadratura," &c., in which appeared an account of his discovery of an infinitely converging series for the areas of the circle and hyperbola, and the mode of computing them. Soon after his return to England he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, and engaged in a controversy with Huygens on the subject of his treatise on the quadrature of the circle. In 1663 he was appointed professor of mathematics in the uniappointed processor of inhaltenances in the three versity of St. Andrew's. He had an amicable controversy with Newton concerning the reflecting telescope; in the course of which he suggested the idea of a burning concave mirror, which came into universal repute. In 1674 he became professor of mathematics at Edinburgh, overane processor to mattenances at European where he died in the year following, after being struck with sudden blindness as he was letturing. In at Aberdeen, 1633. His "Opties" were translated into English by Dr. Desaguliers, and several of his papers are in the "Philosophieal Transactions.

GREGORY, David, nephew of the above, comof the calendar which goes by his name. He contributed greatly to correct and amend Grapter in the contributed greatly to correct and smed for the contributed greatly to correct and smed greatly to correct and smed greatly to contribute the contributed greatly which he enriched with learned notes p. 1858.

Gregory XIV. Nicholas Sfondrate, socieded Urban VII. in 1890. He was the son of a senator of Milan, and involved himself in a unsuccessful war against Henry IV. of Oxford. In 1895 he published his "Catoptries Gregory and the contribution of the contribution in 1702, and entitled "Astronomic Physics et tute, and deprived of his bishoprie, and spent Geometrice Elementa," [bilo. It was after the remainder of his life in retirement. The words translated into English in 2 vols. Svo. bishop of Bibs was also distinguished as a in 1702, and entitled "Astronomic Physicae et Geometrica Elementa," folio. It was after-wards translated into English in 2 vols, 8vo. In 1703 he published a splendid edition of Euclid's works in folio. B. at Aberdeen, 1061; D. while charged in superintending an edition of "Apollonius's Conies," in 1710. After his death appeared a treatise on logarithms, and another on practical geometry.—His brother James, when David was made Savilian professor at Oxford, as mentioned above, became professor of mathematics at Edinburgh, and held the post for thirty-three years. His other brother, Charles, was professor of mathematics at St. Andrew's thirty-two years, and was succeeded by his son, David, who published a system of arithmetic and algebra in Latin. Of this family, sixteen have held British professorships. There are few names, therefore, more illustrious in the annals of science and literature.

GREGORY, John, a physician, the son of Dr. James Gregory, professor of medicine in King's College, Aberdeen. After studying at his native place, he removed to Edinburgh, and thence to Leyden. In 1745 he obtained the degree of Leyden. In 1740 ne operation one agree of dector of physic, and became professor of philosophy at Aberdeen, which he exchanged in 1749 for that of physic. About 1751 he settled in London, and was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society. In 1766, he also became professor of where, in 1766, no also became professor, buysie. n. at Aberdeen, 1724; n. at Edinburgh, 1773. His works are, on the "Duties and Offices of a Physiciam," Svo; "Elements of the Practice of Physic," Svo; "A Father's Legacy to his Daughters," 12mo. All his productions have been collected into four volumes.

GREGORY, Olinthus, LL.D., commenced his literary career at the age of nineteen; but the works which chiefly brought him into notice were his "Treatise on Astronomy" and the "Pantalogia," a comprehensive dictionary of the arts and sciences, of which he undertook the general editorship. Through the interest of Dr. Hutton, he was nominated, in 1802, mathematical master at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, in which establishment he eventually or ouwers, in which establishment be eventually obtained the professor's chair, filling it with reputation until he was obliged through ill-health to resign it in 1838. Besides the works above moutes of our analysis of the stable of the sta above mentioned, and many others, Dr. Gregory wrote "Elements of Plane and Spherical Trigowrote "Element of Piano and Sphereal Progo-mometry," Mathematics for Fractical Men," "Letters to a Friend, on the Evidences, Doc-trines, and Duties of the Christian Religion," 2 vols; and "Memoirs of the Life, Writings, &c., of the late John Mason Good, M.D." n. in Ec, of the lat John Mason Good, M.D." B. In Illustingtonshire, 1774; p. 1841. Geegothe, Henry, Count, bishop of Blois, grad-prive, a French prelate, was nominated by the elergy of his province a member of the states-general; and in the constituent assembly distinguished himself by the boliness of his opinions relative to civil and religious liberty, He was among the first of the elergy who swore feelilits to the constitution, but driving the fidelity to the constitution; but during the Reign of Terror, when the bishop of Paris abdicated his office, and several of the clergy abjured Christianity, the bishop of Blois stood forward as the supporter of the religion of his country. He also opposed the accession of the first con-sul to the throne of France, and, alone, ob-jected to the obsequious address of the senate to the new sovereign. On the restoration of Queen v the Bourbons, he was excluded from the Instibishop of Blois was also distinguished as a literary character. Among his writings are "Essal sur l'Amélioration Politique, Physique, et Morale des Juifs," "Mémoires en fuveur des Gons de Conleur, ou Sang-môlés de St. Do-minique;" "Essai Historique sur les Libertés de Petries Galliemen," "Les Ruines de Port Royal," &c. n. 1750; p. 1831. Gusta, Samuel Carlowitz, greeg, a distin-uished naval officer in the Bussian service, was native of Societaria and first served in the name a native of Scotland, and first served in the navy of Great Britain. He distinguished himself at the defeat of Conflans by Admiral Hawke, the taking of the Havannah, and on other occasions. After the peace of 1763, he entered the Russian service; and, at the buttle of Chio, contributed greatly to the destruction of the whole of the Turkish fleet. The empress premoted him to the chief command of the Russian navy, gave him an estate in Livonia, and honoured him with many other marks of her favour. D. 1788.

GRENVILLE, George, gren'-vil, a British statesman in the reigns of George II and George III., entered Parliament as member for Buckinghamshire, and was distinguished for his elonghamshire, and was distinguished for his elo-quence. He filled successively the situations of treasurer of the navy, first lord of the Admi-ralty, and first lord of the Treasury. In 1763 he became chancellor of the Exchequer, but, in 1765, he resigned his post to the Marquis of Rockingham. He published "Considerations on the Commerce and Finances of England, and on the Measures taken by the Ministers," &c., in reply to attacks made on his administration by the press. D. 1770. He was a younger bro-ther of Richard Grenville, Earl Temple, and was the father of Lord Grenville.

GRENVILLE, William Wyndham, Lord, was the third son of the Right Honourable George Grenville, and studied at Eton College and Oxford University. In 1782 he became a member of the House of Commons; and Mr. Pitt, subsequently, gave him the office of paymaster of the army. In 1789 he was elected speaker of the House of Commons, and the following year became secretary of state for the home department. At the same time he was created Baron Grenville. In 1791 he became secretary of state for foreign affairs. For some years after this hewas out of office; but, on the death of Mr. Pitt, he became first lord of the Treasury. In 1809 he was chosen chancellor of the university of Oxford, and, up to 1815, usually acted in conjunction with Earl Grey. Towards the latter part of his life, he retired from the public eye, and died at Dropmore Lodge, Buckinghamshire, 1831; B. 1750.

GRESHAM, Sir Thomas, gresh'-am, was a merchant of the days of Queen Elizabeth, and amassed a large fortune. In 1505 he received the honour of knighthood from his sovereign, the monor of kenganicol from his sovereign, and was frequently consulted by her in her political and commercial concerns. He founded the Royal Exchange, and in January, 1570, the queen dined at his house, and caused the building to be so named, and had it proclaimed by sound of trumpet. The original structure was burned in the great fire of 1668; but it was rebuilt on a larger scale. It was, in. 1838, again destroyed by fire; but was replaced by the present building, which was opened by Queen Victoria in 1841, 'B, in London, 1519;

Grev

GRETEY, André Ernest Modeste, grai'-tre, a a few days; for Mury proved successful, and the rench musical composer, who, in early youth, duke of Northumberland was beheaded, and French musical composer, who, in early youth, discovered a great passion for music, and went to study in Italy. Returning thence, he brought to study in Italy. Returning thence, he brought with him the knowledge of a pure and simple melody, lively but graceful. The true conie accent was given by him to the language of music, and he deserved his surname of the "Molière of Music". Amongst Grétry's numerous operas may be named "The Huron," which commenced his reputation, and of which the libretto was written by Marmontel; "L'Amant Jalonx," "La Cardvane," and "Richad Cœur de Lion." He also produced an essay on music, in which he described his method. In at Lière. in which he described his method. B. at Liège, 1741; D. at Rousseau's hermitage at Montmorenci, which had become his property, 1813.

-He came of a family of musicians; and his nephew, André Joseph, wrote some comic operas, comedies and romances, which had, however, little success. B. at Boulogne, 1774; D. 1826.

GREISCH, or GRECH, Nicholas, greich, a Rus-GENESCH, OR GENERI, Nicholas, gweick, a Russian litterateure, who edited soveral influential periodicals, among which may be named the "Northern Bee" and the "Circulating Library." In 1835 ho started the great "Russian Enryclopædia," but seededed from it in its 7th volume. In 1832, he published a "History of Russian Literature," which is one of the best works of the kind that has yet appeared. He also published some grammars of the Russian laterature, which is one of the best hundred within the presence which for practical purposes are

anso published some grammals of the Russian language, which, for practical purposes, are esteemed the best. B. 1787.
GREVILLS, Fulke, Lord Brooke, grev'-il, a patron of letters and an ingenious writer, was in great favour with Elizabeth. He was created Lord Brooke by James I., who gave him War-wick Castle. He founded a history lecture at Cambridge. B. at Beauchamp Court, Warwick-shire, 1554; stabled by a servant whom he sure, 1004; stabbed by a servant whom he had reprimanded for an insolent expression, 1628. The man put an end to himself with the same weapon. After his lordship's death appeared several of his poetical works, and the Life of Sir Philip Sidney, written by him, Hallam calls him "of all our poets the most obscure."

OSCUTE. Jane, gray, a celebrated and unfortu-nate English lady, was the daughter of Henry Grey, marquis of Dorset, by Frances Brandon, daughter of the duke of Suffolk and Mary, queen dowager of France and sister to Henry VIII. From her childhood she evinced an intelligent and amiable turn of mind, and was so far advanced in her education at the age of fourteen, that when the learned Ascham visited her family, he found her reading Plato's "Phædo namny, no round her reading riago's "Prilego" in Greek. She was also well acquainted with several modern languages. Her religious principles were those of the Reformation, and her virtue and modesty equalled her other accomvírtue and modesty equalled her other accomplishments. When the heath of Edward VI. began to decline, Dudley, duke of Northumberland, persuaded him, from a pretended corn for the interests of religion, to bequeath his situss Mary and Elizabeth. About the sametime, the duke effected a marriage between his son, Lord Guilford Dudley, and Lady Jane Grey. On the death of Edward, her father and the duke of Northumberland, much against her Grey. On the death of Edward, her father and the duke of Northumberland, much against her own wishes, paid homage to her as queen, and had her proclaimed in London with the usual

Lady Jane and her husband sent to the Tower. After being confined some time, the council father's ambition to death. Lord Guildford suffered first, and as he passed her window, his state this, and us he passed her window, ins lady gave him her last adicu. Immediately afterwards, she was executed on the same scaffold, suffering with calm resignation, and a firm attachment to the Protestant faith, 1554.
B. 1537. Fuller, in his "Holy State," says, "she had the innocency of childhood, the beauty

"she had the imbeency of childhood; the beauty of youth, the solidity of middle, the gravity of old age.
the birth of a princess, the learning of a clerk, the life of a suith, yet the death ol a martyr, for her parent's offences."
GERY, Charles, Earl, was educated at Eton and Cambridge, after which he proceeded on a tour to the continent, and on his return, in 1756, became a member of Parliament for the county of Northumberland. He took the liberal side and in 1502 was one of the foundary and side, and in 1702, was one of the founders and most active members of the "Society of the Friends of the People." In 1797 he brought Friends of the People." In 1797 he brought forward a motion for parliamentary reform, for which he continued to labour strennoisty, although he was, for many years, unsuccessful in carrying the object of his wi-lies. When Lord Gravillie, in 1808, came into office, but as Lord Howlet, thou the elevation of his father to the people, became first lord of the Admiralty, and, as one of the leaders of the House of ratry, and, as one of the leaders of the House of Commons, errored the act for the abolition of the slave trade. In the following year, the eabinet was broken up, and he, in the same year, succeeded to the title, by the death of his father. In the Heuse of Lords he became out the leaders of the opposition. For many years he remained out of olice; but, in 1830, he was called upon by William IV. to form a new was cancer opin by Whitain 17. So form a new cabinet, after the fall of the Wellington administration. He accordingly became prime minister, and amounced "peace, retrenchment, and reform," as the objects of his policy. In 1831 the Reform Bill was introduced by Lord John Russell into the House of Commons : but, in the following year, the ministers resigned, on account of a motion of Lord Lyndhurst. They were restored to power, however, and, in the same year, the bill was passed. In the succeeding year, Earl Grey resigned, and, after about a couple of years, retired from public life. B. at couple of years, retired from public life. n. at Fallowden, near Alnwick, 1745; n. at Howick House, Northumberland, 1915. Gray, Henry George, third earl, the eldest son of the above, received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, and, in 1820, en-tered Parliament as member for the now disfran-chised becough of Winchelsea. In 1831 her presented the county of Northumberland, and, in the avenience was filled the office of wader. in the previous year, tilled the office of under secretary of state for the colonies. In 1834 he became under-secretary for the home department, and in the following year, under the Melbourne administration, was appointed secretary-at-war. In July, 1815, his failer died, when he was called to the House of Lords, and became colonial secretary in the administration of Lord John Russell. At this period the colonies were demanding a ropresentative government, which Earl Grey opposed, and which led to considerable misunderstandings in the colonial-office. In 1852 he retired from his post, and vinidicated formalities. This pageantry, however, only lasted his administration in a treatise of considerable H H 2 length. In 1853 he declined to serve under Lord Aberdeen, and assumed an independent position in politics. B. 1802.

GREY, Sir George, K.C.B., entered the army, and rose to the rank of captain, when, in 1836, he offered himself, in conjunction with Lieutenant Lushington, to Lord Glenelg, then colonial sceretary, to undertake a journey of discovery in Australia. In the following year, he proceeded on his expedition, and, after an absence of four years, arrived in England, and published the journals of his discoveries. He was now appointed lieutenant governor of South Australia, and produced "A Vocabulary of the Dialect of South-Western Australia." or me maneer of South-western Australia, In 1846 he beatme governor of New Zealand, and published a work entitled "Polynesian Mythology, and Ancient Traditional History of the New Zealand Race." In 1848 he was created a knight-commander of the Bath, and in 1854 he was appointed governor and commandary in the first her was not float the second of the mander-in-chief at the Cape of Good Hope. He was subsequently appointed governor of New Zealand, and put down the Maori insurrec-tion of 1863-4. B. 1812.—There are some others of this name, known as legislators and administrators, connected with the English government.

Gery, Dr. Zachary, an English divine, well known for his edition of "Hudibras," accom-panied with a great number of curious and en-tertaining notes, 2 vols. Of these notes, War-burton says, that "he hardly thinks there ever appeared, in any learned language, so excerable a heap of nonsense, under the name of commentaries, as hath lately been given us on this satiric poet." He also published Notes on sauric poet. He also published Notes on Shakspeare, 2 vols.; and an Answer to Neale's History of the Puritans, in 3 vols. Svo. B. 1687; D. 1766.

GRIESBACH, John James, grees'-bak, a distinguished German theologian, who studied successively at Frankfort, Tubingen, Halle, and Leipsic. He subsequently became rector of the university of Jena, and ecclesiastical privy councillor to the duke of Saxe-Weimar. His works are very numerous; but the principal is an edition of the Greek Testament, with various an entition of the effect restament, with various readings. B at Butzbach, 1745; D., 1812.

GEIFFIER, John, gre'-fe-er, known by the appellation of Old Griffier, an eminent painter, succeeded chiefly in landscapes, and painted several views on the Thames. He also etched several views of the Thames. He also etched prints of birds and beasts. B at Amsterdam, 1658; D. In London, 1718.—His son Robert, called the Younger Griffier, born in England, was also a good landscape painter, though not equal to his father.

GRIFFIN, Gerald. grif-fin, a popular Irish novelist, author of "The Collegians" and other works. In 1830 he relinquished the pen, and joined a religious society at Cork. B. at Limerick, 1803; D. 1840.

GEIFFIERS, Ralph, grif-fiths, a man of letters, who was born in Shropshire, and settled in London as a bookseller. In 1749 he commenced the "Monthly Review," the success of which was very slow for a considerable time; but it made its very slow for acconsiderable time; but it made its way gradually to aleading place among periodical journals. Of this work he was both proprietor and editor, being powerfully assisted, from time to time, by men of first-rate talents. D. 1803.

GRIMALDI, Joseph, grim'alda, the famous pantonimie clown, was the son of Signor Grieccentricities, who by day followed the profes-sion of a dentist, and by night that of ballet-master at Druy Lane. For a period of forty years, "Grimaldi the clown" delighted the laughter-loving audiences of Drury Lane, Corent Garden, and Sadler's Wells, with a rich species of buffoonery, peculiarly his own-pour-traying to the life all that is grotesque in manners, or droll in human action. Grimaldi, however, was not a mere clown, even of the most refined class; he was a man of intellect, a wit, and, in private life, an estimable gentleman. B. 1779: D. 1837.

GRIMM, Jacob Ludwig Carl and Wilhelm Carl, grim, two brothers, whose devotion to German literature was distinguished by a rare communion of fellowship between them. nature of their labours is, perhaps, sufficiently indicated in the following quotation from the works of Jacob: "All my labours," he says, "have been, either directly or indirectly, devoted to researches into our ancient language, poetry, and laws. These studies may seem useless to many; but laws, These values may seem useres or many, one to me they have always appeared a serious and dignified task, firmly and distinctly connected with our common fatherland, and calculated to foster the love of it. I have esteemed nothing trifling in those inquiries, but have used the small for the elucidation of the great,-popular smean for the crucination of the great,—popular traditions for the checkation of written documents. Several of my books have been published in common with my brother William We lived, from our youth up, in brotherly community of goods—money, books, and collectanes belowing to us in company and it was carried. munity of goods—money, books, and collectanes belonging to us in common; and it was natural to combine our labours." These brothers are the authors of a valuable and large German diction-ary. Jacob, B. at Hanau, 1785; p. 1863; Wil-liam, B. at Hanover, 1786; b. 1869. Garassrow, Sir Harbottle, primi-ston, a dis-tinuitable hours of the company of the com-

GRIMSTON, SIT HARDOME, grem secon, a un-tinguished lawyer of the time of the Common-wealth, studied at Lincoln's Inn, became re-corder of Colchester in 1638, and in 1640 was elected member of Parliament for that borough. elected member of zerialment for that borough. He at first took part in the opposition offered to the measures of the king, but disapproving the extreme proceedings adopted by his part, went abroad after Charles's execution. He subsequently returned, however, and in 1600 was chosen speaker of what was designated the "Healing Parliament," and was one of the commissioners sent to Charles II. at Breda. At commissioners sent to Charles II. at Breda. At the Restoration he was made master of the Rolls. The "Reports" of Sir George Croke were published moder Sir Handley Sir Handley were published under Sir Harbottle's superintendence. B. about 1594; D. 1683.

GRINDL, Edmund, grin'dal, archbishop of Canterbury, was educated at Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship in Pembroke Hall. Being attached to the principles of the Reformation, he became chaplain to the king, and prebendary of Westminster: but on the accession of Mary, he retired to Germany, and settled at Strasburg. When Elizabeth ascended the throne, he returned, and ultimately, in 1575, was made archbishop of Canterbury; but lost the royal favour, and was suspended for a time. B. in Cumberland, 1519; D. at Croydon, 1588. He contributed to Fox's "Acts and Monuments."

and editor, being powerfully assisted, from time to time, by men of first-rate talents, n. 1803.

GREENLY, Joseph, grim-al-al, the famous England and Wales, in 4 vols., and those of pantominic clown, was the son of kignor Gri-maddl, an artiste, noted for his humour and of the same kind relative to Ireland, when he died in Dublin, in 1791. B. at Greenford, Mid-dlesex, 1781. Besides the above, he published a "Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue," also a volume of "Miscellanies," 8vo, and "Military Antiquities," 4to.

Grosseteste

Grouchy

Annquines, 410.
GROSSETESTE, GROSTETE, or GREATHEAD,
Robert, gross-tait, an English prelate, who received his education at Oxford and Paris. After enjoying several preferments with great reputation, he was chosen bishop of Lincoln in 1234. He successfully resisted the encroachnexts of the papal power, and was a great en-courager of learning. B. at Stradbrook, Suf-folk, 1175; D. 1253. His "Opuscula Varia" were published at Venice in 1514, and his "Compendium Sphæræ Mundi" in 1508. Some of his discourses and letters are extant. "He was a very learned man, and had a knowledge was a very learner man, and mad a anowedge of Greek; but by a knowledge of Greek," says Hallam, "when we find it asserted of some mediawal theologian like Grostéte, we are not to understand an acquaintance with the great to understand an acquaintance with the great classical authors, who were latent in Eastern monasteries, but the power of reading some petty treatise of the fathers (or, as in this in-stance, a translation of the Testament of the twelve patriarchs from Greek into Latin), an apocryphal legand, or, at best, perhaps some of the later commentators on Aristotle. Grostete were were for considerable most but here to was a man of considerable merit, but has had his share of applause."

GROTE, George, grate, the historian of Greece, was the son of Mr. Grote, a banker, and was for some time a clerk in his father's banking-house. some time a clerk in his father's banking-house. He began to devote himself to literature and polities, and, in 1832, became member of parliament for the city of London. In 1841 he resigned his seat, to apply himself exclusively his great work, "The History of Greece," which has received universal commendation. Besides to the control of the control his History, Mr. Grote was a contributor to several of the Reviews. B. near Beckenham, Kent. 1794.

GROTIUS, Hugo, gro'-she-us, an illustrious writer, was the son of a burgomaster of Delft, and, at the age of eight years, composed Latin verses of great merit. In his twelfth year, he was sent to Leyden, and, in 1598, accompanied the ambassador Barneveldt to the court of Henry IV. of France, who was so pleased with Grotius, that he gave him his picture and a gold chain. While in France he took the degree of doctor of laws. The year following, he com-menced practice as an advocate, and pleaded his first cause at Delft. Soon afterwards, he published an edition of Martianus Capella, which was followed by a translation of a work of Stevinus, on finding a ship's place at sea. His edition of the "Phenomena" of Aratus appeared in 1600, and, about the same time, he composed Latin tragedies on sacred subjects. He was now appointed historiographer of the United Provinces, and advocate-general of the treasury for Holland and Zealand. In 1613 he accepted the post of pensioner of Rotterdam, by which means he obtained a seat in the States of Holland, and was sent to England to settle a dispute on the subject of the Greenland fishery. During the contests which arose in Holland on account of religion, Grotius sided with the Arminians, for which he was con-Holland on account of religion, drotus sided with the Arminians, for which he was come bonaparet, while at St. Helena, accused both demned to perpetual imprisonment in the castle of foruchy and Vandamme of disobedience to Loevestein, whence he was delivered by his orders in not bringing up their corps in time to wife in 1821. He found his way to Antwerp, take part in the action. This, however, is bean distrewards to France, where he obtained a lieved to have been an unfounded charge, Atthe pension. In 1622 he published his "Apology which so stung the States, that they ordered it to be burnt, and the author to be seized wherever he could be found. In 1625 he finished his famous book, "De Jure Belli et Pacis," which greatly extended his reputation. In 1613 he accepted an invitation from Count Oxenstiern, and went to Stockholm, where he was appointed counsellor of state and ambassador to the court of France. He filled this important station. amidst circumstances of extreme difficulty, with annus circumsantes of extreme dimetry, when honour to himself and satisfaction to the court which he represented. In 1645 he quitted France, and went to Holland, where he was honourably received. From Amsterdam he nonourably received. From Amsterdam ne sailed to Sweden, and was welcomed in a cordial manner by Queen Christina. B. at Delft, 1683; D. on his journey to Holland, at Rostock, 1645. His remains were interred at Delft. The works of Grotius are too many to be enumerated here; but we must mention his treatise on the "Truth of the Christian Religion," which has become a standard book in all universities for students in divinity; his "Annales et Historiae de Rebus Belgicis," and his "Commentaries on the Scriptures." these last are an immortal montant ment of learning. In his religious sentiments he coincided with the church of England, and advised his wife to join in communion with it.

—His sons Cornelius and Diederic entered into the army; Peter was bred to the law, and be-came pensionary of Amsterdam: his brother William was a learned man, and wrote some books on legal subjects.

GROUCHY, Emanuel, marquis of, groo-zhai, a distinguished marshal of France, and a scion of a noble Norman family, was a sub-lieutenant of the royal gardes du corps in 1789; but embracing revolutionary ideas, he took part in the wars of the republic, and gained great distinc-tion, especially in the Alps and La Vendée, where he was named general of division in 1793. The decree which deprived all the nobles of The decree which deprived all the nobles of France of military rank stripped him of his commission and position, but, joining the army as a private, his distinguished gallantry soon led to his restoration. Despatched in 1798 to the army of Italy, under the command of Joubert, he arranged the abdication of the king of Sardinia, and thus united Piedmont to France. He took a prominent part in the battle of Novi. where he received fourteen wounds, and was taken prisoner by the enemy. Grouchy's bravery was no less conspicuous on the fields of Hohen-linden, Eylau, Friedland, Wagram, Moscow, &c.; and he obtained the marshal's baton from the hands of Napoleon shortly before his abdication. During the Hundred Days he was opposed to the Duke d'Angoulême in the south, and made him prisoner. He was then summoned into Belgium, prisoner. He was then summoned into Beigitim, and took a prominent part in the brief campaign which finally decided the fate of his imperial master. He had carried the villages of Fleurus (June 18) and Ligny (June 17), and was marching according to his instructions in pursuit of Blucher with a body of 30,000 men, when the battle of Waterloo was fought. Instructions not having reached him in time, he could not take part in the battle, and his absence probably contributed to decide the fortune of the day.

Gruter Guibert

restoration, Grouchy's title of marshal was not and is connected by marriago with most of the acknowledged, and remained so till 1880, when ralling races in Europe. The memory of the was restored. He was created a peer in 1892, ancient name was revived by the institution of it was restored. He was created a peer in 1832. B. 1766; D. 1847.

B. 1706; B. 1847. GRUFFR, or GRUTERUS, John, groof-tuir, a distinguished philologist, whose futher was a burgumaster of Antwerp, and fled to England, on account of his religion, taking his son, who was an infant, with him. Here John was educated at Cambridge, and afterwards went to Leyden, where he took his degrees in law. He became a professor at Heidelberg, but lost his valuable library when that city was sacked in 1622. B. at Antwerp, 1500; p. at Heidelberg, 1627. His principal works are, "A Collection of Ancient Inscriptions," folio, 1601; "Thesaurus Criti-cus," 6 vols. 8vo; "Delicie Poetarum Gallo-rum, Italorum, &c.," 18 vols.

GRYLLUS, gril'-lus, a son of Xenophon, who killed Epaminondas, and was himself slain at the battle of Mantinea, 362 B.C. His father, upon receiving the news of his death, observed that it ought to be celebrated with every demonthat is ought to be electrated with every demo-stration of joy, rather than of lamentation. GRYNEUS, Simon, gri-we-us, a learned Ger-man, and the son of a peasant in Suabia, became Greek professor at Vienna, and after-wards at Heidelberg. In 1531 he visited Eng-land, where his classical acquirements procured him many friends. The learned are indebted to him for editions of several of the ancients. enriched with prefaces and commentaries. at Veringen, in Hohenzollern, 1493; p. at Bûle, GRYPHIUS, Andrew, gril-fè-us, a German dra-matic writer, whose tragedies were greatly admired. He also wrote a critique, in which he ridiculed the ancient comedies of the Germans. B. at Glogau, 1616; D. 1064.

GENERIUS, Christian, son of the proceeding, and a man of great crudition, became professor of eloquence at Breslau, principal of the college of Magdalen, and librarian. His works are "German Poems," "History of the Orders of Knighthood," "Treatise on the German Lan-Ringintond, Treatse of the German Language," &c. B. 1018; D. 1706.

GUARINO, SURNAUM Veronese, goo-a-re'-no, an eninent reviver of learning, and the first who reintroduced Greek into Italy. He became professor of the learned languages at Ferrara, and translated "Plutarch's Lives," part of Strabo, and other works. p. 1370; p. 1460. -His son Batista was also a learned man, and became an eminent professor at Ferrara. He translated into Italian some of Plautus's comedies, and wrote Latin poems and other works.

GUARINO, Balista, an Italian poets, Freat-grandson of the preceding, passed the greatest part of his life in courts, being in the ser-vice of Alphonso II., duke of Ferrara, and other princes. In these situations, however, he seems to have been a prey to continual disans seems to nove peen a prey to continuat dis-gusts. He wrote several poems, and a pastoral piece called "Pastor Fido," which gained him considerable reputation. He, however, con-temned the title of poet, which he thought beneath the dignity of a gentleman. B. at Ferrara, 1587; D. at Venice, 1012. Gully of Gully, and Stinguished family which had its seat at first in 1taly, from which it was transferred in the 11th century to Germany, where it became the ruling race in several provinces. The family is still continued in the two lines of the house of Brunswick the royal in England, and the ducalin Germany, the Royal Guelphic Order of Hanover.

470

Guericke, Otto von, ger'-ik-e(r), a German philosopher, who was counsellor to the elector of Brandenburg, and burgomaster of Magdeburg. He invented the air-pump and weather-glass, and published some treatises on experimental and published some access on experimental philosophy. B. 1602; D. 1686.

Gurrer, Martin, gair, a Frenchman, rendered famous by an extraordinary impostrodered tamous by an extraordinary imposture, practised by Arnaud du Thil, his friend, Martin married Bertrande du Rols, and, after living with her about ten years, left her, and entered into the service of Spain. Eight years after, Du Thil presented himself to Bertrande as her husband, and so imposed upon her. by relating various facts, that he lived with her. An uncle of Martin prosecuted Du Thil, and he was con-demned to be hanged. Du Thil appealed to the perliament of Toulouse, the members of which were greatly divided, when Martin returned home; on which his treacherous friend was hanged and burned, in 1560.

Gurrero, Vicente, goo'-er-rai-ro, chosen president of the Mexican States, in 1829, was by birth a Creole. At the commencement of the revolution in Mexico he took arms against the Spaniards, and ever after continued to play a prominent part in the affairs of that country. On numericus occasions, from 1819 to 1828, general Guerrero became the rallying point of the popular party, the Yorkinos, and was repeatedly called into active service in his military capacity. Having been successful in various contests with the aristocratical faction, he at length, in 1829, was elected to the presidency, The expedition of Barradas soon gave employment to the new government; and the better to enable the president to meet the exigency. he was invested with extraordinary powers; but after the victory over the Spanish troops, and when the invading expedition was de-stroyed, Guerrero evinced an unwillingness to relinquish the dictatorship, which became the protext of another revolution; and Bustamente, the vice-president, assumed the reins of government. Guerrero, however, was not to be so set aside: in September, 1830, he collected a large force at Valladolid, and established a form of government in opposition to that of Bustamente, and the whole country was agitated by bodies of men in arms. Guerrero's course, however, was nearly run. In February, 1831, he was was nearly near in February, 1801, he was taken prisoner by his opponents, and shot.

Guesclin, Bertrand du, ges-la, constable of France, and an illustrious warrior who gained many victories over the English, and deleated the troops of the king of Navarre. He was very the troops of the ang of Navarre. He was very strong, and also very unprepossessing. "I am very unly," he would say, "and shall never be a favourite with the ladies; but, by the encunies of my king, I shall be held in terror." D. in Brittany, 1314; D. while besieging Randam, 1380.

Gubvara, Louis Velez de, gwai-va'-ra, a Spanish comic poet, who wrote many comedies, and a celebrated work entitled "El Diabolo Cojuelo," which furnished the foundation for "Le Diable Boitcux" of Le Sage. He was a native of Andalusia, and died 1646.

Guibert, Jacques Anthony Hippolite, ge-bair', a writer on military affairs, who served in Germany, and afterwards in Corsica, where he was composition, and produced several tragedies, He also wrote the Elogies of Catinat and L'Hôpital. The French Academy elected him a member, in the room of M. Thomas. D. at Montanban, 17:13; D. 17:90. Besides the above works, he wrote the clogy of Frederick the Great, king of Prussia.

GUICCIARDINI, goo'-etch-e-ar-de'-ne, an eminent historian, who was descended from a noble family of Florence. He practised in early life as a lawyer, and filled several high offices in his profession. Afterwards he was employed in affairs of state for his native city. From this situation he passed into the service of Leo X. situation no passed into the service of Leo X. and the two immediate successors of that prince, and was raised by them to the highest civil and military distributes. His "History of Italy," in twenty books, is a valuable performance. n. in Florence, 1482; n. at his country seed at Arcetit, 1540. When the courtiers of Charles V. complained of the favour he showed to Guiceiardini and other Florentines, he said, "I can make a hundred Spanish grandees in a minute, but I cannot make one Guicciardini in a hundred years."

Guicciandini, Luigi, nephew of the preced-ing, wrote, among other works, a "Description of the Low Countries," folio. B. at Florence, 1523; D. at Antwerp, 1589.

Guido d'Arezzo, ge'-ilc da-ret'-so, an Italian musician, who invented the lines and spaces, or staff, reformed the scale, suggested the mode of notation, and the art of solmisation. Lived in the 11th century.

GUIDO RENI, an illustrious Italian painter, GUIDO MENT, an illustrious Italiam painter, whose father was a musician, and who intended him for the same profession; but Beni conceiving an early attachment for painting, was placed under Denis Calvert, a Fiemish master. He afterwards studied under the Caracci, and soon ross to higher fame than any of his contemporaries. Honours were heaped to the property of th upon him by several crowned heads, and riches flowed upon him in abundance. He was unfor-tunate only in an immoderate love of gaming, which reduced him to such distress, that a languishing disease ensued, of which he died. His heads are beautiful, and considered by many ic equal those of Raffaelle. His draperies are As nuch admired. His ideal of female beauty was founded on the antique, as he took the "Venus de Mediei," and the "Danghiers of Niobe" for his standard. n. at Bologna, 1575; p. 1612. The greatest work of Guido is the "Pentience of St. Feirer atter Denying Christ," in the Zampieri palace, at Bologna. Guttorri, Paul, ge-dot-te, an Italirn painier, sculptor, and architect, who made vangs with which he imagemed he could fly; but, in making the attempt at Lucca, he fell, and received great injury. n. at Lucca, 1560; p. 1820. Guttows, Joseph de, gueen, a learned French writer, who studied the Oriental languages under Stephen Fourmont, and was amointed interalso much admired. His ideal of female beauty

Stephen Fourmont, and was appointed inter-preter to the king in 1741, and member of the Academy of Belles Lettres in 1753. He parti-Academy of Bolies Lottres in 1753. He partito Biois, convened the states there, where Guise clearly applied himself to the study of the Chiuse seassistated in 1858. n. 1550.

Guss, Charles, duke of, eldest son of the principal interest in the "Journal des Sousaus" above, on his father's death, was sint up in The Berolution reduced him to poverty. n. at the castle of Tours, from which he escaped in the Life of Fourmont, "General History of the the greatest joy by the partisans of a league made a colonel. In 1770, he published his Huns, Tarks, Moguls, and Tartars," 5 vols. 4to; great work, "Best Genéral de Racique." After "Memoir proving that the Chineso were awards he directed his attention to dramatic Egyptian colony; "Le Choo-King," 4to; "The Momoir proving that the Chinese were an Egyptian colony; "Le Choo-King," 4to; "The Military Art of the Chinese," "Historical Fssay upon the Oriental and Greek Topography,"

"Principles of Typographical Composition,"

"Momoirs in the Academy of Inscriptions," &c. Guillouik, Joseph Ign thus, gael-o-teen, a French physician, who, during the first devolution, proposed the introduction of an instru-ment of decapitation, made after the fashion of the more ancient one, the maiden, used on the Scottish borders in the 16th century. The proposal was adopted, and the engine named after its inventor. Mons. Guilloin practised medicine in Paris many years, and was much respected. He was a member of the National Assembly, where his political principles were distinguished by moderation; and his introduction of his famous instrument of death was from a humane motive—that of rendering capital punishment less painful. He was not, as has been asserted, the vietim of his own contrivance, though he was greatly annoyed by its being called by his name. He died, in tranguil retirement, in 1814; B. 1738.

Guiscann, Robert, gee, -kar, a brave Norman knight, and son of Tancred de Hauteville, one of the warriors who conquered Naples from the Saraceus, and acquired the dukedom of Apulia and Calabria. D. in the island of Corfu, 1035.

Guischard, Charles Gottlieb, ge'-skar, t Prussian officer, who fought with great reputa-tion in the service of the Stadtholder, and afterwards in that of Frederick II. of Prussia, who gave him the name of Quintus Icilius, and a regiment. n. at Macdeburg, 1742; D. 1775. His works are "Memoires Militaires sur les Grees et les Romains," 4to; "Memoires Critiques et Historiques sur plusicurs Points d'Antiquités Militaires," 4vols, 8vo.

Militaires," 4 vois. Svo.

Guise, Claude de Loraine, duke of, gess, was the fifth son of René II., duke of Loraine. He settled in France, where he married Antoinette de Bourbon, a princess of the blood, in 1513. At the battle of Marignan, when he was but 22 years of age, he received more than twenty wounds. D. 1550.

Grish, Francis de Loraine, duke of, eldes

Grien, Francis de Loraine, duke of, eidests son of the above, was a ma not great talents and valour, and, during the greater part of his life, enjoyed almost unbounded power in France. With him began the famous factions of Condé and Grise. The duke of Guise was at the head of the Catholic party, and a great zealot. Shot with a pistol, in 1543, by a Protestant gentleman named Poltrot de Meré. в 1519.

Guise, Henry, duke of, eldest son of the preceding, was a good soldier, but of a turbulent temper, and formed the association called the League, on the pretence of defending the Catholic religion, and the liberty of the state. With its aid the dake of Guise long controlled Henry III., and even was in open rebellion On the celebrated day of the baragainst him. ricades, the king, having escaped from the duke to Blois, convened the states there, where Guise which had been formed against Henry IV. He member for the Chamber of Deputies, and afterwards became governor of Provence; but, assisted in accomplishing the revolution which under the reign of Louis XIII., he was forced to expelled Charles X, from his throne. He now under the reign of Louis AIII. He was indeed to leave France, on account of the jealousy of Car-dinal Richelieu. He went into Tuscany, where he died, in 1640. B. 1571.—His son, Henry II., was brought up to the church, which, on the death of his father, he quitted, and assumed the title of duke of Guise. He conspired against Cardinal Richelicu, and, in 1647, put himself at the head of the revolted Neapolitans, but was taken prisoner by the Spaniards. On being set free, he returned to France, where he died, without issue, in 1684.—His younger brother, Louis, left a son, Louis Joseph, of Loraine, duke of Guise, who died in 1671, leaving an infant son, who died in 1675, and in whom the line of the Guises became extinct.

Guise Gurwood

Guise, Charles de, usually called the Cardinal of Loraine, was the minister of Francis II. and Charles IX. He was notorious for his violent and intolerant spirit, and his memory will ever be held in execration for the furious persecution he promoted against the Protestants of France.

B. 1525; D. 1574. Guizor, François-Pierre Guillaume, gé-zo, was the son of an eminent French advocate, who was executed in 1794. Young Guizot and another brother were taken by their mother to dinere brother were taken by their involver to Geneva, where they were educated in the Gym-nasium, and where François acquired a know-ledge of the Latin, Greek, English, German, and Italian languages. In 1805 he went to Paris for the purpose of studying law, but entered as tutor the family of the Swiss ambassador, and, through his means, was introduced to many distinguished literary men. In 1809 he published his "Dictionary of Synonyms," which was succeeded by "Lives of the Poets," "Gibbon's Roman Empire," and other works. In 1812 he became assistant professor of history in the Faculty of Letters, and, shortly afterwards, was appointed professor of modern history. In the same year he married Mademoiselle Pauline de Meulan, a lady who was considerably older than himself, and who supported herself and family by literary work. In 1814, under Louis XVIII., Guizot became secretary-general; but, on the return of Napoleon I. from Elba, he was driven from his office, and once more resumed his duties as professor of history. On the over-throw of the empire, he became secretarygeneral to the minister of justice, adopting the principles of a constitutional royalist. He now principles to a constitutional regards. The flow produced several political and educational pamphlets, and in 1818 was chosen a councillor of state. In 1820 he was expelled from office, and once more entered the field as a pamphleteer. He also gave lectures at the Sorbonue; but the freedom of his expressions caused them to be suppressed. Between 1822 and 1827 he produced his "History of the English Revolution," "Essays on the History of France," and his "Historical Essays on Shakspeure." He also established the "French Review," and assist thyself, and Heavre will assist they disking the society called "Assist thyself, and Heavre will assist they "designed to secure the freedom of elections. In 1828 he was permitted to remark his leafwage at the Sorbona leteer. He also gave lectures at the Sorbonue; mitted to resume his lectures at the Sorbonne, and, in the same year, married the niece of his became successively minister of public instruction and minister of the interior; but, in the same year, was driven from office. In 1832 he returned to office, as minister of public instruc-tion, under the administration of Marshal Soult. and continued to hold his place till 1836, when he was appointed on an embassy to England. Here he concluded the treaty of 1840, which filled France with dissatisfaction. In that year. however, he was appointed minister of foreign affairs, which he held till the abdication of Louis-Philippe, in 1848. At that time he fled from France in the disguise of a workman, but returned in the following year, and again en-tered the political arena. He now became active tered the political arena. He now became active with his pen, and produced many more works; among which we may notice his "History of Civilization," "History of Oliver Crouwell," "History of Richard Crouwell and the Restoration of Charles II," "Slatispeare and his Times," and "Studies of the Fine Arts in General." A at Nimes, in the department Gard, GUNDLING, Nicholas Jerom, goond-ling, a German writer on jurisprudence, history, and politics, who was successively professor of philo-sophy, eloquence, and civil law at Halle. B. at Nuremberg, 1671; D. at Halle, 1729.

Gundur, gun doolf, bishop of Rochester, was one of the Norman ecclesiastics brought over by William the Conqueror. He was a skilful architect; and built that part of the Tower of London called the White Tower. He also erected Rochester Castle, and rebuilt the cathedral. Died 1108.

GUNNERUS, John Ernest, qoon'-ne-rus, a Norwegian divine, who was made bishop of Dron-them, in 1758, where he founded the Royal Norwegian Society, principally for the encourage-ment of the study of natural history. Linneus gave the name of Gunnera to a plant in his vegetable system. p. at Christiana, 1718; p. at Christiansund, 1773. He published "Flora Norwegin," &c.

Gunzer, Edmund, gun-ter, an English philosopher, whose genius led him to the study of mathematics, and he became professor of astronomy in Gresham College. He invented a portable quadrant, which goes by his name, and a scale used by navigators. He also discovered the variation of the magnetic needle. B. in Herefordshire, 1581; D. in Oxford, 1626.

n. in Hereforeishire, 1581; n. in Oxtora, 1826, the published "Ganon Triangulorum, sive Tablak Sinuum Artificialium," &c. His works were collected into one volume 4to, 1673. Grawoon, John, gur'-ncod, entered the British army in 1898, and served in the Pennisud war under the dake of Wellington. At the storming of Guidad Rodrigo, in 1812, he volunteered to lead the forlorn hope, and took general

"Then it is to you that the sword of the general should belong," said the duke, at the same time handing to Gurwood Barrie's sword. This weapon he wore ever afterwards, and he became first wife, who had recommanded the union on a distinguished officer. About 1830 he became her death-bed. In the following year he was repointed a councillor of state, and became one and, in 1834, commenced issuing "The Bed the editors of the "Journal des Debäts," and spatches of Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington of "Le Teups." In 1830 he was elected a ton, K.G., during his various Campaigns in

GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS (OF SWEDEN)

HANDEL, GEORGE FREDERICK.

uise, Henry of.

Hampden, John.

Guthrie

India, Denmark, Portugal, Spain, the Low Countries, and France, from 1799 to 1813, com-piled from Official and Authentic Documents by Lieutenant-Colonel Gurwood." This work was a decided success, notwithstanding that it extended to thirteen volumes. In 1841 Gurwood was made a full colonel, and subsequently became deputy-governor of the Tower. B. 1790; p. by his own hand, in a fit of insanity, arising from a wound in his head received at Ciudad Rodrigo, 1845.

GUSTAVUS I., gus-ta'-vus, king of Sweden, known by the name of Gustavus Vasa, was the son of Eric Vasa, duke of Gripsholm, who was descended from the ancient kings of Sweden, and who was beheaded by the Danish tyrant, Christian II. This sovereign also got Gustavus into his hands, and, in the war in which he reduced Sweden, kept him several years a prisoner at Copenhagen. At length he made his escape, and having prevailed on the Dalecarlians to throw off the Danish yoke, in May, 1831, be found himself at the head of 15,000 men. After various fortunes, he recovered the whole After various rottines, he recovered the whole of Sweden from the tyranny of Christian. In 1527 he was crowned king of Sweden, and the crown made hereditary in his family. Lutheranism was established as the national religion of Sweden in his reign. B. at Ockestadt, near Stockholm, 1490; p. in 1559. His name is still revered by every Swede.

Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, as-cended the throne in 1611, when only in his seventeenth year. Notwithstanding his youth, he displayed great discernment in the choice of able ministers, and distinguished himself in the field, in a war with Denmark, Russia, and Poland. He subsequently rendered his name immortal, by his illustrious achievements in the war he carried on at the head of the German Protestants against the house of Austria. He penetrated from the Vistula to the Danube, and twice defeated the celebrated Tilly. He was a patron of the sciences, enriching the university of Upsal, founding a royal academy at Abo, and a university at Dorpat, in Livonia. This great prince fell in the battle of Lutzen, in 1632, not without suspicion of having been assassinated by the hand of Lawenburg, one of his generals. B. at Stockholm, 1594. There is something sublime in the conduct of Gustavus immediately before engaging in the battle at Lutzen. He himself sang a hymn of Luther's, and was followed in chorus by the whole of his troops. After this, enorus by the whole of ms troops. After this, he led the attack in person, and slew the foremost of the enemy with a lance; thus giving promise of the victory which his army obtained, although at an immense sacridce, over the forces of Wallenstein, one of the most extraordinary men of his time.

men or his time.

Gustavus III., king of Sweden, was the son of Adolphus Frederick and Louisa Ulrica, sister of Frederick II., king of Prussia. He was educated under Count Tessin, whose letters to his royal pupil are well known. He succeeded his father in 1771, at which time a corrupt senate, composed of two aristocratic factions, called the Hats and Caps, possessed the government, and has an Osbesset and Gotolanders and the treated the king as a mere cipher. Gustavus, in the following year, effected a revolution without bloodshed, and established a new constitution. He abolished the practice of forture, and introduced the practice of the produced the produced to the produced the produced to the pr duced other good regulations in the administra-tion of justice. He also formed a college of commerce, reformed his army and navy, caused he went for a time into his father's banking-

a new translation to be made of the Bible, and greatly encouraged agriculture, arts, and litera-ture. In 1777 he paid a visit to the empress of Russia, and was entertained in a magnificent manner. In 1783 he made a tour for his health to France and Italy, and was absent ten months. He afterwards entered into a war with Russia and Denmark. He headed his army himself, and stormed the defences of Fredericksham. where he took and destroyed a great number of vessels. Encouraged by this success, he made vessels. Encouraged by this success, he made an attack on the Russian squadron and arsenal of Revel, but was obliged to retire. He was equally unformate in an attempt on Wyburg; but, on July 9, 1790, the Swedish fleet, commanded by the king, gained a victory over the Russians, who lost forty-flee vessels and a great.

This was followed by up in the command of the number of men. This was followed by an im-mediate peace. On the breaking out of the French revolution, a coalition was formed between the northern powers and Spain, by which it was agreed that Gustavus should march against France at the head of a considerable army; but while preparations were making, he was shot at a masquerade, by Ankarstroem, a disbanded officer of the army. B. 1746; assassinated 1792. Gustavus wrote some plays, and political pieces of merit.

GUSTAVUS IV., king of Sweden, after the as-sassination of his father, ascended the throne, in 1792. His reign was remarkable for the en-price with which he was permitted to govern, for several years, a brave people. His hatred to Napoleon I. was of the most intense description, and his avowed attachment to the principles of legitimacy led him to endeavour to restore the Bourbon dynasty to the crown of France. In 1809 he was arrested as a traitor in the name of the nation, and forced to abdicate his crown in favour of Duke Charles of Sudermania, who ascended the vacant throne as Charles XIII. ascended the Vacanti throne as Charles ATI, B. 1773; p. at St. Gall, Switzerland, 1837. After abdicating his throne, he retired to St. Gall, where he mostly lived afterwards, supporting himself by his writings as an author and his pension as a colonel. He refused all assistance from his family and the people over whom he had reigned.

had reigned.

Groen, John, gutch, an antiquarian writer, who was registrar of the university of Oxford, rector of St. Clement's, and chapslan of Al Souls College, published "Collectanea Curiosa," from the MSS. of Archbishop Samerofs, 2 vols, "The History and Antiquities of the Colleges, &c., from MSS. in the Bodleian Library, written by Anthony Wood," "The Antiquities and Annals of the University," &c. B. 1745; D. 1831.

GUTRIEN, William, guth're, a native of Scotland, and educated at Aberdeen, whose most esteemed work is his georpanical grammar.

nano, and concerned at Aberdeen, whose most esteemed work is his geographical grammar, n. 1701, n. 770. He also wrote a "History of Scotland," "A History of the Peerage," "The Friends," novel; "Remarks on English Tragedy," and several other works.

GUTHER, Thomas, D.D., an eminent Scottish clergyman and philanthropist, the son of an influential merchant and banker in Brechin, Forfarshire, studied for the church of Scotland Formarshire, studied for the church of Scotland at the university of Edinburgh, and after having been licensed to preach by the presbytery of Brechin proceeded to Paris, where he acquired a knowledge of medicine, with the view of being able to assist the poor medically, when engaged in his pastoral duties. On his return to Scotland, house, and in 1820 was ordained minister of the illustrious Fénélon; but was treated with great nonse, and m 1850 was ordaned minister of the parish of Arbitols, in his native county. He was afterwards translated to the collegiate church of old Greyfriars, Edimburgh, and 1840 to St. John's, a new church and parish in 1840 to St. John's, a new church and parish in popularity. He took a prominent part in the constitution of the constitution non-intrusion controversy, and other ecclesiasti-cal questions, which ended in the disruption of the Established Church of Scotland in 1813, and the institution of the Free Church of that country. He was one of the four leading men of that important movement, the other three being Drs. Chalmers, Cunningham, and Candlish. In 1817, his fervent and heart-stirring appeals to the benevolent, on behalf of the destitute and homeless children of the Scottish capital, led to the establishment of the Edinburgh Original Ragged or Industrial School, which has been productive of incalculable benefit to the poorer classes of that city. в. 1800.

GUTTENBERG, OF GUTENBERG, John, goot'-tenbairg, one of those to whom the invention of the art of printing is attributed, was descended of a noble German family. If he did not invent of a none German manny. If no the not invent printing, it is probable he was the first who conceived the idea of printing a book, which he executed, first with blocks of wood engraved, and afterwards with separate letters out in wood. He took, for a partner, John Faust, from whom he separated, and then printed for himself. There are few particulars of his life and habits, further than that he seems to have been frenarrier than that he seems to have been requestly in litigation, and to have been a man of considerable ingomity. n. at Mentz, about 1400; n. there, 1485. In 1877 a splendid monument in bronze was erected to his memory in Mentz, and the Guttenberg Society, with which the writers of the Rhenish provinces are consistent to the constant of the second to the constant of the second to the second nected, hold an annual meeting in Mentz, or Mayence, to celebrate his great discovery, and in honour of his memory.

Gux, Thomas, gi, the humane and charitable founder of Guy's Hospital, was the son of Thomas Guy, a lighterman and coal-dealer in Horselydown, Southwark. He was bred a bookseller, and began trade with only £200. The bulk of his fortune, however, was made by purchasing seamen's tickets during Queen Anne's wars, and by speculations in South-Sea stock in the memorable year 1720. Besides the wellknown hospital, he erected an almshouse at Tamworth. B. 1613; p. 1724, worth £300,00). GUYARD, De Berville, go-yar, a French writer, who, after a life of extreme distress, died in the who, after a life of extreme distress, died in the prison of the licetre, at the age of 73. D. 1697. He wrote the lives of Bertrand du Gueselin and of the Chevalier Bayard. He is not to be con-founded with Anthony Guyard, a Benedictine monk, who died at Dijon in 1770, and wrote "Political Observations on the Administration of Benefices," &c.

Guvon, Jeanne Marie Bouvièr de la Mothe, ge-yawag, a famous enthusiast, who, at sixteen, married, and became a widow at the age of twenty-eight. She afterwards devoted herself to religious meditation, and imbibed all the mystical conceits of quictism, till she worked herself up into the belief that she was the preg-nant woman in the Apocalypse, and the destined foundress of a new church. Having gained foundress of a new church. Having gained "Gwinning, Nell, pain, an actress, famous for many followers, she was confined in a convent; the circumstance of her rising from the lowest but was released, at the instance of Madamo situation to be patronized by Charles II. In the severity by Bossuet of Meaux, by whose means she was sent to the Bastile, whence she was liberated in 1702. B. at Montargis, 1618 : p. at Blois, 1717. Her works are numerous, and still admired by those who are fond of mys-

Guvov, General Richard Debaufre, a distin-guished English general in the Hungarian service. In 1818 he became major of the Honveds. or national guards of Hungary, and at the battle of Schwechat, fought near Vienna, he was, for his gallantry, made a colonel on the field. Subsequently, at Debreezin, he was raised to the rank of general. He continued to fight in the cause of Hungary, against the Austrians, throughout the war of 1848-49; but when Gorgei made an unconditional surrender, he, with Bem, Dembinski, and Kmety, took refuge in Turkey. Here he remained, protected by the sulian, and accepted service under his govern-ment. He rose to the rank of lieutenant-general on the staff, and received the title of Kourschid on the stan, and received the late of Rousseing Pasha. In 1853 he was sent to Damascus, and thence proceeded to Kars, where he organized the army, and constructed the defences which subsequently formed a basis for the operations of Sir Fenwick Williams in that place. B. near Bath, Somersetshire, 1813; p. 1856, Guyton de Monveau, Louis Bernard, ge-tawng dai mor'-vo, an eniment French chemist, the son of a lawyer at Dijon, was educated for the bar, and became advocate-general to the parliament of his native city; but applied himself chiefly to natural philosophy and che-mistry, in which latter science he made many discoveries. In 1777 he was appointed to examine the coal-mines of Burgundy, on which he made a mineralogical tour of that province; and, in the course of these inquiries, he discovered a rich lead mine. Soon after this he wrote the articles on chemistry in the "Encyclopedia Méthodique;" in 1782 he published his new chemical nomenclature, paid great attention to the science of acrostation, and by various discoveries materially promoted the advance of science. He was one of the earliest and most violent of the revolutionists; nourished a determined aversion to the kingly authority and the priesthood; became successively a member of the Legislative Assembly, the Convention, the Committee of Public Safety, and the Council of Five Hundred. He was made a member of the Legion of Honour, and a baron of the empire, by Bonaparte; and was director of the Polytechnic School and administrator of the mint. Besides his share in the "Encyclopédie Méthodique," he was one of the principal editors of the "Annals of Chemistry," and wrote some other chemical works. B. 1737; D. 1816.

Gwilt, Joseph, gwilt, an eminent English architect, who wrote largely on his profession, and published, with other works, "An Encyclopedia of Architecture, Historical, Theoretical, and Practical." He also wrote "Rudiments of the Anglo-Saxon Tongue," and the article on music in the "Encyclopedia Metropolitana." He held, for thirty years, the appointment of architect to the Grocers' Company, and was, for forty years, one of the surveyors of the sewers in Surrey. B. in Surrey, 1784; D. 1863.

Maintenon. After this, she was befriended by the early part of her life she entertained companies at taverns by singing; and, previous to her winning the affections of the "Merry Monarch." she had formed various questionable connexions. D. 1687.

Gylippus

Gylippus, ji-lip'-pus, a Lacedomonian, sent by his countrymen to assist Syracuse against the Athenians. He obtained a celebrated victory over Nicias and Demosthenes, and obliged them to surrender. After the capture of Athens by Lysander, he was intrusted by the conqueror with the money taken in the plunder, to convey it to Sparta; but he stole from it three hundred talents. His theft was discovered, and, to avoid the punishment which he deserved, he fled from his country, and tarnished the glory of his victorious actions. This, from the establishment of the laws of Lycurgus, was the first instance of any Spartan being infected by a corrupt desire for money. Lived in the 5th century B.c.

H

HAAR, Theodore, hawk, a German writer, who studied at Oxford; translated the Dutch "Annotations of the Bible," 2 vols., and was one of the founders of the Royal Society. B. at New-the foundars of the royal Society. B. a. 2. Com-hausen, 1605; D. 1690.

Haas, William, Aazz, a Swiss type-founder and printer, who was the first in Germany and Switzerland to successfully engrave a French type in the style of Baskerville. He invented a HABINGTON, William, hab'-ing-ton, an English writer, who was educated in France. Ife wrote some poems, a play called "The Quem of Aragon," and the History of Edward IV. B. in Worcestershire, 1805; D. 1645. The poetry of Habington has both great elegance and poetical fancy: it shows the author to have been nancy: It snows the nathor to have been possessed, according to Hallam, of a "pure and amiable mind, turned to versification by the custom of the day, during a real passion for a lady of birth and virtue, the Castara whom he afterwards married."

HACKAERT, John, hak'-art, a Dutch artist, who greatly excelled in landscape-painting. B. at Amsterdam, about 1635.

HACKERT, Philip, a celebrated German landscape painter, who was also good at marine subjects, was a native of Prenzlau, in Prussia. His first work of importance was a series of six large pictures, representing the naval victory of the Russians over the Turks at Tschesine, and the burning of the fleet of the latter power in the burning of the need of the Law power 1770, by Count Orloff, for which the Empress Catharine II. paid the artist £1350. The pictures were sent to Count Orloff, who, being dissatisfied with the way in which the blowingup of a ship was depicted, ordered one of his ships to be blown up in the roads of Leghorn in order to let the painter see what such a scene was really like. The experiment, though costly, was not lost, for Hackert altered and greatly improved the picture. He was subsequently much engaged in painting scenes on the coast of Italy, particularly Naples and Sicily, many of which he executed for the king. His drawings are very numerous, and his paintings are not scarce: many of them have been engraved. He painted in oil, encaustic, and in body water-colour. B. 1737; D. 1807.

Haghe

HACKET, John, D.D., hāk'-et, an English divine, who was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1661 he became bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, and wrote a Latin comedy, twice acted before James 1 .; a Life of Archtwice acced colore James 1; a Life of Archibishop Williams, and "Christian Consolations."
"What a delightful and instructive book Bishop Hacket's 'Life of Archbishop Williams' is!" exclaims Colecides "you learn more from it of that which is valuable towards on insight into the times preceding the civil wars, than from all the ponderous histories and memoirs now composed about that period." B. in London, 1592; p. 1670.

HADDIK, Andrew, Count von, had'-ik, a German field-marshal, who distinguished himself in the Seven Years' war, and who, in 1789, had the chief command of the Austrian forces against the Turks. He was equally renowned for his bravery and skill, and has rarely been equalled as a commander of cavalry. B. 1710; p. 1790. Haddon, Walter, had-don, an English lawyer who, on the deprivation of Gardiner, hishop of Winchester, from the mastership of Trinity Hall, was selected to fill the vacant office. He was afterwards president of Magdalan College, Oxford; but during the reign of Mary was con-pelled to seek retirement. Under Elizabeth he became judge of the prerogative court; and was one of the three commissioners who met at Bruges in 1508, to arrange a treaty of commerce between England and the Netnerlands. He was otherwise much employed by the government; particularly in drawing up the celebrated code, "Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum." code, "Reformanto Legum Ecotesustrearum;"

He wrote various poems and treatises in Latin, the purity and elegance of which are highly commended, n. 1501; p. 1572.

HADBEY, John, hadwie, the author of several philosophical papers which appread the "Transactions of the Royal Society," and the "Transactions of the Royal Society," and the world investor which have the commendation of the Royal Society," and the world investor which have the commendation of the Royal Society, and the society which have the the reputed inventor of the sextant which bears his name. Being on intimate terms with bir Isaac Newton, it is generally believed that he borrowed the idea of the sextant from that great man, an account of which was communicated by Hadley to the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1731. Hadley became a member of the Royal Society in 1717, and died in 1744.

HADRIAN. (See ADRIAN.)
HEMON, he-mon, a Theban youth, son of Creon, who was so captivated with the beauty of Antigone, that he killed himself on her tomb when he heard that she had been put to death

When he had no shows the same of the same to depict the pleasures of love and wine. was invited to the court of the sultan of Bardad. but he seems to have passed the greater portion of his life in his native town. His effusion: principally consist of odes and elegies, and were, after his death, given to the world under the title of "The Divan." B. at Shiraz, about the beginning of the 14th century; D. about 1383.

Hague, Louis, haq, a distinguished Belgian lithographer, who went to London, and, in con-nexion with Mr. Day, under the firm of Day and Haghe, issued many superior works, Among these may be noticed "Roberts' Sketches in the Holy Land, Syria, Arabia, Egypt, and Nubia." Subsequently, Mr. Haghe devoted himself to water-colour painting, and became a leading member of the New Society of Painters in Water-colours, Many of his works consist of churches, which have received well-merited admiration. B. in Belgium, 1802.

HAGEDORN, Frederic, hag'-dorn, an eminent German poet, was educated in the college of Hamburg; came to London in the suite of the Danish ambassador; and, in 1733, was ap-pointed secretary to the English factory at Hamburg. He was the author of fables, songs, tales, and moral poems; in all of which there tales, and moral poems; in an of which there is considerable originality, and many of them are very graceful. n. 1708; n. 1754.

Hager, Joseph von, ha'-jer, professor of the ociental languages in the university of Pavia, who devoted himself to the acquisition of a critical knowledge of the Chinese tongue. resided some time in London, and afterwards in Paris, in both of which cities he published books rans, in some of which class he phonshed books explanatory of the Chinese language. Among his works are, "The Chinese Pantheon," "An Explanation of the Elementary Characters of the Chinese Language," "A Dissertation on the nowly-discovered Babylonian Inscriptions," &c. B. at Milan, 1750; D. there, 1820.

HAGUE, Dr. Charles, haig, an eminent musician, who, in 1799, succeeded Dr. Randall in the professorship of music at Cambridge. He composed a variety of excellent glees and other pieces, all remarkable for purity and good taste.

в. 1760; р. 1821.

HAHNEMANN, Samuel, han'-man, a German physician, the founder of the system of medicinal practice to which he gave the name of the "Homosopathic," and, after years of study, succeeded in establishing himself at Leipsic, where he was successful in gaining numerous adherents to his system. As he was ruining the apothecaries, however, they rose against him, and in a court of law, it was decided, by an old decree, that no physician could dispense his own prescriptions. Accordingly, he quitted Leipsic, and found an asylum in the dominions of the duke of Anhait-Cöthen, where, at Cöthen, he obtained a new practice. In 1829 his dis-ciples in that place struck a medal in honour of him. In 1835 he married a French lady, with whom he removed to Paris, where, to com-memorate his arrival in the French capital, another medal was struck, in gold, silver, and bronze. Here he enjoyed a wide reputation up to the time of his death. B. in Saxony, 1755; p. at Paris, 1843.

HARWILL, George, hake'-will, an English divine, studied at Alban Hall, Oxford, after which he became fellow of Exeter College. Having taken his degree of D.D., he was made chaplain to Prince Charles, and archdeacon of Surrey; but never rose higher in the church, owing to his writing a tract against the proposed marriage of his patron with the infanta posed marriage of his patron with ne hinanta of Spain. For this he not only lost his chaplainer, but was sent to prison, though he spon obtained his release. Some time after, he was elected rector of Exeter College, which he held with the living of Heanton, in Devonshire. His greatest work is entitled "An Apology or Declaration of the Power and Providence of God in the Government of the World." p. 1579; p. 1640. D. 1649.

HAKLUYT, Richard, hak-lite, an English divine, who was distinguished for his skill in cosmography, and published a curious collection of voyages, in 3 vols. folio. In 1605 he was made prebendary of Westminster, besides which he had the benefice of Wetheringsett, in Suffolk. losophical, and legal subjects.

the antique interiors of Flemish town-halls and B. in London or its vicinity, 1553; D. 1616. His countrymen, out of respect to his labours. named a promontory on the coast of Greenland Hakluyt's Headland. Of "Hakluyt's Voyages" it has been said that they redound as much to the glory of the English nation as any book that giory of the Engish hadon as any loos that ever was published in it. In the first edition is a map, says Hallam, which "represents the utmost limit of geographical knowledge at the close of the sixteenth century, and far excels the maps in the edition of Orellius at Antwerp in 1558

HALDANE, Robert and James Alexander, haul-dane, two brothers, the sons of Captain James Haldane, the representative of the barons of Gleneagles, in Perthshire, by the sister of Ad-miral Duncan, Lord Camperdown, both of whom played a prominent part in the religious movements of the beginning of the 19th century. They both began life as seamen. Robert in the royal navy, and James in the service of the East They soon, however, quitted India Company. the naval profession, and devoted themselves to the propagation of religion, Robert directing his attention to the spread of the gospel among the natives of India, to which work he not only gave his time and his labours, but spent almost his entire patrimony in the effort; while James became an itinerant preacher in Scotland, over the whole of which he travelled, addressing large audiences, and producing a profound impression by his stirring and animated appeals to the consciences of his hearers. The vehemence of his style of preaching procured him the title of the "Scottish Boanerges." These brothers were both held in high esteem by a portion of the religious public for their benevolent efforts; though it is also true that James met with considerable opposition from a section of the clergy, and was ridiculed by some of the laity for the extravagance of language in which he occasionally indulged. Both, however, were wellmeaning men, though perhaps over-enthusiastic and a little visionary. They were each anthors of various works: Robert of an "Exposition of the Epistle to the Romans," "On the Evidences and Authority of Divine Revelation," "On the Inspiration of Scripture;" and James, of a "Treatise on the Doctrine of the Atonement. &c. Robert died in 1842, aged 79; and James in 1851.

HALE, Sir Matthew, hail, an English judge, who was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn, where he followed the study of the law with great application. He was one of Archbishop Laud's counsel, and acted in the same capacity for Charles I. He took, however, the Covenant and Engagement, and accepted of a judge's place on the common bench, from Cromwell. On the death of Oliver, he refused to act under his son Richard. In the parlament which recalled Charles II. he sat for his native county, and after the Restoration, was, in 1660, made chief baron of the Exchequer; whence, in 1671, he was advanced to the chief-justiceship of the King's Bench. He resigned his office in 1675, and died the next year. B. at Alderley, Glou-cestershire, 1609. Cowper, in his "Task," speaks of him as-

"Immortal Hale! for deep discernment praised And sound integrity, not more than famed For sanctity of manners undefiled."

His writings are numerous on theological, phi-

Hale

who wrote several novels, and other works of merit. She edited "The Ladies' Magazine," at Boston; "The Ladies' New Book of Cookery;" and produced "Woman's Record, or Sketches of distinguished Women, from the Beginning till 1850 A.D." B. at Newport, New Hampshire, 1795.

Hales, John, hails, commonly called "the ever-memorable," suffered great hardships in the rebellion, and was a man of learning and skill in argument, as appears from his works, which were collected after his death, and pub-lished under the title of "Golden Remains of the ever-memorable Mr. John Hales, of Eton College," 3 vols. B. at Bath, 1584; D. 1656.

HALES, Stephen, an English divine and natural philosopher of great eminence, was brought up at Benet College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow in 1703. He ardently entered became fellow in 1703. He ardently entered upon the study of botany and experimental philosophy, and invented a machine for demonstrating the motions of the planets, nearly similar to the orrery. In 1741 he made public his system of ventilating close and unhealthy places, which was at last introduced into Newgate, and greatly reduced the mortality there. He was greatly esteemed by Frederick, prince of Wales, and was almoner to the princess. B. in Kent, 1677; D. 1761. His communications to the "Philosophical Transactions" were numerous; besides which, he published two volumes of "Statical Essays," &c., and was an early ad-vocate of temperance. His "Friendly Admonition to the Drinkers of Gin" was first published uon to the Drmkers of Gin" was first published in 1748, and has frequently been reprinted. HALFORD, Sir Henry, M.D., hāb-ford, was the physician of four successive Britis sovereigns—George III., George IV., William IV. and Queen Victoria. He was president of the Royal College of Physicians from 1820 fill the Royal Chief Section 17. 1921 a callating addition. time of his death. In 1831 a collective edition of his essays and orations was published, and pronounced by the "London Quarterly Review" pronounced by the "London Quarterly Review", to be "a delightful compound of professional knowledge and literary taste. Handled with skill and feeling such as his, subjects of medical research have not only nothing dry or repulsive about them, but are of deep and universal interest and attraction." The original name of Sir Henry am acracian. The original name of shiftens was Vaughan, which, on coming into the possession of a large fortune by the death of Sir Charles Halford, his mother's cousin, he exchanged for that name. B. at Leicester, 1766;

D. 1844. HALHED, Nathaniel Brassey, hall-hed, a dis-tinguished oriental scholar, was educated at Harrow School, and afterwards became a civil officer in the East India Company's service. He omeer in the East India Company as evider. The published "A Code of Gentoo Laws on Ordinations of the Pundits, from a Persian Translation;" "A Grammar of the Bengal Language;" tion;" "A Grammar of the Bengal Managers, and "A Narrative of the Events which have happened in Bombay and Bengal, relative to happened in Bombay and July, 1777." He the Mahratta Empire, since July, 1777." He subsequently returned to England, and was chosen member of Parliament for Lymington; and became somewhat notorious in consequence of a judge in the 'Seriff's court. As affording of having patronized and defended a lumatic delineation of the manners, dress, and customs prophet named Brothers, whose confinement in bledam he denounced in Patiament as an in pleted by Grafton, is very curious. D. 1647.

Hatta, Richard, an English divine of the Boulard the Comparish and became somewhat notorious in consequence

Hall

HALE, Mrs. Sarah, an American authoress, 1835 he contributed a series of essays to a weekly paper in that country, professing to paint the peculiarities of Yankee character. These were well received, and, in 1837, they were collected and published under the title of the "Clockmaker; or, the Sayings and Doings of Samuel Slick of Slickville." A second series appeared A second series appeared in 1838, and a third in 1840. In 1842 he visited England as an attaché to the American legation, and, in the following year, embodied, in a work called "The Attaché," the results of his observations made in that country. Thus went through several editions. Besides these works, Mr. Haliburton published "Bubbles of Canada," An Historical and Statistical Account of Nova Scotia;" "The Old Judge; or, Life in a Colony; "Traits of American Humour;" Yankee Stories;" "Nature, and Human Na-Tangee Stories; "Nature, and Human Mu-ture;" and a few others. In 1859 he was re-turned to the House of Commons, as member for Launceston. B. in Nova Scotia, 1798; p. at Isleworth, 1865.

HALIFAX, George Savile, Marquis of, hal-e-fals, an emment English statesman, who was created marquis in 1682. Charles II. made him a privy councillor, and lord privy seal. He was also offered the post of secretary of state, and that of lord-lieutenant of Ireland, but declined both. On the accession of James il., he was appointed on the accession of James II., he was appointed president of the council, from which he was dismissed for refusing his consent to a repeal of the tests. In the Convention Parliament he of the tests. In the Convention Parliament in was chosen speaker of the House of Lord, and, at the accession of William and Mary, was made lord privy seal. In 1689 he resigned that office, and became an opponent of the government. In 1630; n. 1695. His lordship wrote an excellent piece, entitled. "Advice to a Daughter." Macaulay says of Halifax, that at the inroads made by James on the constitution, when opposition first appeared in the cabinet, Hahlax courageously gave utterance to those feelings which, as it soon appeared, pervaded the whole nation.

nation.

Haltfax, George Montagu, Earl of a statesman in the reigns of William III. and Anne assisted Prior in the composition of the "Story of the Country Mouse and the City Mouse," designed to ridicule Dryden's "Hind and Panther." He also wrote several other and Panther." He also wrote several other pieces. He is believed to be the person satirized by Pope, under the name of Buffo, in the "Prologue to the Satires." B. in Northamptonshire, 1661; p. 1715.

Harry, Lady Anna, häl'-ket, an English lady, the daughter of Robert Murray, preceptor to Prince Charles, afterwards Charles I. In 1666 is he martied Sir James Haliket. She pro-

1000 sne married Sur James Hauter. Sne pro-duced twenty-one volumes, in folio and 4to, on religious subjects. From these, a volume of Meditations was printed at Edinburgh, in 1701. n. in London, 1822; D. 1699. Hall, Edward, Ausl., an old English chro-nicler, whose works rank with those of Holimshed and Stowe, was a native of London, and being a lawyer by profession, attained the rank of a judge in the aberiff's court. As affording the Troubles of his Time." in which he is very severe on the Protestants. D. 1604.

Hall, Joseph, an English prelate and distinguished scholar, was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellow-In 1597 he published his "Virgidemiaship. In 1597 he published his "Virgidemia-rum Liber," a series of satires, which were re-printed at Oxford in 1753. Of this work Pope printed at Oxford in 1765. Of this work Folge said, "it was the best poetry and the truest satire in the English language." He professed himself to be the first English satirist, as is

"I first adventure; following expositive couplet:—
"I first adventure; follow me who list,
And be the second English satirist."

Hallam, however, questions his claim to be the fratanam, however, questions his chain to be the first English satirist, and puts Gascoigne before him. About 1603 he was presented to the rectory of Hawsted, in Suffolk, which he resigned on obtaining Waltham, in Essex. Henry Prince of Wales appointed him his chaplain, and had a great regard for him. In 1818 he obtained the deanery of Worcester, and two years afterwards was appointed one of the English divines at the synod of Dort. In 1627 he

B. 25 ASDDY-QC-12-ZOUCH, 15/4; D. BCAT INOTWICH, 1656. His works have been published in three vols. folio, and abound in the thoughts, expressed in excellent language. He has been generally called the English Senega. A great generally called the Lugisia Sensec. A great authority, speaking of the works of this writer, says—"His 'Art of Divine Meditation,' his 'Contemplations,' and, indeed, many of his writings, remind us frequently of Taylor. Both had equally pious and devotional tempers, both were full of learning; both fertile of illustration; both may be said to have strong imagination and profited and the thorac lively surface and not set of the same profit of the nation and poetical genius, though Taylor let his predominate a little more. Taylor is also more subtle and argumentative. . . . I do not know that any third writer comes close to either.

HALL, Captain Basil, R.N., was the son of Sir James Hall, the fourth baronet of Dunglass, and, in 1802, entered the British navy. For many years he was actively engaged in various many years ne was active engaged in various parts of the globe, but is principally known by his popular books of voyages and travels, the titles of the most esteemed of which are "Voyage to the West Coast of the Corea and the Great Loo-Choo Island," which was favourably received; "Travels in North America;"
"Fragments of Voyages and Travels," of which appeared several series, and which met with general favour. These, however, are but a few general tayour. These, nowever, are but a few of his numerous writings, which embrace a con-siderable variety of subjects. These works or-tend to numerous volumes; but, as a general estimate of his talents as a writer, the following criticism appeared in the "London Quarterly Review."—" Few writers lay themselves more open to quizzing; few can prose and bore more successfully than he does now and then; but the captain's merit is real and great; he imparts a freshness to whatever he touches, and carries the reader with untiring good-humour cheerily along with him. Turn where we will, we have posics of variegated flowers presented to us, and we are sure to find in every one of them, whether sombre or gay, a sprig of Basil." He wrote with great facility. Some time before his death he was deprived of the use of his reason. B. in Edinburgh, 1788; D. in confinement, 1844. 478

Haller

HALL, Robert, one of the most distinguished of modern divines in the Baptist connexion. His ministerial duties were performed during life in Cambridge, Leicester, and Bristol, where he died, 1831. B. at Arnsby, Leicestershire, 1764. As a preacher, Mr. Hall and a great reputation, "In the cloquence of the pulpit," says Lord Brougham, "Robert Hall comes nearer Massillon than either Cicero or Eschines to Demosthenes." As a writer, he stands equally high. thenes." As a writer, he scaues equany nign.
"Whoever wishes to see the English language in its perfection," says Dugald Stewart, "must read the writings of that great divine, Robert Hall. He combines the beanties of Johnson, Addison, and Burke, without their imperfections"

Hall, Samuel Carter, a modern littérateur and lecturer, successfully edited several periodiand necturer, successfully control several periodicals; among which we may mention "The New Monthly Magazine," "The Amulet," "The Book of Gems," and "The Art Journal." He is best known, however, by his share in an illustrated work on Ireland, written in conjunction with his wife. B. at Topsham, Devonshire. 1801.

HALL, Anna Maria, the wife of the above. whose maiden name was Fielding, is a native of Ireland, and well known by her admirable delineations of Irish life and humour. She has written many works of fletion, and composed some minor dramas, besides being a large contributor to the periodical literature of the day.

B. in Dublin in the present century.

HALLAM, Henry, LL.D., kal-lam, one of the most distinguished of modern writers, was educated at Eton and Oxford, after which he took up his residence in London, where he ever afterwards principally lived. He was the esteemed friend of Sir Walter Scott, and, about the same period, was engaged with him as a contributor to the pages of the "Edinburgh Review." He greatly assisted in achieving the abolition of the slave-trade, and became a foreign associate of the Institute of France. In 1830 he received one of the two fifty-guinea gold medals awarded by George IV. for emi-nence in historical composition, whilst Washington Irving, the American writer, received the other. He wrote three great works, of which it is unnecessary to say more than that either of them is sufficiently meritorious to confer literary immortality upon the author. They for Hierary immortality upon the author. They are entitled—1. "A View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages," 2. "The Constitutional History of England from the Accession of Henry VII. to the Death of George II.," 3. "An Introduction to the Literature of Europe in the Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Seventeenth Centuries." In 1882 a monumental extended the State of State of the State of State o teenth Centuries." In 1862 a monumental statue of this great writer was erected in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, by public subscription. p. 1787; p. 1889. Henry Hallam was singularly unfortunate in seeing his two sons, young men of great promise, die before the hand of death was laid upon the father. It was to the memory of one of these leved friends that Temyson wrote the poom of "In Memoritan".

HALLER, Albert von, hall-ler, a famous physician, who, at a very early age, indicated the possession of considerable genius, particularly for poetry. His reputation procured him a medical professorship as Göttinget, where he afterwards became president of the Academy. He was also a member of most of the learned. societies in Europe. B. at Berne, 1708; p. there, 1777. The poems of Haller are descriptive and elegant. Besides these, he published a number of works on medical subjects.—His son, who followed in his father's footsteps, produced an esteemed work, entitled "A Literary Biography of the Swiss." D. 1786. D. 1786.

the Swiss." D. 1750. Haller, Edmund, LL.D., häl'-le, a celebrated English astronomer, was educated at St. Faul School, whence he was sent to Queen's College, Oxford, where he applied himself principally to made a number of observations, and having formed the design of completing the scheme of formed the design of completing the scheme of the heavens by the addition of the stars near the south pole, he went to St. Helena in 1676, and finished his catalogue. On his return he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1670 went to Dantzie, to confer with Heyelius about the dispute between him and Dr. Hooke, respecting the preference of plain or glass sights in astronomical instruments. In 1650 appeared the great comet, known as Halley's comet, and which he first observed in his passage from Dover to Calais. He afterwards completed his observations upon it at the Royal Observatory at Paris. In 1636 Sir Isaac Newton committed to his care the publicat on of his "Principla," to which Halley prefixed some Latin verses. In 1693 he spiled along some Laun verses. In 1995 he sained along the coasts of Africa, America, &c., for the pur-pose of trying his theory of the variation of the compass. The year following he made another voyage with the same design, and, from his observations, constructed his general chart, exhibiting the variation of the compass in most parts of the ocean. He was subsequently sent on a third voyage to ascertain the course of the tides in the British Channel; and of these he also published a chart. Soon after he went, at the request of the emperor of Germany, to survey the Adriatic, and to examine two ports which the emperor intended to establish there. On his return, in 1703, the degree of doctor of laws was conferred on him by the university of Oxford. He was also appointed Savillan professor of geometry at Oxford, and had the half-pay of a captain in the navy settled on him. In 1713 he was chosen secretary to the Royal Society, and in 1719 made astronomer royal. B. in London, 1658; B. 1742. Dr. Halley published several papers in the "Philosophical Transactions," a set of Astronomical Tables, and an edition of Apollonius's works, folio, 1710. He excelled in many departments of learning and scientific research.

and scientific research.

Halliwell, James Orebard, hill-li-wel, an eminent English author, who produced and edited many valuable works, chiefly illustrative of past ages. Their number is too great to be enumerated here, but his greatest work is a grand edition of Shaksweare, with a new collation of the early editions, and with all the original tales and novels on which the plays see founded. Comiss networkeries library in the plays see founded. Comiss networkeries library in the content of the c are founded. Copious archmological illustrations accompany each play, and a life of the poet is given. A copy of this work costs £63. The edition was limited to 150 copies. B. in Surrey, religious reformer, was the nephew of James. carl of Arran, and was educated at St. Andrew's; after which he went abroad, where he imbibed the opinions of Luther. On his return home he was made abbot of Ferne, in the shire of Ross, where he promulgated the new doctrines with so much zeal as to excite the wrath of the clergy, who caused him to be apprehended and sent to Beaton, archbishop of St. Andrew's. After a long examination he was declared contumacious, and burnt at the stake opposite to St. Salvador's College, St. Andrew's, Feb. 28, 1528. B. 1504.

1820.

HAMILGAR BARCAS, ha-mil'-kar, a celebrated Carthaginian general, who commanded the Carthaginians in the 18th year of the first Punic war. Fell in a battle against the natives of Spain, 229 B.C.

HAMILTON,P

HAMILTON, James, first duke of, was the son HAMILTON, James, RIST duke of, was the son of James, marquis of Hamilton, and, in 1625, succeeded his father, and gained the favour of Charles I. In 1631 he went with an army to the assistance of Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, and returned to England in the following year. He afterwards accompanied the king to Scotland, and, on the breaking out of the disturbances in that country respecting episcopacy, was appointed commissioner, and raised forces in defence of the royal cause, for which he was created duke of Hamilton and earl of Cambridge. After distinguishing binself greatly in behalf of the king, he was deleated by Cromwell at Preston, and was brought to trial and

Well the Presion, than was obegan to this and beheaded in 1610. D. 1806. HAMILTON, Anthony, Count, an ingenious writer, descent icd from a Scotch family, at-tached himself to the fortunes of the house of Stuart, and wrote fairy tales and poems; but his best work is the "Memoirs of the Count de Grammont." B. at Roserea, Ireland, 1616; p. at Grammoni, B. at 1005 rea, treamu, 1075 p. ac St. Germain's, 1720. Speaking of these me-moirs, in his "History of England," Macaulay says that Hamilton is "the artist to whom we owe the most highly-finished and vividly-coloured picture of the English court in the days when the English court was gavest."

HAMILTON, William, an ingenious poet, and a man of fortune and family. He is the author of "The Braes of Yarrow," a poem which sug-gested to Wordsworth his three pieces of "Yarrow Unvisited," "Yarrow Visited," and "Yarrow Re-visited." B. in Ayrshire, 1704; D. 1754. His works were printed at Edinburgh,

HAMILTON, William Gerard, who obtained the appellation of "Single Speech Hamilton," from the remarkable impression produced by the first and nearly only speech he ever made in the British Parliament, was the son of a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, and was educated at Winchester School and Oriel College, Oxford. He was elected to parliament for Petersfield, in 1754, and in the following year delivered the speech referred to. In 1761 he went to Ireland as secretary to Lord Halifax, and in the Parliament of that kingdom confirmed the reputation which he had gained in England by his oratory. He was chancellor of the exchequer in Ireland for upwards of twenty years, and retired from public life in 1784. His works, consisting of "Parliamentary Logic," "Streeches," &c., were printed in 1803, with the life of the author prefixed. The authorship of the "Letters of Junius" was attributed to him, but upon very

Junias was actionated to him, but uplot well selender grounds. D. 1796. HAMILTON, Sir William, K.B., was, for 38 years, English ambassador at the court of Naples. He explored the volcanic mountains of Vesuvius and Etna, his observations on which were published. His "Campi Phiegraei,"

2 vols, folio, is also an interesting performance. He greatly promoted the publication of the magnificent and elegant work, "Antiquités Etrusques, Grecques, et Romaines, tirées du Cabinet de Mr. Hamilton," the editor of which was D'Hancarville. In 1782 he lost his first wife, and, in 1791, married Emma Harte, the Lady Hamilton so well known in connexton with Lord Nelson. (See Nelson.) The "Philosophical Transactions" were curriched by many of his communications, and also the British Musseum by his presents of antiquities and other curricatities. B. in Scotland, 1730; p. in London, 1800

Hamilton, Emma, Lady, wife of Sir William, was the daughter of a female servant named Harte; and at the age of thirteen was placed in the house of Mr. Thomas, of Hawarden, Flint-shire, to attend upon his children. Emma, however, thought the situation dull, and left it. At sixteen, she went to London, got a place in the house of a shopkeeper in St. James's Market, and soon after was engaged to wait upon Ret, and soon after was engaged to wait upon a lady of rank, where she passed her leisure time in reading novels and plays. She thus acquired a taste for the drama; and employed herself in imitating attitudes and manners of persons on the stage, from a desire to become an actress. In this way she laid the foundation of her extraordinary skill in pantomimic representations. But she neglected her business. was dismissed, and went to serve in a tavern frequented by actors, painters, musicians, &c. In this service, she formed an acquaintance with a Welsh youth, who, being impressed into the navy, Emma hastened to the captain who had pressed him, and obtained the boy's liberty. She remained with this officer, who loaded her with presents, for sometime. She quitted him, however, for a gentleman of large fortune, who kept her for a time in great affluence; but, disgusted by her extravagance, and induced by domestic considerations, he dismissed her. Reduced to the greatest poverty, she became one of the most common of degraded females. From of the most common of tograface females. From this state she was relieved by a person known as Dr. Graham, who was role did here exhibited her, covered only with a transparent veil, as a model of female symmetry of person, under the name of the goddess Rhyefa. Painters, sculptors, and others, paid their tribute of admiration at the shrine of this new tritute of admiration at the sarine of this new detry. The artful quack had her bust modelled, many purchased it, and a greater number still came to admire the original. Charles Greville (of the Warwick family) fell in love with, and would have married her, but for the interference of his uncle, Sir W. Hamilton, who, according to some accounts, made an agreement with Greville to pay his debts, on condition that he should give up his mistress; or, as others state the dreumstance, in his endeavours to save his nephew, fell into the snare himself, and became the victim of her arts. This is not improbable, for she was an adept in deceit, and though of a violent and passionate temperament, she could assume an air of perfect simplicity, candour, and amiability. Sir William made her his wife in 1791; introduced her at the court of Naples, where the queen became so infatuated with the new ambassadress, as to have her a frequent visitor at the palace. It was there that she imbibed a violent passion for Nelson, then com-manding the Agamemnon; and, from that period, she became his companion, and was sometimes useful to him as a political agent. After the victory of Aboukir, when the conqueror was received in Naples with extravagant rejoicings, Lady Hamilton was the second figure in the pageant, and accompanied Nelson wherever he went. To her advice is attributed the disgraceful death of Prince Caracciolo. She subsequently went with Nelson into Germany, where the figure they cut at the courts which they visited is represented by several eye-witnesses anything but dignified and becoming. She was inordinately fond of champarue, and not unfrequently indulged in it till in a state not altogether decent. It was at one time believed that she had borne a daughter to Nelson, but this has never been satisfactorily ascertained. n. 1761; p. 1815.

HAMILTON, Alexander, a distinguished American officer and legislator in the war of inrican omcer and legislator in the war of in-dependence, while a student of Columbia Col-leve, at the age of seventeen, published several essays concerning the rights of the colonies, which were marked by vigour and maturity of style, as well as by soundness of argument. He entered the American army, with the rank of captain of artillery, before he was nineteen, and by the time he was twenty, the commander-in-chief had made him his aide-de-camp, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. From this time Hamilton continued the inseparable companion of Washington during the war, and was always consulted by him on the most important occasions. After the war, colonel Hamilton, then about twenty-four, commenced the study of the law, and was admitted at the bar. In 1782 he had been chosen a member of congress from the state of New York, where he quickly acquired great influence and distinction. He contributed much to the favourable reception of the constitution by the essays he wrote, in con-junction with Madison and Jay, in the "Federainterior With Manuson and Day, in the "cocta-list." He was appointed secretary of the treasury on the organization of the federal government in 1789; and during his continuance in that office, about five years, raised the public credit from the lowest state of depression to a height quite unprecedented in the history of the country. In 1798, when an invasion was apprehended from the French, and a provisional army had been called into the field, his public services were again required; and on the death of Washington, in 1799, he succeeded to the chief command. When the army was disbanded, Hamilton again returned to the bar, and continued to practise, with increased reputation and success, until 1804. A quarrel having taken place between him and colonel having taken place between him and colonel Burr, the latter challenged him, and they met at Hoboken on the 11th of July, and Hamilton tell, mortally wounded, at the lirst fire, and Hamilton tell, mortally wounded, at the lirst fire, and eldest son had been killed in a duel. The sensation which this occurrence produced throughout the United States was very great; for, of all the American statesmen, he displayed the most commenheavier understanding and the 107, or an and American Statesmen, in conspisage the most comprehensive understanding and the most varied ability. B. 1767; killed, 1804. HAMITON, Elizabeth, an eminent literary lady, who wrote "Letters of a Hindoo Rajah," "Lifeto Agrippina," "Memoirs of Modern Philorophers," "Popular Essays," "Letters on the Formation of the Religious and Moral Principles," &c. n. at Pelifet 1758. p. 1816.

ples," &c. B. at Belfast, 1758; D. 1816.

HAMLEON, Thomas, is chiefly known as the author of "Cyril Thornton," a starring novel of military adventure, combining the proportion, determine a man's philosophical style of a mature classical scholar with the descriptive power and vivid feeling of one who had participated in the scenes and circumstances that he described. Captain Hamilton served the campaigns in the Peninsular, and in America, and afterwards devoted his time chiefly to literature. He was a voluminous America, and activating devoted instance, chiefly to literature. He was a voluminous contributor to "Blackwood's Magazine," in which "Cyril Thornton" originally appeared. His principal works after "Cyril Thornton" are, "Annals of the Peninsular Campaign," and "Menand Manners in America." B. 1789; D. 1842.

Hamilton

HAMILTON, David, a Scotch architect of eminence, who erected the Royal Exchange in Glasgow, besides the Western club-house, the theatre in Dunlop-street, the British and other banks, and the ducal palace at Hamilton, and a great many other mansions for the noblemen and gentlemen of the western counties of Scot-One of the four £500 premiums for designs of the new houses of Parliament was awarded to Hamilton. B.in Glasgow, 1768; D.1843.

Hamilton, Gavin, a painter of historical subjects, and connoisseur of ancient art, studied in Rome, and applied himself with great diligence to the elucidation of the antique, and in consequence gave his pictures a correctness in regard to costume which marked them out from the generality of the compositions of contemporary generality of the compositions of contemporary artists. His principal work was his "Homer," a series of scenes from the "Iliad." He occupied the later years of his life in making excavations among the ruins of the emperor Adrian's villa at Tivoli, and other places, and was thereby enabled to recover many long-lost treasures of art. B. at Lanark, Scotland; D. at Rome, 1798.

HAMILTON, Sir William, Bart., one of the most eminent of modern metaphysicians, was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained first-class honours. In 1813 he was called to the Scottish bar, but did not court extensive practice. In 1820 he competed with John Wilson for the moral philosophy chair in John Wilson for the moral philosophy chair in the university of Edinburgh, without success; but, in the following year, became professor of universal history in that institution. In 1836 he was summoned to the chair of logic and ne was summoned to the enair of logic and metaphysics, which he retained up to the time of his death. From 1829 to 1839 he contributed a series of articles to the Edimburgh Review, and was a member of the Institute of France, and of many other learned bodies. n. at Glos-gow, 1783; p. at Edinburgh, 1856. This pro-ceed this property of the contributed largely to the liferafound thinker contributed largely to the litera-ture of mental philosophy, edited the works of Reid, and, at the time of his death, was engaged in editing an edition of the works of Dugald Stewart. His principal essays have been translated into French and Italian. On the European continent the intellectual calibre of Sir William continent the intellectual calibre of Si William was very highly estimated. M. Cousin calls him "le plus grand exitique de notro siècle;" and M. Brandis, "le grand maître du Péripati-time." In his own country he was equally appreciated. The "British Quarterly Review" observes that "the slightest perusal of Sir William Hamilton's writings will be sufficient the cavile active reader that he is in intercourse. to convince the reader that he is in intercourse with a mind of the most extraordinary comprehension and acuteness. He combines, in a degree unequalled since the time of Aristotle, the power of analysis and generalization. . . . The degrees in which these two counter-power: exist in any mind, together with their relative character.

Hampden

Harmond, Henry, häm'-mond, a learned Eng-lish divine, who, in 1638, obtained the rectory of Penshurst, in Kent, whence he was ejected during the robellion. In 1643 he was made archdeacon of Chichester, and was with the king at the treaty of Uxbridge, to confer with the parliamentary commissioners on church government, on which subject he disputed with Vines, a Presbyterian minister. In 1645 he was appointed canon of Christ Church, Oxford, and chaplain n ordinary to the king, whom he attended in he Isle of Wight. In 1653 he published his Annotations on the New Testament," a work f great merit. B. at Chertsey, 1805; n. as he was about to be made bishop of Worcester by Charles II., in 1860. Besides the above, by wrote "A. Commentary on the Psalms," "A wrote "A Commentary on the Fsaims," "A Fractical Catechism," sermons, and controver-ial pieces, all collected into 4 vols. folio. To the works of this writer Dr. Johnson was exnewly partial, and sometimes gave them as a resent to young men going into orders. He also bought them for the library at Streatham.

HAMMOND, James, M.P., an English gentle-man, who cherished an unfortunate but unavail-ing passion for a Miss Dashwood, and wrote love elegies to unburden his woes. On these elegies Dr. Johnson thus generalizes:—"Where there is fiction, there is no passion. He that there is fiction, there is no passion. He that describes himself as a shepherd, and his Neera or Delia as a shepherdess, and talks of goats and lambs, feels no passion. He that courts his mistress with Roman imagery deserves to lose her; for she may, with good reason, suspect his sincerity." B. 1710, p. 1742.

HAMPDEN, John, häm'-den, a celebrated English patriot, descended of an ancient family in Buckinghamshire. In 1636 he distinguished himself by his resistance to the crown, and his objection to the payment of ship-money, by which he acquired great popularity. This case was argued twelve days in the court of Exwas agued where they are the charge in the decision was given in favour of the crown, the popularity of Hampden by no means suffered. He became a leading man in the House of Commons, and, at the commencement of the civil war, took up arms against the king; but fell in an engagement with Prince Rupert on Chalgrove Field, Oxfordshire, 1643; E. in Lon-don, 1594. Lord Clarendon observes of him, that "he had a head to contrive, a tongue to persuade, and a heart to execute any mischief." But others are of a different opinion from his But others are or a different opinion from ms lordship, in reference to Hampden's powers of contriving mischief. In fact, he was one of England's noblest worthies. He spoke, acted, fought, and fell for the liberties of his country; and what more can be allotted for man to do? In private life he was amiable and affectionate: in public debate, eloquent yet temperate; in ounsel, sagacious; in action, vigilant; in enterprise, courageous; and his last moments were spent in prayer, breathed for the welfare were spent in prayer, breathed for the welfare of his country.

HAMPDEN, Renn Dickson, D.D., was educated at Oriel College, Oxford. In 1829 he became public examiner in classics; in 1832, Rampton lecturer, the following year, principal of St. Mary's Hall; 1834, White's professor of moral philosophy, 1836, regius professor of divinity; and, in 1837, bishop of Hereford. He was a able contributor to the "Encyclopadia Britannica" and the "Encyclopædia Metropolitana." Hallam says that no Englishman has gone so far into the wilderness of scholasticism. B. in Barbadocs, 1792; p. 1868.

HANDEL, George Frederick, han'-del, an illustrious German musician, whose father intended him for the law, and, perceiving his propensity to music, prohibited all instruments from his house. The son, however, contrived to have a small clavichord concealed in the garret, where he used to amuse himself when the family were asleep. At the age of seven he went with his father to the court of the duke of Saxe-Weissenfels, who induced his father to allow his boy to pursue the bent of his genius; and accordingly a master was provided for him. His progress was now so rapid, that at the age of ten he composed a set of sonatas, which were in the possession of George III. In 1698 he went to Berlin, where he was greatly noticed by the king of Prussia. Thence he went, in 1703, to Hamburg, and had a duel with Mattheson, another musician, who made a lunge at him, and whose weapon was prevented from penetrating his heart by its being broken against a training his neart by its coing broken against a music score, which Handel happened to have buttoned under his coat. Shortly after this, he composed, at the age of twenty, his opera of "Almeria," which had a run of thirty nights. In the following year he produced "Florinda" and "Nerone," and, shortly afterwards, revisited Italy. At Florence he produced the opera of "Rodrigo," for which he received a service of plate and £50. His fame had now spread far plate and 450. His tame had now spread rar and near, and in 1710 he visited England; but being under an engagement to the elector of Hanover, alterwards George I. of England, his stay was short. In 1712 he returned, and obtained a pension of £200 a year for a "Te Deum" and his "Jubliace," written by command of Queen Anne, to celebrate the peace of Utrecht. This pension was subsequently doubled. Some of the nobility now projected a plan for creeting an academy in the Haymarket, to secure a supply of operas composed by Handel, and under his direction. This was earried into effect, and succeeded for about ten years, but fell to the ground when the rage for Italian music set in, Handel finding it imrealism music set in frames internal re-possible to stem the tide of public taste. In 1742, however, his popularity returned, and he retained his glory to the last. B. at Halle, Saxony, 1894; D. in London, 1759, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, where there is an elegant monument to his memory. But his greatest monument is in his works, a complete edition of which was published by Dr. Arnold. This great musician composed much, and all that he composed is valuable. His original MSS, are in the Queen's Library, and consist of 82 large folio volumes. Among these are 23 oratorios, 32 Italian operas, 8 volumes of anthems, and other compositions. In every style of music he excelled, but more especially in sacred music of the choral kind. Wherever his works are now performed, admiration is the meed which is universally conceded to them. In 1859 the centenary of his death was commemorated by a festival in many of the principal places of Europe, America, and even Australia, we believe, in token of the universal appreciation in which his compositions are now held.

HANKA, Waclaw, han'-ker, a modern Bohe- the gates of Rome, it is usually asserted that mian poet, more celebrated from his having it must have yielded amidst the general conster-accidentally discovered, in a vault of the church of Kralodvor, the Bohemian manuscript of a poem known as "The Queen's Court," than for the excellence of his own muse. He was, however, an ardent labourer in the field of Bolic-mian literature, and is said to have been master of eighteen different languages. B. 1791.

HANMER, Sir Thomas, han-mer, chosen Speaker of the Commons in 1713, a position he ably filled; and in later life devoted himself to literature, and edited an illustrated edition of Shakespeare. B. 1676; D. 1746.

HANNAY, James, han'-nai, novelist, satirist. and journalist, began life in the royal navy, which he quitted in 1815, and devoted himself which he quitted in 1815, and devoted himsoft to literature, contributing largely to fall the most respectable publications of the day, and in a variety of styles, his lucubrations having appeared in the "Quarterly Reviews," "Punch," various newspapers, including the "Athensum," &c. Mr. Hannay published several separate works, such as "Satire and Satirists," "Distance Conyers," "Sincleton Font-moy," &c. He also paid much attention to classical literature and genealogy, on both of which subjects he contributed valuable papers to the "Quarterly Review." He contested the Dumitres district of burghs in 1857, and though unsuressful, reburghs in 1857, and, though unsuccessful, received a respectable measure of support. From 1860 to 1864, he was editor of the "Edinburgh Courant" newspaper, one of the oldest and most respectable journals in Scotland. B. at Dumfries, 1827.

HANNIBAL, han'-ni-bal, a celebrated Carthaginian general, the son of Hamilton, was brought up in his father's camp, although from his earliest years he was accustomed to the labours of the field. He passed into Spain when nine years old, and, at the request of his father, took a solemn oath that he never would rather, took a solenni data that he rever wound be at peace with the Romans. After his father's death, he was appointed over the cavalry in Spain, and before his 25th year, some time utter, was invested with the command of all the armies of Carthage. In three years of continual success, he subdued all the nations of Spain which opposed the Carthaginian power, and took Saguntum, after a siege of eight months, 219 в.с. This city was in alliance with the Romans, and its fall was the cause of the second Punic war, which Hannibal prepared to support with all the courage and prudence of a con-summate general. He levied three large armies, one of which he sent to Africa, he left another in Spain, and marched at the head of a third towards Italy. With this army he crossed the Alps, hitherto deemed impassable, and since accomplished by Napoleon I. under similar accomplished by Anopoleon II. under similar military circumstances. II. no sooner had entered Italy, than he was opposed by the Romans, and after he had defeated the consul, Publius Cornelius Scipio, on the banks of the river Ticinus (Ticino), he crossed the Appenines, and invaded Eururia. He defeated the army of the consul Flaminius, near the lake Trasimenus, and soon after met the two con-suls, C. Terentius and L. Æmilius, at Canne, in Apulla. His army consisted of 60,000 foot and 10,000 horse when he engaged the Romans, and the slaughter was so great, that he sent to Carthage three bushels of gold rings, which had been taken from the Roman knights slain in the battle. Had he now marched his army to nation. After hovering for some time round the city, he retired to Capua, where his solders soon forgot to conquer, in the pleasures and riot of that luxurious town. From this circumstance it has been said, and with propiety, that Capua was a Canna to Hannibal. After the battle of Canna; the Romans became more cautious; and when the dictator, Fabius Maximus, had defied the artifice as well as the valour of Hannibal, they began to look for better times. Marcellus, who succeeded Fabius in the field, first taught the Romans that Hannibal was not invincible. After many important debates in the senate, it was decreed that war should be carried into Africa, in order to cause Hannibal to withdraw from the gates of Rome; and Scipio, who was the first proposer of the plan, was empowered to carry it into execution. When Car-thage saw the enemy on her coasts, she recalled Hannibal from Italy; and he is said to have left, with tears in his eyes, a country which, during sixteen years, he had kept under continual alarms, and which he could almost call his own. He and Scipio met near Carthage, and after a parley, in which neither would give the preference to his enemy, they determined to come to a general engagement. The battle was fought a general engagement. The battle was fought near Zama, and Hannibal suffered a great defeat, 202 B.C. This battle ended the second Punic war. Hannibal, after he had lost the day, fled to Adrumetum, and afterwards to Syria, to King. Antiochus, whom he advised to neabhair against Rome, and lead an army into the heart of Italy. Antiochus distrusted the fidelity of the noble refugee, and was conquered by the Romans, who granted him peace on condition Admins, who granted him peace of common of his delivering their greatest enemy into their hands. The Carthaginian general, being apprised of this, left the court of Antiochus and fied to Prusias, king of Bithynia. He encouraged him to declare war against Rome, and raged him to declare war against keind, and even assisted him in weakening the power of Eumenes, king of Pergamus, who was in alliance with the Romans. The senate received intelligence of the country in which he had taken shelter from their vengeance, when they immediately sent ambassadors, amongst whom was L. Q. Flaminius, to demand him of Prusias. The king was unwilling to betray Hannibal, and violate the laws of hospitality; but, at the same time, he dreaded the power of Rome. Hannibal, however, extricated him from his embarrassment by swallowing a dose of poison, which he always carried with him in a ring on his finger. As he breathed his last, he ex-claimed—"Solvamus diuturna cura populum Romanum, quando mortem senis expectare longum censet." B. 247 B.c.; D. 183 B.c. In longum censet." B. 247 B.c.; D. 183 B.c. In the same year, Scipio and Philopemen died. The Romans entertained such a high opinion of Hannibal as a commander, that Scipio, who conquered him, calls him the greatest general that ever lived, and gives the second rank to Pyrrhus of Epirus, and places himself the next to these, in merit and abilities.

HANNO, han'-no, a Carthaginian general, who made great geographical discoveries in the inte-rior of Africa, an account of which is extant.— There was another of this name, who tamed a young lion, which used to attend him like a dog. The Carthaginians, fearing his power, dog. The Ca banished him.

HARCOURT, William, Earl of, har'-hoort, entered the army as ensign in the 1st foot guards, in 1759, and while serving in America, performed the remarkable feat of going in one day 70 miles, on the same horse, through the enemy's country, with only a patrol of 30 men, and bringing back General Lee, who had deserted from the British General Lee, who had deserted from the British army. He took Lee out of his quariers when surrounded by 2000 of the American troops, on his return to Bingland, he was mode side-decamp to the king, and had the command of the queen's regiment of light dragoons, which he held from 1770 till his detth. z. 1738; n. 1830.

HARDENBERG, Charles Augustus, prince of, har'-den-bairg, a famous statesman, who several times represented the elector of Hanover at the English court. In 1790 he entered the service of the king of Prussia, whose minister for foreign affairs he became in 1806. At the close of the wars of the first French empire, he signed the reaty of peace at Paris, in 1814. n. at Hanover, 750; D. at Genoa, 1822

HARDICANUTE, OF HARDACAN SE, har-di-kan'ute, was eldest son of Canute the Great, king of England, Denmark, and Norway. On the death of his father, whose viceroy he was in Denmark, Harold, a younger son, by Canute's marriage with Aligiva, daughter of the earl of Northampon, assumed the crown of England, and a bloody struggle was only prevented by the closes son accepting the sovereignty of the whole country secuting the sovereignty of the whole country out of the Thames; thus forming these times kingdom of Wesser. "" which is the first bounders." It is the first bounders. It is the first bounders. It is the first bounders of the first bounders o

Wednesday. B. 1018; D. at Lambeth, 1042. HARDING, James Duffield, har-ding, an Eng-

ish artist, distinguished no less as a teacher of and writer on art than for his practice of it.
At the age of 15 he took lessons of the celebrated Prout; and at 16 won the silver medal from the Society of Arts. He was among the first to employ tinted lithography as a vehicle for pro-ducing fac-similes of elaborate sketches and studies. His "Elementary Art; or, the Use of the Lead-pencil advocated and explained," "The Principles and Practice of Art," "Lessons on Trees," are considered the best text-books for students of drawing extant. For a series of years he continued to adorn the exhibitions years no commuted to adorn the eximptions of the Royal Academy and the Water-colour Society with his exquisite productions. For facility and certainty of touch he has few superior. B. at Deptford, Kent, 1793; D. 1863, HARDINGE, Henry, Viscount, har-dipj, a Harping, Henry, Viscount, har-ding, a brave and accomplished English soldier, a field-marshal, and for some time commander-in-chief of the British army, was third son of the Rev. Henry Hardinge, rector of Stanhope, in the county of Durham; became ensign m an infantry regiment in 1793, lieutenant in 1802, and captain in 1804. He served throughout the whole of the Peninsular war, under the duke of Wellington, who early took him under his pa-tronage. At the battle of Vimiera he was severely wounded, and at Corunna, he stood beside Sir John Moore when that hero received his mortal wound. After taking part under the his mortal wound. After taking part under the duke of Wellington, in the first and second sieges of Badajuz, he was once more severely wounded at Vittoria. At the battles of the Pyrences, Nivelle, Nive, and Orthes, he was present. Returning to England at the close of the Peninsular compaign, he was halfed as one of the bravest English officers. On the renewal of hostilities, he was again in the field, and served place only two days before the battle of Waterloo, he was thus prevented from sharing in that glorious victory. He was created a K.C.B., with a pension of £300 a year. When the duke of Wellington was made premier, in 1828, he selected Sir Henry Hardinge as his secretary-atwar, a post which, two years after, he exchanged for the chief-secretaryship for Ireland, but retired from it a few months after. From 1835 to 1841 he had no official appointment; but, in the latter year, he resumed his former post in Ireland, and continued in it till 1844. In this year land, and continued in it till 1844. In this year he was made governor-general of India, and to this firmness and military skill were chiefly due the successes of the English arms over the Sikhs. When the Sikhs crossed the Sutlei and Sikhs. When the Sikhs crossed the Sutlej and invaded English territory, they were met by 32,000 British soldiers and 68 guns, and Moodkee and Ferozeshah witnessed the complete rout of the Sikhs. At the latter battle, the governor-general, waiving his title to command, fought under Sir Hugh Gough, and at the head of the 80th regiment carried and spiked the Still acting as second in command,

Hardouin

Source of the British to victory at Sobraon and Aliwal, 1970. Sobraon and Aliwal, 1970. Sobraon and Entral the Sikhs seed for peace. British troops now garrisoner. Let here, the capital of the Punjab. On the ratification cation of the treaty which annexed the fertile Punjab to the English dominions, he received the thanks of both houses of Parliament, a pension of £3000 a year, and was made Viscount Mardinge, of Lahore. The East India Company further increased his pension by a grant of £5000 a year. Under Lord Derby's administration, in 1852, he was made master-general of the ordnance, and in September of the same year, commander-in-chief, on the decease of the duke of Wellington. In the House of Lords he never spoke, save on military matters. In October, he was promoted to the rank of field-marshal. Being seized by a paralytic attack in July, 1856, he resigned the office of commander in-chief. B. at Wrotham, Kent., 1785; D. 1856.

Hardouin, John, hard-dood, known as "Father Hardouin," a learned French Jesuit, who devoted his life to the study of the dead languages, hishis life to the study of the dead languages, his-tory, divinity, and philosophy. He is famous for his paradoxical attempts to prove that Vir-gil's "Endel", the "Odes" of Horace, and other great works of antiquity, were forgeries of the monks during the middle ages. E. at Quimper, 1648; D. at Paris, 1729. HARDWICK, Phillip, B.A., hard'-wië, a distin-guished architects and designor of the warehouses and large buildings of the St. Catherine's Dec. Company, the new hall of the Goldsmith's Com-lany. The entrance of the Events artirace of the Company, the new han of the Gustanta's com-pany, the entrance of the Euston station of the London and North Western Railway, and, in conjunction with his son, Charles Philip, of the New Hall and Library at Lincoln's Inn. He was, for many years, architect to the duke of Wellington and to Greenwich Hospital; received the gold medal of the Institute of British Architects, of which he was a fellow and vicepresident; he was likewise a fellow of the Royal Society, and was awarded the gold medal of the

Hare

upon the duke's staff. He was wounded in the 1719 he was elected into Parliament for Lewes, left arm at Ligny, while acting as a brigadier- in Sussex; after serving the offices of solicitor general of the Prussian army; whereupon his and attorney-general, he was, in 1733, appointed arm was amputated. This skirmish taking chief justice of the King's Bench, and created a peer. In 1736 he was made lord chancellor, which situation he held twenty years. In 1754 he was created earl of Hardwicke. In all his offices, particularly the last, he so conducted himself as to acquire the esteem of all parties, and the veneration of posterity. B. at Dover. 1690; D. 1764.

HARDY, Sir Charles, har'-de, an English admiral, and the grandson of an eminent naval commander of the same name, in the reign of Queen Anne. He had the command of the Channel fleet in 1779, and died the same year.

HARDY, Vice-admiral Sir Thomas, G.C.B. gallant naval officer, the friend and brother-inarms of Nelson, whose last breath he received on board the Victory. Hardy entered the navy as a midshipman on board the Helena, of 14 guns, at twelve years of age, and in November, 1793, was made lieutenant in the Meleager, brlonging to the squadron commanded by Nelson. under whose notice he was thus brought. He was thenceforth constantly employed under England's great naval hero, who, in 1797, pro-moted him to the command of the brig La Mutine, to the capture of which he had mainly contributed. His unvarying bravery and skill, stignlarly his conduct at the buttle of the Nile, in which his vessel, La Muline, was the only single decker present, induced Nelson to select him for the command of the Vanguard. In July, 1803, he became flag-captain to Nelson, on board the Victory, and he it was who, on the fatal but glorious 21st of October, 1805, received fatel business and to conset, also, received the last orders of the greatest naval warrior that ever lived. For his services at Trafalgar Hardy was created a baronet; and after thirty six years of arduous and efficient service in every quarter of the globe, he was, in 1834, appointed to the honourable post of governor of Greenwich Hospital, where he constantly resided till the close of his valuable life, B. 1789; D. 1839.

HARDY, Rt. Hon. Gathorne, under-secretary for the home department under Lord Derby in 1853, and secretary of state for the home department from May, 1867, to December, 1863. B. at Bradford, 1814.

HARDYNG, John, har'-ding, an old English historian, who, entering in his youth the service of Sir Henry Percy, cldest son of the duke of Northumberland, surnamed Hotspur, fought under his banner at the battles of Homildon and Cokelawe. In 1405 he was made constable of Warkworth Castle, in Northumberland; in 1415 he accompanied King Henry to Harleur; and his account of the march which preceded the battle of Agincourt forms one of the most striking episodes in his metrical "Chronicle; the composition of which was the sole occupa-tion of his old age. It has been edited by Sir Henry Ellis. B. 1878; n. about 1485.

Harry Lins. B. 1076; h. appet 1805.

Harr, Julius Charles, hair, a distinguished English divine and essayist, and one of the leaders of that section of the Church called "Broad Church." In conjunction with his brother Augustus William, and others, he wrote "Guesses at Truth," a book which has strongly Sorieg, and was awarene are gone metal of the Paris Exhibition of 1855. In in London, 1792.

Harbwreks, Philip Yorke, first earl of, a great parish lawyer and lawyer and lawyer and lawyer and lawyer distinguished "History of Romes". In 1845 he edited the refer has justice and skill as lord chancellor. In

Hargraves

Harrington

Trinity College, Cambridge, rector of Hurst-monceux and chaplain to the queen. His life rence's studio, which was all the training he was spent in earnestly searching after truth, many short works on philosophy, divinity, sermons, &c., attesting his industry. B. 1796; p. 1855.

HARGRAVES, Edmund Hammond, har'-grains, an English traveller, celebrated for having first pointed out the existence of gold in Australia, served for some time on board a merchant vessel, but emigrated to Australia in 1833. In vessel, but emigrated to Australia in 1855. In 1849 he went to California, where, while search-ing for "placers," he was struck with the simi-larity of the Californian soil to that which he had left. Strongly impressed with the idea, he, on his return to Sydney, in 1851, set out towards the Blue Mountains. Accompanied by a young guide, he reached the Macquarrie river, and there saw traces of the precious metal. Returning to Sydney, he induced the authorities to organize an expedition to search for gold. Hardly had it reached the place he had pointed out, when a large quantity of gold was discovered. The gold fever immediately set in. The colony he had enriched by his sagacity and disinterested perseverance has marked its gratitude by conferring on him a handsome pension. He was the author of "Australia and its Gold Fields." B. at Gosport, Sussex, 1815.

HARGREAVES, James, har-greeves, a celebrated English mechanician, who, while working as a poor weaver at Stanhill, Lancashire, ing as a poor weaver at Stanbill, Lancasnire, conceived the idea of imitating, by machinery, the action of the spinner scated at her wood-wheel; by means of which, the "roving" of wool could be extended indefinitely; and, after having been twisted, wound on the cope or spindle. This was the origin of the celebrated "spinulus jenny," and even at the period of its first construction (1768), it produced more work than the combined efforts of thirty spinners with the old wheel. Arkwright and others have since completed the invention; the machinery of cotton-spinning being, at the pre-sent day, among the very best and simplest of all mechanical contrivances. The cottonspinners, who had hitherto worked by hand, imagining that their trade would be ruined by the new machine, besieged the house of the inventor, and endeavoured to destroy his "jen-nies." He removed to Nottingham, and very shortly after, his invention was superseded by the improvements effected by Richard Ark-wright; and he died in poverty, about 1770.

Harder, Robert, earl of Oxford, har'-le, a distinguished statesman during the reign of Queen Anne, whose weak mind was alternately swayed by him and the celebrated duchess of Marlborough. He was a patron of literature. Mariorough. He was a parton of literature, as well as a great collector of literary treasures. His collection of MSS., which was purchased for the British Museum for £10,000, contains sources of information on almost every subject, and has been freely referred to in Macaulay's "History of England." Impeached for treason by the Whig party, in the year 1715, he was confined in the Tower during two years; but continued in the lower uning two presents, on the Commons declining to prosecute, on his own petition he was released in 1717, and retired into privacy, when he brought together the splendid collection known as the "Harleian Manuscripts." B. in London, 1661; D. 1724.

Harlow, George Henry, har'-lo, an English portrait and historical painter, who possessed a remarkable facility for drawing and colouring.

rence's studio, which was all the training he received in his art. When at Rome, he finished a copy of Raffaelle's "Transfiguration" in eighteen days; Canova said it looked more like the work of eighteen weeks. The most celebrated of his historical pieces is "The Trial of Queen Catharine," in which Mrs. Siddons is drawn as the queen, and all the principal characters are portraits of the Kemble family.

Although he died almost as soon as he had reached manhood, he achieved a very great deal Harold I., här-old, surnamed Harefoot, king of England, was the son of Canute I.; but his legitimacy being questioned, Egelnoth, archbishop of Canterbury, refused to consecrate any but the sons of Emma. Harold, however, seized upon the throne in 1035, and divided the kingdom with his brother Hardicanute (see HARDI-CANUTE), and in 1037 he was crowned king of all England. D. 1040.

Harold II., was the second son of Godwin. earl of Kent, who had been the favourite during the preceding reign. On the death of Edward the Confessor, in 1066, he seized on the throne. His younger brother, Tostig, at the head of the king of Noeway's army, invaded the kingdom; Harold met him, however, in loofs, when battle ensued on the Derwent, and Tostig was killed. Searcely had he disposed of this five, when his kingdom was invaded by William duke of Normandy, known as William the Conqueron, and, in the elebrated battle of Hastings, Harold fell, pierced through the head by arrow. B. a few years before the close of the 10th century; killed 1088.

Hastow-La-Rascritt, ha'-roon al rask'-id ("the Dispenser of Justice"), a celebrated Eastern callph, who was the great patron of atts and letters in his time, and the magnificence of whose court is constantly referred to in Eastern king of Norway's army, invaded the kingdom; whose court is constantly referred to in Eastern literature to this day. B. 75%; D. 809.

Habraus, har pa-lus, a Grecian astronomer, who corrected the cycle of eight years, which was invented by Cleostratus, and adopted one of nine, which was afterwards improved by Meton. Lived in the 5th century B.C.

HARPALUS, a Macedonian chieftain, to whom Alexander committed the charge of the treasures at Babylon, when he went to the East. He squandered away a large part of the riches, and fled with the remainder. Assassinated at Crete, HAPP, John Francis de la, harp, a celebrated writer and critic, who, after publishing some lesser pieces, brought forth, in 1764, his tragedy of "The Earl of Warwick," which was received with applause. This was followed by a number of dramatic pieces of great merit; also poems, which gained prizes from different academies.

Course of Literature." B. 1789; p. 1808.

Harmerox, Sir John, hard-ring-ton, an English poet, wit, and satirist. He published a translation of Ariosto's "Orlando Furioso," and received the honour of knighthood on the field from the earl of Essey; and in the reign of James I, was made a knight of the Bath. 1861. p. 1893. B. 1561; D. 1612.

Harrington, James, a political writer. On leaving Trinity College, Oxford, he at first joined the parliamentary forces against Charles I., but afterwards became an attendant on his majesty. On the king's death, he devoted his time to study, and composed his "Oceana," a political romance, in which he defended republicanism. This work occasioned a great conlicanism. This work occasioned a great con-troversy, and the author formed a society upon its principles. In 1661 he was sent, on a charge of treason, to the Tower; whence he was re-moved to St. Nicholas's Island, near Plymouth, but was afterwards released on bail. B. 1611; D. 1677.

Harror, Thomas, harre-ot, an eminent astronomer and mathematician, who accompanied Sir Walter Raleigh to Virginia, which country he surveyed and mapped. Documents. found after his death, prove him to have discowang aner ms geam, prove him to have discovered the solar spots prior to their being described by Gailleo; he is also said to have first observed the satellites of Jupiter, although this discovery has been assigned to Gailleo. B. at Oxford, 1560; p. 1621.

HARRIS, John, har'-ris, an English divine and mathematician, who was secretary to the Royal Society. He published a translation of Pardie's Secoty. He published a translation of Particles "Elements of Geometry," but is best known by having first projected a cyclopadia or dictionary of sciences. This work appeared in 1710, in 2 vols. folio, entitled, "Lection Technologicum," and a supplementary volume was added to it in 1736. b. about 1867; b. 1710.

HARRIS, James, a philosophical writer, who, after leaving Wadham College, Oxford, sat in Parliament for Christ Church, Hampshire, and in 1763 was appointed commissioner of the Admiralty, but was afterwards removed to the Treasury board. In 1774 he was made secretary Treasury board. In 1774 he was made secretary and comptroller to the queen. He wrote three treatises, entitled, "Art," "Music, Painting, and Poctry," and "Happiness;" "Hormes, or a Philosophical Inquiry concerning Universal Grammar," and several other philological rmissiphear industry cheefung United Strammar; and several other philological works. B. 1709; p. 1780.

Harris, General Lord George, entered the army as a cadet in the royal artillery, before he was thirteen years of age, in 1769. He served during the campaign in America, and received a wound in the head at the battle of Bunker's Hill, which obliged him to be sent home; but he returned in time to take the field previously to the army landing on Long Island. He sub-sequently distinguished himself in India, and continued in active service until the capture of Seringapatam; when his services were rewarded with the honours of the Bath and a British peerage. He was colonel of the 73rd Regiment, and governor of Dumbarton Castle. D. 1829.

Harris, Sir William Snow, a distinguished na-tural philosopher and electrician, who introduced an improved form of lightning-conductor into the British navy; he also invented a new steering-compass; received one of the gold medals of the Royal Society, of which he was a fellow, and was knighted in 1847 for his emi-nent scientific services. He was the author of several volumes and pamphlets on electricity and magnetism; a large work on thunderstorms and many valuable reports by him are included in the Transactions of the learned societies.

H. are Transactions of the fearned societies. B. at Plymouth, 1791; D. 1867. Harrison, John, har-ri-son, one of the members of the High Court of Justice which sat in judgment on Charles I., and condemned him to death. He was the son of a butcher, and rose by bravery and merit to the rank of colonel in 480

the parliamentary army. He was executed, with nine others of those who signed the king's death warrant, at the Restoration, 1660.

Harrison, John, an eminent mechanician.

who, though he began life as a carpenter, dis-played such great mechanical powers, that a wooden clock he had constructed was universally admired for its accuracy. Encouraged by his success, he constructed a time-keeper, with which he, in 1735, travelled from Lincolnshire to London. Halley, Graham, and other eminent astronomers admitted its excellence, and procured him a passage to Lisbou in a man-of-war, with the view of correcting the longitude by its instrument Harrison had ascertained the longitude within eighteen miles, and he accordingly claimed the reward. After a long delay, and conclaimed the reward. After a long detay, and considerable discussion, he received the whole of the £20,000 in 1767. Though he possessed the greatest scientific abilities, he was almost incapable of communicating his knowledge clearly in writing or speaking. B. near Pontefract, 1693; D. in London, 1776.

HARRISON, William Henry, one of the presidents of the United States, who, by reason of his military and civil services, acquired great opularity, and was elected president in 1840, ut died only one month after his installation, being the first president who died in office. He communicated a valuable essay on the "Aborigines of the Ohio Valley" to the Philosophical Society of Ohio. D. in Virginia, 1778; D. at Washington, 1841.

HARRISON, Thomas, an architect, who, be-sides erecting a number of public buildings in Liverpool, Manchester, Chester, and other towns. designed for the late earl of Elgin the mansion of Broomhall, in Scotland. It is in the Gregian-Doric style, and has been pronounced a very fine specimen of the classical taste of the archi-

в. 1744; р. 1819.

HART, Solomon Alexander, R.A., hart, professor of painting in the Royal Academy, processor of painting in the kroyal Academy, began his career as a miniature-painter, but in 1828 abandoned it for oil-painting, on meeting with some success in the latter walk. The first work which attracted general notice was "The Elevation of the Law," a representation of a circumstance of Jewish worship. He has since painted several pictures of the same nature. His style is marked by carefulness and correct drawing. He also painted many large portraits. B. at Plymouth, 1806.

Harrington, the Rt. Hon. Spencer Compton HARTINGTON, HO ALL 1001. Spencer Compton Cavendish, Marquis of, havi-ling-lon, eldest son of the duke of Devonshire, returned for North Lancashire in 1857, and in April, 1863, became under-secretary of state for war. He held office as secretary of state for war in Earl Russell's short-lived administration of 1860. The general election of 1868 left him without a seat in the House of Commons.

1833. HARVEY, William, har'-ve, a celebrated phy-sician, who received his education at Cambridge, and then went to Padua, where he took his doctor's degree in physic. In 1897 he was ad-mitted follow of the College of Physicians, and in 1815 anatomical reader. This appointment was probably the more immediate cause of the publication of his great discovery of the circulation of the blood, which he made known to

HARVEY, WILLIAM.

HAVELOCK, SIR HENRY.

. HAWKE, EDWARD LORD.

HAWKINS, SIR JOHN.

Plate 30.]

the world in his treatise "On the Circulation of under his uncle, Sir James Murray, and during the Blood," published in 1628. This discovery the period of his studentishly contributing screenfected a revolution in medical science, was for ral papers to the "Annals of Natural Histopy," a long time opposed in the most violent manner, and even when its truth was admitted, many foreign practitioners endeavoured to rob the foreign practitioners endeavoured to for the author of his due honour, by ascribing it to other persons; but the right of Harrey to the discovery has long since been fully established. In 1632 he was made physician to Charles I., and, it is stated, frequently exhibited to him and his courtiers the motions of the heart and other phenomena upon which his doctrines were based. In 1645 he was chosen warden of Merton College, Oxford; but, when the parlia-mentary party were in the ascendant, he left it for London, and was elected president of the College of Physicians, but declined the office on account of his infirmities. After his death, he left his estate to the college, for which he had built a library and museum. A handsome edition of his works, all of which were composed in correct and elegant Latin, was published by the College of Physicians in 1766. B. at Folk-the College of Physicians in 7.00. B. at Folia-tione, Kent, 1578; D. 1987.

Harver, Gideon, an English physician and writer on medicine, who, after completing his studies at Leyden, became a fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and was physician to Charles II, in his exile, and to the English army in Flanders. D. about 1700.

HARVEY, William, a clever English designer, HARYEY, William, a clever English designer, principally on wood, at the age of fourteen was apprenticed at New-assile to the celebrated Thomas Bowiek, called "the revieve of woodengroving," he having renewed the practice of tafter it had almost become a lost art. Besides becoming one of Dewick's cleverest engravers, becoming one of bewick's cleveress engraves, he drew many of the designs upon wood of the celebrated "Fables" published by his master. In 1817 he came to London, and entered the studio of Haydon, where, in company with the Landseers, Lance, and others, he received instruction in drawing and anatomy, maintaining himself by working as an engraver and designer on his favourite material, though at this time there was little demand for wood-engravings, almost the only ones required being for the illustration of primers and elementary school-books. In 1824 he began his career as a designer on wood and continued to be one of the most skilful and prolific workers in this department of an art which has now reached extraordinary excellence, and has grown to be one of the most universal elements of delight and instruction. Like his enements of designt and instruction. Like his master Bewick, he made engravings, almost at the outset of the renewed practice of woodengraving, which are hardly excelled even in the present day. One of these, a copy of Haydon's picture of "Deniatus," is constantly referred to by modern engravers as a work remarkable for by modern engravers as a work remarkable for fits size, breath, and finish. Among his best works are "The Tower Menagerie," The Zoo-logical Gardens," "Northeoties Fables," and, later, "The Pilgrim's Progress," Ilis designs for Mr. Lano's tunnisation of "The Thousund and One Nights" stamp him as a true artist, and One Night's standy min is at tree arcus, whose luxuriant fancy and skilful graver have embellished a standard work. Many of the best designs in Charles Kuight's "Pictorial Bhakspee" owe their origin to his facile pencil. La as Neevenstile upon Tyne, 1800; 3.1804 at 1804 at pher, who, after studying medicine at Dublin became a member of the Reval College of Surgeoms in 1830. Shortly after, he received his diploma as doctor of medicine. His first works were "A History of the British Fresh-water Algm," "The Microscopical Anatomy of the Human Body in Health and Disease," the latter being embellished with about 500 coloured plates. His enfeebled health compelling him to abandon this arduous line of research, he commenced an investigation into the chemical properties of the articles of fool. He was requested by the editor of the "Lancet" to communicate a series of articles on the "Adulterations of Food" to that journal. In 1855 he retions of Food" to that journal. In 1855 he re-published these articles under the title of "Food and its Adulterations." This was followed by another in 1856,—" Adulterations Detected." His labours, and those of others associated with him, have proved a great boun to the Dritich public, he having analysed and pointed out the means of detecting the adulterations to be found in almost every article of an almontary various as well as in duries and absorptionally found in almost every article of an almontary nature, as well as in druce and phennacentical preparations. In all Teddington, 1347.

Hassan Pactur, hard sum period of grand vision of the Ottoman empire, was en Antican by the birth, and when young, served in the Algorine navy. Being taken prisoner by the Significant particle of obtaining his liberty, went to Contantinople, and entered into the Turkish service. Here he soon distinguished himself by his superior service and the service of the servic skill and bravery, and was appointed capitan pacha, or high admiral. He vanquished the Egyptian insurgents; took Gaza, Jaffa, and Acre; and beheaded Daher, shelk of the latter city, who had for years defied the power of the Porte. He twice reduced the beys of Egypt to subjection, and carried with him wast treasures to Constantinopie. In the war between Turkey and Russia, in 1788, although Hassan was then 85 years old, he was appointed to the supreme command of all the forces, and made grand vizier: but though there was no want of energy on his part, age had impaired his abilities, and the Ottoman forces were subjected to repeated discomfiture. The vizier was accordingly dis-missed from his high command, and died in HASSH, Adolph, hass, a celebrated musical composer, who in his youth had been an excellent tenor vocalist. After studying in Italy under the best masters, he produced his opera "Sesostrate," at Naples, in 1725. In 1738 he was chosen by a section of the English nobility hostile to Handel to compose an Italian opera in opposition to that great master; but after meeting with some success in London, he re-tired to Dresden in 1745, and became the favourite composer of Frederick of Prussia. D. 1699 : D. at Vienna, 1783.

Hastings, Warren, hais'-tings, a remarkable English statesman, who, after receiving his education at Westminster School, went out, in 1750, as writer in the service of the East-India Company. Having mastered the Persian and Hindustani languages, which, till his time, had been generally neglected, he was sent on more than one diplomatic and commercial mission into the interior, and in fourteen years he returned to England with a competent fortune, intend-ing, henceforth, to live a life of retirement

ing the constitution of the Indian government made Hastings governor-general. The territories of the Company, although greatly enlarged by the victories of Clive and others were at this time in a very disorganized condition, this time in a very disorganized collidation, and were in imminent danger from the persevering enmity of Hyder Ali, rajah of Mysore, supported by the Mahrattas and other native powers. But he vanquished the enemies of the Company, consolidated its power, and increased its revenue; the English people, however, were informed that all this had been accomplished by complete contraction and minimized correction. cruelty, corruption, and unlimited aggression, while the Court of Directors deemed that he of Proprietors, however, supported him, and he commenced to wield absolute and irresponsible power, overruling the authority of the council, and refusing to obey orders, from whatever source transmitted. In 1785 he resigned, and on arriving in England was impeached, after long preparation, before the House of Lords, in Westminster Hall. Edmund Burke, in a speech which lasted more than three days, charged him with injustice and oppression towards the native princes, and illegally receiving presents himself, and with enriching his dependents and followers, by bribery and a wasteful expenditure of the Company's revenue. Three sessions were consumed in stating the case for the prosecution, and in the fourth several of the charges were abandoned, in order to bring the trial to a close. His defence was not finished till the 17th of April, 1795, whereupon he was acquitted on each charge brought against him. The historians of India, without palliating the vices of his administration, have sought an apology for his conduct in the diffi-culties of his situation, and the lax tone of moculties of his situation, and the lax tone of mo-nuity provilent among Indian officials at that period. It is universally admitted that his talents were remarkable and services great. The law expenses of his defence amounted to $P(8,000. In 1796 the Company granted him a pension of $4000 per annum for 25 years, and lent him $20,000 for 18 years without interest. He retired to Daylesford, an estate which his family had fowerly owned, and which he had family had formerly owned, and which he had repurchased. B. 1733; D. 1818.

Hastings, Francis Rawdon, Marquis of, son of the Earl of Moira, entered the army in 1771.

He distinguished himself in the American war : was appointed, in 1778, adjutant-general of the British forces there, and rose to the rank of a brigadier-general; but a severe illness compelled him to return home before the conclusion of hostilities, when he was made aide-de-camp to the king and created an English peer. Advanced to the rank of a major-general in the summer of 1794, he was sent, with a reinforce-ment of 10,000 men, to join the duke of York in Holland, and helped to mitigate the disin Holland, and helped to mutigate the dis-asters of that memorable campaign. In 1806, he was nominated master-general of the ord-nance, which post he resigned on the fall of the Whig party. In 1813 he obtained the governor-generalship of India, which he held till 1823;

In 1769, however, he was appointed second in the council of Madras, and in 1772 was advanced to the highest civil post in the Company's service,—president of the Supreme pany's service,—president of the Supreme Council of Bengal. An act of Parlament altering the constitution of the Indian government and died on board the Recensy, in Bial Bay. and the oil beard the decenting in Bana Bay.

Lord Hastings was an able officer, an earlic statesman, and a man of a frank and generous disposition. In accordance with his own request, his right hand was ent off, preserved till the death of the marchioness, and buried with her. B. 1754; D. 1825.

HATTON, Sir Christopher, hat-ton, an endnent statesman, and lord chancellor of England, nent statesman, and lord chancellor of England, was educated at St. Mary's Hell, Oxford; and studied at the Inner Temple. But instead of following the law, he became a courtier, and attracted Elizabeth's notice by his graceful dancing in a masque. He now rose in the queen's favour, and, in 1587, was made both chancellor and knight of the garter. His interperience created much prejudice against him at first, but his natural capacity and sound judg-ment enabled him to acquit himself with tolerable credit. His death was the result of a broken heart, occasioned, as some historians affirm, by the queen's demanding a debt, which he was unable to pay. He wrote the Fourth Act in the tragedy of "Tancred and Sigismunda," and "A tragedy of "Tancred and Sigismunda," and "A. Treatise concerning Statutes or Acts of Parlia-ment" is ascribed to him. B. 1540, p. 1561, HARHERLEY, William Page Wood, Lord, kotk-er-le, was called to the bar in 1827, sat for the city of Oxford fron 1817 to 1852, became solicitorgeneral in 1851, a vice-chancellor in the court of Chancery in 1852, and lord-chancellor under Mr. Chartery in 1802, and ford-chancefor under Mr. Gladstone in December, 1868, when he was raised to the peerage. B. 1801.

HAUY, René Just, ho'-e, a French abbé, who discovered and promulgated the geometrical law of crystallization, and was the author of many treatises on natural philosophy and crystallography. B. at St. Just, Picardy, 1713; D. at Paris, 1822

HAVELOCK, Sir Henry, hav-lok, a gallant British soldier, whose exploits have filled the world with his fame, was born at Bishopwearmouth, and educated at the Charter House, London. He was subsequently entered of the Middle Temple, but, yielding to his strong desire to join the army, he sought and obtained a commission as a second lieutenant in the rifle brigade (the 95th), where his military training was assisted by Captain (afterwards Sir) Harry Smith, the victor of Aliwal. After serving in England, Scotland, and Ireland, Havelock ex-changed into the 13th Light Infantry, and em-barked for India in 1823. On the breaking out official of Hullin 1622. Ut his breaking out of the first Burnese var, he was appointed doputy-assistant-adjutant-general, and was present at the actions of Napadee, Patanagou, and Paghan. In 1827 he published the 'History of the A'ra Campaignes,' and in that year was apointed adjutant of the military depot formed at Chinavard by Lord Combernee. In 1838 he was Olimeara by Lord Combernee. In 1838 he was promoted to a company, after having served 23 years as a subaltern. In the first Affghan campaign he was present at the storming of and the occupation of Cabul, and having obtained leave to visit the Presidency, he prepared that Albehan Campaign," which a" Memoir of the Afighan Campaign," which was soon after printed in London. When the Eastern Ghilzies rose and blockaded Cabul, and during the ten years of his sway, over—Eastern Ghilzios rose and blockaded Cabul, came the Nepaules, the Pridarces, and other Tavelock was sont to join Sir Robert Sale, the author packets and rendered the British author marching back to India, and was present at the

of Tezeen, and all the other engagements of that force till it reached Jellalabad. In the final attack on Mahomed Akbar, in April, 1842, which obliged that chief to raise the siege, Havelock commanded the right column, and defeated Akbar before the other columns could come up. For this he was promoted to a brevet majority, and was made companion of the Bath. He was then nominated Persian interpreter to General Pollock, and was present at the action of Manoo Keil, and the second engagement at M'Caskill's force into Kohistan, and had an important share in the brilliant affair at Istaliff. Next year he was promoted to a regimental majority, and nominated Persian interpreter to the commander-in-chief, Sir Hugh Gough. At the close of 1843 he accompanied the army to Gwalior, and was engaged in the battle of Maharajpore. In 1844 he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel by brevet. In 1845 he accompanied the army to meet the invasion of the Sikhs, and was actively engaged in the battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon. On the conclusion of the Sutlej campaign, he was appointed deputy adjutant-general of the queen's troops at hombay. During the second Sikh war, he quitted his staff employment at Bombay in order to join his own regiment, which had been ordered to take the field, and had proceeded as far as Indore when his further progress was countermanded, and he returned to his post. He had now been 25 years in India, and his medical advisers, in 1849, ordered him and his incident advisers, in 1883, ordered him to Europe for two years to recruit his health. He returned to Bombay in 1851, and was soon after made brevet-colonel, and appointed quartermaster-general, and then adjutant-general, of the queen's troops in India. In the expedition to Persia in 1856 he was appointed to the second division, and commanded the troops at Mohammerah, the success of which action was, however, achieved by the naval force. On the conclusion of peace he returned to Bombay, and embarked for Calcutta, but was wrecked off the coast of Ceylon. He proceeded, however, in a few days, and, on reaching Calcutta, was immediately sent up to Allahabad as brigadier-general, to command the movable column appointed to traverse Bengal, after the breaking out of the formidable Sepoy insurrection in 1857. With the greater portion of the 64th and 78th Regiments he first attacked the mutineers at Futtehpore, on the 12th of July, and on the 15th, at Aoung and at Pandoo Nuddee; on the 16th at Campore, where he had a horse shot under him, and where the enemy lost 23 guns. Ad-vancing from Campore on the 29th, he captured Oonao and Busseerut Gunge and 19 guns. This Oonao and Busseerut Chinge and 19 guist. I'ms position he was obliged to give up, but retook it on the 5th of August, inflicting great slaughter. On the 12th of August he again defeated the mutineers, and on the 16th attacked them at Bithoor. Soon afterwards, on receiving reinforcements under Sir James Outram, he enternd Lucknow on the 25th of September, having in the short space of two months gained no less than nine victories over forces five, eight, and ten times more numerous than his own, and centuring during these operations 70 pieces of cannon. At Lucknow he gallantly held his ground until the garrison was finally relieved by Sir Colin Campbell, on November 6th; but by Sir Colin Campbell, on November 6th; but and experienced a variety of adventures, which his constitution was now worn out by anxiety, are detailed in "Hakluyt's Voyages." In 1588 forcing of the Khoord Cabul pass, at the action fatigue, wounds, and hard service, and he sunk of Tezeen, and all the other engagements of under an attack of dysentery shortly after-that force till it reached Jellahabad. In the wards. Sir Henry was always as remarkable for unostentatious earnestness as a Christian as for his bravery and devotion to his duty as a soldier; and he left behind him a name associated with all that is expressed in the words, ciated with all that is expressed in the words, noble, good, and courageous. In 1795; D. 1857. Hawss, Stephen, have, an English poet, well wresed in French and Italian poetry, was groun of the privy chamber to Henry VII. His works are, "The Temple of Glass," which is a copy of Chaucer's "House of Fame," "The Passetyme of Pleasure," which was finished in 1804, and printed in 1817, 4to, by Wynkyn de Worde, with weederis. woodcuts.

Hawrs, William, an English physician, studied medicine, and followed the profession of an apothecary, which he practised in the Strand, until 1780, when he took his degree as a physician. Before this, however, he had become paysician. Before this, nower, he ma become popular by his exertions in the establishment of the Humane Society, to the benefits of which institution he may truly be said to have devoted the best part of his life. He wrote several useful tracts, and among others, "An Examination of the Rev. John Wesley's Primitive Physic," being at once an ironical and serious exposure of the crudities of that production. B. at Islington, London, 1736; D. 1808.

HAWKE, Edward, Lord, hawk, a gallant English admiral, the son of a barrister, entered the navy at an early age. In 1731 he the command of a ship, and distinguished himself in the famous battle of 1744, when the English fleet was commanded by Matthews, Lestock, and Rowley. In 1747 he was made rear-admiral of the White, and in the same year defeated a large French fleet, and captured five sail of the line. For this he was created a knight of the Bach. In 1755 he defended Confians, and was rewarded with a pension of £2000 a year. In 1765 he was made vice-admiral, and first lord of the Admiralty, and, in admirat, and his sold a the Admirator, and, in the following year, was created a peer. B. 1715; D. at his seat of Shepperton, in Middlesex, 1781. HAWKESWORTH, John, hawks-werth, an able writer in the 18th century, who succeeded Dr.

Johnson in compiling the parliamentary de-bates. He is stated to have been brought up a watchmaker, but afterwards applied himself to literature with considerable success. "The Adventurer," which he wrote with Dr. Johnson and others, is his principal work, and which caused him to obtain the degree of LLD. He published the Life and Works of Swift, and was employed to compile an account of the discoveries made by Captain Cook and others in the South Seas, for which he received the sum of £6000. He afterwards became an East-India director. He translated "Telemachus," wrote "Almoran and Hamet, an Oriental Tale," and other pieces of a like kind, very popular in their day. B. between 1715 and 1719; D. at Bromley, Kent, 1773.

Sir John, haw'-kins, a gallant HAWKINS, Sir John, haw'-kins, a gallant admiral of the Elizabethan age, who came of a good family, and went early to sea in the mer-chant service. In 1562 he sailed with three ships from London for the coast of Africa, where he procured a cargo of slaves, which he disposed of in the West India islands. He made several other voyages to Guinea and the West Indies, he was appointed rear-admiral, and kuighted called "Transformation," in which a luxuriant for his services in the defeat of the Spanish armada. n. at Plymouth, 1520; p. off Porto Ricc, 1395. Sir John Hawkins founded an hospital at Chatham.

HAWKINS, Sir Richard, son of the above, dis-tinguished himself in the engagement with the invincible armada, and in 1593 obtained a commission under the great seal to attack the Spanish settlements in South America, where, after an obstinate conflict with a superior force, the English were beaten and taken prisoners. Sir Richard, who was severely wounded in the action, was detained a prisoner in America a considerable time, and was then sent to Spain, where he remained some years. On his return to England, he employed himself in writing the history of his own life. B. at Plymouth, about 1500; D. 1622, of an attack of apoplexy while attending the privy council.

HAWKINS, Sir John, a writer and magistrate, and the historian of music, was apprenticed to an attorney, and acquired a considerable knowledge of the law. At the same time he did not neglect other studies. He formed an early intimacy neglectotherstudies. Reformedianeary minings, with Dr. Johnson, which lasted through life. He wrote several pieces in various publications, particularly the "Gentleman's Magazine," and a several pieces in various publications of Western's activation of the western of the west particularly the "Gentitemant's Magazane," and, in 1760, printed a good edition of Walton's "Angler." In 1772 he received the honour of kulghthood, for suppressing a riot in Spitalfelds. In 1778 he published his "History of Music," 5 vols., after having spent 16 years in its composition. His "Life of Dr. Johnson" was written at the request of the booksellers, in the third prescription of the orbital series. but not to the satisfaction of the public. B. in London, 1719: p. 1789.

HAWTHORNS, Nathaniel, haw'-thorn, a distinguished American novelist, who, a few years after leaving Bowdoin College, Massachusetts, published an anonymous novel, which he has never thought proper to claim. In 1937 he published a volume of sketches and tales, which published a volume of sectenes and tales, whoch had formerly appeared in the American periodicals, under the title of "Twice-told Tales." In 1848 he edited the "Journal of an African Cruises," the MS. of which was supplied to him by an officer of the U. S. navy. His retiring habits led him to take up his residence in an old manse at Concord, where, for three years, he compled himself in composing some charming tales and sketches, which he afterwards pub-lished under the title of "Mosses from an Old Manse," and in the introduction to which some interesting autobiographical passages are to be found. In 1846, while his friend Mr. Bancroft was at the head of the Boston custom-house, he acted as surveyor to the department, and his mode of life therein forms the introduction to his extraordinary romance of "The Searlet Letter," published in 1850. In 1851 "The House of Seven Gables," and in 1852 "The Blithesdale Romance," were produced, the chief incidents in the latter work being founded upon his experience as a member of the "Brook Farm Community." A third collection of his contributions to the periodicals, under the title of "The Snow Image," and a "Life of General Pierce, President of the United States," were his next productions. He also wrote some excellent ways for the some the object, which contributions the same productions.

HAY, James, hai, earl of Carlisle, came to England with James I., and was the first Scotch-Emgand with sunes 1, and was the first Scotch-man created an English peer. His first title was Baron Hay; he was afterwards made Viscount Donesser, and, lastly, earl of Carlisle, James I. employed him in several embassies, particularly to France, to mediate on behalf of the Producture and to mediate on behalf of the Protestants, and to negotiate a marriage between the Prince of Wales and Princess Henrietta Maria. D. 1636.

rietta Maria. D. 1635.

HAx, David Ramsay, a distinguished decorative artist and writer on art, began life as a reading-boy in a printing-office, but was afterwards apprenticed to a house-painter in Edinburgh. He occupied all his leisure moments in copying and paintine pictures, one of which met the eye of Sir Walter Scott, who engaged him to paint a portrait of his favourite eat, and advised him to devote himself to decorative house-painting, promising him the painting of his house at Abbotsford, then being built. In 1823 he commenced business as a decorative painter, and published his first work—"The Laws of Harmonious Coloming." This was followed by "An Essay on Ornamental Design,"
"A Nomenclature of Colours," and numerous ther works on art, full of suggestion and practical knowledge. He decorated the hall of the Society of Arts in London, in 1848. B. in Edinburgh, 1798.

HAYDN, Joseph, haidn, a celebrated musical composer, of a most original and prolific genius, was the son of a small wheelwright in the village of Rohrau, 45 miles from Vienna, his mother having been cook to the chief man of the village previous to her marriage. Both were musical, and being early taught to sing, Haydn was heard and being early taught to sing, Hayon was neard by the chapel-master of St. Stephen's Cathodral at Vienna, who immediately engaged him as a chorister for that church. At the age of 17 his treble voice broke, and he was left without any means of obtaining a livelihood; but a friendly wigmaker took him into his house, and he was thus enabled to pursue his studies as a composer. After a time, he married the daughter of his hospitable friend; but the union was an on us nospitation friend; on the tite dinner was an unhappy one, and a separation soon followed. Fortune conducted him to the house of the Italian pote haureate, Metastasio, whose nices he instructed in music. His connerion with the no instructed in music. His connexion with the court poet brought him into acquaintance with the wealthy Prince Esterhazy, who, in 1761, made him his chapel-master, an office he held to the end of his life. Comfortably located in the prince's palace in Hungary, Haydn, for thirty years, composed and played over his magnificent works. In 1761 he market works. years, composed and played over his magnitizent works. In 1701 how as induced to visit London, where he produced six of his twelve "Grand Symphonics," causing the utmost possible excitement among the English musical public, In 1794 he again visited England, meeting with a most flattering reception, receiving for his services a sum amounting to £1550, and becoming a doctor of music of the Oxford university, and the ourset of rovality. In his 64th year he com-Pierce, President of the United States," were the guest of royalty. In his 64th year he comhis next productions. He also wrote some posed his greatest work, "The Creation," and excellent works for the young, the chief of which two years later, "The Scatons." Like Handel, are "True Stories from History and Biography," he was remarkable for his fertility; besides From 1852 to 1857 he acted as American consul violin quartetts, 15 masses, 4 ornorios, a To at Liverpool. A later work by Hawthorne is Deum, a Stabat Mater and 14 Italian and Gergeon and the stable of the stable works. the shock caused by the bombardment of Vienna, although Napoleon gave orders that the great musician's house should be respected; and when the French troops entered the city, a guard was placed at his door to protect him. B. at Rohrau 1732; D. at Vienna, 1809.

HAYDON, Benjamin Robert, hai'-don, a great but unfortunate English historical painter and writer on art, was educated at the Plympton grammar-school, where Sir Joshua Reynolds had previously been a scholar. His father was a bookseller, and apprenticed his son to the same business; but he was greatly averse to it, and at the same time displayed a strong predi-lection for art. His father's opposition to his son becoming an artist was at length overcome, and Haydon started for London in May, 1804, to enter as a student of the Royal Academy. It was at this period that enthusiasm for the grand "high art," as it is called, was first awakened in his breast. It caused him to become a great painter; but his inflexible pursuit of this line of panner; out ms miscule pursuit of this line of art, rather than paint what was more popular and remunerative, caused him many troubles through life, and greatly contributed to bring about his melanchely end. Although he was a student with such men as Wilkie and Jackson, he was regarded as a young man of great pro-mise. In 1807 he exhibited his first painting at misc. In 1807 he exhibited his first painting at the Royal Academy: its title will show the young pointer's ambition—"Joseph and Mary resting with our Saviour after a day's journey on the road to Egypt." It was sold; and tho next year he exhibited the celebrated "Dentatus," which he considered badly hung by the Royal Academicians, and forthwith proceeded to make enemies of those forty potentates of art—a most imprudent step for so young a man to take. Lord Mulgrave bought the "Dentatus," and it was shown at the British Institution, gained the prize of the committee, and became very popular. The sanguine and ambitious young painter's prospects were now of the most encouraging nature. The Elgin marbles arriv-ing in England about the same time, he wrote and talked about them enthusiastically and eloquently, and mainly contributed to get them purchased for the nation. He painted the "Judgment of Solomon," and sold it for 700 guineas; and "Alexander returning in Triumph," which produced him 500 guineas: but his second application for admission to the but his second application for admission for admission the Royal Academy was refused. In 1814 he tommenced another great work—" Chiefet's Entry into Jerusalem, which was childted's Linguistic for the Jerusalem, which was childted by himself in Bond-street, in 1820, but could not find a purchaser; he, however, added two more works of the same class to his list—" Christ in the Garden," and "Christ Rejected." In 1821 he married; and in 1823 painted the "Raising of Lazarus," now hanging in the Pantheon. A of Lazarus," now hanging in the Pantheon. A few years before, he had opened a school for the purpose of "establishing a batter and more regular system of instruction than even the Academy offered," and had for pupils Edwin, Clarkes, and Thomas Landseer, Lance, Harvey, and others of our best drangitamen and winters. He also assultance to a constitute the painters. He also continued to contribute to the Royal Academy; but this made him upper pular in his profession, and his large pictures being often left on his hands, caused him to be loss of the design of the her on his hands, caused him to be lossed academy, went to London when young, and was employed as a scene-painter at Drurginerosaing, he was incarcerated in the King's lane Theatre. The principal productions of his man operas. His death is said to have been due to Bench prison for debt. Here he was witness of Dence preson to coor. Here he was witness or a scene which he afterwards reproduced in a popular picture, "The Mock Election," which George IV, purchased for 500 gaineas, A con-tinuation of the same subject—"Chairing the Members," was sold for 300 guiness. About Members," was sold for 200 guineas. About this time his friends procured his release, and he painted "Pharaoh dismissing Moses," which sold for 500 guineas. A great failure and a great success followed: the first was "The Great Banquet at Guildhall, after the passing of the Reform Bill; "the second, "Napoleon musing at 8t. Helena." A second picture of the same character—"The Duke on the Field of Waterloo," was unsuccessful, and his debts again paragracing him he was once more an again overpowering him, he was once more an iumate of the King's Bench. On his release, he commonced lecturing on the fine arts at the mechanics' institutions in the metropolis and mechanes' institutions in the metropois and in the provinces, meeting everywhere with the greatest success. Perhaps the severest blow he ever received was now avaiting him. For a long time he had been petitioning, writing, and lecturing on having the interiors of our large public buildings decorated with paintings. The government decided to embolish the interior of the new Houses of Parliament with eartoons. He set to work, prepared his design, and the judges left his name out of the list of successful competitors, not even giving it a place among the third class, It is said he never completely recovered the shock this disappointment caused him. His last shock this disappointment caused him. His last works were "Uriel and Stain," "Curtus leaping into the Gulf," "Alfred and the Trial by Jury," The Burning of Home." In 1848 he exhibited this last-named work, and "The Bunishment of Aristides," at the Egyptian Hall, "General Tom Thumb," holding lus levees at the hall at the same time. The degree of success which awaited each of the exhibitors is thus chronicled by Haydon in his diary:-" Tom Thumb had 12,000 people last week; B. R. Haydon, 1321 (the 2 a little girl). Exquisite taste of the Eng-lish people!" The exhibition was a failure, and Haydon's mind gave way under his accumulated embarrassments, and he ended his life by his own hand, in 1846. B. at Plymouth, 1786. Though far from being generally admitted to be a great his-torical painter, it must be allowed that Haydon did much, both by his works and writings, to elevate the character of English art. His quick temper, love of controversy, and readiness to charge every person that differed from him in opinion with mean motives, combined with his obstinate refusal to paint, as other and wiser artists have been forced to do, for the popular isste, marred the character and career of a virtuous, camest, and eloquent lover of art, and brought his life to a sad termination, after and breight ins to a sad termination, atter causing him long years of embarrassment and biographer of Cowper, and philosophical essay-ist. Abandoning the profession of the law, for which he had been educated, he retired to his ate in Sussex, and spent his life in lettered ecorated some of the apartments of Vauxhall. He also furnished designs for illustrations of the works of Shakspeare, Milton, Pope, Cervantes, &c. B. at Exeter, 1708; D. 1776.

vantes, &c. B. at Exector, 1709; D. 170.

Harwoop, Elizabeth, hai'wood, an ingenious writer, who published: "The Female Spectator."

4 vols.; "Epistles for the Ladies," 2 vols.; "Fortunate Foundling," "Adventures of Nature," "Jermmy and Jenny Jessamy," 3 vols.; "Invisible Spy," 2 vols.; "Husband and Wife. 2 vols.; "Beisy Thoughtless," and "A Present for Somethingid" in 1868, in 1758.

2 vois.; "Betsy Inoughtees, and "A Frescht for a Servant-maid." B. 1693; D. 1756. Hazurt, William, haz-litt, a distinguished English essayist and critic of literature and Engish essays and critic of increasing the the fine arts, was the son of a Unitarian minister, who, in 1783, emigrated with his family to the United States, but returned two years later, and fixed his residence in Shropshire. where William commenced his education. In where william commenced his education. 1793 he was sent to the Unitarian college at Hackney, to be educated for the profession of his father, but neglected theology for moral and his lather, but reglected according to more an engly age he had shown a great predilection for drawing, and, in the year 1502, visited Paris for the purpose of copying the pictures in the Louvre, and, on his return, met with some success as portrait-painter in London and the provinces; but abandoned the pursuit for that of literature, in abandoned the pursuit for that of heracure, in 1803, displaying great industry and talent in the latter profession. In 1813 he delivered a course of lectures on the history of English phicourse or sectares on tac instory or singlish pair-losophy, at the Russell institution, and, after-wards, on the "Comic Poets" and the "Poets of the Elizabethan Age." He also wrote for the "Morning Chronicle," the "Examiner," and, in the latter part of his life, for the "Edin-burgh Reviow" and the "Encyclopsadia britan-ica." His principal works are "The Round nurgin keview" and the "Encyclopadia Britan-nica." His principal works are "The Round Table," the "Table-Talk," "Characters of Shakspeare's Plars." The articles "Fine Arts" and "The Life of Titian," in the "Encyclopadia Britannica," are from his pen. B. at Maidstone, 1778; p. 1830.

HEAD, Sir George, hed, knight, and author of several interesting books of travel. After having served as captain in the West Kent militia in 1802, he joined the British army in the Peninsula, and served as commissariat clerk at Badajoz, and afterwards rose to the rank of deputy-assistant commissary-general to the Peninsular army, with which he served throughout the campaign. He was sent to superintend the commissariat department in Canada, where he remained for several years. He has described his adventures and experience there, in his "Forest Scenes and Incidents in the Wilds of North America," and his "Residence on the Borders of Lakes Huron and Simcoe." In 1831 he was knighted. He also wrote many other excellent books, among the chief of which is "A Home Tour through the Manufacturing Districts." He likewise contributed several articles to the "Quarterly Review." B. 1782; D. in London, 1855.

HEAD, Sir Francis Bond, a clever and hu-morous writer of books of travel, began his career in the British army, but went out to South America in the year 1825, at the head of a mining association. Leaving his party at the foot of the Andes, he returned alone, on horse-back, across the Pampas to Buenos Ayres, a distance of 1000 miles, and performed several journeys in the same manner, riding over up-pencil are historical paintings, with which he wards of 6000 miles, living on dried beef and water, and sleeping on the ground. On his return to London, he published "Rough Notes of some Rapid Journeys across the Pampas," in 1826. In 1835 he was made lieutenant-governor of Upper Canada, during which appointment the Canadian insurrection broke out and was suppressed. He resigned in 1837, and on his return to England, in 1838, published a "Narrative" justifying his conduct. In 1850 he produced a pamphlet on "The Defenceless State of England," which excited a great deal of State of England," which excited a great deal of interest. He afterwards principally employed his leisure in composing light, humorous, and graphie sketches of tours made in the United Kingdom and on the continent. "A Faggot of French Sticks," "A Fortnight in Ircland," "The Royal Engineer," were among his latest productions, as the "Bubbles from the Brunnens of Nassau" formed one of his earliest. P. at Rochester, Kent, 1793.

Heapthy, Thomas, hep'-e, a famous painter in water colours, and the first president of the Society of British Artists, whose nictures are

Society of British Artists, whose pictures are well known. B. about 1775; p. 1835.

Well Known. B. about 1103 B. 1800.

Hearne, Thomas, hern, a learned antiquary, and editor of old MSS, had been a domestic servant to Mr. Cherry, of Shottesbrooke, who took him into his family, and gave him aliberal education. In 1695 he, same gave him afferral education. In 1695 he entered at Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he applied himself to the study of antiquities. In 1703 he took his degree of M.A., and in 1714 was appointed under-librarian of the university. He edited and published several ancient MSS, and old books : among others, the "Life of Alfred," by Spelman; Leland's "Itine-rary," 9 vols. 8vo; and a collection of curious Discourses written by eminent antiquaries.

Discourses written by eminent antiquaries. p. at White Waltham, Berkshire, 1678; p. 1735. Hearne, Thomas, an artist of considerable eminence, born at Marshield, in Gloucestorshire, was eminent as a topographead designer; but his principal talent lay in landscape painting in water colours—a branch of the art which he may be said to have been the first who successfully practised. B. 1744; D. 1817.

HEATH, Charles, heeth, a famous line en-graver, whose taste for art was fostered and formed under the tuition of his father, James Heath, also an engraver, whose plates are fa-miliar to print collectors. Charles Heath's ar-tistic publications, the "Book of Beauty," the tistic publications, the Door of Jerany, say "Keopsake," &c., established his fame as a first-rate engraver, and did much to inculente a popular taste for the fine arts. B. 1784; D. 1848.

HEATHFIELD, Lord. (See ELIOTT, Gen. G. A.)
HEBER, Reginald, he-ber, bishop of Calcutta, a learned, plous, and accomplished direct after a brilliant career at college, composed his prize poem, "Palesting," which, unlike similar productions, has found a permanent place in English literature. In 1805, he set out on an extended continental tour, and visited Russia, the Germon Carlotter and the Carlotter of the control of the exented continental tort, and visited aussin, the Crimea, Hungary, Austria, &c. He took holy orders in 1807, contributed during the few subsequent years to the "Quarterly Review," and worked at a Dictionary of the Bible, which, however, was never published. He had long considered that devotional poetry stood in need of improvement, and with a view to raise the considered since devocation posters are the standard of this department of sacred literature, composed a volume of "Pooms and Transitions for Weekly Church Service," In 1819 ho Hebert edited Jeremy Taylor's works, and in 1822 was with Schelling at Tübingen, and afterwards at made preacher of Lincoln's Inn. After twice Juna, where Fichte taught. He at first em-refusing the appointment, he was ordained, in braced the doctrines of that philosopher, but June, 1823, bishop of Calcutta, which diocese, in his day, extended over the whole of India, Ceylon, and Australasia. In June, 1824, he began the visitation of this immense diocese, and travelled through Bongal, and, after an eleven months' journey, arrived at Bombay, sleeping, for the most of the time, in a tent or cabin. His journal was published in three Svo volumes, and now forms two volumes of Murray's "Home and Colonial Library." In it he describes, with the utmost clearness and picturesqueness, the strange provinces he visited, and graphically details the manners and customs of the natives of India. After having visited Ceylon, he left Calcutta on a journey to Madras, and reached Trichinopoly, where, after confirming a number of the natives, he retired to take a cold bath, in which he was found dead a short time afterwards. His life has been published by his widow. B. at Malpas, Cheshire,

1783; р. at Trichinopoly, 1826. Невинт, Jacques Réné, he-bair', commonly called Père Duchène (from the title of a Jacobin paper of which he was the editor), was one of the most violent advocates for the French revolution, and one of the most unprincipled. was made a member of the commune for his assistance in the massacres which took place in September, and the cruel murder of the Princess de Lamballe. It was Hebert who so grossly insulted Marie Antoinette by the vilest grossy insulted Marie Antionette by the vilest of all accusations; and put questions to the children of Louis XVI, which, when reported to Robespierre, called forth reproaches over from him. Having dared to oppose his collegues and masters, they harded him from his position, and accomplished his destruction with a promptitude that astonished him. He was a piomptitude that astonished him. He was guillotined amid the hisses of the populace, March 24, 1794. n. at Alençon, 1755. Hacogurs, Phillip, held-al, a French physician, who was a great advocate for the use of warm water and bleeding, and, in consequence, was riduciated by Le Sage, in his novel of "dil Blas," under the name of Dr. Sangrado. He was, however, a man of skill and piety, and wrote several medical books. n. at Abbeville, 1681; p. 1737. HERYSKERS, Jumes, heem's-lerk, a Dutch admiral, who sailed with Barentien to discover a porth-east passage to Asia, in which voyage and the same contract of the same

a north-east passage to Asia, in which voyage the commander died, but Heemskerk brought back the ships safe to Holland. In 1607 he was made vice-admiral, and sent against the Span-iards in the Mediterranean, where he defeated a superior force, and took the Spanish admiral prisoner, but was himself slain in another action in 1607.

Hebern, Arnold Hermann Ludwig, heer'-en, an eminent German philologist and historian, who, after travelling in Germany, France, and Italy, was appointed professor of philosophy at Göttingen in 1787, when he devoted the re-mainder of his life to learning and research. His "Manual of Ancient History," "Handbook His "Manual of Ancient History," "Handbook of Modern History," and "Essay on the Infile I always said Peter was an unlucky dog, and ence of the Crusades," are considered to rank mong the best productions of their class. He would come to an untimely end."

He was elected a member of nearly every European learned society. In care Brenen, 1760; p. at 6 distingen, March, 1842.

Heren, Goorge William Frederick, Aai-gel, "the first man of my century." He embraced a celebrated German philosopher, studied the Protestant faith in 1825, to prevent, he said, afterwards those of Schelling, and finally proceeded to propound a system of his own. 1806 he became professor at Jena, and from 1808 to 1816 was director of the college of Nureme berg. In 1813 he replaced his former master Fichte in the chair of philosophy at Berlin, where he taught till the time of his death. An where no taught till the time of his feath. An account of his system of metaphysics, and a comparison of his philosophy with that of Fichite and Schelling, would be out of place here. It will be sufficient to say that he ranks very high among German philosophers. His works, comprised in nineteen 8vo volumes, were published at Berlin between the years 1532-46, and have been translated in part both into French and English. B. at Stuttgart, 1770:

D. of cholera, at Berlin, 1831. Heiberg, Johann Ludwig, hi-bairg, an eminent Danish metaphysician and comic dramatist. who, after receiving a good education, was un-decided, at the age of 27, as to his choice of a profession; but the Danish government granted him a travelling pension; whereupon he went to London, and afterwards spent three years in Paris in the society of his father, who had been banished thither, and mixed in the best French bainshed thitner, and inited in the best Freich society. On returning to his native country, he was made professor of the Danish language at the university of Kiel, in Holstein. After spending some years in this occupation, he commenced writing for the stage, and endeavoured to in-troduce among the Danes pieces written upon the model of the lightest French comedies, "King Solomon and the Hatter" was his first Production, which met with the greatest success. "The Danes in Paris" succeeded; and in 1329 he was appointed royal dramatic poet and translator, and soon after married a lady, who, as Madame Heiberg, was accounted the most brilliant Danish actress of her time. Many briliant Danish actress of her time. Many other drams, and some philosophical works, were next published by him. In 1827-28 he edited the "Copenhagen Flying Post," in which appeared the "Everyday Story," considered as one of the best Danish novels, and which was long thought to be his composition, but which has been ascertained to be the production of his mother. B. at Copenhagen, 1791; D. 1860.

HEIDEGGER, John James, hi-deg'-ger, a native of Zurich, in Switzerland, who went to England in 1708, and by his address and ingenuity, became the leader of fushion among the English upper classes, and manager of the opera-house, by which means he contrived to gain £5000 a year. He was an amiable and liberal man.

year. He was an annual B. about 1960; p. 1749.

B. about 1960; p. 1749.

HERR Peter, Mine, an obscure callor, who rose by his bravery to the command of the Dutch fleet, with which he defeated the Spaniards off constant of Brazil, in 1836. He was slain in the Constant of Brazil, in 1836. The wine When the coast of Brazil, in 1626. He was slain in fighting with the French off Dunkirk. When the news arrived, the States sent a deputation to condole with his mother on the melancholy occasion; but the old woman only replied, "Ah.

Helmers

"M. de Rothschild's treating him with familiarity" He studied jurisprudence successively and handsome person, became the wife of Constalling Herman and He England, which he published at Hamburg. South Germany, and Italy, were next visited; and a description of these countries was written by him, and published under the title of "Reisebilder" (Pictures of Travel), between the years 1826-31, a French translation of which, the years 1826-31, a French translation of which, by himself, under the title of "Impressions de Yoyages," made him as celebrated in France as he already was in Germany. The brilliant wit, combined with the bold political addresses to the sovereigns of Germany and the whole of Europe, contained in this volume, established Europe, contained in this volume, established in fisame. His "Book of Songs," published at Hamburg in 1927, placed him at the head of that political and literary section of his countrymen called "The Young German School," and, from its satirical humour, caused him so may enemies in Germany, that he withdrow to Paris, where he become as wash from where he became, as much from temperament as from the natural bent of his genius, more a as from the natural bent of the general, increase frenchman than a German. During the last twenty-five years of his life, he continued to reside in the French capital, making only a few furtive visits to his native land. In 1847 he side in the French captan, making Juny 2 Jow furtive visits to his native land. In 1847 he was attacked with paralysis, by which he lost the sight of one eye; and, in the following year, he had a second attack, which, although it left his mental faculties unimparted, deprived him of the use of his other eye, and made him a cripple for life, besides subjecting him, at him tervals, to intense bodily suffering. Though he was never again able to quit his chamber, he he was never again able to quit his chamber, he continued to embody in prose and verse the rich and fertile creations of his brain, by the aid of an amanenesis, A translation of his poems into French was made by Gerard de Nerval, under his superintendence, in 1855. In addition to the works we have quoted, he wrote many volumes of poetry, sketches, and satirical pieces. As a satirical wit, he is worthy to be classed with Cervantes, Swit, and Voltaire; while his poems are characterized by tenderness, originality, and zave leastly of versificaness. ness, originality, and rare beauty of versification. p. 1800; p. at Paris, 1856.

Henreys, Daniel, hine-re-us, an eminent Dutch philologist and critic, was made Greek professor at Leyden, when he was but 18, and afterwards succeeded his master, Joseph Scaliger, in the professorship of politics and history. Besides annotating several of the classic authors, he wrote some excellent works in prose and verse. B. at Ghent, 1580; p. 1655.

HEINSLUS, Nicholas, son of the preceding, was an eminent Latin poet, and editor of several editions of Virgil, Ovid, and Claudian, and other classic authors. B. 1620; p. 1681.

Henneus, Anthony, a distinguished Dutch statesman, who for forty years filled the high stateman, who for forey jeans after the station of grand pensionary; and whose prudence, skill, and probity gained him the confidence and regard of William III., Marlborough dence and regard of William III., Mariborough, and Prince Eugene. In the intervals between their campaigns, Mariborough and Prince Eugene were in the habit of refiring to the Hague, and, in concert with Heinsius, planning future operations; in the carrying out of which thou military enterprise in the field was ably section. by Heinsins in the cabinet. B. 1641; D. 1720.

HELUNA, Sr., he'-le-na, a native of Bithynia, in 292, he divorced Helena; but, on the accession of her son, she was recalled to court, and treated with the honours due to her rank. She visited the Holy Land, where she is said to have discovered the true cross. She founded several churches, and bestowed immense sums in charity. B. about 247; D. 327.

Heliodorus, heli-od-or-us, a native of Emesa, in Phonicia, and who lived near the end of the 4th century, was bishop of Trices, in of the said country, was brond of thees, in Thessally, but deposed towards the close of his life. His youthful work, "Ethiopica, or the Loves of Theagenes and Charlela," in poetical prose, is distinguished by its strict nurality from the other Greek romances. It is said that the alternative of burning his romance, or re-signing his bishopric, being given him, he preferred the latter.

Heliogablus, M. Aurelius Antonius, he'-le-o-gab'-a-lus, a Roman emperor, so called because he had been a priest of the sun, was, at the age of 14, chosen emperor, after the death of Macrinus, and associated with himself in the government his grandmother Mæsa, and his mother Sosemias, and chose a senate of women, over whom the latter presided. He afterwards fell into every kind of cruelty and debauchery, raised his horse to the consular dignity, and caused divine honours to be paid

Jesuit, who, at twenty-five years of age, was engaged as an assistant in the Jesuits' observatory at Vienna. In 1751 he was made professor of mathematics in Transylvania; but, after some years, he returned to Vienna, and there became head of an observatory, erected after his own designs. He left Vienna for Lapland in 1769 to observe the transit of Venus across the sun's disc. His observation was conducted under very favourable atmospheric conditions, and his report of the phenomena was so accurate and complete, that astronomical science was greatly advanced by it. His report also contained some valuable information relating to the natural history, the geography, and the meteorology of Lapland. He wrote many excellent mathematical and astronomical works. as well as editing the astronomical observations made by the Jesuits at Pekin, between the years 1717 and 1752. B. in Hungary, 1720; D. at Vienna, 1792.

HELLANICUS, hel-län'-i-kus, an early Greek prose writer, who composed a "History of Argos," and other works which have been quoted by ancient authors. B. at Milylene, 496 B.C.; D. 411 B.C.

Hellor, John, hel'-lo, a French chemist, who was a member of the Academy of Sciences of Paris, and of the Royal Society at London. He merit. He also conducted, for many years, the "Gazette de France." D. 1766.

Helmers, Jan Frederik, hel-mers, a Dutch poet, chiefly remarkable for his hyporbolical laudation of his native country. After stating that the Dutch nation left every other immeasurably behind in morality, heroism, science, and HEMANS, MRS. DOROTHEA.

HENRIETTA MARIA.

HENRY OF NAVARRE.

HERBERT, GEOPAR

HEREICK, ROBERT.

the fine arts, he makes a comparison between Vondel, a Dutch poet, and Shakspeare, to the disadvantage of the latter, who is pronounced to be "barbarous." B. at Amsterdam, 1767; D. 1813.

D. 1813.

Helose. (See Apelar), distinguished English essayist and historian, whose first work was published anonymously, in 1841, under the title of "Essays written in the Intervals of Business." Catherine Dengias, "a trugedy, and "King Henry the Second," an historical drama, followed, in 1843. Two short works on "The Claims of Labour," and on "The Means of Improving the Health, &o, of the Labouring Classes," were his next productions. "Friends appeared in 1851, and, like its predecessor, was universally admired. He published all these works anonymously; but it was well known in literary circles that he was the author of them. After having graduated B.A. at Cambridge, in 1835, he entered one of the chief departments of the Civil Service; and rose gradually till, 1859, he became clerk to her Majesty's Privy 1859, he became elerk to her Majestys Frity Council. He now resided principally at his patrimonial estate, near Bishop's Waltham, in Hampshire, and about this time published his greatest work, "The Spanish Conquest in America, and its Relations to the History of Slavery," upon the title-page of which he placed his name. Among his latest works may be named a "Life of Columbus," a "Life of Las Casas, the Apostle of the Indies," and "Realmah," a story which first appeared in Macmillan's Magazine. B. about 1817.

Helst, Bartholomew van der, helst, an admirable Dutch painter, excelling in portraits, but also greatin landscapes and historical subjects. B. at Haerlem, 1818; D. 1670.

jacts. n. at Haerlem, 1813; p. 1870.

Herwatters, Adrien, hale-ei-she-us, a Dutch physician, who, being at Paris while the dyestery was reging in that city, arrested its progress by administering ipecacuanha, and wasrewardet with 1900 louis dros, and made inspector of the military hospitals. p. 1861; p. 1727.

Helwatter, Claude Adrien, in 1788, produced his celebrated work, entitled "Do l'Esprit," which for its atheistical principle, was condemand by the parliament of Paris. On this he went to Euralan, and thence to Purssia, when nemned by the parameters of raiss. On this went to England, and thence to Prussia, where he was well received by Frederick the Great. On his return to France, he led a retired life, and wrote "Le Bonhear," a poem, and a philosophical work on "Man," of the same nature as his first performance. p. at Paris, in 1715; D. there, 1771.

HEMLIS, Mrs. Felicia Dorothea, he-mans, a distinguished English poetess, was the daughter of Mr. Browne, who, dying wille she was quite young, left her, with her mother, an immate of a solitary old mansion in North Wales. She companyed within a party with the time of the company of the comp solitär old massion in North Wales. She commenced writing rowses whom but nine years of see and printed a volume of poems, called a solume of the solume of died. Strongly imbaed with a love of poetry and literature, Mrs. Hemans studied Latin, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, and German; made translations from Horace, Herrera, and Camoens, and wrote a series of articles on foreign literaand wrote a series of articles on foreign litera-ture for the "Edinburgh Margaine." She pub-lished "The Restoration of the Works of Art to Italy," in 1815, "Tales and Historic Scenes," in 1819; and obtained the prize from the Royal Society of Literature, for her poem of "Durt-mon," in 1821. Becoming acquainted with Bishop Heber, she wrote, at his suggestion, the "Vespers of Palermo," a drama, which was produced at Covent Garden Theatre in 1823, when them responses the transparence of the transparen when it was unsuccessful, but was afterwards more popular at the Edinburgh theatre, upon which occasion Sir Walter Scott wrote an epilogue for it. In 1825 she contributed her "Lays of Many Lands" to the "New Monthly Magazine," then edited by the poet Thomas Campbell. "The Forest Sanctuary," and "The Records of Women," followed, The "Songs of the Affections" were published in 1830. In the spring of 1831, her health being very weak, she changed her residence to Dublin, where, while preparing a collected edition of her poems, she died. n. at Liverpool, 1794; p. 1835.

Henrygford, Walter de, hem-lagjord, canon of an Austin priory, Yorkshite, an English chronicler of the 14th century, whose history extends nneer of the 14th century, whose history extends from the Norman conquest to the reign of Edward II. D. 1347.

HEMSEBERS, Martin van, hems kerk, a Dutch painter, surnamed the "Raffinelle of Holland," was the son of a mason, who brought him up to the same trade; but erineing a talent for design, be left his father's house and travelled to Italy. On his rature he analysed his notice uesign, as see his manner's nouse and travelled to Italy. On his return he enriched his native country with his productions, most of which were destroyed by fire on the taking of Haerien by the Spaniards in 1572. n. at Hemskerek, 181, p. 1574.

HENDERSON, John, hen'-der-son, a celebrated English actor, who, evincing in his youth a taste for drawing, was placed under Mr. Fourtaste for drawing, was piaced unuer Mr. Four-nier, an artist of ability, but of eccentric character, with whom he did not continue long. He neer lived with a silversmith, on whose death he devoted himself to theatrical studies. His first appearance was in 1772, at Bath, under His hist appearance was in 1772, at 18ath, under the name of Courtney, in the character of Hamlet, which he performed with great ap-plause. His fame increased; but it was not ill 1777 that he made his appearance on the London stage, when he was engaged by Mr. Colman, at the Haymarket Theatre, and made his first appearance in Shylock. After this he distinguished himself as a most accollant source. distinguished himself as a most excellent repre-sentative of Falstaff, Richard III., and other strong characters, which he personated with strong characters, which he personated with unbounded applians at Drury Lane, and at different provincial theatres. B. in London, 1747; p. 1785.

HENDERSON, Thomas, an eminent Scottish astronomer, who, after completing his education as an attorncy, became secretary to Lord-advocate Jeffrey, in whose service he remained till 1831. For several years previously, he had been an earnest student of astronomy, and, although his health was delicate and his eyes weak, he continued to make himself so proficient therein, that he became the correspondent of Dr. Thomas Young, whom he assisted in the calculations for the "Nautical Almanack." On the death of Dr. Young, a paper was left by him, informing the admiralty that Mr. Henderson was the most proper person to fill the post left vacant; but though the admiralty did not act upon this suggestion, it appointed him to the charge of the observatory at the Cape of Good Hope in April, 1832. While thus engaged, he communicated upwards of seventy papers of the greatest value to different scientific publications. In 1834 he was made astronomer royal for Scotland, and, while fulfilling the duties of his office, he voluntarily imposed upon himself the task of reducing to order the mass of observations he had brought home from the Cape. His writings and observations have caused him to be reckoned among the best of modern astronomers. B. at Dundee, 1798; D. at Edinburgh, 1844.

HENGIST, hen'-iist, the first Saxon king of Kent, towards the end of the 5th century, was a descendant of Woden, whom the Saxons deified. Hengist and his brother Horsa, being called in by Vortigern, king of the Britons, to assist him in expelling the Picts, took with him his daughter Rowens, of whom Vortigern became enamoured, and married her. Hengist then obtained the kingdom of Kent, one of the seven of the Saxon heptarchy, and in which were included Kent, Middlesex, Essex, and Surrey.

D. 489.

HENLEY, Rev. John, hen'-le, commonly called "the Orator," was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, after which he entered into holy orders, and became a preacher in London; but, disappointed in obtaining preferment, he omenced lecturing, not only on theology, but on politics, &c., on Sunday evenings, near Lincoln's Inn Fields. Pope satirized, and Hogarth caricatured him. He published a translation of Pliny's "Epistles," and other works. в. 1692; р. 1756.

HENRIETTA MARIA, of France, hen-ri-et-ta, wite of Charles I. of England, was daughter of Henry IV. and Marie de Medici. During the struggle between the king and the people, in struggle beween the king and the people, in 1644, she was forced to fly to France. On the death of Charles, in 1649, she retired into a convent which she hadfounded at Chaillot, where she died in 1609, Bossuet pronouncing her func-ral oration. p. at Paris, 1609.

TRIOTATION. D. OF TAYNS, 1009.
HENDERTA ANNE, OF England, duchess of Orleans, the daughter of king Charles I., was born amid the turbulent seems of the civil war. Her mother field with her to France when the infant was scarcely three weeks old; and after the death of the king required to the convent of Chaillot, and there devoted herself to the education ofher dauchter. Henrietta united with great sweetness of character the charm of beauty, and was married to Philip, duke of Orleans. Their marriage was. rning duse of Oricans. Their marriage was, however, rendered an unhappy one by the jealousy of the duke, who feared that his brother, Louis XIV., had supplanted him in his wife's affections; and when the latter afterwards employed her mediation in some difficult diplomatic affairs with her brother Charles II., the duke no longer doubted that which he had before suspected. Louis wished to detach the king of England from the triple alliance with Holland and Sweden. Henriettawent, therefore, in 1670, with the court to Flanders, and, under pretence of visiting her brother, passed over to Dover, where Charles was waiting her arrival. Mademoiselle de Kéroual, a native of Brittany (afterwards mistress of Charles II., under the title of duchess of Portsmouth), accompanied her. Their mission was not in vain ; for in ten days the persuasions of the sister, aided by the fascinations of her companion, gained over to the French interest the proligate monarch. Soon after her return to France, the duchess of Orleans was suddenly seized with violent pains, Orients was studently solved with violent pains, which terminated her life; and though a post mortem examination took place, which was declared to be satisfactory, it is believed that she full, in the prime of life and beauty, the victim of jealous revenge. The sweetness of her manners made this unfortunate princess an object of general regret, and caused her to be compared with her still more unfortunate ancestor, Mary queen of Scots. B. 1641; D. at St. Cloud, 1670.

HENRIOT, François, hen-re'-o, one of the chief actors in the worst horrors of the first French Revolution, having robbed his master, an attorney volution, naving roosed in master, an actorney in Paris, was driven on the town without resource, and became a spy of the police. He first appeared in his revolutionary character the day after the taking of the Tuileries, in 1792. He was one of the most sanguinary of the assassins of September; and presided at the massacre of the prisoners in Orleans. The com-mune of Paris then made him chief of the sansculottes section. With these banditti, armed with bayonets and cannon, he marched to the Convention, and demanded the proscription of Convention, and centanged the proscription of the Girondists. Under terror, the assembly consented to give up 29 of their most talented members to the guillotine. Henriot afterwards became the tool and satellite of Robesplerre. When the latter was condemned to death by the Convention, Henriot and Coffinhal, the vice-presidents of the revolutionary tribunal, made an effort to raise the Jacobin factions in his favour; and had nearly succeeded, when Henriot's courage failed just as the brigands Henrict's courage failed just as the briganus were pointing their cannon against the Convention. Some of the sections, and a body of gendermer, rallying in favour of the Convention, Henrict was outlawed, and was arrested in a state of helpless intoxication, produced by large draughts of brandy which he had drunk in order to sustain his courage. His colleague, Coffinhal, maddened by the loss of the day, a stake of the day in the humber grown of the Midtel do stake the stake which in the number grown of the Midtel do attacked him in the upper room of the Hotel de attacked him in the upper room of the Hotel de Ville, where both were confined, and throw him out of the window. Ho fell into a sewer, where he tried to conceal himself; but his groams betraying his hiding-place, he was dragged out, and sent to the scathold, with Robespherre and his colleagues, on the 28th of July, 1784. Henriot, who was only 33 when he suffered, was an ignorant, brutal, and debauched ruffian; and, perhaps, his character is best dis-played by the fact that it was he who proposed that all the public libraries and books in France should be burned. B. at Nanterre, 1761.

HENRY, hen'-re, a name borne by numerous kings and other persons of eminence in various countries, the most remarkable of whom were:-

HENRY I., king of England, surnamed, for his learning, Beauclere, or the scholar, was the youngest son of William the Conqueror, and was the first monarch of the Norman line who was English by birth. He succeeded his brother Rufus in 1100, at which time his brother Robert was in Normandy, Robert soon after invaded the kingdom, but agreed with Henry, for a yearly tribute, to renounce his right. The two brothers again resorted to arms, and Henry invaded Normandy, deposed Robert, and brought him prisoner to England, where he died in Cardiff Castle. Though the personal character of Henry was cruel and licentious, his reign was marked by some substantial benefits conferred on the English people. He restored the university of Cambridge; forgave all delbs owing to the crown prior to his accession; reformed the court, and conquered wilds; abolished a standard for weights and measures, and made many other valuable improvements in the government of the country. B. at Selby, Yorkshire, 1068; D. at Rouen, 1135.

Henry II, eldestson of Geoffrey Plantagenet,

Henry II., eldestson of Geoffrey Plantagenet, so named from planta genitat, Latin for a sprig of broom, which he wore in his cap, and Mand, empress of Germany, succeeded Stephen as king of England, in 1154. He added the provinces of Anjon, Toraine, Maine, Potion, Saintonge, Guienne, and Gascony, to the English crown. His reign was troubled by disputes between him and Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, who being murdered in 1170, the pope obliged the king to undergo penance for it at Becket's tomb at Canterbury. In 1170 he caused his eldest son Henry to be crowned king of England; in 1174 he conquered Ireland, and, in the following year, his sons, instigated by their mother, rebelled against him, on account of his attachment to the Fair Rosamond. The kings of France and Scotland gave them assistance; but peace was concluded between all parties in the following year. In 1183 his son Henry died, in his 27th year. Richard, his third son, revolted against his father, and was supported by the king of France. Henry, being defeated in Normandy, was obliged to submit to disgrace-ful terms. E. at Le Mans, Normandy, 1133; D. at Chinon, France, 1189.

HENRY III. succeeded his father, John, in 1216, when only 10 years of age. When he reached the age of 16, he was declared of age; but his feeble character caused him to relinquish Normandy, Anjou, Pottou, Touraine, and Maine, to the king of France. A civil war broke out in England, and he was taken prisoner by the barons, after a severe battle at Lewes, in Sussex. The tide of affairs turned in his favour after the battle of Evesham, in which the barons were totally defeated, chiefly through the brilliant skill and courage of his son Edward, whereupon he deprived several of these lords of their estates, and gave them to his friends. He cancilled the Great Charter, and suffered the pope to appoint an archibishop of Canterbury, and to collect tithes in England. n. at Winchester, 1205; n. at Winchester, 1205; n. at Wischminster, 1272.

HENRY IV., eldest son of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, and third son of Edward III., after some time spent in exile at Paris, inraded England at the head of a few followers, deposed his cousin, Richard II., and seized the throne, in 1890. This usurpation gave rise to the civil war between the houses of York and Lancaster, which broke out under the sway of Henry VI. After a short roign of only fourteen years, he did, filled with remorse for many of his unscruptions deeds while king. n. at Bolingbroke, Lincolnshire, 1808; p. 1418.

HENRY V., surnamed Monmouth, from the place of his birth, was eldest son of Henry IV.,

and was educated at Oxford, under the guidance of his half-uncle, Cardinal Henry Beaufort. On commencing his reign, in 1413, he displayed commencing his reign, in 1413, he displayed many noble traits, although in his youth he had been very irregular; but, on coming to the crown, he discarded his evil companions, and conducted himself with a dignity becoming his station. Having laid claim to the French erown, he left his kingdom in the hands of a regency, and invaded France, where he men he gained the battle of Agincourt, though the French amounted to 52,000. He then returned to England; but, three years afterwards, went again to France, where he married Catharine, the daughter of the French king. He was a brave and energetic monarch, and the most popular ruler that had hitherto sat upon the throne of England, not a single instance of insurrection or discontent being manifested throughout his reign. B. at Monmouth, 1398; D. at Vincennes, 1422. The youthful escapades B. at vincennes, 1422. The youthut escapates of Henry, and his association with that marvel-lous creation, Sir John Falstaff, form the lead-ing incidents in Shakaspeare's "First Part of Henry IV." An incident of his early life, however, which is authentic, gives a better notion of his character than the mad pranks of "the wild young Prince and Poins." Some of his dissolute companions having been apprehended and carried before the lord-chief justice Gascoigne, the prince endeavoured to obtain their release, and on this being refused, so far forgot himself as to strike the justice on the ben h. The latter at once ordered the prince into custody, to which he quietly submitted; and to show his approval of justice Gascoigne's conduct, Henry continued him in office, and treated him with high favour, when he became king.

Hasar VI., the only son of the above, was but ten monts old at the death of his father, and was proclaimed king on the day after that event. His grandsther Charles, king of France, died soon after, and the duke of Orleans, ended soon after, and the duke of Orleans, ended soon after, and the the duke of Orleans, ended the was between Engiand and France, and the English, for a while, were successful. Honry was crowned at Paris, and the great duke of Bedford, his guardian, obtained several important victories. But the raising of the siege of Orleans by Joan of Are gave a new turn to affairs, and the English power declined, and was, in the end, quite subverted. The duck of Bedford was a fatal blow to the cause of Henry; and, to add to his mis-fortunes, the York party in England grew strong, and involved the country fin a civil war. They adopted the white rose as their badge of distinction, and the Lancastrians the red. Hence the title given to the struggle—"The Wars of the Roses." After various contests, the king was defeated and taken prisoner. However, his wife, Margaret of Anjou, carried on the war with spirit, and for some time with considerable success. Richard, duke of York, was sain at Wakefield, and Henry recovered his liberty; but Edward, earl of March, son of Richard, laid claim to the crown, and routed the queen's forces at Ludlow, but was himself afterwards defeated at St. Alban's. At length the York party prevailed, and Henry was sent to the Tower, where, it is believed, he was slain by Richard, duke of Gloucester. n. at Windsor, 1421; found dead in the Tower, 1471.

Richmond, and of Margoret, of the house of Lancaster. By the assistance of the duke of Lancaster. By the assistance of the dute of Brittany, he landed in Wales with some troops, and laid claim to the crown in 1485. The people, disgusted at the cruelties of Richard III., joined him in such numbers that he was enabled to min in such reinbers that he was shabted where give the usurper battle at Bosworth Field, where Richard was slain, and Henry crowned upon the spot. He united the houses of York and Lancaster by marrying Elizabeth, daughter of Edward IV. His reign met with little disraward IV. Ins reign met with near the turbance, except from two impostors, set up by Lady Margaret, sister to Edward IV. One was a joiner's son, called Lambert Simuel, who prea jouner's son, caused Lambert Simmel, who pre-tended to be the young earl of Warwick, son of George, duke of Clarence, and the daughter of the "King Maker," whom, having capture, Henry made a turnspit in his kitchen. The other was Perkin Warbeck, who personated Bishand duke of York, wong proposed and the state of the con-Richard, duke of York, younger son of Edward IV., who, along with his brother, Edward V., is generally believed to have been murdered in the Tower by Richard III.; but he was apprehended and executed, along with young Warwick, whom, while in the Tower, he had induced to enter into while in the rower, he had madeed to enter hito a conspiracy against the king. Henry reigned 24 years, and greatly increased trade and com-merce; but his avarice was excessive. B. Pembroke Castle, 1457; p. at Richmond, 1509. Buried in Henry the Seventh's chapel, built by

Buried in Henry the Devention of the pre-him in Westminster Abbey. HENRY VIII. succeeded his father, the pre-tice are of 18. The first reary of his reign were very popular, owing to his great generosity; but at length his conduct grew capricious and arbitrary. The emperor Maximilian and Pope Julius JI, having leagued against France, persuaded Henry to join them, against France, persuaded Henry to join them, and he in consequence, invaded that kingdom, where he made some conquests, but did not push his advantages as he might have done, and finally concluded peace with the French King, Louis XII. About the same time, James IV, king of Sociland, invaded England, but was defeated and slain at Floidien Flaid. Amelian Wedner cannoided in Science. Field. Cardinal Wolsey succeeded in bringing Henry over from the imperial interests to that of the Preuch king. When Luther commenced Henry over from the imperial interests to man of the French king. When Luther commenced his reformation in Germany, Henry wrote a book aculus, thin, for which he was compil-mented by the pops with the title of Defender of the Fifth. But this attachment to the Roman see did not last long for, having con-ceived an affection for Anne Boleyn, he determined to divorce his wife. Catharine of Aragon. to whom he had been married eighteen years. His plea for the divorce was, that Catharine was his brother Arthur's widow. The divorce being refused by the pope, Henry assumed the title of supreme head of the English church, put down the monasteries, and alienated their possessions to secular purposes. His marriage with Anne Boleyn followed; but he afterwards sent her to the scaffold, and married Lady Jane Seymour, who died in childbed. He next married Anue of Cleves; but she not proving agreeable to his expectations, he put her away, and caused Cronwell, earl of Essex, the projector of the match, to be beheaded. His next wife was HENRY VII, was the son of Edmund, earl of in his anger nor woman in his lust." B. at Greenwich, 1491: D. 1517.

SOVEREIGNS OF I

HENRY I., king of France, succeeded his father Robert in 1031. His mother, Constance of Provence, excited a revolt against him, in favour of her second son Robert, but without success. He had the reputation of being a valiant commander and a good king. In about 1004: p. 1000.

HENRY II., the son of Francis I., succeeded his father in 1547, at which time France was at war with England. In 1550 peace was restored, and Boulogne ceded to the French for a large sum. The year following, a league was entered into between Henry and the Protestant princes of Germany against Charles V., which produced a war ruinous to France. In 1556 a truce was concluded for five years; but the emperor having resigned his crown to his son Philip, the war was renewed. In 1557 the French army was defeated by the Spaniards at St. Quentin. In 1559 Henry concluded a dishonourable peace. The same year he was accidentally wounded in

The eye, at a tournament, by a lance, of which injury he died in 1559. B. 1518. HENEY III., third son of the above, succeeded his brother, Charles IX., in 1574. While he was Duke of Anjou, the Poles elected him to their throne, on the death of Sigismund Augustus; but he renounced it on taking pos-session of that of France. In the same year he gained the battle of Dormans, and concluded a peace with the Huguenots, by which teleration was granted them. But this was revoked in 1885, and the Protestant princes, of whom Henry, King of Navarre, was the chief, had recourse to arms. The king of Navarre defeated the Catholic army in 1887. The duke of Guise, on the other hand, obtained a signal advantage over the Huguenots and their allies; but on his marching to Paris, the gates were shut against him. The people, however, were attached to Guise, and the king was obliged to retire from his capital, which was commanded by the head of the Catholic league. France was then divided into three parties: the Royalists, the Guises, and the Huguenots. At length the two first became apparently reconciled, but Henry caused the duke, and his brother the cardinal, to be assassinated soon after. Civil war again broke out with additional fury; the pope excommunicated Henry, and the parliament instituted a criminal process against him. In this exigency he had recourse to the king of Navarre, who set out on his march to Paris; but the face of affairs was suddenly changed by the death of the king, who was assassinated by a monk, named James Clement, at St. Cloud, HENEX IV., surnamed the Great, king of France and Navarre, was the son of Antoine de Bourbon, king of Navarre, and Jeanne d'Albret. Being descended from Louis IX. of France, he became the heir to that kingdom; but, as he was educated a Protestant, his claim was re-sisted. Born a mountaineer, he was early trained to activity of body, and soon distinguished himself by feats of arms. After the Catharine Downed, who was beheaded for adul-tory; after which no espoused Catharine Parr, the French court, and, two years afterwards, who survived him. He was a man of strong married Margaret, sister of Charles XI. At the presions and considerable learning; but it is rejoicings on this occasion happened the in-fertly said of him, 'that he mover spared man famous massacre of St. Bartholomew, and his life was only spared on condition of his becoming a Roman Catholic; but, in 1576, he escaped from Paris, and put himself at the head of the Huguenots. In 1587 he gained the battle of Coutras. In 1572 he succeeded to the throne of Navarre, and in 1589 to that of France; but his religion proving an obstacle to his coronation, he again consented to abjure it in 1593. In 1598 he issued the edict of Nantes, granting toleration to the Protestants. The same year he concluded the treaty of Vervins with Spain. after which time his country enjoyed unin-terrupted peace till his death. His abjuration was very disagreeable to the Protestants, and did not prove quite satisfactory to the opposite party, who doubted his sincerity. His greatest enemies were the Jesuits, one of whose pupils wounded him in the mouth in an attempt upon his life, which was finally taken by Francis Ravaillac. The wisdom, generosity, and talent idealing. The wisdom generosity, and talent B. A.185; D. 1197. Henry throughout his reign, have been truly merited the title of Great, which is applied to his name; and he is the only king of the Jong, was elected emperor in 1805, at the age of forty-dre, and soon after went into Italy, at mouthy who remains popular with the French that time distracted with the contentions between the content of the content of the Guelphs and Ghillelines. He was 1610.

Henry :

SOVEREIGNS OF G:

HENRY I., surnamed the Fowler, emperor of Germany, was the son of Otho, duke of Saxony, and elected to the imperial dignity in the year 918. He reunited the German princes, and sub-dued the Hungarians, framed good laws, and built several cities. He vanquished the Bohenians, the Slavonians, and the Danes, and conquered the kingdom of Loraine.

conquered the kingdom of Loraine. n. 876; p. 936.

HENEY II., surnamed both the Saint and the Lame, and great-grandson of the preceding, was elected emperor in 1002. He re-established Benedite VIII. in the panal chair, and was crowned by that pontiff in 1014 at Rome. He tranquillized Italy, and expelled thence the Saracens and Greeks. n. 872; p. near Göttin-

HENRY III., surnamed the Black, or Bearded, son of Conrad II., succeeded his father in 1039. He was crowned at Rome by Clement II., and governed with a firm hand the people over whom it was his destiny to rule. B. 1017; D., supposed

It was mis destiny of rule. B. LOLY 5 M. SHAPPLOS DE POSSON, in 1058.

HENRY IV. was son of Henry III., whom he succeeded at the age of six years. Agnes, his mother, governed with ability during his mintry. The Saxons rebelled against him, and accused him of simony and other crimes to Pope Comment of the Comment of the Saxons rebelled by the accused mm of simony and other errimes to Pope Gregory VII., who took from him the right of presenting to benefices. Henry then called a diet at Worms, in 1076, for the purpose of de-posing the pope, who excommunicated the em-peror. The German princes deposed Henry, who went to Italy, and made his submission to the pontiff; but Gregory was not to be appeased, and Howev resplaced on venerance. The electors the pontiff; but Grogory was not to be appeased, and Henry resolved on vengeance. The electors chose Rodolphus, duke of Suabia, and Gregory confirmed his title; but Henry, after defeating his competitor, put him to death. He then called a council, which deposed the pope, and elected in his room the archbishop of Ravenna. In 1106 his son Henry assumed the title, and heing supported by the princes of the empire, the emperor was obliged to renounce his crown; after which he became a wanderer, and supplicated the archbishop of Spires to give him a Henry prebend in his church, which he refused. B. 1050; D. in poverty, at Liege, 1106.

Hener V., surnamed the Young, deposed his father in 1106. In 1110 he forced Pope Pascal II. to restore to him the right of nominating to ecclesiastical benefices, which Gregory VII, had wrested from his father. Pascal afterwards called two councils, and excommunicated Henry. He was the last emperor of the Franconian line.

He was the last emperor of the realisation.

B. 1091; p. 1125.

HERRY VI., surnamed the Cruel, was son of Frederick Barbarossa, and succeeded his father in 1190, at the age of twenty-live. This prince behaved treacherously to Richard I., king of England, who, in returning from the crusade through Germany, was arrested by Leopold, duke of Austria, and sent to the emperor, who exacted from him an enormous ransom. His wife, Constance, is said to have poisoned him. B. 1165; D. 1197. His crowned at Rome in 1312, and died in the following year.

IEMEN THE LION, a remarkable prince of Germany in the 12th century, assumed the go-vernment of Saxony in 1142. He demanded restitution of Bavaria, which had been taken from his father in 1138. The emperor aided him, and a war ensued, which resulted in Henry recovering Bavaria, his possessions extending from the Baltic and the North Sea to the Adriatic. In 1172 he went on an expedition to the Holy Land, and, during his absence, his enemies, and even the emperor, made eneroachments on his dominions. This was the fruitful source of quarrels; and, in 1150, Henry was expelled from Bavaria by his former ally, Fredepened from bayard by his former any, reca-tick Barbaross. Howas, however, allowed tore-tain possession of his hereditary dominions, and died in peace at Branswick, in 1195. n. 1199. Henry was plous, hove up maufully against misfortune, and protected the interests of commerce, science, and the arts. HENRY DR BLOUS, bishop of Winchester, no-

HENRY DE BLOIS, DISHOP OF WHITEHOUSE, IN phew of William Rulus, and brother of King Stephen, was an active prelate, and a bold, and otherwising statesman. When Stephen, was an active present, and a none, unitions, and enterprising statesman. When England was invaded by the partisans of the Empress Mattida, he affirst joined her standard, but subsequently deserted it, and became her most determined enemy. The empress-queen and her followers having taken refuge in the castle of Winchester, Henry laid slege to it, set the city on fire, and consumed twenty churches, a number of religious houses, and many other buildings, so little respect did he pay for the capital of his diocese when he had a personal purpose to serve. He is now remembered chiefly as the founder of the hospital of St. Cross, near Winchester, the church of which is regarded by many antiquaries as furnishing the model of the distinguishing features of the Gothic or pointed distinguishing features of the Gotille or pointed style of architecture. D. 1771.

HENRY, the Navigator, the fourth son of John I., king of Portugal, early gave proofs of brilliant courage; but his love of arms was surpassed by his love of the sciences, particularly, mathematics, astronomy, and navigation. While vigorously prosecuting a war against the Moors in Africa, he neglected no opportunity of K K 2 obtaining from them a knowledge of the regions in the 16th centry, was schoolmaster at Dunobtaining roll in the a knowledge of the regions bordering on Egypt and Arabia, and of inquiring into the probability of a passage to the treasures of India by a voyage round the western coast of Africa. He conversed with men of learning; and finding their testimony agreeable to the reports he had collected, he resolved to execute his designs. He was the first who applied the compass to navigation; and to him also a prin-cipal part is ascribed in the invention of the empl part is ascribed in the invention of the sartolabe. Various expeditions were under-taken, and discoveries made, under his patronage and at his expense. It was at this period that the Portuguese doubled Cape Verd, and discovered the group of islands called the Azores, about 800 miles west from the Portuguese coast, Henry continued these efforts till his death, in 1463, and thus secured for himself an undying name as the patron and friend of navigation. B. 1394.

HENRY RASPON, landgrave of Thuringia, was elected emperor by the ecclesiastical princes in 1246, when Pope Innocent IV. deposed Frederick II.; but died the year following, of a wound received in fighting against his rival.

HENRY, prince of Wales, and the eldest son of James I. of England, was an amiable and ac-complished prince, and a great patron of learn-ing and science. His death caused great grief to the nation, which had formed of him the highest expectations. B. at Stirling, Scotland, 1694; p. 1612.

HENRY OF HUNTINGDON, an English historian, was canon of Lincoln and archdeacon of Huntingdon. He wrote a "History of England to the year 1154;" and was also author of a Latin work, entitled, "Contempt of the World." Lived in the 12th century.

Lived in the 12th century.

HENRY, Matthew, an eminent nonconformist divine, and biblical commentator, received his education under his father, and having made considerable progress in learning, entered at Gray's Inn; but renounced the study of the law, and became a dissenting minister at the law, and oceame a dissenting munister at Chester, where he resided many years, and then removed to Hackner. His chief work is "The Exposition of the Old and New Testements," which is to this day considered one of the best commentaties upon the Bible; he wrote also many other theological works. a. In: Flintshire, 1862; D. whilst travelling between Chester and London, 1714.

HENRY, Robert, a Scotch divine, who, in 1776 was chosen one of the ministers of the Old Church at Edinburgh; he was the author of a valuable History of Great Britain to the reign valuable History of oreat Britain to the legal of Henry VII. B. 1718; p. 1700.

History, Patrick, a celebrated American orator and stateman, who, by the display of great natural eloquence, became a leader of the American people in their struggle against the mother country. Jefferson says of him, that "he gave the earliest impulse to the ball of the revolution." In 1769 he became the leader of revolution. In 1705 he became and reactive the democratic party in Virginia, and in 1775 was one of the first to make an appeal to arms. He said "Of peace there is no longer any hope. If we wish to be free, we must fight." He became the first governor of Virginia on the declaration of independence, and was re-elected the three following years. He was offered the secretaryship of state in 1785 by Washing-ton, but declined the appointment. B. 1736; D. 1799.

fermline, and a monk of the Benedictine order. His "Fabils" were printed at Edinburgh in 1621; and his "Testament of Faire Crescide" in 1598. He wrote a number of other pieces, which are to be found in the collections of Hailes. Pinkerton, &c.

HERBURN, James Bonaventura, hep'-burn, an eminent philologist, was bred in the Protestant religion by his father, who was a prestestant religion by ms rather, who was a pres-byterian minister; but, after studying at St. Andrew's, Scotland, he embraced the Romish faith, and went to Italy. He next travelled through Turkey, Persia, Syria, Palestine, Egypt, Ethiopia, and most of the countries of the east; and it is asserted that he became master of so many languages, that there was scarcely a region of the globe with whose inhabitants he could not have conversed in their own tongue. On his return, the fame of his acquisitions having reached the ears of Pope Paul V., he invited him to quit the retirement he had sought at Rome, and gave him the wardship and inspection of all the Oriental books and manuscripts in the Vatican library. He is supposed to have died at Venice, about 1620. n. in Haddingtonshire, 1573. He published a Hebrew and Chaldate Dictionary and an Arabic Grammar in one vol.

Hepsuen, Robert, a native of Scotland, a miscellaneous writer, who, at the age of twenty-one, published in thirty numbers, a series of essays, entitled "The Tatter, by Hector Macstaff, of the North." He studied the civil law in Holland, and became a member of the faculty of advocates at Edinburgh. Some of his manuscripts are in the Advocates' Library. B. 1690; D. 1712.

HEPHESTION, he-phes'-ti-on, the favourite of Alexander the Great, and the companion of his campaigns and festivities, married one of the daughters of Darius. D. at Ecbatana, 325 B.C.

HERACLITUS, he-ra'-cli-tus, a celebrated philosopher of Ephesus, who flourished about 500 B.C. He was fond of solitude, and obtained the appellation of "the mourner," from his custom of weeping at the follies of men. He supported the doctrine of fatalism, and maintained that the world was made of fire, which element he deified. He died in the sixtieth year of his age.

HERACLIUS, her-ac'-li-us, emperor of the East, was the son of Hencelius, governor of Africa, who dethroned Phocas, in 610, and caused him-self to be crowned in his stead. Chosroes, king of Persia, having ravaged Palestine, and com-mitted dreadful cruelties on the Christians, Heraclius marched against him, forced him to sue for peace, and to deliver up the holy cross. The end of his reign was disturbed by ecclesiastical disputes and the inroads of the Saracens. B. 575; D. 641.

B. 50's. D. 64.

HERACLUS-CONSTANTINE, son and successor of the above, was associated in the throne with his brother Heracleonas, agreeably to the will of Heraclius. He reigned only a few months, having been poisoned, it is said, by his mother-in-law, Martina. B. at Constantinopie, a

HERACLUS, patriarch of Jerusalem was a debauched and scandalous prelate, and showed great enmity to Henry II., king of England, for not going to Jerusalem in person, agreeably to the transit of his range of the property of the transit of the same of the property of the Henneyson, Robert, hen'-re-son, a Scotch poet the terms of his penance, on account of the murder of Thomas à-Becket. Lived in the 12th were published under the title of "The Temple."

Herbart

HERBART, John Frederick, hair'-bar, an eminent German metaphysician and philosophic writer, was appointed professor of philosophy at Könisgberg, while fulfilling the duties of which office he greatly assisted in the organization of the Prussian educational system. He composed a number of works on metaphysics, wherein it would appear that he was a follower partly of Fichte and partly of Kant. n. at Oldenburg, 1776; p. 1841.

Henencor, Bartholomew d', hair-be-lo, a learned French orientalist, who obtained a penreamed Figure 1 originals, who obtained a pen-sion from the king, and the place of regius pro-fessor of the Syriac language. Ferdinand II., grand-duke of Tuscany, made him a present of a large library of oriental manuscripts. His great work, entitled "Bibliotheque Orientale," containing whatever relates to the knowledge of the eastern world, is universally known. The best edition is that of the Hague, in 4 vols. 4to, 1777-99. He also compiled a Turkish and Per-

HERBERT, Mary, her-bert, countess of Pembroke, the sister of Sir Philip Sidney, and mother of the scholarly Earlof Pembroke, translated from the French a tragedy called "Annius," 1595, 12mo, and rendered into English some of David's Psalms. D. 1621. Ben Jonson wrote the following elegant epitaph for her :-

"Underneath this sable hearse. Lies the subject of all verse; Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother;-Death! ere thou hast kill'd another Fair and good and learn'd as she, Time shall throw a dart at thee.

HERBERT, William, earl of Pembroke, a poet and the patron of learned men, was educated at New College, Oxford, and in 1826 was elected chancellor of that university, to which he was a liberal benefactor through life, and bequeathed to it at his death a valuable collection of manuscripts. B. 1580; D. 1630. Herbert, Edward, Lord Herbert of Cherbury, an English statesman and philosopher, was educated at Oxford, after which he travelled on the continent. On his return, he was made one of the king's counsellors for military affairs, and soon after was sent ambassador to France, to intercede on behalf of the Protestants. In 1625 he was made a peer of Ireland, and, in 1631, an English peer. At the breaking out of the re-bellion, he sided with the Parliament. Lord Herbert was the author of some singular books: the most remarkable is entitled "De Veritate." in which he espouses deism. He also wrote "The History of Henry VIII." a treatise in Latin on the Religion of the Gentiles, and his own memoirs, which are the first instances of own memors, which are the first instances of autobiography in the English language, and which were edited by Horace Walpole, and printed by him at his own press at Strawberry pymteu by him a his own press as diametry Hill. B. 1681: D. 1683. HERBERT, George, an English poet and divine, brother of the above, received his edu-cation at Westminster school, whence he was elected to Truinty College, Cambridge, where he became acquainted with Lord Bacon, and was chosen fellow of his college. He was also appointed orator to the university. On taking orders, he obtained the rectory of Bemerton, in Wilts, and a prebend of Lincoln. His poems, of the same school as those of Donne and Herrick, to "The Temple," wherein he lays down some very excellent rules for the life of a country clergyman. He also translated Cornaro "On Temperance."

Herbert

HERBERT, Sir Thomas, a scion of one of the branches of the Pembroke family, was the son of an alderman at York. After receiving his of an adderman at fork. After receiving ins education at Oxford, he travelled for four years in Asia and Africa, of which he published an account. On the breaking out of the civil wars he sided with the Parliament; but having been appointed to attend upon Charles in his captivity became warmly attached to him, and proved himself a zealous and incorruptible servant to him up to the hour of his execution. He survived the king twenty years, devoting his life-incipally to literary pursuits. He assisted ugdale in his "Monasticon Anglicanum," and ugddle in his "Monastion Anglieanum," and published an account of the list two years of the life of king Charles, under the title of "Threnoids Garolina." He was created a baronet at the Restoration, 1660. n. 1606; n. 1620. HERDER, Right Hon. Sidney, Lord Herbert of Legan eminent English politician, who, after receiving an education at Harrow and Oricl College, Oxford, at which latter place he graduated in classical honours in 1831, entered on his public life as member of Parliament for the southern divias member of ramament for the southern divi-sion of Wilts. His first speech in parliament was delivered in 1831, upon which occasion he seconded a resolution for the exclusion of Dissenters from the colleges of Oxford. In 1838 he opposed Mr. Grote's motion in favour of the ballot. But, soon after this period, more enlightened and broader political views appear to have replaced his first somewhat narrow and illiberal opinions as a member of Parliament. He followed Sir Robert Peel as a convert to free trade. and, on that statesman's accession to the office of premier, Mr. Herbert became his secretary to the Admiralty. In 1846 he supported Sir Robert in all his measures tending to pave the way for the repeal of the corn-laws, and the introduction of free trade as the principle of English commerce. During the premiership of Lords John Russell During the premierating of Lords John Kilssein and Durby, how so in opposition; but on Lord Aberdean's accession to power, he accepted the post of secretary at war, but resigned it in 1855. He was colonial secretary for a very short time under Lord Palmerston, but, on the appointment of a committee of inquiry into the state of the narmy before Sebastoph, he, conceiving it to imply a censure upon the Aberdeen administration, of which he had been a member, re-linquished the post. After that period he retired from politics, devoting his leisure to schemes of social benevolence and utility, and was called to the House of Lords as Lord Herbert of Les. He was second son of the earl

Dert of Lee. He was second son of the eart of Pembroke, by a daughter of Count Woronzof, of Russia. B. 1810; D. August 2, 1861. HERBERT, John Rogers, R.A., a distinguished English historical painter, who, after completing his studies at the Royal Academy, began his artistic career as a portrait-painter. His first work which attracted attention was "The Appointed Hour," wherein a young Italian gentle-man lies dead, from the dagger of a bravo, at the binting the dead, from the larger of a brev, as the bottom of a flight of steps, while his mistress, unconscious of the act, is descending to meet him. This was one of the most popular prints offisaday. After having travelled in Italy, Herbert produced a series of Venetian pictures, among Catholic faith, his style underwent a very marked change; henceforth he painted only scriptural or ecclesiastical subjects, all of which were wrought in the mediaval manner; "The First Introduction of Christianity into Britain." " Christ and the Daughter of Samaria, and "Our Saviour and his Parents at Naza-reth," being among his best works at this period. He was elected a R.A. in 1848, whereupon his civile became again modified. In 1848 he was commissioned to paint a picture from "King Lear," which, with some others, was executed in tresco for the new palace at West-He subsequently engaged to paint "Moses Descending from the Mount," for the some building. B. at Maldon, Essex, 1810. Henden, Johann Gottfried von, her'-der, 2 German philosopher and poet, who was brought up for the church, and held various ecclesias-tical offices at the court of the Duke of Saxe-Weimar, His chief prose work is entitled "Ideas on the Philosophy of the History of the Human Race," while his "Voices of the People" is his best and most-read poetical work. He was remarkable for his industry, his collected works on a wide range of subjects occupying forty-five volumes. B. at Mohrungen, in Prussia; D. 1803. HERISTAL, Pepin d', hair'-is-tal, surnamed the Young, the founder of the family from which sprung the Carlovingian dynasty of the kings of France. He held the office of mayor of the palace under Clovis III, and Childebert III., who were mere puppets in his hands. HERMENGARDE, her'-men-gard, the name of several princesses during the middle ages :- 1. The second wife of Charlemagne, daughter of Des.derius, king of the Lombards, who was divorced in 771, after being married a year.— 2. The first wife of Louis le Debonnaire,-3. A queen of Provence.

Heavis Triskedistus, her mes tris-ma-jis tus, "the thrice grand," an Egyptian priest and philose plant, who instructed his countrymen in the cultivation of the clive, in language, writing, geometry, arithmetic, astronomy, and medicine. Many try-Prions of his works have been pub-lished, but they are generally considered to be apperypird.

HERM GENES, her-moj'-e-nees, of Tarsus, surnamed Xyster, a rhetorician, who, at 15 years of age, is said to have taught Greek oratory at Rome, and whose lectures were attended by the emperor Marcus Aurelius. He wrote several works on oratory, which were edited and trans-lated into Latin, by Heeren, in 1812. At 24 he is sail to have become imbeeile, and to have lingered in this condition to an advanced age.

Lived in the 2nd century.

HERO, he'-ro, a philosopher and mathematician of Alexandria, who distinguished himself by his skill in the construction of warlike machines, and who wrote some able works on the art. The time of his death is not recorded.

HEROD, her'-od, the name of several Jewish princes .- Herod the Great was the son of Antipater, the Idumean, who appointed him gover-nor of Galilee. Antony appointed him tetrarch, and Augustus made him king of the Jews. He governed with savage cruelty, and sacrificed his wife Marianne, her grandfather Hyrcanus, and brother Aristobulus. At the birth of our Saviour, the best of which were "The Brides of Vermassacred, in hopes that He would fall among nice," and "Pirates of Istria bearing off the the number. He also put to death his sons Brides of Venice." On embracing the Roman Alexander and Aristobulus, so that Augustus Alexander and Aristophius, so that Augustus said, "It was better to be Herod's hog than his son." He rebuilt the temple of Jerusalem, and, in a time of famine, sold his curiosities to relieve the sufferers. B. at Ascalon, in Judea, 74 B.C. : D. at the age of 70, in the same year as the birth of Jesus Christ.—Herod Antipas the son of the above, succeeded his father as tetrarch of Galilee. He divorced his wife, the daughter of Aretas, king of Arabia, and espoused Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip, on which Aretas declared war against him. Herod sacrificed declared war against him. Herod sacrificed John the Baptist to the crucity of Herodias, and his conduct occasioned the Jews to revolt. Being called to Rome to justify his conduct, he died on the road. This is the Herod to whom our Saviour was sent by Pilate.

HERODIAN, he-ro'-di-an, a Greek historian, who was a native of Alexandria, but lived the greatest part of his life at Rome. He wrote a Roman history in Greek, in eight books, which was edited by Bekker, and published at Berlin, 1826. Lived in the 3rd century.

Hebodorus, he-rod'-o-tus, a celebrated Greek historian, surnamed "the Father of History," instorian, surnamed. The Father of History, who in his youth, while his country was oppressed by the tyrant Lygdamis, travelled in Greece, Africa, Asia, and Europe, gathering materials for his great work, and noting the manners and customs of the people whom he visited. On his return he assisted in expelling the tyrant; but meeting with ingratitude from his countrymen, he retired into exile, and occupied himself with the composition of his history. He is said to have read the commencement of it at the Olympic games, 456 B.C., when it was received with universal applause. His History is comprised in nine books, to which his countrymen, in their admiration, gave the names of the nine Muses. Its principal subject is the internal struggles of the Greeks; but he has introduced episodical narratives of the histories of the Persians, Medes, Egyptians, and other peoples. He is universally considered as the most reliable of all ancient historians, a love of the marvellous being his only drawback; his elegant and harmonious style approaches poetry. The principal editions of it are Larcher's French translation; the German translation by Lange; and the English reproduction of it by the Rev. H. Carey, published in Bohn's Classical Library, B. at Halicarnassus, 484 R.C.; D., it is uncortain when, but perhaps about 408 B.C.

HEBOPHILUS OF CHALCEDON, he-rof'-i-lus, an ancient physician, who was an accurate anatomist, and is said to have discovered the lacteal vessels. He was also a good botanist. Lived vescis. He was also a good bottains. Into a tin the 4th century B.c. Hhrrark, Ferdinand de, hair-rait-ra, a celebrated Spanish poet, surnamed by his contemporaries "the Divine." He was a voluminous poraries the Divine. He was a voluntary writer of songs, odes, elegies, &c. A collected edition of his works was published at Seville, in 1582. B. at Seville about 1516; D. about 1895.

1592. B. St Seville about 1010; D. about 1000.
Herrick, Robert, her-rik, a celebrated English poet, of whom very little is known, except that he was vicar of Dean Prior, in Devonshire, for twenty years, from which he was ejected by Cromwell, but reinstated by Charles II. He wrote sacred and amatory verses, displaying in governed with struge crucity, an ascenaecus and both a lexuriant fancy verses, displaying in which Markenine, her grandfather Hyreanus, and both a Lexuriant fancy, with an elegant quanticular brother Aristobulus. At the birth four Saviour, ness. His poems were collected and published be caused all the infants of Bethlehom to be in 1645, under the title of "Heepordes," and Haydon, Joseph.

Holbein, John.

LORD HOWARD OF EFFINGHAM.

Hervey

HERSCHEL, Sir Wm. hersh'-el, a great astro-nomer, was the son of a clever musician of Hanover, and followed, for some time, the pro-fession of his father. In 1759 he went to London, and, for several years, gained a scanty livelihood by giving lessons in his art. Becoming organist at Halifax in 1765, and of a chapel in Bath in 1766, his condition was much improved. In the latter place he began to turn his attention to astronomy, and attained to a considerable degree of proficiency in its pursuit. Being unable to purchase a telescope, he, in 1774, proceeded to make one for himself. After many disappointments, he at length succeeded in constructing a Newtonian telescope of five feet focal length, This instrument was a most valuable adjunct to his studies, and, in 1781, he announced his dis-covery of a comet, but which soon turned out to be a planet. This discovery made him famous, be a planet. This discovery hade hint amous, and he was appointed private astronomer to George III., at a salary of £400 a year. He removed to Slough, near Windsor, and henceforth his abode "became one of the remarkable spots of the civilized world." His labours were shared by his sister, Miss Caroline Herschel, who assisted him in his observations and calculations. After having finished more than one large instrument, he constructed the most powerful telescope then known, and, after four powerful telescope then known, and after four years' labour with these instruments, he made the most unexpected and important discoveries. A new planet—Uranus, in 1781: its satellites in 1787; two new satellites of Saturn in 1789; the rotation of Saturn's ring, and that of Jupiter's satellites, are among the principal of his inva-lnable discoveries. More than seventy of his memoirs on astronomical subjects are contained in the "Transactions of the Royal Society;" and his papers on the construction of telescopes remain unsurpassed even at the present day. He became a F.R.S., and afterwards president of that learned body. He was also knighted, and received the degree of doctor of laws from the university of Oxford. B. at Hanover, 1738: D. 1822.

HERSCHEL, Caroline Lucretia, the sister of the above, came to England in order to reside with her brother, while he was engaged as organist at Bath. From the first commenceorganis as Data. From the first commencement of his astronomical pursuits, she attended him in both his daily and nightly studies. In the intervals of her labours under her brother's direction, she observed the heavenly bodies on her own account. She discovered seven comets, her own account. She discovered seven comets, and, in 1798, published, with her brother, "A Catalogue of Stars, with a Correction of Flamsteed's Observations." On the decease of her steed's Observations." On the decease of her brother, she returned to Hanover, where, for twenty years longer, she continued to labour at her scientific pursuits. The Boyal Society voted for their gold medal, and she was also an honorary member of the same. She lived to the age rary memoer of the same. She aven to say of 98 years. B. at Hanover, 1750; D. 1848.

Herschel, Sir John Frederick William, the son and worthy inheritor of the fame of the son and worthy inheritor of the isme of William, from his earliest years was distin-guished for his great mathematical powers, as well as his love for physical science. He be-came a B.A. of St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1813; and, on the death of his father, pur-sued in the path of discovery pointed out by him. In 1825 he commenced observing tha heavenly bodies, with his father's instruments have been since many times reprinted. 3.1591; and after his method. This pursuit, in which he was assisted for some time by Sir James South (see Sourn, Sir James), lasted during eight years, and produced the most brilliant results. In his work, observations of 2306 nebulæ and clusters are contained. The Royal Astronomical Society voted him its gold medal Astronomical society voted nim its goal metal for his observations of the double stars. In 1830 he published a "Treatise on Sound," and a "Treatise on the Theory of Light," as well as Treatise on the Theory of Light, as wen as the "Proliminary Discourse on the Study of Natural Philosophy," published in Lardner's Cyclopædia, for which series he also contributed his excellent treatise on Astronomy, in 1836. In 1834 he sailed for the Cape of Good Hope, in order to make observations of the southern heavens: and for four years, at his southern heavens; and for four years, at his own expense, uninterruptedly watched the skies, own expense, uninterruptedly watched the skies, and nine years after his return, he, in 1847, published the results of his labours. His honourable career was appreciated by the learned one of all nations; the Royal Astronomical Society voted him, a second time, its gold medal; he was made D.C.L. of Oxford; and, in 1848, he became president of the loyal Astronomical Society. His "Outlines of Astronomy," Manual of Scientific Inquiry," have made the profound science he adorned popular with a large section of the reading public. He was created abronet at the coronation of (fuero Vectoria. In 1850 he was made master of the mint, an amoniument he was connected to region in 1856. appointment he was compelled to resign in 1555, on account of ill-health. B. at Slough, near Windsor, 1792.

HERTSPEEG, Ewald Frederick Von. hairts'bairg, an eminent statesman, whose merit reboiry, an eminent statesman, whose merit re-commended him to a situation in the department of foreign affairs at Berlin, and he afterwards became secretary to the Prussian embassy at Vienna. The king male him connsellor of legation, in which capacity he distinguished himself as a profound politician. In 1752 his essay on the population of the March of Brandenburg obtained the prize from the Academy denoting obtained the prize from the Academy of Sciences of Berlin. He was employed to draw up every state paper and memorial of con-sequence, and was gradually advanced to the first offices in the kingdom, and to the rank of nobility. B. 1725; D. 1795.

Hervey, James, her-ve, a writer of numerous popular books on theological subjects, with a popular books on theological subjects, with a Calvinistic leaning. In 1746 he published his "Meditations among the Tombs," and "Reflections in a Flower-Garden," which being will received, he added another volume. In 1755 appeared his "Theron and Aspasia; or Dialogues and Letters on Important Subjects," in 3 vois, 870, well written, but Claivinstie. The profiled of his works, which were considerable, he applied to charitable purposes. B, 1714; D, 1758. Hanyay, John, Lord, second son of John, first earl of British was accusated at Wastrimister, and earl of Bristol, was educated at Westminster, and Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he took his degree of M.A. in 1715; and after a short tour on the continent, returned to England, where he spent much of his time in the literary and fashionable circles of the metropolis. In 1720 he married Miss Lepell, so often mentioned in Pope's letters and verses; in 1723 he succeeded to the title of Lord Hervey by the death of his elder brother; and in 1725 became member of Parliament for Bury, when he attached himself to Sir Robert Walpole's party in opposition to that of Pulteney, and was made vice-chamberlain in 1730, which office he retained by court influence till

Herzen Hicetas

1740, when he became lord privy seal. From an early age, Lord Hervey took an active part in the literary and political contests of the day. His pamphlets in answer to the "Craftsman" involved him in a duel with Pulteney; his quarrel with Pope, which extended over many years, gave rise to some of the bitterest satirical sketches ever penned (particularly Pope's cele-brated prose letter, the epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, and the character of Sporus); and he carried on an active correspondence with Dr. Middleton regarding the mode of electing the Roman senate, besides writing some able pamphlets on foreign affairs, which may still be read with interest. Lord Hervey was generally designated "Lord Fanny," by the wits and satirists of the time, in consequence of his effeminate habits and appearance, one lampooner even going the length of saying that he was, "Ne'er meant for use, just fit for show, Half wit, half fool, half man, half beau."

The editor of a recent edition of Pope's works says, in a note on this nobleman :- "Lord Hervey's effeminacy arose partly from ill-health, but was carried to an extreme. Having been threatened with epileptic fits, he adopted a regimen suitable for an anchorite. He took no wine or malt liquor, breakfasted on green tea unsweetened by sugar, and biscuits without butter; at dinner, he ate no meat but a little chicken; and once a week he indulged in a Scotch pill, and took thirty grains of Indian root when his stomach was loaded. To soften his ghastly appearance, he used rouge. Another account represents him as drinking ass's milk; and when once asked at dinner whether he would and when once asked at dinner whether hewould have some beef, he answered—Beef! oh, no! Faugh! Don't you know I never eat beef, nor horse, nor any of those things?" His "Memoirs of the Reign of George II, from his Access'on to the Doath of Queen Caroline," were multished in 1818 with her and the control of the Reign were published in 1818, with an account of the author by John Wilson Croker. B. 1696; D. 1743.

Herzen, or Herzen, Alexander, hairts'-en, a Russian politician and political writer, who, after leaving the university of Moscow, in 1834, was charged with having assisted at a seditious meeting of students, and, although he was not present at it, he was condemned, after some imprisonment, to banishment under surveillance at Viatka. On the death of his father, in 1846, he became possessed of considerable estates, and was granted leave to travel in 1848. In Italy, and afterwards in Paris, he openly expressed his republican ideas, and shared in the pressed his republican ideas, and shared in the acts of his party at the latter place. Soon after, he found it expedient to take up his residence in England, where he published his memoirs, under the title of "My Exile," and set up a journal in the Russian language, in which the suppressed poems of the Russian poet Pushkin, as well as the opinions of the catiled republican loaders of the continent, were not forth. lican leaders of the continent, were put forth to the northern world. B. at Moscow, 1812.

the normern worner. B. as account, 1812.

HISSION, be-si-od, an ancient Greek poet, the date of whose works is uncertain; some placing them before, and others after Homer. He was the first who wrote on agriculture; his poems being entitled "The Works and Days." His being entitled "The works and Days." Ils "Theogony" is valuable as affording an account of the ancient mythology; his "Shield of Her-cules" is only a fragment of a larger work. The best edition of Hesiod is that of Dindorf, 1825; and his poems have been translated into English by Thomas Cooke. Lived in the 10th century B.C.

HESSE, William, Prince of, hes'-se, celebrated as a patron of learning, and for his studies and observations, during many years, of the heavenly observations, during many years, or the neavenry bodies. For this purpose he built an observa-tory at Cassel, and called to his assistance two scientific men, Rothmann and Byrge. His observations were printed at Leyden, in 1618. n.

about 1545; p. 1597. Hevelius, John, HEVELUS, John, he-ve'-le-us, an eminent astronomer, came of a distinguished family, and studied mathematics with great ardour, but devoted himself chiefly to astronomy. He built an observatory for the purpose of making an observatory for the purpose of making accurate observations, the result of which he published in 1647, under the title of "Selenographia; or, a Description of the Moon;" to which he added the phases of the other planets, as observed by the telescope. This work was as observed by the felescope. This work was followed by many others, the most distinguished of which was his "Comelographia," published in 1868. Besides the above works, he was the author of "Uranographia," 1890, follo; "De Natura Saturni." s. 1811; n. at Dantzie, 1888, HEXIN, Peter, Aul-Lin, a learned divine, who obtained a fellowship of Magdalen College, where he read cosmographical lectures. In 1825 he published his "Description of the World," which he afterwards enlarged under the title of "Cosmography." In 1828 he was anoointed chaplain in Culinary to the king, and appointed chaplain in a dinary to the king, and in 1631 obtained a prebend of Westminster, which was followed by the living of Houghton, in the diocese of Durham. In 1633 he took his degree of D.D. He obtained some other preferments, of which he was deprived by the Parliament, and voted a delinquent; his goods were also confiscated, and his person endangered. At the Restoration he was restored to his prebend. He was a man of great abilities and uncommon industry. His principal works, besides the above, are, "The History of the Reformation in England," "History of the Presbyterians," "Life of Archbishop Laud." в. 1600: р. 1662.

HEYNE, Christian Gottlob, hi-ne, a distinguished German classical scholar and critic. who published a number of valuable works illustrating ancient literature. He published He published copiously-annotated editions of Homer, Virgil, Tibulius, Pindar, &c., and contributed many valuable essays to the "Transactions" of the Valuation beam, where he was professor of eloquence and poetry. E. at Chemnitz, Saxoony, 1729; p. 1812.

Herwood, John, Mai-wood, one of the earliest English poets and dramatists. He is also said to have been well versed in music, and skilful as a player on the virginals. He was a great favourite with Henry VIII. and Queen Mary, but on the accession of Elizabeth he went to Mechlin. One of his principal works is entitled "The Spider and the Fly, a Parable." B. about

The spacer and the FIY, a Farance. B. about 1800; D. 1860; D. 1860

HICETAS, hi-se'-tas, a philosopher of Syracuse, who maintained that the heavens, sun, and stars were all immoveable, while the earth revolved on its axis. This is the account given by Cicero, and from it Copernicus took the idea of his system.

Hiero I., hi'-e-ro, king of Syracuse, who rendered himself odious in the beginning of his reign by his cruelty and avarice. He made war against Theron, the tyrant of Agrigentum, and took Himera. D. 467 B.C., leaving the crown to his brother Thrasybulus.

HIERO II., was unanimously elected king by all the states of the island of Sicily, and apan the states of the island of Sicily, and ap-pointed to carry on the war against the Carthagnians; but afterwards joining them in besieging Messin, was beaten by Appius Clau-dius, the Roman consul, and obliged to retire to Syracuse, where he was soon blocked up. Seeing all hopes of victory lost, he made peace with the enemies of his country, and proved faithful to all his engagements. He liberally faithful to all his engagements. He liberally patronized the learned, and employed the talents of Archimedes for the good of his country. D.

216 в.с.

HIBROCLES, hi-er'-o-klees, the name of several Greeks.-1. A professor of rhetoric at Alabanda, in Caria, who is said to have excelled in what Cicero called "the Asiatic" style of eloquence. Lived in the 1st century before the Christian era .- 2. A writer on the veterinary art, of whose work three chapters have been preserved .- 3. work ince chapters have been preserved.—3. A Stoic philosopher, who is said to have flourished about the time of Hadrian.—4. A writer of a work, which, under the title of "Travelling Companion," gave a description of the provinces of the Eastern empire. This work was edited and printed by Wesseling, at Amsterdam, in 1735. He is supposed to have lived in the 6th century.—5. A persecutor of the Christians, who was president of Bithynia, and afterwards governor of Alexandria, where he committed numberless cruelties. He wrote some books against the Christians, mentioned by Lactantius and Eusebius. The remains of his writings were published by Bishop Pearson in 1654, with a curious discourse upon them. in 165., with a carrons discourse upon them. Lived in the 4th century.—6. An Alexandrine Platonic philosopher, who wrote seven books on "Providence and Destiny," and a commentary on the "Golden Verses of Pythagoras," the latter of which is extant, also fragments of the former. A book entitled "Asteia," ridiouling the works and manners of pedants, is some-times attributed to him; but it is probably the work of another author of the same name. It was translated into English in 1741, and published in the "Gentleman's Magazine." Lived in the 5th century.

HIRRONYAUX, hi-rowi-i-mus, a tyrant of Sicily, who rendered himself edious by his oppression and debauchery. He abjured the adlance of Rome, which Hiero had enjoyed with so much honour and advantage. He was so much monor and advantage. The was assassinated, and all his family estirpated, 214 n.c.—A Christian writer, commonly called St. Jerome, born in Pannonia, distinguished for his zeal against heretics. He wrote Commentaries on the Prophets, St. Matthew's Gospel, &c.

D. 420.

HIFFERNAY, Paul, hif-fer-nan, an Irish dramatist, who, after being educated for the practice of medicine in France, pursued that profession in Dublin for some time; but went to London in 1759, and commenced writing for the stage, and compiling works for booksellers. He met with little success as an author, and lived chiefly by contributions from the purses of his friends. B. at Dublin, 1719; D. 1777.

Hilary

3, John, hig'-gins, an English divine and schoolmaster, who lived at Winsham, near Ilminster, in Somersetshire. He published some school-books, a treatise on Christ's descent into hell, and part of the "Mirrour for Magistrates," in about 1846, a chart 1869.

trates." B. about 1544; B. about 1603.

ORB, Joseph, hi-mor, an English historical painter. He painted the portraits of several eminent persons, also a set of pictures, the subjects of which were taken from Richard-son's "Pamela." At the foundation of the Royal Academy, he was chosen one of the pro-fessors. His best pictures are "Hagar and Ish-mael," at the Foundling hospital; the "Finding of Moses," and the "Good Samaritan." He was also eminent for his literary abilities, was also eminent for his literary addition, and published "A Critical Examination of the Two Paintings by Rubens on the Ceiling of the Banqueting-house at Whitehall," &c.; "The Practice of Perspective on the Principles of Dr. Brooke Taylor;" "Observations on a Pamphlet entitled Christianity not founded on Argument," and two volumes of Essays. B. in London, 1692: p. 1780.

HIGGONS, Bevil, hig'-gons, a dramatic poet and istorian, whose principal works are, a tragedy alled "The Generous Conqueror," and a "Short View of the English History." He accompanied James II, to France, and died here in 1735; B. 1670.

HILLIER, Geoffrey St., he'-lair, a distinguished French naturalist, was the son of Etienne Geoffrey St. Hilaire, also an eminent naturalist. The example and the teachings of his father inspired him even in his childhood with a taste for the natural sciences, to the study of which he devoted himself with untiring ardour and remarkable success. In 1826 he presented to the Institute a "Memoire" upon the mammalia, and was but 21 when elected a member of the Academy, which was then presided over by his father. He was successively pro-fessor of zoology at the Museum, director of the menagerie, inspector-general, councillor of the university, &c. Among other movements with which his name is more especially connected, was the establishment of the Imperial Zoological Society of Acclimatisation, of which he was the president. St. Hilaire often caused amusement, both in his own country and out of it, by the pertinacious efforts which he made to introduce the use of horseflesh as a staple urticle of human food; having on more than ne occasion presided at banquets where horses applied the material for almost every dish. 3. 1805; D. 1861.

3. 1800; D. 1801.

HILARION, hi-lair-e-on, the founder of the conastic life in Palestine. He visited St. Anhony the anchorite in Egypt, and on his return o his own country, followed his example, and bitained a number of followers. B. 291; D. in the island of Cyprus in 371.

HILLERY, Sr., hill-a-re, a father of the Church in the 4th century, who embraced Christianity when far advanced in life. On being instructed in the principles of religion, he was baptized with his wife and daughter. In 350 he was made bishop of Poictiers, and the year following was sent by Constantius to defend Athanasius at the synod of Beziers against Saturninus, which he did with such zeal that Saturninus prevailed in the emperor to banish him to Phrygia, where ne wrote his books on the Trinity. He was also the author of a treatise on Synods. D. 367. HILARY, a saint of the Roman calendar, who pieceeded Honoratus in the bishopric of Arle: racceach Honoradas in the bishophe of Aries and presided at a council at Orange, in 431. His works are—1. Homilies, under the name of Eusebius of Emesa, 2. "The Life of St. Honoradus," 3. "Opuscula" B. 401; D. 449.

Hildebrand, hill-de-brand, king of the Lombards, ascended the throne in 736, and shared power with his uncle Luitprand; but his tyranny became insupportable to his subjects, who de-posed him in 744, electing in his stead the duke of Frinli.

HILL, Aaron, hil, an English poet and drama-At the age of fifteen he went to Constanthople to visit his relation, Lord Paget, who was ambassador there, and whom he accom-panied to England, in 1703. He next travelled with Sir William Wentworth over Europe. In 1709 he became manager of Drury-lane Theatre, for which he wrote his "Elfrid; or, the Fair Inconstant." The following year he became Inconstant." The following year he became manager of the Opera-house, and wrote the opera of "limidlo," the first for which Handel composed the nusie in England. About The he published a neorn, called "The Northern Star, or a Panegyrle on Peter the Great," for which the empress Catharine sent him a gold medal. B. in London, 1685; D. 1750. Hill, Sir John, a voluminous English writer, who commenced life as an apothecary in St. Martin's Lane. His first publication was a translation of Theophrastus' tract on Gems, which procuring him some reputation, he un-dertook a natural history, in 3 vols. folio. He afterwards became a general writer on almost alterwards became a ceneral writer on almost all subjects. Ile published a supplement to Chambers's "Cycloradia," and conducted a magazine, and a daily paper under the title of the "Inspector." At this time he obtained his degree of M.D. from Scotland, and set up as a vender of quack medicines. Under the patronage of the earl of Bute he commenced a voluminous work, called "The System of Botany," within he care the transfer of the state."

minous work, called "The system of morany; which he sent to the king of Sweden, who invested him with one of his orders of knighthood. Besides the above works, he wrote, amony others, "Mrs. Glasse's Cockery." "A Review of the Works of the Royal Society," some movels, and a few farces. These last some novels, and a few farces. These last brought him into a controversy with Garrick, who wrote the following epigram on him:— "For physic and farces, his equal there scarce is; His farces are physic, his physic a farce is." n. at Peterborough, 1718; p. 1775.

Hill, Rev.Royland, minister of Surrey Chapel, son of Sir Rowland Hill, bart, was born at Hawkstone, near Shrewsbury, and in the grammar school of that town commenced his seducation, then went to Eton for a few years, and finished his studies at St. John's College, Cambridge. At the time hequitted the university, the celebrated Goorge Whitefield was in the zenith of his popularity; and so congenial to Hill's nature was that extraordinary preacher's manner and doctrine, that he adopted both, and being supplied during the summer months by a succession of ministers from the country. numerous tales that are told of his eccentricinumerous takes that are told of his eccentricities should be received with caution; though it is certain he occasionally illustrated the most solemn truths by observations which savoured more of the ludicrous than the pathetic-of the grotesque than the serious. His writings are very numerous, the principal of which is entitled "Village Dialogues;" but he was not titled "Village Dialogues;" but he was not sparing of wit, humour, or sarcasm, whenever he could make either subservient to his purpose, as was strikingly seen in a satirical pamphlet against the ministers of the established church. which he published anonymously, under the title of "Spiritual Characteristics, by an Old Observer." n. 1744; p. 1833.

Hill, General Sir Rowland, Viscount, the second son of Sir John Hill, bart, entered the army at the early age of sixteen; served at Toulon under Lord Mulgrave, General O'Hara, and Sir David Dundas; through the whole of the Egyptian campaign, where he was wounded in the head; in Ireland, throughout the Peninsular War, and at Waterloo. In 1828, the reministar war, and at Waterion. In 1828, he was appointed commander-in-chief, and discharged the duties of the post to the outire satisfaction of the public, and with great benefit to the army. In the field—in every rank, from that of ensign to that of general—he was remarkable for a rare union of daring, zeal, and rudence. In the distribution of his patronage, he was proverbially impartial; private or politi-cal feeling never prevented him from doing justice to professional merit. B. 1772; D. Dec. 10, 1842.

HILL, Sir Rowland, the distinguished author of the cheap postage system, and secretary to the Post-office, in early life supported him-self by teaching mathematics in his father's school and in private families at Birmingham. His talent for organization was displayed, even at this period, by his improvements in his father's academy, as well as in originating schemes of education. Hard work so shattered his weak health, that, in 1833, he retired from his schohealth, that, in 1833, he retired from his scho-lastic duties. Shortly after, he was appointed secretary of the South-Australian commission. Early in 1837 he turned his attention to postal reform, and published a number of pamphlers upon the subject. Of these, it will be suffi-cient to name one,—"State and Prospects of Pump Postage," in which he proposed that letters should be charged by weight and not by distance and that a uniform try of one nonrow letters should be charged by weight and not by distance, and that a uniform tax of one ponny on all letters of a certain weight should be imposed. In the same year, the House of Commons appointed a committee to examine his project. In their report this committee strongly recommended the plan, as eminently invortable to commerce, while it would serve as valuable aid in developing the intellect of the lower descar. of the lower classes. In the course of the following session, more than 10,000 potitions were presented to Parliament praying for a uniform rate of postage. In 1840 the penny postage system was adopted, and the author was nomit manner and doctrine, that he adopted both, and following session, more than 10,000 potitions became his zealous disciple; prosecuting his were presented to Parliament praying for a unifavourite plan of titnerancy, preaching in the form rate of postage. In 1840 the penny postage streets of Bristol, on the query, or among the systems was adopted, and the author was nounifacted to the total of directing its carry growth, could gain an audience, but resuming, at stated After many veratious struggles with the offi-periods, the services of the London and Bristol class, he retired in 1834, and received, in 1846, a tabernacles. In 1783 the building of Surrey Chapel was completed; and from that time to $313,000 being collected by subscription. The tabe period of his death, an interval of fifty paras, he confined to pass his winters in town rapid throughout the United Kingdom. In 1887 for the purpose of officiating there, his place and, in 1864, retired on a pension of £2,000 a year for life; receiving also a parliamentary grant of E20,000. p. 1795.

Hilliard

HILLIARD, Nicholas, hill-yard, goldsmith and portrait-painter to Queen Elizabeth, whose miniature portraits were highly esteemed. He painted Mary queen of Scots, and Queen Elizabeth several times. B. 1547; p. 1619.

Hilton, William, R.A., hill-ton, was admitted as a student at the Royal Academy about the year 1800, and in 1803 exhibited a picture of banditti of high merit for an artist so young as Hilton then was. Next followed his "Hector inspired by Apollo," "Cephalus and Procris," and by a series of noble compositions, which fally established the artist's fame. He was elected an associate of the Academy in 1814, and elected an associate of the Academy in 1314, and became a member in 1392, when he presented to the Academy his picture of "Ganymede," as his diploma piece. In 1822, he succeeded Fuscil as keeper of the Academy, a post he continued to occupy till his death. Though possessed of great merit as a painter, Hilton was not popular, and had the mortification of seeing the works of inferior artists bought up rapidly, while his own remained on his hands. E. 1780; D. 1839, HIND, John Russell, hinde, an eminent mo-dern astronomer, was the son of a Nottingham lace-manufacturer, who was among the first to introduce the Jacquard loom. His education was conducted with the view of fitting him for commercial pursuits; but, from his earliest youth, he evinced a strong predilection for astronomical studies. In 1840 he was sent to London, where he became assistant to a civil engineer. His love for scientific pursuits, however, led him to apply to Professor Wheatstone for a situation more in accordance with the bent of his genius. Through the interest of that gentleman, he obtained a situation under Professor Airy in the Royal Observatory at Greenwich, where he re-mained for four years, making the best use of his time in studying the valuable astronomical works in the library, by which a solid foundation of scientific knowledge was obtained. In 1843 he was sent to Valentia, near Dublin, to settle the longitude of the place; and, in 1844, he left the Royal Observatory to take charge of Mr. Bishop's private observatory in Regent's Park; and, soon after his appointment, became a member of the Royal Astronomical Society. member of the Koyal Astronomical Society.

Applying himself assiduously to the observation of the heavens, he discovered ten new planets—
Iris, Flora, Victoria, Irene, Melpomene, Fortuna, Calliope, Thaila, Euterpe, and Urania; three comets, several stars, as well as having calculated the control of the con the orbits of a number of planets and comets. He the orbits of a number of planets and comets. He was 'chosen member and correspondent of nearly all the great continental learned societies; received the gold medal of the Royal Astronomical Society, besides being appointed its assistant secretary. The government granted him a pension of £200 per year, and appointed him superintendent of the Nautical Almana. Resides his many valuable continuations of the state of the Almanac. Besides his many valuable contribu-tions to the "Transactions" of the Royal Astro-nomical, and other English and foreign societies, he published a pamphlet "On the expected Return of the Great Comet of 1264 and 1556;"

Hippocrates

increased to unwards of 300,000,000. Mr. Hill planation of the Terms in use among Astronowas reinstated as secretary of the Post-office mere at the present day?" "The Solar System," in 1847, where he afterwards laboured to improve the organization of the establishment, "An Account of all the Recent Discoveries;" An Account of all the Recent Discoveries;" An Account of all the Recent Discoveries; "An Illustrated London Astronomy, for the use and is 1908 without one of 80 000. of Schools and Students;" in addition to several others, some calculated for the more learned in science, and others fitted for the popular exposition of that science in which he laboured with so much industry and success, B, at Nottingham, May, 1923.

HIPPARCHUS, hip-par'-kus, son of Pisistratus, tyrantof Athens, after whose death in 523 g.c., he reigned with his brother Hippias; both of whom had a great love of letters, and protected learned Hipparchus was slain by Harmodius. 111/011

4 B.C.

HIPPARCHUS, a celebrated Greek astronomer, who was the first to reduce astronomy to a regular science; and whose catalogue of stars is still preserved in Ptolemy's "Almagest." He forefold the course of the sun and moon for 600 years, calculated according to the different manners of reakoning the months, days, and hours, in use among several nations, and for the different situations of places. He also formed the lunar period which bore his name; invented the planisphere, or method of describing the stars upon a plane; and was the first to mark the positions of places upon the earth in the same manner as that of the stars, by circles drawn from the poles perpendicularly to the equator, in other words, by latitudes and longitudes; he was also the by latitudes and longitudes; he was also the author of the projection by which maps of the world and the best geographical maps are made. Lived between 160 and 125 p.c.

Hippias, hip'-pi-as, a philosopher of Elis, who maintained that virtue consisted in not being in want of the assistance of men .- A son of Pisistraius, who became tyrant of Athens, after the death of his father, with his brother Hipparchus. He wished to revenge the death of his brother, who had been assassinated, but was driven from his country. He fled to King Darius in Persia, and was killed at the battle of Marathon, fighting against the Athenians, 490 B.C.

HIPPOCRATES, hip-pok-ra-tees, the father of medical science, who flourished during the epoch of the Peloponnesian war, and before whose time the art of healing consisted of mystical 'uggleries and superstitious practices, pursued the priests as a source of profit. He was born a family called the Asclepiadæ, who for 300 years had followed the pursuit of medicine. He taught the necessity of closely observing the signs of diseases, and prescribed only the most simple remedies; always insisting that the have been the first to recognise the value of diet as an adjunct to the physician in the treatment of disease, and wrote a treatise on the subject : he practised both as physician and surgeon; but, owing to the great respect paid to the remains of the dead among the Greeks, he had few opportunities of studying anatomy, of which he is said to have possessed but a scanty amount of knowledge. A large number of medical works are attributed to him; but it is believed that many are the composition of some other members of his family. The most valuable of his treatises are essays on Air, Water, Locality, Epidemics, Wounds of the Head, and Diet in Acute Diseases; all of which have been edited, translated, and annotated by the most learned "An Astronomical Vocabulary; being an Ex- men in modern times. A complete edition of his seventy-two essays has been published in Germany. B. at Cos, 460 B.c.; D. about 361 B.c.

Hippolytus

Hippolytus, hip-pol-t-tus, a bishop an father of the church chiefly remarkable as the presumed author of a work on "Heresies, hitherto attributed to Origen. The Chevalic Bunsen, a few years since, wrote a work callet "Hippolytus," in which, while giving the arguments on both sides, he pronounced himself an advocate for the claims of Hippolytus to the authorship of the work in question. Lived during the 3rd century.

Hipponax, hip-po'-nax, a Greek satirical poet, of whose writings only a few fragments remain was so deformed that two sculptors made ridiculous representations of him, for which he retaliated upon them with such severity in his satires, that they are said to have hanged themselves. B. about 540 B.C.

HIRE, Philip de la, heer, a celebrated mathe-matician, who, after studying painting under his father, having a turn for mathematics, quitted that profession and went to Italy, where he applied himself diligently to his favourite science. On his return to France, he was made a member of the Academy of Sciences, and was a member of the Academy of Sciences, and was employed by Colbert in constructing the great map of the kingdom, with Picard and Cassini. His principal works are, "Treatise on Mechanics," "New Method of Geometry," and an essay on "Conic Sections," n. at Paris, 1649, p. 1711. HOADLEY, Benjamin, hode-le, a celebrated English bishop, was educated at Catherine and the control of the c Hall, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. In 1708, he commenced his polemical career by remarks on one of Dr. Atterbury's funeral sermons; and in 1708 answered another sermon of the same author, on the power of charity to ever sin. The year following, he had another controversy with Atterbury on the doctrine of non-resistance, which recommended Hoadley to the notice of the House of Commons, who prayed the queen to bestow preferment on him. prayet the queen to bestow preterment on him, on the accession of George I. he was made bishop of Bangor, which see he never visited, but continued in London, preaching and publishing political sermons. One of these, on the spiritual kingdom of Christ, produced a violent dispute called the Bangorian controversy, was afterwards engaged in a contest with Dr. was afterwards engaged in a contess win Dr. Hare on the nature of prayer. From Bangor he was removed to Hereford, thence to Salisbury, and lastly to Winchester. In 1735 he made an attack on the orthodox faith, in his "Plain Account of the Lord's Supper," which he treated as a matter of mere indifference. This excited another considerable controvers, A complete another considerable controvers, A complete Children of the works has been multiplied in 4 edition of his works has been published in 4 vols. folio. B. at Westerham, Kent, 1676; D. 1761.

HOLDLEY, Benjamin, eldest son of the preceding, a physician, published some medical and philosophical pieces; but he is best known as the author of "The Suspicious Husband," as the author of the suspension frasham, a comedy. B. 1708; p. 1757.

Hoare, Prince, F.S.A., hoar, a dramatic author, a native of Bath, and secretary to the Poyal Academy; wrote several farces, which were successful, and published some works on art. p. 1754; p. 1834.

Hoare, Sir Richard Colt, bart., F.R.S. and F.S.A., an eminent local historian and topo-grapher, was the eldest son of Sir Richard Hoare, the first baronet. In 1818 he printed for

Hobbouse

"Recollections of a Classical Tour," in 4 vols. Various treatises on antiquarian and other kindred subjects occasionally came from his pen; but his great work is the "Ancient and Modern History of Wiltshire," which at the time of his death was not quite complete. B. 1758: D.

HOBBES, Thomas, hobs, a celebrated English philosopher, who received his education at Magdalen Hall, Oxford. In 1608 he became tutor to a son of the earl of Devonshire, with whom he made the tour of Europe. On the death whom he made the tour of Europe. On the death of his patron and pupil, he became travelling tutor to a young gentleman, but the countess dowager of Devonshire recalled him into her family to take upon him the education of the young earl. In 1634 he reprinted his translayoung earl. In 1634 he reprinted his transla-tion of Thucydides, the first edition of which appeared in 1628. The same year he attended the earl on his travels, and at Pisa contracted an intimacy with Galileo. In 1642 he printed his book "De Cive," which procured him many enemies by its dangerous principles. Soon after this he was appointed mathematical totor to the Prince of Wide. 1, 1850-march is New 1981. uns he was appointed manemandal tracer to the Prince of Wales. In 1869 appeared, in English, his book on Human Nature; and one, "De Corpore Politico," or, the Elements of Law, The next year he published his famous book, entitled "Leviathan," which is full of parodoxical doctrines. At the Restoration he received a pension of £100 per annum, he having formerly supported the republishmen with need, but in supported the royalist cause with zeal; but in 1666 the Parliament passed a censure on his writings, which greatly alarmed him. Hobbes maintained the propriety of making use of bad means to procure a good end; which he thus illustrated: "If I were east into a deep pit, and the devil should put down his cloven foot, I would readily lay hold of it to get out." Besides the above works, he published "The Wonders of the Peak," a poem; a translation of Homer; "Elements of Philosophy;" "Letter on Liberty and Necessity; "Six Lessons to the Professors of the Mathematics;" "Marks of absurd Geometry;" &c. B. at Malmesbury, 1588; D. 1679.

A, Minderhout, hob'-e-ma, an eminent Dutch landscape painter. His pieces are re-markable for the grace and beauty of their execution, and, being rare, are now very valuable.

cution, and, being rare, are now very vauuoue.
B. at Antwerp, about 1611.
HOBHOUSE, John Cam, Baron Broughton, bob'-bouse, a distinguished English politician and writer of books of travel. After receiving his education at Cambridge, he, in 1809, tra"lied" in the Post and on his return in 1812. his education at Cambridge, ne, in 1809, tra-velled in the Bast, and on his return, in 1812, published a work called "A Journey into Albania and other Provinces of the Turkish Empire." Lord Byron dedicated the fourth can't of "Childe Harold" to him about the same time. He was in France during the Hundred Days, and, after the battle of Waterloo, wrote "The Letters of an Englishman," in which he declared himself a supporter of the which he declared nimsen a supporter of an emperor Napoleon. Mainly through the ran-cour of his political opponents, he was inear-cerated in gaol for four years; but this was the neans of his attaining to a considerable degree of popularity. He became a member of the House of Commons in 1820, and, at the same time, assisted several members of the Radical party in establishing the "Westminster Review," wherein he opposed, in the most forcible man-Houre, the first baronet. In 1818 he printed for ner, the Tory party under Canning. Becoming private circulation among his friends, his more moderate in his political views, he was, in 1831, appointed secretary of state for war in the cabinet of Earl Grey, and, in 1833, secretary of state for Ireland; but, in the same year, loss his seat in the House of Commons, through an inconsistent vote. In 1834 he was elected M.P. of Nottingham. On the accession to power or the Whig party, headed by Lord John Russell, in 1846, the beamer persident of the India Board of Control, in which important office he remained for the property of the state of the India Board of Control, in which important office he remained for the India Board of Control, in which important of the India Board of Control, in which important of the India Board of Control, in which important of the India Board of Control, in which is the India Board of Control, in the India Board of Control, in

HOCKE, LAZIUS, Joob, a general of the French republican army, was the son of an hostler. Being deprived of his father while a child, the rector of St. Germain-en-Laye took him under his care and made him a chorister, after which he became a groom in the royal stables. At the age of sixteen he entered the army, and became a corporal in the greandiers. Soon after the breaking out of the Revolution, he obtained a commission, and distinguished himself in several engagements. During the tyramy of Robespierre, he was confined in the Conciergerie several months; but the tall of this terrorist in 1794 set hum at hberty. He drove the Austrians out of Alsace, and being sent against the royalists at Quiberon, acted with great crucity, and put to death the brave Charette. Soon afterwards, he commanded the forces sent to Ireland, but returned in disgrace. He next had the command of the army of the Sambre and Mense, with which he defeated the Austrians on the Rhine; but, after a short illness, he died, in 1797, suspected of being poisoned. 2. near Versailles, 1798.

Hongsoy, Rev. Francis, D.D., hody'-son, educated at Eton, was a man of great learning and various accomplishments. Hewas classical tutor of King's College, Cambridge, where he formed an intimate friendship with Lord Byron, which continued unimpaired until the noble poet's death. For some time Mr. Hodgson was one of the assistant masters at Eton, and succeeded Dr. Goodall in the provostship in 1840. His Latin contributions to the "Arundines Cami," and other works of that class, are distinguished by elegant diction and classical taste. He also wrote binglish poetry, of which a translation of "Juvenni" and "Lady Jane Grey." a poem, are the most concernly known. p. 1565. p. 1845.

by degant diction and classical taske. He also wrote English poetry, of which a translation of "Juvenal" and "Lady Jane Grey," a poem, are the most generally known. B. 1789; D. 1845.
HORL I., ho-2k, duke of Brittany in 509, who, driven by Clovis from his estates, became a exile in England; but returned in 513, and obtained possession of his domains by force. D. 545.—Hold II. Son and successor of the above, was killed by his brother Canor, while hunting, in 547.

in 547.

Horra, Andrew, ho'-for, a distinguished Tyrolese patriot, and leader of his countrymen against the Bavarian and French invaders of the Tyrolese mountains. When the treaty of Fresburg was signed, by which Napoleon I, transferred the Tyrol to his allies the Bavarians, Hofer was a rich innkeeper and dealer in cattle and wine. By his great natural eloquence and the extraise of his power as a wealthy citizen, Hofer stirred his countrymen into a revolt against the Bavarians and French. The mountaileers were essisted by an Austrian army of 10,000 men, and in the spring of 1809 fell upon the advancing columns of the Bavarians, while marching through the narrow defiles, defeated them with great slaughter, and recovered every fortress in the Tyrol from the enemy. Upon this, Napoleon sent three armies against the mountaineers, one of which defeated the Tvrolesc, and put a large number of the inhabitants, male and female, to death. But in May, 1809, Hofer led his countrymen against the Bavarian army, defeated it, and once more set his country free. The Austrians were, however, compelled to evacuate the country a few months Lefebvre, with an army of 23,000 French and Bavarians, and 2000 cavalry, was defeated by 18,000 Tyrolese in a battle which lasted from five in the morning until midnight; thus freeing their native land a third time. was now proclaimed the head of the province: but his power lasted only a short time: for in October of the same year, an army of 50,000 French and Bavarians, all veteran troops, was marched against him; whereupon he was compelled to seek refuge in the mountains, where he was betrayed by a false friend, a priest named Douay. He was taken and conveyed to named Donay. He was taken and conveyed to Mantua, where after a trial by court-martial, he was condemned to be shot. In his short, but exceedingly brilliant career, which lasted less than one year, he thrice delivered his country, and for his services the emperor of a ustral pu-sioned his widow and family, created his son noble, and raised a fine marble statue to his memory in the cathedral of Innsbrück, B. at St. Leonard, in the Tyrol, 1767; shot at Mantua.

FALN, Maurice, Apfé-man, an eminent physician, who took his dector's degree at Padin, in 1648; he was made professor of anatomy and surgery at Althorf, and, the year following, professor of physic. In 1653 he obtained the professorship of botany, to which was added the direction of the physic garden. He was the author of several works on modical botany. n. 1821; p. 1693.

of physic. In 1633 he obtained the professorship of botany, to which was added the direction of the physic garden. He was the author of several works on medical botany. n. 1821; p. 1939. HOTFMAN, John Maurice, son of the above, tudied under his father, and, in 1674, took his doctor's degree. In 1681 he was chosen professor of physic. He was also appointed physician to the Margrave of Anspach, and, on the death of his father, succeeded him. p. 1633; p. 127.

HOFFAIN, John James, professor of Greek at Bâle, who is known as the author of a work of great labour and value,—"A. Universai Historial Dictionary," in Latin, published first in 2 ols, folio, and afterwards enlarged to 4. Ols, folio, and afterwards enlarged to 4. Latin. p., 1835; p. 1708.

HOPPLAN, Frederick, a celebrated physician, who was chosen professor of physic at Halle, in 1683, which situation he retained till his death. His works, under the title of "A Complete System of Medicine," have been published at Geneva, in 6 vols. B. at Halle, 1600; D. 1742

FMAN, Augustus Henry, of Fallersleben, a popular German poet, the son of a burgomaster at Fallersleben, who published, in 1820, "The Fragments of Ottfried," In the same collecting the scattered fragments of the popular poetry of the middle ages. In 1823 he was appointed conservator of the Breslau University Library, and soon afterwards published his "Unpolitical Songs," which caused him to become very popular. He also wrote songs for children, for workmen, and for peasants; indeed, as a poet, he may be said to address himself only to the simplest among his countrymen. He likewise contributed a number of very valuable philological articles to the best periodicals in Germany. B. 1798.

HOFFMAN, Ernest Theodore William, a German of varied talents, studied the law, and held various judicial appointments in Prussia; till his legal career was interrupted by the invasion of Warsaw by the French, in 1806, in the government of which city he had been appointed counsellor. He now devoted his leisure hours to the study of music, and being at the same time a romance writer and an artist. at the same time a romance writer and an across applied himself to these pursuits in order to obtain a livelihood. Among his works are, "The Devil's Elixir," "The Entail," "The Adversary," &c.; all displaying a singularly wild and romantic imagination. In 1818 he was re-instated as counsellor in the court of judicature in Berlin. B. at Konigsberg, 1776; D. 1822.

HOFFMAN, Charles Fenno, an American poet and novelist, who, after leaving Columbia Col-lege, was called to the bar at New York, where he practised during three years; but, compelled by the state of his health to travel in the prairies, he published, in 1834, a record of his wander-ings, entitled, "A Winter in the Far West." he published, in 1894, a record or in wanter-ings, entitled, "A Winter in the Far West," which obtained a considerable share of popu-larity. This was followed by "Wild Scenes in the Forest and Prairie," in 1897, and the ro-mance of "Greyslern," in 180. He had also been one of the founders of the "Knickerbocker" Magazine;" but soon retired from its direction. Hothnan was subsequently one of the most active and successful contributors to the American magazines, for one of which, "The American Monthly," he wrotehis novel of "Vanderlyn," In 1842 he published a collected edition of his poems, 1832 he punished a concerne carron or in species, under the title of "A Vigil of Faith, and other Poems." For nearly two years he was at the head of the "Literary World," in which he wrote his sketches and essays, under the title of "Sketches of Society." An unfortunate attack of mental alignation, in 1849, suddenly stopped his bril-liant career, during which, save for his love of the horrible and repulsive, he might have claimed the first rank among American novelists. B. at New York, 1806.

HOPLAND, Mrs. Barbara, ho'-fland, well known by her numerous works, written principally for the amusement and instruction of youth, was the daughter of a manufacturer at Sheffield was the daugner of a manufacturer at Shemarried Mr. T. Bradshaw Hoole, of that town, whose death happened about two years after. Our authoress began her literary career in 1805, by the publication of a volume of poems, by sub-scription; from the proceeds of which she established herself in a school at Harrowgate, at the same time appearing occasionally as a writer of moral and amusing tales. Ten years had now elapsed since the death of her husband, when she became the wife of Mr. T. C. Hofland, land scape-painter. They soon after settled in London; and from that period till her decease year, he undertook a journey along the banks of she may be said to have never discontinued the Rhine and in Holland, with the view of writing: for although the majority of her books writing; for, although the majority of her books were neither laborious nor bulky, they were very numerous, and required considerable powers of numerous, and required considerable powers of invention. Among the more important of this lady's productions are, "Emily," a novel in 4 vols.; "Beatrice," "The Unloved One," "The Son of a Genius, "Tales of the Priory," "Self-denial," "The Merchant's Widow," "Decision," &c. n. 1770; D. 1844, after being a widow ascend time for one year, Mr. Hofland having died in 1843.

HOGAN, John, ho'-gan, a sculptor, first intro-duced to the English public at the Exhibition of 1831, but who was previously well-known in Ireland, was originally placed in the Gine of a solicitor, but developing considerable talent for sculpture, was allowed to follow the bent of his sculpture, was allowed to follow the bent of his genius. After executing a variety of carvings in wood, which displayed much skill and taste, he was, in 1823, through the liberality of the late Lord de Tahley and others, enabled to visit Rome; where, after a year's study, he produced his first sculpture in marble, "The Shepherd Boy." This figure afforded undoubted arising of garging I turn workhood by the produced his garging I turn workhood by the statement of Shephera Boy. "Ims ngure anorueu anorueu evidence of genius. It was purchased by the late Lord Powerscourt, who placed it in his gallery by the side of Thorwaldsen's "Cupid." Hogan's next work, "Eve after her Expulsion from Paradise finding a dead Dove," executed for Lord de Tabley, he probably never surpassed. The "Drunken Faun" followed. In 1829 he revisited Ireland, and first publicly exhibited there, namely, his "Dead Christ." The greater portion of his works, chiefly religious subjects and monumental—including memorials to Dr. Doyle, to O'Connell, and were to a daughter of Curran—executed for Roman Catholic ecclesicarrian—executed for noman Catholic gentlemen. The plaster model of his "Drunken Faun," which is an originality in sculpture, obtained a medal at the Great Exhibition of 1851. B. at Tallow.

Waterford, 1800; D. 1867.

Ilogarm, William, ho'-garth, a celebrated painter and pictorial satirist of morals, was apprenticed to an engraver of arms, &c., on silver plate. In 1718, being twenty-one years of age, he set up for himself, his first employment being he set up for nimset, ins instemployment penig the engraving of coats-of-arms, eiphers, and shop-bills. In 1724 he undertook to execute plates for booksellers, the chief of which are the prints of "Hudibras" and the illustrations to "Mortrayes' Travels." Ills first performance as a painter was a representation of Wanstead Accombit the mortragic bullers (App. Wene 166. Assembly, the portraits being taken from life. In 1730 he married a daughter of Sir James Thornhill, in whose academy he had studied drawing from the living figure. After gaining some pecuniary profit and fame by the publication of a series of small etchings representing London life and folly, he afterwards began to paint portraits; but soon abandoned this line of pictorial art, as being too full of drudgery for a man of invention and original genius. In 1733 appeared his "Harlot's Progress,"—prints 1755 appeared in figures frogress,—prints which stamped his reputation, and were followed by other works of the same class, admirably executed. Soon after the treaty of Air-la-Chapelle, he went to France, and while at Calais, began to sketch the gate of the town, for which began to sketch the game of the cown for when he was arrested, but was soon released. This circumstance he ridiculed in an excellent cari-cature. In 1753 he published his "Analysis of Beauty." The sale of engravings of his pictures, executed by himself, was so great, that, notwithstanding they were largely pirated, he was enabled to set up his carriage. His "Rake's Progress," "Marriage à la Mode," "March to Progress," "Marriage a 12 Moue, Finchley," as well as many other works, have constituted him one of the greatest satirists of the worldly vices and weaknesses that have ever lived; whilst his fine and solid, though unpretheding efforts as a colorist, have marked him as one of the best painters of the early English school. He was the greatest master of caricature the world has seen. n. in London, 1697:

D. 1764.

Hogg, James, hog, generally known as the Ettrick Shepherd, a Scotch poet of considerable genius, whose forefathers had been shepherds for genus, whose torenaturers had been snephords sior many generations, and he himself, previously to his pootical career, followed the same pursuit. In 1801, while acting as shepherd to Mr. Laidlaw, of Blackhouse, Sir Walter Soot became acquainted with him, and enaged him to collect materials for his "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border." In 1803 he published a collection of poems, under the title of "The Mountain Bard" which trackher with a cound of virse detains. which, together with a couple of prizes obtained from the Highland Society for essays on the rearing and management of sheep, made him the possessor of a sum amounting to £300. With this money he took a farm, which was a failure; and after in vain seeking employment as a shepherd, he, "in utter desperation," as he said, "took his plaid about his shoulders, determined, since no better could be, to push his for-tune as a literary man." From this period he laboured busily in the field of literature, with varying success. He contributed to "Black-wood's Magazine" and other periodicals, work-"Madoc the Moor," "The Pilgrim of the Sun," "Madoc the Moor," "The Filgrim of the Sun," and produced a volume of poems, some original, some ancient,—entitled "Jacobite Relies of Seedhad." "The Altrive Tales," "A Volume of Lay Sermons," and many other works, issued from his fertile but somewhat wild faney. On his marriage, in 1813, the duke of Buccleuch made him a present of a farm; but the management of it appears to have been so bad as to have made it a bequest of little value to the irregular poet. In in the Proset of Ettrick, Scikirskhire, 1772; D. at his farm at Altrive, 1835.

Hohenlohe, Prince of, ho-hen-lo'-e, a general of artillery in the service of the emperor, distinon a energy in the service of the emperor, distinguished himself in Transylvania against the Turks, in 1789; and in the campaign against France, in 1792, he gained great reputation, particularly in the battles of Famars and Mer-

mal. p. 1796.

HOHENLOHE-INGELFINGEN, Frederick Louis, Prince of, in gel-fin gen, after having fought with distinction in various battles at the commencement of the French revolution, commencement of the French revolution, was, in 1894, made governor of the principality of Franconia, and commandant of Breslau. After the battle of Jena, Oct. 14, 1805, led directed the retreat, and led the remnants of the great Prussian army; but being destitute of cavalry, and his infantry exhausted by futired, he surrendered, with 17,000 men, at Prenzlau, he surrendered, with 17,000 men, at Prenzlau, Oct. 28. B. 1746; D. 1818.

HOMENZOLLERN, ho-hen-tsol'-lern, one of the

the chiefs of the two principal lines of the royal house,—the line of Swabia and the line of Fran-conia; from which, in 1417, sprang the electors of Brandenburg, who afterwards became the kings of Prussia.

HOLBACH, Baron d', hole'-bak, a rich German noble, who went to Paris while young, and there embraced the sceptical doctrines professed by those who were called the "Philosophical School," previous to the revolution of 1791. He wrote a large number of works of an atheistical nature, most of which were condemned by the Parliament of Paris, and placed in the Index Expurgatorius of Rome. He also composed and translated several works on chemistry, mineralogy, and the natural sciences. B. at Heides-heim, 1723; D. at Paris, 1789. HOLBBIN, John, or Hans, hole'-bine, a famous portrait-painter and skilful architect, who was instructed in his art by his father. For the town-house of Bale he painted a fine picture of our Saviour's passion, and for the fish-market of our saviour's passion, and for the fish-market of the same towns "Danee of Peasants," and "Danee of Death," the last of which has been engraved in a series of plates. He visited England in the reign of Henry VIII, who liberally patronized him, on the recommendation of Sir Thomas More. He painted a number of portraits of the king and the highest nobility, as well as several historical pieces. B. about 1493; D. in London, of the plague, 1643.

Holberg, Louis, Baron de, hole-bairg, a celebrated Danish writer, called the Plautus of his country, who abandoned a military career for one of letters; and was, in 1720, appointed pro-fessor in the University of Copenhagen. From that time he wrote especially for the theatre, and produced a large number of plays, which have caused his countrymen to regard him as the founder of dramatic art in Denmark. He wrote also a "History of Denmark" and an "Ec-clesiastical History." B. at Bergen, 1684; D. at Copenhagen, 1754.

HOLCROFT, Thomas, hol'-kroft, an English playwright and translator of dramas, &c., was the son of a shoemaker, and became, when very young, a stable-boy in one of the racing stables of Newmarket. At the age of 17 he quitted this employment, and, for several years, led the life of a tramping shoemaker and wan-dering schoolmaster, all the while working sedulously at the task of self-education. At 21 he married, and, soon after, contributed a few articles to the "Whitehall Evening Post:" subsequently he left London to become a strolling player. After following the career of an actor for some time, and appearing on the London stage, he, in 1780, commenced writing for the theatre. He was one of the most fertile dramatic authors of his day, and was among the first to introduce to the London stage the system of adaptation from the French. He also wrote several novels and a sceptical poem; but it is as a translator of plays that he is chiefly known. His life has been published, and an abridged version of it issued by Messrs. Longman in their "Travellers' Library." n. in London, 1745; n. 1809,

HOLE, Richard, hole, a poet and miscellaneous HOREXZOLUERN, no-new-tsol-term, one of the most amediat reigning houses of Germany, solution of the most amediat reigning houses of Germany, solution that the state of the century. It owes its name to a manner, called "arthrity, or the Northern Enchâteau, situate on the Zollemberg, supposed to have been built by Rudolph II, count of Zollemberg, amposed to handment;" translated into herois verse Ossinia, whose two sons, Frederick and Connad, became .a. at Exeter; n. 1802, rector of Farringdom.

Holman

HOLLMSHED, Raphael, hol'-in-shed, a cele-brated old English chronicler, whose work is considered highly important by English historians. Nothing certain is known of his proression, but his annals show that he possessed considerable learning. His "Chronicles" were first published in 1577, in 2 vols. folio; and again in 1587 in three. B. uncertain when; D. about 1580.

HOLKAR, Mulhar Rao, hol'-kar, a Mahratta soldier, who, for his military services, received a grant of territory in Malwa in 1737, and subsequently made himself chief of more than half of House, Jesseut Rao, a daring military adventurer, who proclaimed himself a relative of the above, and at the head of a large army, collected by his ability and tact, defeated Scindia, the most powerful of the Mahratta chieftains, in 1802, and established himself in Malwa. Hercupon, the Marquis Wellesley, who was at that time governor-general of India, proclaimed war against him; but, after a struggle of nearly three years, a peace was concluded, by which Holthree years, a peace was concluded, by which Hol-kar was allowed to retain the greater portion of his territories. His violent temper subsequently culminated in madness, and he passed the closing years of his life in confinement. n. 1811. HOLLANP, Philemon, Abc'l-land, an English writer, and fellow of Trinity College, among the fruits of whose industrious lifemay be mentioned the translation of Pliny's "Natural History," and Camden's "Britannia." He was also an eminent practiser of the healing art in his day. B. at Chelmstord, 1551; D. 1636.

HOLLAND, Henry Fox, first Lord. (See Fox, Henry.)

HOLLAND, Henry Richard Vassal Fox, third Lord, nephew of the celebrated orator, and, like him, the champion of public liberty. In 1806 he became lord privy seal in the Grenville ministry; and in 1814-15 he denomiced the war against Napoleon. He greatly aided in the abo-lition of the Corporation and Test Acts, as well inion of the Corporation and I cas acts, as went as strongly advocated parliamentary reform. In 1806 he published the "Memoirs of Lope de Vega," and other works, and afterwards translated three comedies from the Spanish. His lordship's house at Kensington was, for a very lengthened period, a hospitable resort for the distinguished in literature and politics. B. 1773: D. at Holland House, 1810.

HOLLAND, Henry, a distinguished English architect, the favourite of George IV. when Prince of Wales. His personal history is un-Frince of Wates. In spersonal instor's is in-known; but of his works we may mention that he designed Carlon flouse and the Pavillon at Brighton for his patron, though this last was afterwards improved by Mash. (See Masn.) that the state of the sperson of the state of the this bud architect of providing the first of the this bud in the state of the state of the state of the this bud in the state of the state of the state of the bis desire.

The indus House, in Leadenhau-street, was also his design. n. about 1748; D. 1806.
HOLLAND, Sir Henry, an eminent English physician, who, after graduating M.D. at the university of Edinburgh, in 1811, went to London, where he rapidly acquired consideration as a physician. In 1840, he became physician in ordinary to H. B. H. Prince Albert, and in 1820. was accepted to the comp divide the cian in ordinary to it. is. in. r rinco americ, amount 1852 was appointed to the same duties towards her Majesty. He wrote a work, entitled "Medical Notes and Reflections," which is regarded by the medical body as being very valuable. In 1833, he was raised to the dignity valuable. In 1853, he was raised to the dignity Holman, James, generally known as the of a baronet, in consideration of his professional Blind Traveller, served, in his early years, in knowledge: and became a fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London, and of the Royal Society. B. in Cheshire, 1788.

HOLLAR, Wenceslaus, holl-lar, a distinguished draughtsman and etcher during the 17th cen-tury, whose drawings of old London have a tury, whose drawings of old London have a peculiar value with the antiquarian and historian. He was educated for the profession of law at Prague, but abandoned it for the more law at Prague, but abandoned it for the more congenial pursuits of drawing and engraving, obtaining instruction therein from Matthew Marian, an engraver, who had worked for Yandyek and Rubens. At the outset of his artistic career, he travelled from one great German town to another, copying the pictures of great painters, and making perspective views of cities, towns, and remarkable localities, becoming very celebrated for his drawings of the Rhine and Danube. In 1638, Howard, earl of Arundel, met him at Cologne, and at once took him under his patronage. On leaving Gormany, the earl brought Hollar with him to England, where he commenced his artistic labours with the he commenced his artistic labours with the "Prospect of Greenwich," which he executed in two plates, in 1637. Two years afterwards, he drew the portraits of the royal family for the great plate of the Entrance of Queen Marie de Medici into England, on a visit to her daughter, Henrietta Maria, queen of England. During the civil war he was taken prisoner by the Par-liamentarians, and deprived of his liberty for some time; on his release, he went to Antwerp. Returning to England in 1652, he exc-cuted the etchings for Dugdale's "Monasticon" and his "History of St. Paul's," besides a very large number of other views and drawings. as 2400 prints. Though he had been so laborious an artist, it is recorded that, at the age of 70, he had an execution in his house; whereupon the worthy old man requested only to be left to die in his bed. B. at Prague, 1607; D. in London, 1677.

HOLLES, Denzil, Lord, hols, a prominent leader of the popular party against the illegal proceedings of Charles I., and one of the five members of the Long Parliament who were demanded by the king when he went to the House of Commons. Holles, like many others who were prominent at the beginning of the struggle between king and parliament, refused to concur in the extreme measures of Cromwell and the republicans, and at the Restoration was aurepublicans, and at the Residuation was an vanced to the peerage; in 1863 he was sent ambassador to France, and in 1867 was one of the English plenipotentiaries at Breda. Notwithstanding these employments, he remained a zealous friend to liberty; and when the mea-sures of the King tended to introduce absolutism, Lord Holles was a conspicuous leader of the opposition. He enjoyed through life a high character for honour, integrity, and patriotism. B. 1597; D. 1680.

HOLMAN, Joseph George, hol'-man, a drama-tist and actor, was a native of London, and intended for the church; but in 1784 he made his début as an actor at Covent Garden Theatre. He afterwards went to America, and became manager of Charlestown Theatre. Among his dramatic works are the "Votary of Wealth," "Red Cross Knights," "Abroad and at Home," &c. He died of yellow fever, along with his second wife, two days after their marriage, in 1817.

Howe, Admiral Earl.

Huss, John.

Humboldt, Baron Von.

IEVING, WASHINGTON.

Holmes

the royal navy, and took part in the wars against chemist, who at first entered the army, but the French. At the age of 25 he lost his sight; but, notwithstanding this melancholy infirmity, in 1819, commenced his wanderings by trane, in 1019, commenced his wanterings by ac-veiling over France, Italy, Switzerland, and Holland; an account of which he published in 1822. He had been made, several years privously, a naval knight of Windsor. He again set out, in 1822, and embarked for St. Petersburg, intending to travel through the Russian empire, and to enter Mongolia and China, after having visited Eastern Siberia; but when he had arrived at Irkutsk, an order from the czar Alexander commanded his return, and he was conducted as a state prisoner back to the Ger-man frontier. When he reached England, he published an account of his wanderings, in two volumes. His Russian journey was intended as the commencement of a series of travels and voyages round the world, which he afterwards performed, and which occupied him five years to accomplish. In 1834 he published his work, "Travels Round the World," in 4 volumes. His last wanderings were in the Danubian Pro-has wannerings were in the Danublan Provinces, in 1834-41. n. about 1787; p. 1557.

HOLARS, Oliver Wendell, holms, an American poet and physician, who has earned, by his poetical works, the title of one of the best yrical writers of his country. After completing his education at Cambridge, in Massachusetts, to become a complete of the control of the he became a doctor of medicine, and visited Europe. Returning to America, he established himself at Boston in 1836, and in 1838 was appointed professor of anatomy and physiology in the college at Dartmouth, and later in Harvard University, the most ancient college in vara outversity, the most ancient coniege in the United States. He wrote several valuable medical works, but his fame is due to his poetical effusions, which he contributed to many of the best American periodicals. These, with "Elsie Venner," a novel, the "Pro-fresor," and the "Autocraft of the Breshtan Table," have been reprinted in England, and laws next with occidental processes. In 1800. have met with considerable success. B. 1809.

HOLSTEIN, the house of, hol-seline, a princely German family, which includes the royal line of Denmark and the colleteral branches of Holstein-Sonderburg and the ducal line of Holstein-Gottorn, which last is again divided into two branches, the clder being the reigning line of branches, the citer being the reigning line of Russia, while the younger is represented by Gustavus, prince of Wasa, a field-mershal in the Austrian service, and also by the Oldenburg family.

Holt, Sir John, holt, an eminent English judge, famous for his integrity, firmness, and great legal knowledge, studied at Oriel College, Oxford, and became a member of Gray's Inn. He filled the office of recorder of London for about a year and a half, which situation he lost in consequence of his uncompromising opposition to the abolition of the Test Act. Becoming a member of the House of Commons, he distinguished himself so much by his exertions and talents in what is called the "Convention Par-liannent," that on King William's accession he was made lord chief justice of the King's Bench. On the removal of Lord Somers, in 1700, he was offered the chancellorship, but declined was offered the chancellorship, but declined it, and continued to discharge the important duties of his high judicial authority with a resolute uprightness which gained him respect while living, and has endeared his memory to quitted it to practise the law, which he also abandoned, and applied himself to the study of the sciences, particularly botany, medicine, and chemistry, to improve himself in which he travelled through various countries. In 1682 traveled through various countries. In 1952 he settled in France, and abjured the Protestant religion; but being disappointed in his expectations, he went to Rome, and practised physic. He afterwards returned to Paris, where he became a member of the Academy of Sciences, and chemist and physician to the duke of Orleans. He discovered the properties of the Bologna stone, and its phosphoric appearance after calcination. Some of his scientific essays are printed in the Memoirs of the Academy of France. B. 1652; D. at Paris, 1715.

513

Homer

HOME, Henry, Lord Kames, kume, a Scotch adge and elegant writer, who became senior ord of session in Scotland. He wrote "Essays oru oi session in Scolanni. 10 wyofe "Basay upon several subjects concerning British Anti-quities," 1764; "Essays on the Principles of Morality and Natural Religion," "Histocical Law," "The Principles of Equity," "The Ele-ments of Criticism," 3 vols. Svo; "The History of Man," 8. 1869; n. 1782. Hours, John, a Scottish divine are ministrance the author, who, while acting as a minister of the kirk, wrote his tragedy of "Douglas," which was represented with the greatest success at Edinburgh. This work, notwithstanding its purity of thought and language, evoked the indignation of the elders of the kirk, and the author was or the enters of the kirk, and the author was compelled to retire to England, where he obtained a pension from Lord Bute. He afterwards wrote four more tragedies, which, however, did not obtain the popularity of "Douglas," and which are now never heard of in the theatre. B. about 1722; D. 1808.

Home, Sir Everard, bart., an eminent surgeon, was the son of Robert Home, Esq., of Greenlaw Castle, in the county of Berwick; and was brought up to the profession under his brotherin-law, the celebrated John Hunter. For a period of more than 40 years, Home practized with great success in London; and during that time produced numerous medical works of great merit and utility. He was sergeant-surgeon to the king, surgeon to Chelses Hospital, vice-president of the Royal Society, president of the Royal College of Surgeons; and was created a hoyar conege of Surgeons; and was created a baronet in 1813. Among his works are, "Lectures on Comparative Anatomy," 2 vols. 4to, and "Practical Observations" on a variety of diseases, consisting of several volumes; be-sides numerous valuable contributions to the "Philosophical Transactions," &c. B. 1756; D.

Homes, ho'-mer, the most ancient and celebrated of the Greek poets, but of whose birthplace, station in life, and actual existence, in point of fact, the most diverse opinions are held by the learned of modern days. The honour of his birthplace was disputed by seven Greek cities. According to one tradition, he was the natural son of a young orphan girl of Smyrna, who lived on the banks of the Meles, and called her son after it, Melesigenes. It further relates, that Phemius, who kept a school for music and belles-lettres at Smyrna, having fallen in love with his mother, married her and adopted Homer, who, on his death, succeeded him as master of the school. Subsequently, having conceived the idea of the "lliad," he travelled. posterity. B. 1642; D. 1709. conceived the idea of the "liad," he travelled in order to gather knowledge of men and localities for his great work; but being badly treated by his fellow-countrymen on his return, he left Smyrna and established himself at Chies. where he set up a school. Becoming blind in where he set up a school. Becoming blind in his old age, he was overtaken by poverty, and compelled to earn his bread by wandering from city to city reciting his verses. Finally, according to this version of his life, he is said to have died in the little isle of Cos, one of the Cyclades. Homer's greatest works are two epic poems. In the "Iliad." which contains 24 poems. In the "Hiad," which communes are recited the story of rhapsodies or chants, are recited the story of Achilles' revenge upon Agamemnon for depriving him of his mistress Briseis; the misfortunes which the Greeks suffered in consequence while besieging Troy, and the death of Hector at the hands of Achilles, who, to avenge the death of his friend Patroclus, killed the Trojan hero. In the "Odyssey," the story of the wanderings and adventures of Ulysses on his horaeward journey from Troy to his kingdom of Ithaca is told. The "Batrachomyomachia," of Ithaca is told. The "Batrachomyomachia," or Battle of the Frogs and Mice, and the "Homeric Hymns," are by some allowed to be the work of this post, while others consider them spurious. The whole of these works are written in the Ionic dialect. Both the "Iliad" and the "Odyssey" have always been considered as the great beginning of all literature, though each slines with a lustre different from the other. In the "lilad" grandeur of conception, beauty and simplicity of plan, a soaring imagination, rich and sublime images, are the characteristic excellences. In the "Odyssey," a plan less regular, an imagination less brilliant. a pan ress regular, an imagination less commands, are to be discovered; but it nevertheless commands delight by its strong interest and its cultrancing style. In addition to these intrinsic beauties, the "Iliad" and "Odyssey" have preserved the theological traditions, the names and origin of nations, and the description and situation of cities and towns. The poems of Homer, according to the most learned critics, were composed anterior to the invention of writing, and were for a long time preserved by memory alone. They are said to have been interpolated and abridged by the rhapsodists, or Homerida, who selected from them the most interesting episodes for recital. Plaistratus, or, as some others maintain, his son Hipparchus, was the first person who collected and arranged these poems, which were afterwards revised and divided into twenty-Sour books each, by the grammarians under the Ptolonies, who thus gave them the form in which we now possess them. Some learned critics—Wolf at their head—have put forth a theory that Homer never existed, and that the poems which have come down to us under his name are only a collected version of fragments which have been composed and sung by various authors, whom he terms Homeridæ, and who formed a species of school. Another set of scholars hold that the "Iliad" and the "Odyssey" are not the work of the same author, but that the latter is a very much later production than the former. Again, the derivation of the word Homer has been variously given by different schools of crities; each adopting that which best agrees with its own theory. One, the partisan of common tradition, translates the name by blind; others, by hostage, pretending that Homer was a hostage in a war which was raging between the inhabitants of Smyrna and Colophon; others, finally, assert that the word is derived from homereo, "I collect;" which would seem to show that we owe these poems to a compiler, who only collected scattered fragments, and united them into an harmonious whole. So far as our limits would permit us. we have endeavoured to sketch the theories which are held relating to this, the most interesting literary question in the world. Those who would seek more complete information on who would seek more complete information on the subject, should turn to Thirlwall's "History of Greece," vol. 1., Gladstone's "Homeric Age," and if they would desire to go still deeper, to the works of Heyne, and the "Lexilogus" of Buttmann; the last two being German writers. Hobbes, Chapman, Pope, and Cowper have translated Homer. Pope's version is the best known; but it is only a poor reflection of the vigorous original. Chapman's is the best old translation. A very cacellast 'translation. best old translation. A very excellent transla-tion is that by the Earl of Derby, published in 1865. Homer is said by some to have lived about 900 B.c.

Hompeson, Ferdinand de, hom'-pesk, the last grand master of the order of the Knights of Malta, who was invested with that dignity in Malta, who was invested with that dignity in 1797. Bribed, it is asserted, by the money and promises of the Directory, he surrendered to the French facet which was conveying Bonaparte and his army to Egypt. He was conducted to Treste. Subsequently, he protosted against the usurpation of the French, and abdicated his sovereignty in favour of the emperor of Russia, Paul I. He wandered about Germany for some years, but finally took refuge in France.

B. at Dusseldorf, 1744; p. 1803.

HONE, William, hone, a political pamphletcer and compiler of popular antiquities, began life in an attorney's office, at first in London, and in an attorney 8 olice, at first in London, and subsequently at Chatham. In 1800 he established himself as a bookseller in Lambeth Walk, from which he removed to St. Martin's Churchyard, close to the present Charing Cross. In 1806, he commenced his singular literary career by issuing an edition of Shaw's "Gardener." An attempt at establishing a savings' bank, as well as a short time before, had been engaged in the compilation of the index to Froissart. But he was quite unfitted for business, and while engaged in the above post he was occupied in investigating the abuses in lunatic asylums: he was soon a bankrupt for the second time. His family now consisted of seven children, and This Jaminy now consisted of seven children, and he gained a livelihood by writing for the "British Ladys" and the "British Ladys" Magazine." He next opened a bookseller's shop in Fleet Street, but his ill-fortune still continued: it was twice plumered. In 1816, he was the publisher of the "Traveller" newspayer, and, soon affect, began to publish these payer, and, soon affect, began to publish these bold political pamphlets and satires which made him universally known, and led to his being tried for three days in the Court of King's Bench. He was acquitted, however, and a large sum of money was collected by subscription for him, with which he established himself once more in business, and once more failed. From this time he was occupied in the compilation and publication of those well-known books which will continue to preserve his name. The chief of these were "Ancient Mysteries Described," "The Every-day Book," "The Table Book," and "The Year Book," his last work being an edition of "Strutt's Sports and Pastimes of the English." B. at Bath, 1779; D. at Tottenham, 1842.

bein

the bo

Honorius

HONDRUS, ho-nor'-e-us, emperor of the West, was the second son of Theodosius the Great, and was associated in the empire with Arcadius, his brother, in 395. His guardian, Stilleto, nodearouring to dethrone him, was slain. In 409, Alaric the Goth besieged Rome, and ravaged all the country, while Honorius remained indelent at Ravenna. D. 384; D. 429.

HONORIUS I., Pope, succeeded Boniface V. in 626. He governed with zeal and prudence. Some of his letters are extant. D. 638.

Honorus II., of Bologna, succeeded Calixtus II. in 1124, and, at the same time, Thibauld was chosen by another party, under the name of Celestin; but he resigned the chair to his rival. D. 1130.

HONORUS III. was made pope after Innocent III., in 1216. He confirmed the order of Dominicans, and left several works. D. 1227.

Honorus IV., a Roman, ascended the papal chair in 1295. He displayed great zeal for his church, and promoted the crusades. D. 1287. Hood, loboin, hood, a famous English outlaw in the 12th century—whose personal courage, skill in archery, boldness of enterprise, and generous disposition, have rendered his name famous disposition, have rendered his name famous in the legendary history of our countr—lived in the legendary of the legendary history of the legendary

Hoop Samuel, Lord Viscount, the son of a ciergyman at Thorncombe, in Devenshire, enterted the royal navy at the age of 16. For his bravery in the capture of a 50-gun ship, in 1759, he acquired the rank of post-captain; and was present, as rear-admiral, at the famous adetast of De Grasse, by Rodney, April 12th, 1762, when his services on that occasion were rewarded with an Irish perage. In 1784 he was returned to Parliament for Westminster; but in 1788 he vacated his seat on being named one of the lords of the admirally. In 1788 in signalised himself by the taking of Toulon, and afterwards Corsica; in reward of which achievements he was made a viscount, and governor of Greenwich Hospital. B. 1724; D. 1816.

Hook

Hoop. Thomas, a modern English poet and humorist, anthor of the celebrated "Song of the Shirt" and "The Bridge of Signs," was so of a booksoller in the Poultry, When the Song of a booksoller in the Poultry, When the Song of the Shirt" and "The Bridge of Signs," when the Song of the Shirt" and the Bridge of the Shirt was the sum of the Bridge of the Shirt was the Shirt was the Bridge of the Shirt was shirt was offered the post of shirt was offered the post of shirt was offered the post of shirt was the Shirt was offered the post of shirt was the Shirt was offered the post of shirt was the Shirt was offered the post of shirt was the Shirt was offered the post of shirt was the Shirt was offered the post of shirt was the Shirt was offered the post of shirt was the Shirt was offered the post of shirt was the Shirt was offered the post of shirt was the Shirt was published after a three years' residence on the continent. Subsequently, he became editor "The New Monthly Magazine" and on his retirement from this post, he collected his prose and poetry, scattered through many periodicals, and published them under the title of "Whinsiedlithes." In all these works rich current of genial humour runs; and his pleasant wit, ripe observation, and sound sense, have made in the Shirt was the surrent of genial humour runs; and his pleasant wit, ripe observation, and sound sense, have made in the Shirt was the surrent of genial humour runs; and his pleasant wit, ripe observation, and sound sense, have made the surface and the sense and the surface was the current o don, 1793; p. 1845.

Hoorn, Peter Cornelius van, hooft, a Dutch writer, to whom Louis XIII. of France gave the order of St. Michael, as a reward for his history of Henry IV. His other works are "Poems and Comedies," "The History of the Low Countries from the Abdication of Charles V. to 1898," and a translation of Tacitus into Dutch. B. at Amsterdam, 1881; p. 1817.

Hoor, James, hook, a musical composer of great industry and talent, whose operation and

Hook, James, Aook, a musical composer of great industry and talent, whose operatic and melodramatic productions amount to more than 130 complete works, many of which were highly successful; he also set to music upwards of 2000 songs. B. 1746; D. 1827. He was the father of the Rev Dr. Hook, dean of Worcester, and of Theodore Hook, the famous novelist, &c. Hook, Dr. James, dean of Worcester, son of Host, Dr. James, dean of Worcester, son of the preceding, an accomplished scholar, and an able dignitary of the church, was educated at Westminster School and St. Mary Hall, Oxford; in 1802 hewas made chaplain to George IV; held the livings of Hertingfordbury and St. Andraw's, in Hertiordshire, which he afterwards exchanged for that of Whippingham, in the Isle of Wight; bottained a prebendal stall in Winchester cathedral, in 1807; succeeded Dr. Middleton, as archdeacon of Huntingdon, in 1814; and accepted the deanery of Worcester, in 1825, Besides some drams, which he wrote early life, he published, in 1802, "Anguis in Herba; as Sketch of the true character of the Church of England and her Clergy," which he inscribed "To the sober sense of his country." Few writters have surpassed Dr. Hook as a polemical or a political pamphleteer, and some of the most effective pamphlets that appeared during the French revolutionary war, in support of monarchical principles, were written by him. D.

Hook, Theodore Edward, a popular Engli-humorist and playwright at the beginning numorist and playwright at the beginning of the present century, another son of the musical composer, was remarkable in his youth for his beauty, his sweet voice, and his quick intelligence. He soon began to assist his father, by writing the words of ballads for the property of the pro him; and was thus early made familiar with musical and theatrical life before and behind the curtain. He had been at Harrow for a short period; but on the death of his mother he les it and never went to a school again. at one time intended to enter him at a college at Oxford; but, after some preliminary readin; he returned to London, where he quickly begs he returned to London, where he quickly begs to write operas, farces, and published a novel,—
"The Man of Sorrow," under an assumed name His light and joyous temperament, great conversational powers, and marvellous talent as are improvisator," made him the favourite of the most fashionable society; and it was while how we had in the light of the most fashionable society; and it was while how we had not published. he was leading this life of exuberant gaiety, that he played off his notorious "hoaxes;" one o which, "the Berners Street hoax," made great sensation at the time. His social qualities attracted the notice, and procured for him the patronage of the Prince-regent, who caused him, in 1812, to be appointed accountant-general the state of the prince-regent and th and treasurer to the Mauritius, he being then only 25 years of age. But in March, 1818, he was arrested on a serious charge, a deficiency o' 37.000 dollars having been discovered in the colonial treasury chest. He was brought to England a prisoner, the law officers of the crown reporting that he was only liable to a prosecution for debt; but a long and harassing. course of legal proceedings was the result. In the year 1520, he became, through the instru mentality of Sir Walter Scott, editor of the "John Bull," on its establishment. In thi position he distinguished himself by his powerful writing against Queen Caroline, her sup porters, and the whole of the Whig party. St successful was this Torynewspaper, that Hook, for a lung period, derived from it an income of £2000 per annum. The Whig party, however, would not allow the law proceedings against him to drop, and in 1923 he was arrested, and remained in custody till May, 1825, when he was permitted to go at large, but was informed that the crown could not consent to forego its debt. With respect to this mysterious affair, it was never clearly shown that he was guilty of false appropriation of the funds intrusted to his charge; but great carelessness was proved against him, it being shown, among other acts of culpable neglect, that he was in the habit of leaving the keys of the treasure-chest with his subordinates, while he was away on parties of pleasure. Between the years 1824 and 1836, he wrote about 30 volumes of novels, which were very successful, and which yielded him large sums. He continued to lead the life of a gay and fashionable man till July, 1841, when, as he looked in the glass, when dining, he rose, and said, "Ay, leed look as I am; done up in purse, in mind, and in body too, at last," Henceforth he was confined to his room; his fine constitution and his great intellectual powers had been worn out by the merelless mode in which he had overtaxed them. His novel of "Gilbert Curney" contains an interesting autobiographical sketch of himself. B. in London, 17:S; p. at Fulham, 1841.

Hour, Large, Clark, F. A. a modern Fre. as he looked in the glass, when dining, he rose,

Hook, James Clark, R.A., a modern English painter, of solid merit, studied at the lish painter, of solid merit, studied at the Royal Academy, whose three medals he carried off by his skill in drawing. Ills first efforts as an artist were on the most ambitious scale, though he afterwards painted pic-tures of a simple rustic character. His "Bianca Capello," 'Escape of Francesco do Carrara," and "The Chevalier Bayard wounded at Drescia,' are admirable specimens of hisat Bresca, are admirance specimens of mis-torical painting, the last gaining for him election into the Royal Academy. Although not so popular with the general public as many inferior men, he was highly esteemed as a painter by his brother artists. n. 1819.

Hooker

mawing, was placed under our Peter Lely; but painting in oil-colour disordering his head, he painting in oil-colour disordering his head, he obandoned this pursuit, and was taken by Dr. Busby into his house; after which he went to Christ Church, Oxford. He worked with Dr. Willis in his chemical operations, and became assistant to Mr. Boyle. If was one of the first fellows of the Royal Society, the repository of which was intrusted to his care. In 1662 he was made curator of experiments to that learned body, and about two years after elected Gresham professor of geometry. After the fire of London, he produced a plan for rebuilding the city, which produced him the appointment of one of the city surveyors; but his design was not adopted. In 1668, he had a dispute with Hevelius respecting telescopic sights, which he conducted with great asperity. In 1671, he attacked Sir Isaac Newton's theory of light and colours, and afterwards pretended that the discovery made by that great man concerning the force and action of gravity was originally made by himself. In 1691, Archbishop Tillotson created him M.D. In 1665, he wrote a book called "Micrographia, or Philosophical Description of Minute Bodies made by Magnifying-glasses." His posthumous works were published after his death. Hooke was a man of great mechanical genius, and the sciences are indebted to him for several valuable instruments and im-rovements. B. at Freshwater, Isle of Wight, 635; D. in London, 1702.

HOONE, Nathaniel, an English historian, was a Roman Catholic, and when Mr. Pope lay m his death-bed. Hooke introduced a priest to im, which gave great offence to Bolingbroke. He wrote the duchess of Marlborough's account of her conduct, for which he received £5000: out his best work is a Roman history in 4 vols. 1764. HOOKER, Richard, hook'-er, a celebrated Eng-ish divine, received his education at Exeter grammar school, whence he was sent by his elation, Bishop Jewell, to Corpus Christi Colege, Oxford, of which he was made bible-clerk, and in 1577 chosen fellow. In 1581 he took ders, and in 1584 was presented to the rectory Drayton-Beauchamp, in Buckinghamshire, where he was discovered leading a life of values and the archisinop of York, who had formerly been his pupil. The young nan represented his case to his father, through nan represented his case to his matter, attrough whose influence he was appointed master of the emple in 1585. But this place did not suit fooker, who was best fitted for a country retrement; he therefore applied to Archisshop Vhitigift for a removal to "some quite parsonage," and was accordingly presented to a ving in Wiltshire, where he wrote part of his "Ecclesiastical Polity." In 1895 the queen pre-scritch him to the rectory of Bishop's Bourne, presentiar, Hewasa Rellow of the Bryal Society, where he finished his great work. Pope Cle- a member of the council of the Linnacan Sosented him to the rectory of Bishop's Bourne, where he finished his great work. Pope Clement VIII. said of the "Ecclesiastical Polity," "there are in it such seeds of eternity as will continue till the last fire shall devour all learning." He wrote many tracts and sermons in addition to his great work, and is regarded as one of the most profound, learned, and pious divines of the English church. B. at Heavitree, near Exeter, about 1554; D. 1600. Hooker, Sir William Jackson, a distinguished English botanist, and, till his death, director of the Royal Gardens at Kew. He abandoned the pursuit of commerce for that of botany, and, pursuit of commerce for that of botany, and, in his youth, travelled in Iceland, for the pur-pose of becoming acquainted with its natural history. Unfortunately losing his collection of ssory. Collected in that country, he, notwitistanding, published, in 1809, an account of the botany of that island, under the title of "A Tour in Iceland." This was followed, in 1819, by "A Monograph on the British Jungermannia," and, in 1818, he produced a continuation of Curtis's "Flora Londinensis." The "Flora Scotien," "Exotic Flora," a continuation of Curtis's "Dotanical Magazine," and the "Botanical Miscellany," were brought out by him between the years 1823 and 1838. In 1837 he completed, in conjunction with Dr. Greville, the "leones Flicum," in which a complete catalogue of terus was given, with figures. A complete description of British plants, under the titleof." British Flora, "was issued under his direction. He also odited the "Journal Cotany," assisted in the management of "The Anuals and Magazine of Natural History, and filled the claim of professor of botany in the unispecimens collected in that country, he, notwithfilled the chair of professor of botany in the university of Glasgow; but resigned this to assume the direction of the Royal Gardens at kew, which, under his control, rapidly became the first establishment of its kind in the world. He was among the foremost professors of systematic botany of the present century. In 1836 he was knighted for his eminent scientific atne was knigmen for ms eminent scientific attainments; he was also one of the vice-presidents of the Linnman Society, an honorary D.C.L. of the university of Oxford, and a knight of the Legion of Honour in France. B. at Norwich, 1785; D. 1865.

Hooker, Joseph Dalton, son of the above, also a distinguished botanist, was educated for the pursuit of medicine, which he followed as M.D. for many years; but, on the fitting out of Sir James Ross's expedition to the Antarctic Ocean, in 1839, he was appointed assistant-surgeon to the ship Erebus, to which post were added the duties of observing and collecting the botanical specimens of the country to which the expedition was dispatched. On his return he published "Flora Antarctica." In 1848 he set out on a botanical expedition to the Himalayas, during which he discovered many new and valuable plants, although his travels had been conducted under many disadvantages, he having ciety, and one of the examiners of candidates for the East-India medical service. B, at Glasgow, 1817.

HOOLE, John, hool, an ingenious writer, was the son of a watchmaker, who was a very able mechanic, and director, for many years, of the machinery at Covent-garden Theatre. At the age of seventeen he became a clerk in the India House, but devoted his leisure hours to literary House, but devoted his lesure hours to interary pursuits, particularly the study of the Italian language, of which he acquired considerable knowledge, as appears by his excellent transla-tions into English of Ariosto's "Orlando Furi-oso" and Tasso's "Jerusalem." He also published two volumes of the dramas of Metastasio. and was the author of three tragedies, viz., "Cyrus," acted at Covent Garden in 1788; "Timanthes," performed the year following; and "Cleunice," in 1775. r. in London, 1727 p. 1803.

Hope, Thomas, hope, a liberal art-patron and writer on art, was a descendant of the rich banking family of the Hopes of Amsterdam. An enthusiastic admiration for architecture led him, at the age of 18, to travel through Greece, Turkey, Syria, Sicily, France, Germany, and Spain, in search of the greatest examples of the art extant. On his return to England, he commenced applying the principles of which he had made himself muster abroad, by extending and enlarging his residence in Duchess-street, Portland-place, which, when finished, he stored with classical vases and statues. In 1905 he issued his splendid work entitled "Household Furni-ture," which, in 60 folio plates, depicted the magnificent upholstery and decorations of his house. His "Costume of the Ancients" had house. His "Costume of the Ancients mad appeared in 1809; and this work, together with its successor, "Modern Costume," as well as many valuable contributions to fine art periodicals, greatly tended to improve English taste in matters artistic. The celebrated work, "Anas-tasius; or, the Memoirs of a Modern Greek," was published by him in 1819, and as it was issued anonymously, Lord Byron was long held to be the only person capable of having been its author. Two other works, both published after antino. Two other works, your published ancer his death, came from his pen—one "On the Origin and Prospects of Man," and the other "An Historical Essay on Architecture." Although a constant patron of the arts, and the first to discern and foster the genius of Thoriwaldsen, he became engaged in a dispute with Dubost, a French artist, who, to revenge himself Duosi, a Frenca artist, who, to revenge unusuity upon him, painted the portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Hope, and exhibited them under the title of Beauty and the Beast; but the exhibition was terminated in a sudden manner, by his brother destroying the canras with his stick. B. about 1770; p. 1831.

HORTILL, Michael de 1, lop-4-fal, was an eminent chancellor of France, to which high conducted under many disadvantages, he having been at one time prisoner in a district of the station he rose through the zeal, ability, and Sikkim Himalayas. In 1852 he produced the fruits of his long travels, in his "Himalayan before filled. He studied jurisprudence in the Journals," besides which, he was the means of most elebrated universities of France and introducing several valuable varieties of rhododendrons into England. Before his travels, been by Henry II. as ambassador to the council was a professor in the Museum of Economic of Crent. In 1854 he was made superintendent Geology, to the "Transactions" of which unstitution he contributed a most valuable and interesting paper on the Vegetation of the Carbo-

Horne Hopital

He was a sincere friend to religious toleration, and the principal author of the edict of 1562, which allowed freedom of worship to Protestants. This brought on him the hatred of the court of Rome; his seals of office were taken from him; and he retired to his country-house. When the massacre of the Protestants on Bartholothe massacre of the Frotestants of Battologues mew's Day, 1572, was at its height, and his friends thought he would become one of its victims, he not only declined to take measures for his own safety, but when a party of horsemen advanced towards his house, he refused to close his gates. The party, however, had been sent by the queen, with orders to save him: and on the r informing him that the persons who made the list of proscription pardoned him, he calmly observed. "I did not know that I had done anything to deserve either death or par-don." The whole course of this great man's life was productive of benefit to his country, and did honour to his nature. He survived this execrable event a few months only. B. 1505; D. 1573.

HOPITAL, Guillaume François Antoine, marquis de l', a French mathematician, who evinced, at an early age, a genius for mathe-matical study, and, when only lifteen, solved a difficult problem of Pascal's. He served for some time in the army, which he left on account of a defect in his sight. In 1693, he was admitted an honorary member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, and published a work on Newton's Fluxions, being the first Frenchman who wrote on that subject. He afterwards published another mathematical work. B. at Paris.

1661; p. 1704.

HOPKINS, Charles, hop'-kins, an English poet and classical translator, who, in 1694, published some epistolary poems and translations, and some epistolary poems and translations, and the year following produced a tragedy, called "Pyrrhus, King of Egypt." He translated Orid's "Tristia" and "Art of Love," and was greatly esteemed by Diyden and other poets.

B. at Exeter, about 1663; D. 1699.

Hopkinson, Francis, hop'-kin-sun, an eminent American author, and one of the signers of the declaration of American independence. was a native of Philadelphia, his father being the intimate friend and scientific condiutor of Franklin. After graduating at the college of Philadelphia, and making the law his study, Francis visited England; and, a few years after his return, entered congress as a delegate from new Jersey. He produced many satires and ironical pieces, such as the "Prophecy," the "Political Catechism," &c., tending to ridicule the old country; while, at the same time, he directed his efforts against the ribaldry of the newspapers, and the exaggerations and prejudices with which the federal constitution was at first assailed. After his retirement from congress, he was appointed judge of the admiralty for Pennsylvania. Among his works, the greator part of which are of a political character, there are many sound essays and scientific papers, acute and learned judicial decisions, and a variety of songs possessing much sweetness and deli-cacy, which were rendered still more popular by the airs he composed for them. B. 1738;

HOPPNER, John, R.A., hop-ner, one of the first Royal Academicians, and a fashionable portrait-painter in his day. In his early years was chorister in the Chapel Royal, but afterwards became a student of the Royal Academy, and attracting the notice of the Prince of Wales he painted a considerable number of royal and fashionable portraits, and divided the favour of the highest patrons of art with Lawrence and Opic. He also excelled in landscape-painting. B. in London, 1759; D. 1810.

15. IN LORION, 1079; D. 1810.

HORANT, ho-ra's shee, the name of three brave Roman brothers, who fought against the three Curiatii of Alba, 667 B.C. Two of them were slain; but the third, by adding artifice to his courage, slew all his antagonists. On his return courage, siew all his antagonists. On his return to Rome he met his sister, who had been be-trothed to one of the Curiatii, and on her reproaching him for what he had done, he slew her also. His eminent services, however, were considered an extenuation of his crime, and he was pardoned.

HORATIUS, OF HORACE, Quintus Flaceus, hora'sheus, an elegant Roman poet. His futher was a freedman; but though poor, he gave his son a good education, placing him first under the best masters at Rome, and then sending him to Athens, that he might study philosophy. Here he was patronized by Brutus, who took him into his army, and made him a tribune; but he had more wit than courage, and at the battle of Philippi he threw away his shield and fled. Being reduced to want, Virgil became his patron, and recommended him to Macenas, by whom he was introduced to Augustus, who offered him considerable advancement, which he de-clined, preferring a private life to the honours of the court. He was greatly esteemed by the highest people in Rome, particularly Maccanas and Pollio. In the latter part of his life he retired to the country, where he indulged in a philosophical ease, which he has admirably described in his odes. These have been translated into every European language. The last modern edition of his works is Milman's "Life and Works of Horace," published in 1849. n. at Venusia, or Venusium, 65 p.c.; p. 8 p.c.

HORATIUS COCLES. (See COCLES.)

HORN, Charles Edward, horn, the son of C. F. Horn, a German musician and the tutor of George III.'s daughters, was perhaps the best composer of melodies in modern times. He showed indications of musical genius when very young, and was engaged as second tenor on the opening of the English Opera House, and obtained a large share of public favour. He wrote the music, in whole or the greater part, for a vast number of operas; and was especially successful as a composer of ballads, as is proved by the fact that three of the most popular pieces of this description—"Cherry Ripe," "The deep, this description—"Cherry Ripe," "The deep, deep Sea," and "I've been roaming"—are his work. These songs were not only well received at the time of their production, but keep their hold on public favour still. B. in London, 1786; n. in New York, 1849

HORNE, George, bishop of Norwich, and author of the celebrated "Commentary on the Book of Psalms," received his education at Maidstone school, whence he was elected to a scholarship of University College, Oxford, where he took his degree of B.A. He was afterwards chosen fellow of Magdalen College, and applied himself with great diligence to sacred literature, particularly the study of the Hebrew language. In 1753 he entered into orders, and soon became distinguished as an excellent preacher. He appeared also as an acute writer, particularly in controversy, defending the principles of Hut-chinson with singular dexterity. In 1768 he was chosen president of his college, on which leading Whigs. he took his degree of D.D., and was appointed missioner at the leaplain in ordinary to the king. His valuable pany, he was, in "Commentary on the Psalms" was produced in for St. Ives, and 1776. B. at Otham, Kent, 1730; p. at Bath, in his new caree 1792.

HORNE, Rev. Thomas Hartwell, an eminent biblical writer, who was ordained by the bishop of London, without having taken a degree at a or Louison, without naving taken a degree at a university, in consequence of the high estimation in which that prelate held his "Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures." After having been presented to the rectory of two united parishes in the city of London, he published a new and enlarged edition of the above popular work; besides which, he produced "A Compendious Introduction to the Study of the Bible," "A Manual of Biblical Biography," "A Manual of Parochial Psalmody," and many other theological works. D. 17:0); D. 1862.

HORNE, Richard Henry, an English litterateur, who was at first sent to Sandhurst for terr, WHO was at 1184 Sent to candidates for the purpose of being educated for the military service of the East-India Company, but left that seminary to enter, in 1826, the Mexican navy, as midshipman, while that republic was at war with Spain. On the termination of the war, he went to London, and commenced writing ex-tensively for periodical publications. In 1827, he produced "The Death of Marlowe," and "Cosmo de Medici," two dramas written upon the Elizabethan model; these being followed by "The Death Fetch," and "Gregory the Seventh;" to which latter play was appended a critical essay on tragic inlluence. He appears to have been greatly disappointed in the expecta-tions he had formed on commencing his literary career; for, in 1841, he published a singular pamphlet, called "An Exposition of the False Medium excluding Men of Genius from the Public." His plays were not successful either on the stage or with the reading public. In 1841, he wrote a "Life of Napoleon," which was published in Tyas's illustrated series. In 1843, he produced an epic poem, thus singularly an-nounced:—"Orion, an Epic Poem. Price One Farthing," which was generally supposed to be a sarcastic mode of expressing what he thought the value of public appreciation of such works. the value of public appreciation of such works. Its success was very great, however, first at one farthing, next at a penny, and afterwards at half-a-crown and five shillings. "A New Spritt of the Age" was published in 1844; "Ballad Romances" in 1846; and "Judas Iscariot." a miracle play, with Poems, in 1848. In addition to these to these, he wrote extensively for the periodicals and reviews of the time. In 1852, he, with Mr. Howitt and others, emigrated to Australia; where, after undergoing many privations as gold-digger, he became which of mounted police, ind afterwards a gold commissioner; a narraand anterwards a gold dominissioner; a narra-tive of his adventures having been contributed, at various times, to the pages of "Household Words." B. about 1803.

HORNE, Francis, Kee TOOKE, HORNER, Francis, Kor'-ner, an English politician, writer on political economy, and one of the founders of the "Edinburgh Review." After having received his education at the High School and the university of Edinburgh, em-braced the profession of the law, intending to practise at the Scottish bar. In 1802, he went

After having sat as commissioner at the board of the East India Company, he was, in 1806, returned to Parliament for St. Ives, and gradually assumed importance in his new career. His first great speech was made in 1810, on the subject of the alleged de-preciation of bank notes; he was appointed one of the members of the Bullion Committee. this influence in the House of Commons continuing to increase. In 1814, he went abroad, and travelled in Switzerland and the north of Italy. His last speech was in favour of the claims of the Catholics, in 1816. A pulmonary disease compelled him, in the same year, to visit the south of Europe, where he died. E.in Edinburgh, 1778; p. 1817.

HOrrow, Jeremiah, hor-rocks, an English astronomer, who received an academical education at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, after which he retired to Hool, near Liverpool, where he devoted himself to astronomical observations. He was the first who observed the transit of Venus over the sun's disc, his account of which was published by Hevelius, at Dantzie, in 1661, under the title, "Venus in Sole visa, anno 1639."

B. at Toxteth, about 1619; D. 1640.

Horsa, hor'-sa, a Saxon prince, the brother of Hengist (see HENGIST), and one of the founders of the kingdom of Kent. He was killed in battle with the Britons at Eaglesford, now Aylesford, in 455.

Houser, John, hors'-le, a learned antiquary, who was cducated first at Newcastle and afterwards in Scotland, where he took his degree of He became pastor of a dissenting congregation in his native country. He is the author of a work entitled "Britannia Romana," folio, which gives a copious and exact account of the remains of the Romans in Britain.

D. 1731.

Horser, Samuel, a prelate of the established Church of England, was educated at Westminster School and Trinity Hall, Cambridge. After entering into holy orders in 1759, he became rector of Newington, on the resignation of his father; in 1767 he was elected resignation of his father; in 1767 howas elected, fellow of the Royal Society, of which body he was made secretary in 1773. Soon after his appointment as archdeaou of St. Alban's, in 1781, he entered into a theological controversy with Dr. Joseph Priestley, against whom he combated the doctrines of materialism and Unitarianism. In 1783 he was ordained bishop of St David's, and on taking his seat in Parlament displayed great nollicial canacity. of St David s, and on taking his seek in a li-liament, displayed great political capacity, strongly supporting the measures of Mr. Pitt; for which services he was made, successively, our which services he was made, enceessively, bishop of Rochester and of St. Asaph. He published a large number of theological works, chiefly controversial, but one of them, the "Seventeen Letters to Dr. Priestley," was held to be the exponent of a sound and orthodox theology. 1729. 1729.

to be the exponent of a sound and orthogony. Hossixx, John Calcott, an English painter and R.A., who, from his earliest youth, evinced a talent for the fine arts. The first work which attracted the attention of the public towards him, was his "Leaving the Ball," exhibited in 1840, a success which was followed up by his gaining a prize of £200 for his cartoon of "St. Augustine Preaching," in practise at the Scottish bar. In 1802, he went 1843, He afterwards painted two frescoes for to London to seek employment in the English the House of Lords,—"The Spirit of Religion," courts, and became acquainted with Sir James and "Eve Surprised," and was one of the Mackintsh, Sir Samuel Romilly, and other best among the exhibitors in the yearly display 511 of artistic productions at the Royal Academy. His chief works are "Malvolio," "Master Standar," Scenfaron Don Quivote, "Tr Allster Standar, "Scenfaron Don Quivote," "Tr Allster and H Penseroso." In 1855 he was elected an A.H.A., and was admitted as R.A. in 1864. B. in Ladon, 1817.

Hortense

HOBTENSE, (Eugénie Hortense de Beau-harnais), hor-tense, queen of Holland, and mother of Napoleon III., was daughter of Alexander, viscoma de Beauharnais, and Jose-Alexander, viscount de Beaunarmais, and Josephine Tascher de la Pagerie, afterwards first wife of Napoleon I., and empress of France. On the marriage of her mother to Bonaparte, Horiense became, by her beauty, wit, and accom-plishments, the ornament of the consular and imperial courts. She was espoused, though un-willingly, in 1802, to Louis Bonaparte; but the marriage afforded little happiness to either party. Becoming a queen by the elevation of Louis Bonaparte to the throne of Holland in Louis Ionaparte to the turofie of Holland, in 1596, she displayed little affection for her husband's kincdom, and lived in it only when compelled to do so. After the abdi-cation of Louis, in 1810, she obtained a divorce from him, and took up her residence in Paris, where, still retaining her title of queen, sile be-me the centre of a most distinguished and the first netter of a most standard and fashionable circle. She remained in Paris after the first return of the Bourbons, and was accused of assisting Napoleon to re-enter France, and compelled to depart from the capital in 1815. After having wandered about German 1815. in 1915. After having wandered about Ger-many and Switzerland for some time, she retired, in 1917, under the title of the duchess of St. Leu, to the château of Arenenberg, in the canton of Thurgau, on the borders of Lake Constance. She had by her marriage with King Louis three children: Napoleon Louis Charles, born in 1802; Napoleon Louis, born in 1804; Charles Louis Napoleon, born in 1808. The first died young; the second perished in the The instituted young; the second persone at the unfortunate expedition to Forli, in 1831; and the third became emperor of the French, as Napoleon III. B. at Paris, 1783; D. 1837.

HOREENSUS, Quintus, horsten's sheems, a R.

orator, who pleaded his first cause, with great applause, at the age of 19, B. c. 94. He became appliance, as the age of ribune, prietor, and consultant in 114 B. C.; D. 50 B. C. — HOMENSIA, daughter of the above, who inherited his eloquence. When the Roman women were required to render on oath an account of their property, she pleaded the cause of her sex with such force that the decree was annulled.

HOUNGANT, Charles Francis, hou'be-gong, an eminent Hebrew scholar, a priest of the Oratory, and professor of philosophy at Soissons. He became deaf after his removal to Paris, and unable to perform his duties as a preacher and public lecturer. Turning his attention to Hebrew literature, he produced at Paris, in 1753, in 4 cols. folio, his "Biblia Hebraica cum Notis Criticis," in which the Hebrew text and a Latin version of it are printed in parallel columns.

B. at Paris, 1636; D. 1788. HOUBBAKEN, Arnold, hoo'-brak-en, a famous Dulch painter, who wrote a trustworthy account of the lives of the Dutch painters of eminence, which was illustrated with portraits engraved by his son. B. at Dort, 1660; D. 1719 .- His son, Jacob, was an excellent engraver. He engraved some of the plates in a work called "Heads of the Illustrious Persons of Great Britain," published 1748. B. 1698; D. 1780.

Houssave.

HOUGHARD, Jean Nicolas, hoo-shar', a French notonal, seath items, solvent, a relien republican soldier, who, from being at first a private in a regiment of cavalry, rapidly arrived at the rank of general, and displayed great boldness and activity in repeated engagements when opposed to the Prussians on the Rhine, and afterwards against the English and their allies before Dunkirk, &c. But neither his bravery nor his successes could save him from the guillotine; for having been denounced by his colleague, General Hoche, as a conspirator against the republic, he was arrested, and shortly after executed, 1793; n. 1740.

shortiy after executed, 1798; n. 1740.

Hornon, hoo'-dawn, a celebrated French sculptor, who, after studying in Italy, returned to Paris, and executed the busts of Voltaire, Bousseau, Molière, Franklin, Baffon, Diderol, Catherine II, ac. He became, in 1777, member and professor of the Academy of Fine Arts, and was invited to Philadelphia to carve a statue of Washington. B. at Versailles, 1741;
n. at Paris 1898.

n. at Paris, 1828.

Hough, John, huf, an English prelate, memorable for the noble stand he made against the arbitrary conduct of James II., was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford; became chaplain to the duke of Ormond; became chaptain to the duke of containing and, in 1685, was made a prebendary of Worcester. In 1687, the presidentship of Magdalen College becoming vacant, the king sent mandatory letters to the fellows, requiring them to elect one Anthony Farmer, who did not belong to that society, and was a man of doubtful character. The fellows upon this, seeing their privileges attacked, applied by petition for leave to leges attacked, appied by petition for leave to proceed to a free election, according to their statutes. No answer being returned, they chose Mr. Hough, who was conlimed by the visitor, the Bishop of Winchester; and the new pre-sident having taken bis doctor's degree, was installed. The king, instead of letting the matter rest, now thought proper to send another mandate, ordering the Society to clee-Dr. Parker, bishop of Oxford, for their president; which they refused, and were all expelled except two. Thus the business stood till September, 1688, when James, finding that his affairs grew desperate, became alarmed, and commissioned the bishop of Winchester to settle the society of Magdalen College regulary and statutably. Dr. Hough and the fellows were accordingly restored; and in 1690 he was made bishop of Oxford, from whence he was removed to Lichfield, and next to Worcester, where he died, honoured for his patriotism, piety, and munificence. B. 1651; D. 1743.

HOUGHTON, Richard Monckton Milnes, Lord.

hou'-ton, a poet of some note, who sat for Pon-how'-ton, a poet of some note, who east for Poniternat from 1837 to 1838, when he was raised to the pecuage. His principal works are "Mornida for a form in Greece," "Paint Leaves," and the "Flight of Time," ". 1800.

Houssarz, Arsène, hous-kó; an dodern French titierateur, who went to Paris carly in life, to push his fortunes as an author. Ho began his career in 1836, with the publication of two romances. His essays in art criticism, and especially his writings illustrative of the biographical history of the regency, aftracted the nodee of the reading public towards him. During the revolution of 1848, he presented himself as a candidate for the suffrages of his himself as a candidate for the suffrages of his native province, but was beaten by M. Odillon Through the influence of Mdlle. Barrot.

Rachel, he was made manager of the Comédie Française in 1849, and succeeded in restoring that theatre to a most prosperous condition, producing more than a hundred new works by the best french playwrights. After the coun-d'état of 1881, he wrote the cantata for Mille. Rachel, entitled "L'Empire c'est la paix." On the death of his wife, in 1856, he resigned the appointment. His literary performances include romances, plays, poems, essays, and cri-ticisms; many of them displaying his strong predilection for the age of Louis XV., while all are characterized by refinement, grace, and lively wit. B. at Bruyères, near Laon, 1815. Houston, Samuel, hous-ton, an American general, who began life in a merchant's office, but, incited by a love of adventure, went to reside among the Indians, with whom he stayed five years. Returning to his native state, he founded a school on the borders of the prairie for the children of the red men. In the war against the English in 1813, he served with much distinction under General Jackson, and was severely wounded at the Horse-shoe Falls. Subsequently General Jackson employed him to Subsequently general Jackson employed min to negotiate a treaty with his former hosts, the Red Indians. After having brought this mis-sion to a successful termination, he resolved to proceed to Nashville to study the law; and soon afterwards obtained considerable practice by his great abilities in his new profession. Ĭ'n 1821 he was appointed major-general of the militia of the state of Tennessee. On the breaking out of the war with Mexico, he was named general-in-chief, and at the battle of Saint Jacinto, he, with 700 men, took or killed the 1500 soldiers of Santa Anna, who was himself among the prisoners. The inhabitants of Texas, out of admiration for his bravery, appointed him president of the new republic they founded after gaining their independence from Mexico; and on the incorporation of Texas with the other states of the Union, General Houston became a member of Congress, B. at Rockbridge, became a memoer of congress, is all nockninge, Virginia, 1798; p. 1863.

Howden, Roger de, howe-den, an English historian in the reign of Henry II, who is said to have been an ecclesiate and lawyer, two professions then commonly united. His "Annuls of Decible Michays" for 21 to 1902 where professions then commonly united, His "Annais of English History from 731 to 1202" were printed at London in 1595, and at Frankfort in 1601, and, lately, in Bohn's Antiquarian Library. Lived towards the end of the 12th century.

Howard, Sir Edward, hou'-ard, a naval commander, who entered early the maritime service, and, about 1494, was knighted. In 1612 he was sent as lord high admiral of England with a large fleet against France, the coasts of which he ravaged. He also defeated the enemy's fleet of Brest; but, the year following, was skin in boarding the French admiral's ship, and his body thrown into the sea. D. 1513

Howard, Thomas, earl of Surrey and duke of

HOWARD, Thomas, earl of Surrey and duke of Norfolk, (See Surrey, Thomas, Howard, earl of), HOWARD, Henry, earl of Surrey. (See Surrey, Henry Howard, earl of). Howard, Catherine, fifth wife of Henry VIII., was the daughter of Edmund Howard, third son of the second duke of Norfolk. She was married, in 1810, to the king; but, two years atterwards, Henry sent her to the scaffold, under pretext of unfaithfulness. B. about 1520.

HOWAED, Charles, Lord Howard of Effing-ham, lord high admiral of England, and comham, lord high admirat of England, and com-mander, in 1895, of the fleet which destroyed the Invincible Armada. In 1896, he, with the earl of Essex, burnt a second Spanish fleet in the harbour of Cadiz, for which he was created earl of Notingham. When the earl of Essex made his attempt at rebellion, he was appointed. to command the army which acted against and defeated him, under the title of lieutenant-general of England. After Queen Elizabeth's death, he still continued to enjoy the most distinguished posts under her successor, James

I, discharging every duty with a singular ability and honourable zeal. B. 1536; D. 1624. Howarp, Thomas, earl of Arundel, a distinguished patron of the arts, was earl-marshal in the beginning of the reign of Charles I., by whom, as well as by king James, Howard was employed in various foreign embassies. He is principally known, however, by the efforts he made, at immense trouble, to collect in Greece and Italy all the remains of antiquity that could and Italy all the remains of antiquity that could be procured. In this way he collected a splendid museum, a portion of which was, about 1688, presented to the university of Oxford by Henry, sixth duke of Norfolk, and is now known, with other curiosities, as the Arundelian marbles. B. 1589; p. at Padua, 1646.
Howaen, Six Robert, an English poet and historian, the son of Thomas, earl of Berkshire, was a zealous friend of the revolution of 1888. He wrote several plays, the "History of the Reigns of Edward and Richard II.," the "History of Religion," &c. p. 1698.

Howard, John, an eminent philanthropic English gentleman, was the son of a tradesman in London, who died while he was an infant, leaving him in the hands of guardians, by whom leaving imm in the hands of guardians, by whom he was apprenticed to a grocer. His constitu-tion, however, being delicate, and having an aversion to trade, he purchased his indentures from his master, and went abroad. On his return he lodged with a widow lady at 5 stoke Newington, who attended him with such care in his dibner, the hand and the such care. in his illness, that he conceived an affection for her, though she was twenty-seven years older than himself, and they were married; but Mrs. Howard died about three years afterwards. In 1756 he embarked for Lisbon, intending to aid the sufferers by the great earthquake, but, on the passage, the ship was taken and carried to France. On his release he went to Italy, and at his return settled in Hampshire. In 1758 he married a second wife; but she died in child-bed in 1765, leaving him one son. He was at this time resident at Cardington, near Bedford, where he purchased an estate. In 1773 he served the office of sheriff, which, as he declared, brought the distress of the prisoners more immediately under his notice," and led him to form the design of visiting the gaols through form the design of visiting the gaois through England, in order to devise means for alle-viating the miseries of the sufferers. In 1774 he was examined before the House of Commons on the subject of the prison regulations, and re-ceived the thanks of the House. He then extended his benevolent views to foreign countries, making excursions to all parts of Europe. In 1777 he published the "State of Prisons in England and Wales, with Preliminary Observations, and an Account of some Foreign Prisons." In 1780 he published an appendix to it, with and account of his travels in Italy; and in 1784 an

Howard

new edition appeared, with considerable addi-tions. About this time some admirers of Mr. Howard opened a subscription for erecting a statue in his honour, but at his request the design was dropped. In 1789 he published an "Account of the Principal Lazarettos in Europe." In this work he signified his intention of visiting Russia, Turkey, and of extending his route into the East. "I am not insensible," he said, "of the dangers that must attend such a journey. Should it please God to cut off my life in the prosecution of this design, let not my conduct be uncandidly imputed to rashness or enthusiasm, but to a serious, deli-berate conviction that I am pursuing the path of duty; and to the sincere desire of being made an instrument of more extensive useful ness to my fellow-creatures, than could be exness to my tenow-creatures, than could be ex-pected in the narrower circle of a retired life.' He fell a sacrifice to his humanity; for, visiting a sick patient in the Crimea, who had a malignant fever, he caught the infection. A statue of Mr. Howard, erected by public subscription, was placed in St. Paul's Cathedral, with an inscription. B. about 1726; D. 1790. HOWARD, Lieut. Edward, R.N., the scion of an ancient and opulent family, was one of the earliest and best of the naval school of novelists. With all the graphic power and stirring cloquence of other writers of that class, he was wholly free from their too frequent coarseness.

"Rattlin the Reefer," "Outward Bound," the "Old Commodore," and "Jack Ashore," attest his powers as a novelist; while his "Life of Sir Henry Morgan, the Buccancer," gave promise of even higher excellence. D. 1842.

Howard, Henry, R.A., professor of painting in the Royal Academy, after receiving some tuition from Reinagle, became a student of the Royal Academy in 1788, displaying great talent as a draughtsman, and carrying off the highest honours of the school of art in which he was being educated. In 1791 he went to Italy, and studied at Rome with Flazman. On his return to England, he was extensively employed to illustrate books with steel plates, and, at the same time, he continued to send to the exhibitions of the Academy a number of paintings on classical subjects. In 1801 he was elected an associate, and, in 1808, an academician, and, subsequently, secretary to the Royal Academy. At the first cartoon competition, in 1843, although seventy-three years of age, he controlled a drawing—"Man beset by Contending Passions," which gained a prize of £100. B. 1769; p. 1847.

Howden, John Hobart Caradoc, second Lord, hou'-den, an English diplomatist, in early life served in the army, and was engaged in the battle of Navarino, where he was wounded. battle of Navarino, where he was wounced. He was sent as English commissioner to the slege of Antwerp in 1822, and to the Spanish constitutional army in 1834. In 1847 he was appointed minister plenipotentiary to Rio Janeiro, to settle the Argentine question. In 1850 he became ambassador to the court of Madrid, and in 1854 major-general.

Dublin, 1799.

Dublin, 1799.

Hows, Richard, Earl, hou, a gallant English admiral, entered the naval service at the age of fourteen, and at twenty was appointed to the command of a sloop of war, in which he beat off two large French frigates, after a gallant action. for which he was made a mathematical tion; for which he was made a post-captain.

After a variety of active service, he obtained the command of the Dunkirk, of 60 guns, with which he captured a French 64 off Newfound-Which he aspected under Admiral Hawke, and, the year following, was appointed commodere of a squadron, with which he destroyed a number of ships and magazines at St. Malo. In 1769 Prince Edward, afterwards duke of the commonwealth of the commonwealth of the commonwealth is care, and the commonwealth is care and the care and York, was put under his care, and the commodore, on the 6th of August, took Cherbourg and destroyed the basin. This was followed by the unfortunate action off St. Cas, where he displayed great courage and humanity in saving the retreating soldiers at the hazard of his own life. The same year, on the death of his brother, he became Lord Howe, and soon afterwards had a great share in the victory over Conflans, When Admiral Hawke presented him, on this occasion, to the king, his majesty said, "Your life, my lord, has been one continued series of services to your country." In 1763 he was apservices to your country." In 1763 he was appointed to see Admiraty board, where he re-mained till 1765, when he was made treasurer of the navy. In 1770 he was appointed com-mander-in-chief in the Mediterranean. In the American war he commanded the fleet on that coast. In 1782 he was sent to the relief of Gibraltar, which service he performed in sight of the French and Spanish fleets, which, however, avoided an action, though far superior in numbers. In 1783 he was made first lord of the Admiralty, which office he soon afterwards resigned; but, at the end of the year, he was re-appointed, and continued in that station till 1788, when he was created an English earl. In 1793 he took the command of the channel fleet, and, on June 1,1794, obtained his splendid and decisive victory over the French fleet. The same month he was visited on board his ship at Spithead by the king and queen, when his maplaneau by the king and queen, when his ma-jesty presented him with a magnificent sword, a gold chain, and medal. He also received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, the freedom of the city of London, and the applause of the nation. In 1795 he became general of the marines, nand, in 1797, was honoured with the garter, B. in London, 1725; D. in London, 1799.

Howitt

Howe, Sir William, brother of Admiral Lord

Howe, succeeded General Gage in the chief command of the British forces in America, having landed at Boston with Generals Clinton and Burgoyne, in May, 1775. General Howe commanded at the attack on Bunker's Hill, was commanued at the attack on bunker's Hill, was besieged in Boston during the next winter, evacuated that town in the ensuing spring, and retired to Halifax. In June, 1776, he arrived at Staten Island, where he was joined by his brother, Lord Howe. Here the brothers informed Congress that they had received full ways the grant product a cell the brothers. powers to grant pardon to all the rebels who should return to their obedience; but the commissioners appointed by that body considered both the form and substance of the propositions too objectionable to deserve attention. In August Howe defeated the Americans on Long Island, and took possession of New York in September. After the campaign of the Jerseys, he set sail from New York and entered Chesapeake Bay. Having previously secured the command of the Schuylkill, he crossed it with harmonia army, and repelled the attack of the Americans at Germantown. In May, 1778, he was succeeded in the command by General Sir Henry Clinton. D. 1814.

Howirr, William, how-it, a clever English litterateur, the son of a member of the Society of Friends, who educated him and his five bro- 1857. Besides being an industrious contributor thers in the principles of Quakerism. Although he had been sent to several schools kept by Quakers, his education was almost entirely owing to his own perseverance. Up to his twenty-eighth year, when he married and commenced with his wife a career of literature, his time had been spent in acquiring mathematical and scientific knowledge, in studying the classical authors, and in mastering the German, French, and Italian tongues. His studies were varied by rambles in the country, shooting, and fishing; and these again led him to obtain an amount of information relative to English rural life and nature, which was afterwards reproduced in his works. The lady who became his wife was, like himself, a member of the Society whe was, fire himsel, a member of ne Society of Friends, and strongly imbued with literary tastes. In 1823, the first year of their mariage, they published together a volume of poems, cintilled, "The Forest Minstrel," and followed it up by contributions to the "Amulet," "Literary Souverir," and other annuals then in vogue. These contributions, with a contribution of the contribution some original pieces, were collected and pub-lished in 1827, under the title of "The Desoia-tion of Eyam," &c. The 'Book of the Soa-sons, "Popular History of Priesteralt," "Tales of the Pantila; or, Traditions of the most Ancient Times," "Rural Life of Eng-land," "Colonization and Christicature," most Ancient Times," "Iteral Life of England," "Colonization and Christianity," and several other works, were produced by him during the ten following years. In 1839 and seaceeding year, he wrote his "Boy's Country Book," and "Visits to Remarkable Places." In 1849 to went to Germany for the purpose of educating his children, and his sojourn there led to the production of the "Bard and Domestic Life of Germany," "German Experiences," to 1847 and the four following years he published his "Homes and Haunts of the most eminent English Poets," "The Hall and Hamlet, or, Scenes and Characters of Country Life," "The Year-Book of the Country," and a novel, "Madama Dorrington of the Deno." In novel, "Madama Dorrington, of the Deno." In novel, "Madame Dorrington of the Dene." In 1846 he contributed to the "People's Journal and afterwards became part proprietor of it; but a quarrel between himself and his partner led him to establish a rival publicationfed him to establish a rival punneasion—

522

Howitt Hubner

"Howitt's Journal," which, however, like its predecessor, was subsequently unsuccessful. In 1852 he, with his two sons and Mr. R. H.
Horne (see Horne), sailed for Australia, where he, for some time, worked as a "digger." also visited Tasmania, Sydney, &c., and com-municated his observations in a number of lating the Times newspaper, which he after-wards collected and published with some new matter, under the title of "Land, Labour, and matter, under the table of Dania, Labour, and Gold," in 1855. B. at Heaner, Derbyshire, 1795. Howrre, Mrs. Mary Botham, an English authoress, wife of the above, came of a family of Quakers, and commenced her literary career, shortly after her marriage, with a volume of poems, called the "Forest Minstrel." After having published several volumes of graceful poetry, and a number of books for the young, she, on visiting Germany with her husband, proceeded to acquire the Swedish and Danish languages, with a view of translating the novels of Miss Bremer and the tales of Hans The translations of Miss C. Andersen. Bremer's works were published between 1844 and 1852; and the "Improvisatore," a reproduction in English of Andersen's novel, in to the periodicals, she wrote a volume of "Ballads and other Poems," "Sketches of Na-tural History in Verse;" two novels, called, "The Heir of Wast-Wayland," and "Wood "The Heir of Wast-Wayland," and "Wood Leighton," and translated "Ennemoser's His-tory of Magie" for Dohn's Scientific Litory of Magie for Bonn's Scientific Li-brary. The valuable work entitled "Literature and Romance of Northern Europe," published as the joint production of herself and husband, is almost entirely her work. B. at Uttoxeter. Staffordshire, about 1804.

Howley, William, archbishop of Canterbury, was educated at Winchester School, where he had for his teacher Dr. Warton, and for a class-fellow William Lisle Bowles, the poet; and after distinguishing himself by the elegance of his academic exercises, he proceeded, in 1783, to New College, Oxford, passing through the various grades of the university with honour and success, till, in 1809, he was appointed regius professor of divinity. This closed his academic career. In 1913 he was nominated bishop of London; and in 1828 translated to the primacy, the onerous duties of which he dis-charged with zeal and fidelity for twenty years. He seldom took part in the secular discussions in the House of Lords. When bishop of London he supported the bill of pains and penalties against queen Caroline, laving it down with much emphasis that the king could do no which much emphasis that the king could do no wrong either morally or politically; and, as archbishop of Canterbury, he vehemently op-posed the catholic emancipation bill, in 1820, as dangerous to the church; and the reform bill, in 1831, as no less dangerous to the constitution.

Lat Royley rectory, Hampshire, 1765; b. 1548, Hurer, John, hoo-ar-ta, a Spanish philosopher, who, in 1573, published a work which excited considerable interest at the time: it was entitled "A Trial of Wits; or, a Treatise on the different Kinds of Genius among Men, with Rules and Directions showing to what Kind of Study any Person is best adapted." This book has been translated into English, French, and German, and has been condemned at Rome. B.

in Navarre, about 1830; p. about 1800.

Huber, John, hoo'-bair, a Swiss draughtsman and naturalist, who was eminent for his talent in cutting portraits out of paper. He painted several pictures illustrating incidents in he private life of Voltaire, with whom he lived on intimate terms during twenty years. He wrote a clever work, entitled "Observations on the Flight of Birds of Prey," which was published at Geneva in 1784. B. at Geneva, 1722; p. 1790.

HUBER, Francis, a distinguished naturalist, on of the preceding, by whom he was taught o observe nature from his earliest years, and he tudied with exemplary patience and success the habits of bees. While young, he lost his sight, but nevertheless continued to prosecute his studies with ardour, chiefy through the aid of Francis Burnens, his servant, and his wife, Aimée Lullin. In 1792 he published his disco-veries, under the title of "New Observations on Bees," which were conveyed under the form of a series of letters to Charles Bonnet. He published a second and enlarged edition of the same in 1814. B. at Geneva, 1750; D. at Lausanne. 1.830.

HUBNER, Alexander, Baron de, hoob'-ner, a German diplomatist, who, after finishing his studies at the university of Vienna, went to reside in Italy, and on his return attracted the natice of Prince Metternich, who appointed him to an important position in his cabinet. In 1437, he served on the staff of the Austrian ambassador at Paris, but was recalled soon after; and in 1841, on the resumption of diplomatic relations between Portugal and Austria, he was dispatched as secretary of embassy to Lisbon, a post he vacated, to assume that of Austrian consul-general at Leipsic, in 1844. When the Italian revolution of 1848 broke out. he was acting as secretary to the vicercy of Lombardy, was made prisoner by the Italians, and retained as a hostage for several months but was subsequently released; whereupon he retired into private life. When Prince Schwartzenburg had made head against the Italian and Viennese insurgents, he was recalled, and intrusted with the issuing of pro clamations and imperial manifestoes to the populations of Austria and Italy. In 1849, he became Austrian minister plenipotentiary to the French republic, a post he retained for several years. In 1856, he was one of the plenipoten-tiaries of the belligerent powers who signed the treaty of Paris. B. at Vienna, 1811.

Huc Hugo

Huc. Abbé, hook, a French missionary priest. who, after being ordained, embarked, in 1839, for China. After a voyage of five months, he for China. After a voyage of five months, ne arrived at Macao, and entered upon the functions of a former missionary, who had been put to death. For five years he travelled throughout China and Tartary, and at length took up a residence in a Buddhist monastery, to study the language and literature of Buddhism. Com-manded by the emperor of China to return, he travelled back to Macao, and embarked there, in 1852, for France, but stopped at Ceylon, whence he wandered through India, Egypt, and Palestine. On his return to France, at the beginning of 1853, he collated and arranged his notes of travel, and published "Annals of the Propaga-tion of the Faith in China;" "Travels in Tartion of the Faith in China;" "Travels in Tar-tary, Thibet and China;" "The Chinese Empire and Christiauity in China;" all of which be-came very popular, and were translated into most of the European languages. Several of his works have been reproduced in an English form, and have attracted considerable attention. B. at Toulouse, 1813.

Hudson, Henry, hud son, an English navigator, and discoverer of the Arctic strait called after him. He made several voyages to seek the north-west passage to India and China; in the last attempt he discovered the bay now known as Hudson's Bay, where he wintered; but, on his passage home, some of his crew mutinied. and forced him, his son, and others, into a boat, which was never afterwards heard of. B. about the middle of the 16th century; D. about Hupson, Thomas, a popular English portraitpainter, the predecessor and master of Sir Joshua Reynolds. His greatest work is the portrait of Charles, duke of Marlborough, at Blenheim. His portrait of Handel, hanging in the gallery at Oxford, is said to be the only one the great musician ever sat for. He acquired a large fortune by the practice of his art, and retired to Twickenham, when his former pupil, Sir Joshua Reynolds, became the great English portrait-painter. B. in Devonshire, 1701; D. 1779.

Huer, Pierre Daniel, hoo'-ai, a learned French bishop, who studied mathematics under Mambrun, a Jesuit, and Greek and Hebrew under brun, a Jesuit, and Greek and Hebrew under Bochart, whom he accompanied in 1662 to the court of Christina, queen of Sweden, who wished to engage him in her service; but whe declined the honour, and returned to France, In 1661 he published an excellent work on the art of translation, entitled, "De Interpreta-tione." In 1679 appeared his "Demonstratio Evangelica," which was greatly admired. His reputation became so great, that the place of sub-preceptor to the dauphin was conferred on him and he had for his collegare the illustrious him, and he had for his colleague the illustrious Bossuet. In 1661 he published his valuable edition of the works of Origen. He formed the plan of publishing editions of the classics plan of phononing entrons of the classics which are now known by the title, "In usum Delphini," and spent twenty years in carrying out the project. In 1689 he printed his "Censures on the Cartesian Philosophy," a system to which he had been zealously attached, but the fallacy of which he now exposed. Huet, considering the number and excellence of his sidering the number and excellence of his works, may be considered as one of the most learned men that any age has produced. His "Origin of Romances," "The Situation of the Torrestrial Paradise," and "Woakness of Human Understanding," have been translated into English, B. at Caen, 1639; pp. 1721.

HUPHLAND, Christopher William, hoo'f-cland, an eminent German physician, pursued his profession at Weimar, and became, in 1783, pressor in the numiversit of Jenn. In 1801 he was fessor in the university of Jena. In 1801 he was appointed physician to the king of Prussia, in 1809 professor of medicine in the university of Berlin, and finally director of the academy of military medicine and surgery in 1819. His celebrated work, "The Art of Prolonging Life," was published in 1799; his "Counsels to Mothers was published in 1799; his "Counsels to Mothers on Physical Education," in 1800; and his "His-tory of Health," in 1812. He was among the first continental physicians to recognise the truth of animal magnetism, B. at Erfurt, 1762: D. at Berlin, 1836.

HUFNAGEL, George, hoof'-na-gel, a Flemish painter, extensively employed by several German princes. His reputation recommended him to the emperor Rodolphus, for whom he executed four admirable books representing quadrupeds, birds, insects, and fishes. He also wrote some poems in Latin and German. B. at Antwerp, 1645; D. 1600.

Hugh Caper. (See Caper.)

Hughes, John, hues, an English poet, whose first work was "An Ode on the Peace of Ryswick," 1697, which was well received, and introduced him to the acquaintance of several men of duced mm to the acquantance of several men of letters. In 1717 he was appointed, by Lord Chancellor Cowper, secretary to the commissions of the peace. His last literary piece was the tragedy of "The Siege of Damsseus;" but he expired on the first night of its performance, Feb. 17, 1720. D. at Marlborugh, Wilts, 1877.

Heaves Thomas a horistic subjected at

Hughes, Thomas, a barrister, educated at Rugby and Oriel College, Oxford, and called to the bar in 1848. He is the author of "Tom Brown," one of the best books that could be put into a school-boy's hands. He was returned for Lambeth in 1865, and for Frome in 1868. B. at Donnington Friory, Berks, 1823. Hugo, Victor-Marie, Viscount, Mod-go, a celebrated French poet, dramatist, and novelist. The on of a distinguished French general of the mperial army, his early years were spent with his father in the isle of Elba, Italy, Rome, and Naples. Returning to Paris in 1809, he being then eight years old, his education was, for the first time, father's "Les Misérables," he prepared a dra-attended to; but being sent for from Spain by matised version of the work, the representation his father, he entered into a seminary for nobles in that land, whose bright skies helped to dewelope his poetical genius, and, at ten years of age, he commenced writing verses. In 1813 he became a student at an institution in France, to be prepared for the Ecole Polytechnique. While be prepared for the Ecote Polycenimque. The studying mathematics, poetry was not neglected by him; and in 1817, having previously composed a short poem, he completed a tragedy called "Istamine," written after the classic model. Between the years 1819-22 he three model. Detween the years 1618-22 he three times carried off the poetry prizes of the Aca-démie des Jeux Floraux, at Toulouse. These three odes first attracted public attention to him; the appearance of Lamartine's "Medita-tions" quickened his poetical genius into the production of a volume of "Odes and Ballads, which, given to the world in 1822, stamped his reputation permanently as a genuine poet. His next publication was "Hans of Iceland." A next publication was "Hans of Iceland." A second edition of the "Odes and Ballads" apsecond edition of the "odes and barrais ap-peared in 1826. Hitherto he had composed after the manner of Racine and the classical school; but in 1827 he produced "Cromwell," a play, not written so much for the stage as to combat the principles of the classic school of dramatists. His magnificent collection of lyrics, entitled, "Les Orientales," was brought out in 1823. "Marion Delorme" and "Ernani" were his two next Delome" and "Ernani" were his two next works for the theatre, both written in the "romantio" manner; as also were his "Lucretia Borgin," "May Tudor," "Esmeralda," and "Ruy Blas," His best romance, "Notre Dame de Paris, "say published in 1831, and his finest set of lyrics, "Autumn Leaves," in 1832, in 1836 he was created a peer of France by Louis Philippe. Returned by the city of Paris, after the revolution of 1848, to the Assemble's Autonale, he took his seat among the extreme demonstration of whose shifts franter she recover. mocrats, one of whose chief orators he became. On the coup d'stat of December 2, 1881, he was among the first individuals to be expelled from France, and went to reside in the island of Jersey, where he never ceased to compose burn-ing philippies in prose and verse against Na-poleon III. "Napoleon the Little" and "Les poleon III. "Napoleon the Little" and "Les Châtimens" being the best-known of these. In 1856 he was compelled to leave Jersey, and went to reside in Guernsey, where he wrote another poetical work, "Contemplations;" and in 1862 published "Les Misérables," a social romance. in 1864 he produced a work on the life and writ-In 1854 he produced a work on the life and writings of Shaksyeare; in 1865, "Chansons des Rues et des Bois"; in 1866, a romance called "The Tollers of the Sea"; and, in 1869, an instorical novel, the seene of which is laid chieflyin England entitled, "By Order of the King," in 1802.

Humboldt

Hoso, François Victor, a French littlers, son of the above, who, after completing his education at the University of Paris, became a writer of notifical articles for the French

a writer of political articles for the French papers; he afterwards assisted his father in editing a democratic journal, which the latter had ing a democratic journal, which the latter had established in 1849. He was sent out of France with his father, on the coup a state of 1851, and went to reside with him in Jersey, and afterwards in Guernsey, where he occupied himself with historical research. He published "The Island of Jersey, its Monuments and its History," in 1857; but his best work is a fine French translation of "Shakspeare's Somnets," of which in France was forbidden. B. at Paris, 1829

HUMBERT, Joseph Amable, hoom'-bair, a French revolutionary general, who owed his rise to his fine person, bravery, and bold demeanour. After having received some little education, he became a strolling workman, and afterwards a became a strong workman, and anterwards a hawker of rabbit-skins; but, entering the revo-lutionary army in 1792, he rapidly rose to the position of colonel. In 1793 he was made a general of brigade, and served in that capacity against the insurgents of La Vendée. He was with General Hoche when he attempted to invade Ireland in 1796; but when that expedition was disorganized by a violent storm, he re-turned to France. In 1793 he was again sent to Ireland at the head of 1500 men. He landed at Killala, of which he took possession. General Lake marched against him three days after-Lake was beaten at Casdebar, and Humbert sought to raise the country in behalf of the French, but met with little success. In a short time the advanced guard of Lord Cornwallis met and defeated him, taking himself and whole force prisoners. He returned to France in 1799. and was sent to St. Domingo a few years after-wards under General Leclerc, with whose widow he returned to France in 1804. Bonaparte was so enraged at this act, that he ordered him to leave Paris, and threatened more severe measures. He field to America, and led an adventurous life in the Spanish settlements. B. at Rouvrsy, 1787; D. at New Orleans, 1823. HUMBOLDT, Frederick Henry Alexander,

Baron von, hoom'-boldt, a distinguished German philosopher and traveller, was the son of a wealthy soldier who had served under Frederick the Great of Prussia. Having previously received an excellent rudimentary education at home, he was sent with his elder brother, in 1786, to the university of Frankfort-on-the-Oder, to study the natural sciences. In 1788 he quitted Frankfort for Gottingen, at which Heyne, the great classical scholar (see HEYNE), was then a professor. Heyne's son-in-law, George Forster, had accompanied Captain Cook in his discoveries in the South Seas, and his glowing descriptions of those regions made a deep impresasscriptions of those regions made nuce in pres-sion on the young man's mind. In 1750 Ilumbolds accompanied Forster in a tour through the Rhine districts and Holland, and afterwards visited England with him. His scientific obser-vations made in Germany were afterwards published in 1790, under the title of "Mineralogical Considerations on Certain Basaltic Formations on the Rhine." His intention being to seek employment in the civil service of the Prussian kingdom, he subsequently went to Hamburg to study book-keeping and the other forms of commercial knowledge, and afterwards studied in the mining academy of the eminent Werner, at Freiburg. In 1792 he obtained the rost of mining superintendent in the works at Baircuth, in which situation he remained till the year 1795, during which time he wrote many scien-1795, during which time he waste many screen tific articles for the German periodicals, and published a botanical work in Latin, called "Specimens of the Flora of Freiburg." Soon after the production of this work he resigned which he brought out with an introduction in his post as mining superintendent, having de-1857. In 1862, after the appearance of his termined to explore those parts of the world which had been left unvisited by travellers. "had, from my earliest youth," he says, "felt a burning desire to travel in distant lands unexplored by Europeans." The disturbed state of the continent at the time, owing to the wars consequent on the French revolution, prevented himfrom executing his design for about two years, during which time he resided at Jena, and became acquainted with Göthe and Schiller, and occupied himself with the composition and publication of "Investigations on the Muscles and Nerve-fibres, with Conjectures on the Chemical Process of Life," and "On Subterranean Gases;" two small works which established his reputation as a natural philosopher. A short visit to Italy was made in 1709, and, in the same year, he went to Paris, with the view of accompanying the expedition about to be despatched from that capital to Egypt. The expedition was abandoned; but Humboldt made the acquaintance of Bonpland, who was to have been the maturalist of the journey, and the two learned men resolved to undertake a great enterprise together. Their first idea was to explore Northern Africa; but, being prevented by the English cruisers in the Mediterranean, they landed in Spain, and obtained permission from the government to travel in the Spanish pos-sessions of South America. In the month of May, 1799, the two travellers embarked at May, 1799, the two travellers embarsed at Corunna, and, eluding the English cruisers watching the port, reached Teneriffe, where they ascended the peak and collected some valuable scientific data. Going on board their vessel again, they sailed for Cumana, in South America, which was reached in July, Humboldt and his companion now proceeded to explore the great South American continent and to go the great South American continent and to. the great South American continent, and to collect a body of scientific information, during five years of adventurous research, theretofore un-paralleled. For 65 days, Humboldt navigated, in an Indian cance, the Orinoco, the Rio Negro, and the Atrabapo, discovering the connexion be-tween the Orinoco and the Amazon. The botany, mineralogy, geology, the physical aspects of the country, and the habits of the natives, were all observed and noted during this great journey. He now returned to the coast and embarked for Havannah, where he so-journed for some time. Returning to South America in 1801, he travelled southward till he reached Lima, crossing the Cordilleras and Andes five times during the journey. In June, 1802, he ascended Chimborazo to an elevation of 19,300 feet, the highest point of the mountain ever attained by a human being. In December, 1802, he embarked for Guayaquil, and in the 1802, he embarked for Guayaquil, and in the April following reached Mexico, in exploring which and the adjoining countries he spent a year. Wishing to complete his scientific observations of the island of Cuba, he once more est sail for Havannah, in 1804. A visit to the United States, and a short stay in Washington and Philadelphia supposed of fire which has and Philadelphia succeeded, after which he quitted America for France, and arrived at Bor-deaux in August, 1804. He spent nine months in Paris arranging his notes, and assisting Gay-Lussac (see Gay-Lussac) in making experiments relative to the chemical composition of the atmosphere. After spending a short time in Italy and at Berlin, where he obtained per-mission from the king to take up his residence in the French capital while his works were being printed, he returned to Paris. In 1807 appeared the first of a large number of volumes, all published under the general title of "Travels of Humboldt and Bonpland in the Interior of America between the years 1799-1804." In this magnificent undertaking, composed partly in Latin, partly in French, he was assisted by Datin, partly in French, he was assisted by Othmans for the astronomical, Arago and Gay-Lussac for the chemical and meteorological, Cuvier for the zoological, and Klaproth for the mineralogical divisions. It was mainly divided into six great sections, which again were subdivided into many more, the botanical portion divided into many more, the obtained portion alone consisting of twenty rolumns, embellished with 1200 plates. He spent a portion of the years 1827-28 at Berlin, whither he had been invited by the king of Prussia; in 1829 he, at the express desire, and at the sole expense, of the emperor Nicholas, set out with Kose and Ehrenberg to emplore the eastern provinces of Russia, and in nine months travelled, between St. Petersburg and the Chinese frontier, over a distance of 2320 geographical miles. The results of this expedition were published by him at Paris in 1343, under the title of "Central Asia; Researches on its Mountain-chains and Asia; Researches on its Mountain-comms and Climatology." Between the years 1830 and 1848, although he desired to keep aloof from politics, he was intrusted by the king of Prussia with several diplomatic missions to the court of Louis Philippe. In 1848 he went to reside near the king of Prussia, whose court he ornamented the king of Prussia, whose control of commenced his great work, "Kosmos, or a Physical Description of the Universe," which was concluded in 1851, and which has become exceedingly popular in an English translation. He was a member of almost every scientific body in the world; an associate of the Academy of Sciences of Paris and Berlin; was decorated with many orders. and was a grand officer of the French Legion of Honour. By the labours of his long and valuable life he carned the title of creator of the science of comparative geography, and reviver of the study of the natural sciences. In addition to those already quoted, the titles of a few of his most imarready quoted, the titles of a lew of his most im-portant works may be given: "Essay on the Che-mical Analysis of the Atmosphere;" "Pictures of Nature;" "Essay on Electrical Fishes;" "Essay on the Geography of Plants;" "Causes of the Difference in Temperature of various Por-tions of the Earth's Surface;" "Fragments of tions of the Earth's Surface; "Fragments of Asiatic Geology and Climatology," and "The Progress of Nautical Astronomy during the Frifeenth and Sixteenth Centuries," B. at Berlin, September, 1769; p. 1850.

HURSDOR, Charles William, Baron von, a distinguished philologist, classical critic, and diplomatist, was alder brother of the above, with whom he pursued an educational career as the universities of Geithers and here. When

HUMBOLDE, Charles William, Baron von, a distinguished philologist, classical critic, and diplomatist, was elder brother of the above, with whom he pursued an educational career at the universities of Gottingen and Jena. When very young, he wrote many essays on the Groek poets and philosophore; but his first work of consequence was a critical essay on Göthe's Hermann and Dorothen. In 1802 he was nominated to the post of minister plenipotentury to Rome; resigning this in 1803, he became head of the department of public instruction, which he quitted to retrie into private life, two years afterwards. In 1812 he became Prussian ambassador at the court of Vienna; represented his country at the conforence of Prague, in 1813; and signod, with Hardenborg (see Haddenby Remedia), the treaty of Paris. In 1819 he was recealed from England, where he was mubassador, to Berlin, to assume the functions of minister and privy councillor; but not agreeing with his sovereign as to his retrograde policy. ing with his sovereign as to his recrograde policy, he tendered his resignation, and once more sought a retired life. He now occupied himself with the study of classical and semi-civilized languages and comparative grammar, varying these pursues with critical essays on poetry, philosophy, and the fine arts. He published t small number of poems, but, on the advice o Schiller, he abandoned creative for critical authorship, for which his mind was more fitted. He wrote critical essays on Sanscrit poetry, and on Wolf's edition of Homer's "Odyssey;" pubon Wolf's edition of Homer's "Odyssey;" published "An Examination of the Basque Language," and a treatise on the Celts and Iberians; besides a very large number of smaller works on classical literature and on classical literature and on speculative physiology. The latter years of his life were occupied with the study of the Malay and American languages; but failing health caused him to abandon the American in order that he might conclude his researches in the Malay tongue. At his death, in 1835, he had almost completed his task, and his work was afterwards published by Dr. Buschmann, in 1836. B. at Potsdam, 1767.

Huma

Huma

HUMB, David, hume, a celebrated English his-torian and philosophical writer, was destined for the law, but having little inclination for that profession, he tried mercantile pursuits, and be-came, in 1731, elerk in an eminent house at Bristol. But he did not continue long in that Bristol. But need a now common one in that situation; for, having a strong propensity to literature, he went to France, where he wrote his "Treatise on Human Nature," which he published at London, in 1733. This metaphysical work, however, met with an indifferent recep-tion; nor were his "Moral Essays," which ap-peared in 1742, more successful. About this time he resided with the marquis of Annandale as a companion, but soon afterwards became secretary to General Sinclair, whom he attended to Vienna and Turin; and while he was abroad, to Vienna and Turn; and while he was accoun-his "Enquiry concerning the Human Under-standing" was published at London. In 1752 appeared his "Political Discourses," and his "Enquiry concerning the Principles of Morals," the latter of which he accounted the best of his writings. In 1754 he published the first volume of the "History of England, from the Accession of James I. to the Revolution." This volume of James I. to the Revolution. This volume was poorly received; but the second, which came out in 1756, met with a better fate, and "helped," as the author said, "to buoy up its unfortunate brother." A bout the same period he published his "Natural History of Religion," which was smartly answered by Dr. Warburton, in a pamphlet which Mr. Hume attributed to Dr. (afferwards lishop) Hurd. In 1759 appeared his "History of the House of Tudor," and in 1761, the more ancient part of the English hisand in The work had now acquired considerable celebrity, and the writer gained largely by its popularity; for, besides the profit it brought him, he obtained a pension through Lord Bute. In 1763 he accompanied the earl of Hertford on In 1705 he accompanied the eart of Hertford on his embasy to Paris, where, in 1765, he remained as charge d'affaires. The year following he re-turned home, and became under-secretary of state to Mr. Cowway. In 1769 he retired to his native country on a small, but to a man of his frugal habits, independent income. After his death appeared a work by him, entitled "Dialogues concerning Natural Religion." His History, although written in an excellent style, this seat in 1837: but through the influence of is not to be relied on, by reason of its partiality and inaccuracy. He left a charmingly-written Kilkenny to be their representative in Parliaautobiography. B. at Edinburgh, 1711; D. in the same city, 1778.

Hume. James Deacon, a commercial statistician, and writer on financial and commercial questions, and compiler of the Customs-statute Code, after receiving his education at West-minster School, obtained, in 1790, 2 clerkship in the custom-house, and displayed so much zeal and telent that, although very young for the post, he was appointed to a responsible office in the department. On his marriage, in 1798, he rented a large piece of land at Pinner, from the farmer, where he set up as a scientific farmer, on a very extensive scale. He continued to fulfil his custom-house duties, and in 1822 was induced by the government to abandon his farm and take up his residence in London, where he was employed in the preparation of reports on the revenue. Up to this period the customs legislation consisted of 1500 different statutes, mostly contradictory—an "intricate and labyrinthian chaos," as it was termed. He was requested to reduce this confused mass into one harmonious and intelligible code, a task he performed after three years of the most unre-mitting labour. The ministry of that day, fully alive to the importance of his task, rewarded him, on its completion, with a sum of £5000, in addition to the salary of his office in the custom-house. In 1823 he was appointed joint assistant-secretary of the Board of Trade; but in the year 1840, after he had passed 49 years of the most untiring and zealous service in the commercial department of the government of his country, he was allowed to retire on the full salary of his office. He still, however, continued to give valuable evidence on revenue questions in committees of the House of Commons. In 1842 his constitution, worn out by hard work, gave signs of breaking up; an apoplectic stupor ensued, and he was carried off. B. at Newington, 1774; D. 1842.

HUME, Joseph, a distinguished financial re-former and politician, was the son of a poor widow who kept a shop in Montrose, her husband, the master of a small coasting vessel, having died while Joseph was quite young. In his 14th year he was apprenticed to a surgeon, and having obtained a medical diploma from the university of Edinburgh, and passed at the Royal College of Surgeons in London, he relegist of bargeon to an East-legist of the street as surgeon to an East-legist of the street of th and became successively Persian interpreter, paymaster, and postmaster to Lord Lake's army operating against the Mahrattas. He laboured so energetically and successfully in his various employments that he was enabled to return to England in 1811, still a young man, with a fortune of about £30,000. Having trawelled in Spain, Turkey, Greece, and Egypt, he was, in 1812, elected an M.P. for Melcombe Regis; but on the dissolution of Parliament, soon after, he was not returned again. Upon this he turned his attention to the establishment of savings'-banks, schools on the Lancasment of swings - banks, schools on the Landse-terian principle, and other schemes of social amelioration and utility. He was returned to Parliament again in 1818 for the Montrose burghs, which he represented till 1830, in which year he was returned for Middlesex. He lost ment. In 1842 his old constituents of the Monment. In 1822 his old consisteems of the Mon-trose burghs returned him to the House of Commons, and he sat for his native place till his death. During his Parliamentary career he energetically struggled for financial reform, energeneasy struggled for mandal reform, advocated the reduction of taxation, and watched the expenditure of the national funds with more perseverance and disinterested industry than any member of the House of Commons before or after his time. Military, naval, ecclesiastical, fiscal reforms were his constant effort. The abolition of military flogging, imprison-ment for debt, and numberless other ameliorations, found in him an untiring advocate. In 1835 he greatly assisted in the discovery of a remarkable Orange plot, the object of which was to secure the throne of England for the was to secure the throne of England for the Duke of Cumberland, instead of giving it to the Princess Victoria, whose education was con-ridered of too liberal a tendency. When his remains were consigned to the tomb, speakers of all shades of political opinion in the House of Commons acknowledged the value of this uncompromising labourer for reform, and enemy of extravagance, privilege, and monopoly. B. at Montrose, 1777; D. at Burnley Hall, Norfolk, 1855.

HUMMEL, John Nepomuk, hoom'-mel, a German composer and pianist, who, displaying great musical talent from his earliest youth, great musical talent from his earnest youth, became chapel-master to Count Esterhazy in 1903, and afterwards to the King of Wurtem-berg in 1816. He was only excelled in instruberg in 1816. He was only excelled in instru-mental composition by Beethoven. He com-posed four operas, two masses, and a large quantity of smaller musical pieces. B. at Presburg, 1778; D. 1837.

Humphur, Ozias, hum'-fre, an eminent miniature painter, first settled at Bath; then went to London, by the advice of his friend, Sir Joshua Reynolds, and was made a royal acade-mician. In 1780 he proceeded to India, where he was held in high esteem by Sir W. Jones and Warren Hastings, and was chosen one of the first members of the Asiatic Society. B. at Honiton, Devonshire, 1742; D. in London, 1810. Hunnertc, hun'ne-rik, king of the Vandals in Africa, succeeded his father Genserio in 477. He was a violent Arian; and though he at first gave the orthodox Christians toleration, he afterwards commenced a persecution against them, and caused upwards of 40,000 to be put to death in the most cruel manner. D. 484. HUNNIADES, John Corvinus, hun'-ne-a'-dees, valvode of Transylvania, and general of the armies of Ladislaus, king of Hungary, was born in the beginning of the 15th century. He fought against the Turks heroically, and for many years rendered himself so formidable to them, that they surnamed him the Devil. The sultan, Ma-homet II., was compelled, in 1456, to retire from the siege of Belgrade, owing to his energetic de-fence of it. He died in the same year, the acknowledged hero of the Christian cause. n.about 1400.

Huxy, Henry, M.P., hunt, was born at Uphaven, Wilts, where he was well known as an opulent farmer, and a regular attendant at the Devizes market. When Mr. Hunt was a young man, he was a decided loyalist; and in 1801, when the whole country was apprehensive of an invasion, he voluntarily tendered his entire stock worth £20,000, to the government, for its use, if it were needed; besides which he en-as volunteers into any regiment of horse that might make the first charge upon the enemy; and for this proffered service he received the thanks of the lord-lieutenant of the county. thanks of the lord-lieutenant of the county.

Mr. Hunt joined the Marlborough troop of cavalry, but owing to some missuiderstanding between Lord Bruce, its commander, and himself, he challenged his lordship; for which he was indicted in the Court of King's Bench, found—"1-" fined £100, and imprisoned six weeks. Owing to this, or some other cause, Mr. Hunt became a "radical reformer," and was looked up to by many of their cause, & "lord of the manor of Glastonbury," he acted fairly at his court-leet; and, as a popular cortor, obtained much nother, but he reduced the course, or control with a property of the county of the coun orator, obtained much notoriety; but a radical meeting at Manchester, where he presided and meeting at manchester, where he presided and declaimed, having been interrupted by the yeomanry, the "Peterloo massacre" was the consequence, which has always been bitterly resented by the people of the district, and by since. Hunt, for his share in this affair, was indicted as the ringleader of an unlawful assembly of the people; tried, found guilty, and sentenced to three years' imprisonment in Ilchester gaol—a sentence which was condemned by thinking men at the time, and has certainly been reversed by popular opinion since. But, though in confinement, Hunt was not idle; he discovered and made known to the public some flagrant malpractices going on at the gaol, which, through his means, were afterwards cor-rected. He long tried for a seat in Parliament, but was unsuccessful at Bristol, Westminster, and for the county of Somerset. He was, row-ever, twice elected for Preston, in 1830 and 1831; but, the year after his second return, his constituents declined his further services. He was seized with paralysis while alighting from his phaeton at Alresford, Hants, where he died, Feb. 12, 1835. B. about 1773

HUNT, James Henry Leigh, an English poet, essayist, and critic, was the son of a West-Indian gentleman, who was resident in America when the war of independence burst forth. Being a stanch royalist, he was com-pelled to seek refuge in England, where he entered into orders, and afterwards became tutor to Mr. Leigh, nephew to the duke of Chandes. Leigh Hunt was educated with Lamb, Coleridge, and Barnes at Christ's Hospital, London, which he left at fifteen. He had already written verses, which were published under the title of "Ju-venilia; or, a Collection of Poems written be-tween the Ages of Twelve and Sixteen." After leaving school, he first became assistant to his brother Stephen, an attorney, and afterwards obtained a derkship in the War-office. In 1895 his brother John started "The News," and for this paper Leigh wrote reviews of books and theatrical criticisms. These last were composed in threat craces ms. A rese ms. were compassed as a more elegant style than had been the case with such literary performances hithorto; and, in 1807 he edited them, and published the scries, under the title of "Critical Essays on the Performers of the London Theatres." A year afterwards, he resigned his situation in the War-office, to undertake the joint editorship of the "Examiner" newspaper, which he and his bro-ther John had established. The bold political strictures of this print caused its proprietors to munded to enter, with three of his servants, all undergo three government prosecutions. The well mounted and equipped, and at his own cost, first was in 1810, for an attack on the regency.

Hun

Hunter

borough, for alleged seditious sentiments expressed in an article on military flogging. On this occasion, the remarkable defence of Lord (then Mr.) Brougham greatly contributed to their acquittal by the jury. A third article, in which the quitted by the jury. A third article, in which the prince-region was severely criticised, and called "an Adonis of fifty," led to their being con-demned to two years' imprisonment, with a fine of $500 each. This sentence caused Hunt to of 2500 cach. This sentence caused Hunt to become very popular, and to receive the sympathy of Byron, Lamb, Keats, Shelley, and Moore. While in prison, he wrote "The Descent of Liberty, a Masque," "The Story of Rimini," and "The Peast of the Poets," and, on his release, Keats addressed to him his fine sonnet, "Written on the day that Mr. Leigh Hunt left "Written on the day that Mr. Leigh Hunt left "Delicen", "Us user literare hone was "Eti. Frison," His next literary labour was "Foliage; or, Poems Original and Translated from the Greek of Homer, Theoeritus, &c." In 1819 he commenced a small periodical after the model of Addison's "Spectator," &c., called the "Indica-tor." In 1823, the "Quarterly Review" attacks tor." In 1823, the "Quarterly Review" attacks on the "cockney school" of poets, to which he belonged, elicited from his pen a satire against Mr. Gifford, its editor, called "Ultra Crepidarius." His fortunes were at this period at a very low cbb, and he was induced to accept the kind invitation of Shelley to go to Italy, where himself and Lord Byron then were. But Shelley minister and ford byron then were. Due Sheiney meeting his death almost as soon as Hunt had reached Italy, he, for some time, resided with Lord Byron, leaving his house, however, with feelings less friendly than he had entered it. In 1828, after his return to England, he published "Lord Byron and some of his Contemporaries, "Lord Byron and some of his Contemporaries, with Recollections of the Author's Life and his Visit to Italy," a book which contained severe criticisms of Lord Byron's personal character, but which, at a later period, Hunt admitted were of too harsh anature. During the subsequent ten years he edited the "Companion," a sequel to the "Indicator," wrote "Captain Sword and Captain Pen," contributed to the magraries and reviews, and published a play.—"The Legend of Florence." In addition to these, he superintended the publication of the dramatic works of Wycheley. Rarouhar, and Congrese: wrote "The Wycherley, Farquhar, and Congreve, wrote "The Palfrey, a Love Story of Old Times;" produced a volume of selections, called "One Hundred Romances of Real Life;" and wrote a second novel of a more ambitious nature than the first, under the title of "Sir Ralph Esher; or, Memoirs of a Gentleman of the Court of Charles II." Leading, henceforth, the uneventful life of a studious man of letters, the record of his career studious man of letters, the record or nus career is nothing more than a catalogue of the names of his literary productions, with the dates of their publication. Firstly, there are his essays and criticisms on poets and poetry. Of these the chief are "imagination and Faney;" "Wit and Humoury." "Wan, Women, and Books," "A Jar of Honey from Mount Hybla;" and "A Book "The Course," A mount his great of the first of the course of the cou

This was, however, abandoned; but, next year, became the recipient, in 1847, of a pension of the Hunts were again tried by Lord Ellen £200 per anumn from the crown. B. at Southborough, for alleged seditions sentiments ergate, Middlesex, 1784; p. 1389.—His eldest son, pressed in an article on military flogging. On this Toornton Hunt, also a literary man of talent, occasion, the remarkable definee of Lord (then was for many years connected with the news-Mr.) Brougham greatly contributed to their account of the provinces, quittal by the jury. A third article, in which the B. 1810.

Horry, Robert, a scientific writer and lecturer, who was brought up for commercial pursuits, but, urged by an enthusiastic love of science, became an earnest student of natural philosophy, &c., and obtained the appointment of secretary to the Coruwall Polytechnic Institution. His lectures and writings on science, chiefly on geology and mineralogy, recommended him to Sir Henry de la Beche, who obtained for him the post of keeper of the mining records in the Museum of Economic Geology. He wrote an excellent "Mannal of Photography," and published some profound researches into the laws and nature of light. One work by him,—The Poetry of Science," attracted considerable attention; his elementary "Treutise on Physics" is also a popular book. He was one of the most active of the scientific men engaged in the organization of the Great Exhibition of 1851, and wrote an essay on the industrial sciences involved therein. He was formerly professor of mechanical philosophy in the Museum of Economic Geology, but after his resignation that post, was chiefly engaged in writing on science and delivering lectures on natural philosophy in various parts of the kingdom. D. at Devonport, 1807.

sophy in various parts of the singuon. n. u. Devonport, Island.
HUNT, William, an eminent English water-colour artist, unrivailed for his transcripts of simple rural life, his healthy, ruddy peasant boys, his rustic interiors, and his bits of still life. His works, both in the exhibitions of the Water-colour Society and in engravings, were among the most popular art-productions of the time. He was elected a member of the Society of Painters in Water-colours in 1827, his previous career as an artist being very obscure. p. 1790; p. 1864.

being very obscure. D. 1780; p. 1884. Erriss being very obscure. S. 1780; p. 1884. Erriss being very obscure. S. 1780; p. 1884. Erriss being very obscure. S. 1780; p. 1884. Erriss and one of the founders of the new school of art generally known as the Pre-Rashalite. On concluding his studies at the Royal Academy, he exhibited his first picture in 1846, which was called "Hark!" The "Seene from Woodstock," the "Erro St. Agnes," and subject from Bulwer Lytton's "Rienz!, were his subsequent works, all being painted after the usual mode; but in 1850 he, with Millais and other young artists, sought to protest against the old conventional style of art, by an earnest and vigorous attempt at founding a new mode of pilotrial representation. These young men called themselves the "Pro-Rafiaelite Brethren;" and their works inaugurated a new era in art. Hunt's first work in this new style was aclled "A Converted British Pamily Sheltering a Christian Minister." "Valentine Rescuing a Christian Minister." "Valentine Rescuing Sylvia from Proteus," and the "Awakenet Conscience," were subsequently produced. His last great works are the "Seagogoat," the "Licht of the World," the "After-Giov," and the "Festival of Sk. Swithin." E. 1827.

HUNTER, Robert, kur'ter, an English gentleman, who wrote the famous "Letter on Enthusissm," which was ascribed to Swift and to Shaftesbury. He was governor of New York and the Jerseys several years, and afterwards of

&c. His last efforts were his Autobiography, in 3 vols., published in 1950, and "The Religion of the Heart; a Manual of Faith and Duty." He 529

Jarof Honey from Mount Hybla," and "A Book for the Corner." Among his genial, chatty, antiquarian sketches, we have "The Town; its Remarkable Chracters and Events," and "The Old Court Suburb; or, Memorials of Kensington, Regal, Critical, and Anacodotal," "Stories from the Italian Poets, with Lives," and the dramatic works of Sheridan, were of a similar character with his former editions of Congreve, Henter, John, a celebrated English anatomist and surgeon, worked for some time as a cabinet-maker; but solicited his brother William, the celebrated physician, to take him as an assistant, which was granted, and in 1748 he removed to London. The year following be became a student at Chelsea Hospital, where he assidnously studied the rudiments of surgery. He afterwards attended St. Bartholomew's Hospital; and in 1756 was appointed house-surgeon of St. George's Hospital. In the same year he assisted his brother in his school, and acted as demonstrator to his course of lectures. He laboured for 10 years on human anatomy, and not only made himself master of the science as it was then known, but added to it several important discoveries. He also dissected a large number of animals, which laid the foundation of his collection of comparative anatomy. In 1760 he was appointed an army surgeon, and in that capacity went to Belleisle and Portugal. On his return to England, he fixed his residence in London, and taught anatomy and surgery with the highest reputation. In 1767 he was admitted fellow of the Royal Society, me was aumitted ichiow of the Royal Society, and the year following his brother resigned to him his house in Jermyn Street. In 1768 he was chosen one of the surgeons of St. George's Harsteld and the surgeons of St. George's was enosen one of the surgeons of all deorge s Hospital; and in 1766 was appointed surgeon-extraordinary to his majesty. His collection having become extremely large, he took a house maring occume extremely large, he took a house in Leicester Square, and reeted a building adjoining it for a museum. In 1790 he was appointed inspector-general of hearmy. He made more than 10,000 preparations, illustrative of human and comparity entering the state of the state and comparative anatomy. His contributions to the "Philosophical Transactions" were numerous and interesting. His other works are, a treatise on the "Natural History of the Human Teeth," "Observations on the Animal Economy," a treatise on the "Blood, Inflammation, and Gunshot-wounds." E. at Long Calderwood, near Glasgow, 1728; p. in London, 1793.

Huxun, William, bother of the preceding, as celebrated Sharlish andronist and physician, was educated for the church, but an acquaintance with Dr. Gullen inclaims; him to the study of physic, he resided with the doctor three years. In 1749, he removed to Edinburgh, where he pursued his studies with intense application, and the year following visited London: soon after this he was taken by Dr. Douglas into his house as dissector, and also so tator to his son. In 1748, he was appointed London: soon after this he was taken by Dr. Douglas into his house as dissector, and also so tator to his son. In 1748, he was appointed lecturer to a society of suspense in Covent Garden, and the year following was admitted a member of the corporation of surgeons. In 1750, he obtained his doctor's degree from Glasgow, and became very distinguished as a physician, particularly in midwifery. In 1764, he was appointed physician-extraordinay to the queen, and the same year he published his we chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, and furnished the "Transactions" of that body with many valuable papers. In 1768, he was appointed physician extraordinay, which office he discharged with great repartion, adapting his anatomical knowledge to the arts of painting and sculpture. In 1781, he was exceeded Dr. Dothergill as president of the Society of Physicians in London, and his fame member of several foreign societies. Dr. Hunter formed a splendid anatomical museum in his house in Windmill Street, at an immense expense; after which, he extended his collection to natural history and general science. He also possessed a magnificent collection of Greek and Latin books, a cabinet of anciers medals, and a large stock of shells, corals, and other curious productions. This museum he bequeathed, at his death, to his nephew Dr. Baillie and Mr. Cruikshank, for thirty years, after which it was to go to the University of Clasgow. n. at Long Galderwood, 1718; p. 1783.

Hower, Henry, a Sootch divine and bibliot writer, who, after completine his school and college education in Sootland, became, first, a minister of the Sootch church, in his native country, and afterwards at the Sootch church at London Wall. He was a good scholar, a sound divine, very liberal in his principles, and an eloquent preacher. His works are, "Sacred Biography, or Sermons on the principal Characters recorded in Seripture," 6 vols; two vols. of Miscollaneous Sormons, translations of Lavater's "Physiognomy," 5t. Pierre's "Stadies of Mature," Saurin's Sermons, &c. n. at Culvoss, Perthshire, 1741; p. at Bristol Wells, 1802.
Hubstropon, Selina, Countess of, hust'ing-

HUNTINGDON, Selina, Countiess of, hunti-ing-don, one of the great patrons of Methoidism, was the second daughter of Washington Shirley, Earl Ferrers, and was married to Theophilus, earl of Huntingdon, in 1728. After a danger ous illness, she became deeply religious, and during the remainder of her life, supported a number of itnernat preachers, and built several chapels in various parts of the kingdom. Her religious sontiments were rigidly Calvinistic, and she was the patroness of all of that persua-and saw was the brokens of an of man persuasion. B. 1707; D. 1791.

Husp, Richard, hard, bishop of Worcester, an English divine and writer, who, after leaving the university of Cambridge, in 1767, became rector of Thurcaston, in Leicestershire. In 1775 he was ordained bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, whence he was translated to Worcester in 1781. In 1783 he refused the archbishopric of Canterbury. His literary works are numerous; "Letters on Romance and Chivalry," "Commentary on Horace's Art of Poetry," and "Twelve Discourses on the Prophecies," being among the chief of them. B. in Staffordshire, 1720; p. 1809.

1720; D. 1808. Froderick Yeates, hund-ston, a modern English painter, who completed his studies at the Royal Academy in 1829, othnbiting his first picture in 1821. In a short time he became extensively employed as a portrait-painter, and was very popular for his Spanish, Italian, and historical pieges. A quarrel with the hanging committee of the Royal Academy in 1839 induced him to join the Society of British Artists, to whose annual exhibitions he afterwards sent his works. He subsequently became president of this body. His best pictures are, "Arthur and Constance," the "Game of Morra," an Italian subject, a "Spanish Beauty and a Young Moorish Peasant." B. in London, 1801.

professor of anatomy to the Royal Academy, Which office he discharged with great reputawhich office he discharged with great reputation, adapting his anatomical knowledge to the in 1790 as secretary to Lord Gower, ambassador arts of painting and sculpture. In 1781, he to the French court. He was under-secretary succeeded Dr. Fothergill as president of the of state for War, and secretary of the Transury, Society of Physicians in London, and his fame in the Pitt administration. In 1823 he became having spread through Europe, he was chosen where he had sat from 1796, distinguished him-self by his profound knowledge of finance and political economy. As a follower of Adam Smith, he combated the prohibitive system of com-merce, and advocated the relaxation of customs duties and those on colonial produce. He met duties and those on coional produce. He met his death in an unfortunate manner, having been knocked down and run over by a locomotive at Parkside, near Liverpool, at the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway. B. at Birch-Moreton Court, Worcestershire, 1770; p. 1830.

Hutchinson

HUSS, John, Asses, a martyr, was educated at Parkside when have accladed in 1400 and at Prague, where he was ordained in 1400, and became rector of the university, and confessor to the queen. Meeting with some of the writings of Wickliffe, he perceived the errors of popery, and by his means a reformation was commenced in the university of Prague, to check which, the archbishop issued two decrees, whereby the new doctrines spread the more. The pope then granted a bull for the suppression of these errors, and Huss being cited to appear at Rome, was excommunicated for disobedience. He continued to propagate his principles, and was supported therein by Weneslaus, king of Bohemia, till 1414, when he was summoned to appear before the council of Constance. The remptor signature state into a saccondace, promising to preserve him in going to and returning from the council; but the members of that assembly, in violation of this pledge, decreed, "that no faith is to be kept with heratics;" and as Huss refused to retract his opinions, he was degraded, and burnt alive. After his death a civil war broke out in Bohemia. in which those who followed the martyr's doc-trines, and who were called Hussitos, fought against King Wenceslaus. The struggle lasted till 1437. Huss's works were printed at Nuremberg in 1558. B. at Hussinatz, Bohemia, about 1370; suffered 1415.

HUSSEY, Giles, hus-se, an English painter, born at Marnhull, Dorsetshire, who studied in France and Italy, possessed considerable talents, and painted some good pictures; but was somewhat eccentric, and met with little encouragement in proportion to his merits. B. 1710:

D. 1788.

HUTCHESON, Francis, hutch'-e-son, a philoso-phical writer, who received his education at Glasgow, after which he became pastor of a dissenting congregation in Dublin, where he dissenting congregation in Dublin, where he also kept an acaieny, till 1729. He afterwards removed to Glasgow, on being appointed professor of philosophy in the university of that city. His chief works are, "An Inquiry into the Ideas of Icantry and Virtue;" "A Treatise on the Passions," "A System of Moral Philosophy," five vols. B. in Ireland, 1604; D. at Glasgow, 1749. Glasgow, 1747.

HUTCHINSON, John, hutch'-in-son, a philologi-cal and biblical writer, who received a liberal education, after which he became steward, first education stee which he desired steerard, most to a country gentleman, and next to the duke of Somerset. Having a love for natural history, he made a large collection of fossils, which he intrusted to Dr Woodward, to be arranged, and an account published of them. The doctor never began the work, which induced Hutchinson to rely upon his own pen. He therefore quitted the duke's service, who, however, made him his rid-ing purveyor. He also gave him the presentaing purveyor. He also gave him the presenta-tion to the living of Sutton, in Sussex, which the ministry and in the House of Commons, Hutchinson bestowed on his friend Mr. Julius Bates, a zealous defender of his doctrines. In 1724, he published the first part of his "Moses's 1724, he phonshed the first part of his Lausers Principia," in which he ridiculed Woodward's "Natural History of the Earth." He also attempted to refute Sir Isaac Newton's doctrine of gravitation. In the second part he maintained, in opposition to the Newtonian system. that a plenum and the air are the principles of scripture philosophy. In this work he inti-mated that the idea of the Trinity might be system,—fire, light, and spirit; which is said to have made an impression on the mind of Dr. Clarke. Mr. Hutchinson was a great admirer of the Hebrew language, and maintained that all its radicals were to be explained by their etymologies; by the aid of which he fancied that he had discovered the true system of natural philosophy in the writings of Moses. For a time, his notions occasioned some warm controversy. being supported by several ingenious and pious writers, but they were zealously opposed in the universities. His works, which are very curi-ous, though observely written, have been printed in 12 vols. B. 1674; D. 1737.

HUTCHINSON, Thomas, lord-chief-instice, and afterwards lieutenant-governor of the colony of Massachusetts, was a native of Boston, Massachusetts, and had been much respected in that province for his able conduct on the judicial bench; but having covertly taken part with Great Britain against the American colonies, it was found necessary to remove him and place General Gage in the post of governor. Hutch-inson accordingly came to England, where he lived in a retired manner at Brompton. Gover-nor Hutchinson was the author of a "History of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay," &c. B. 1711;

D. 1780.

HUTCHINSON, John Hely, an Irish statesman and lawyer, who became secretary of state, and was a man of powerful eloquence and great and varied ability, which he devoted to the acquire-ment of a vast number of lucrative employ-ments. So great, indeed, was his avidity for office and emolument, that Lord North said, "If once and emolument, that Lord North said, "It England and Ireland were given to this man, he would solicit the Isle of Man for a potato garden." a JIJIS p. 1794. HUTCHINSON, John Hely, Earl of Donough more, the second son of the preceding, entered the army in 1774 as a corner in the JiM dragoons, and role as a corner in the best proposed to the property of the proposed to the property of the pro tenant-coloneley in the 77th, in 1783. At the commencement of the French revolution, he visited the French camp at a very interesting period, and saw Lafayette compelled to leave those troops of which he had been the favourite, and seek safety in flight. When war was de-clared against Fronce in 1793, he raised a regi-ment, and obtained the rank of colonel. He served in Flanders as aids-de-camp to Sir Ralph served in Fiancers as since-de-camp to Sir Raiph Aberromby, and subsequently in Ireland during the rebellion. In 1796 he was made a major-general, and in 1799 was wounded at the Helder. In the expedition to Egypt, in 1801, he was second in command to Sir Ralph Abercromby; and when that gallant officer was killed at the battle of Alexandria, the chief command devolved on Major-General Hutchinson; who, receiving reinforcements, advanced upon the enemy, and having pursued them to Cairo, a capitulation took place, and the expedition terminated in the evacuation of Egypt by the Prench. For his able services in this campaign. 17.000. For ms aggregate as Baron Hutchinson of Alexandria, and of Knocklotty, in the county of Tipperary, with a pension of 2000/. acounty of Typically, what a perhaps to 2000 per year. In 1806 he was sent on an extraordinary mission to the Prussian and Russian armies afterwards to the Court of St. Petersburg; and at a later period, to meet Queen Caroline at St. Omer's, as the personal friend of the king. In 1313 he become a full general, and in 1825 succeeded his brother as Earl of Donoughmore, Kee. B. 1757; p. 1832.

HUTTEN, Ulric von, hoof-ten, a German writer. He studied at Cologne and Frankfort-on-the-Oder, where he took the degree of M.A. at the age of 18. He then went to Italy; but receiving no supplies from his parents, he enlisted in the army, and served at the siege of Parma. In 1509 he returned to Germany, and was reduced to such poverty as to be obliged to beg his bread. In 1512, he published a Latin poem in praise of the emperor Maximilian, which gained him reputation and friends. The same gamed nim reputation and friends. The same year he went to Pavia to study the law, but falling into indigence, he again entered the army. He soon obtained his discharge, and returned to his native country, where he embraced the doctrines of Luther, and wrote some elegant pieces in Latin. For his epigrams the emperor knighted him, and made him poetlaureate. In 1518, he discovered a manuscript of Livy, which he published, as he afterwards did Pliny, Quintillian, and Marcellinus. His writings against the church of Rome were so severe, that the Pope sent orders to the inquisitor to seize him; but Hutten fled into Switzerland with Erasmus. B. at Steckelberg, Fran-conia, 1488; D. at Ufinau, near Zurich, 1523.

HUTTEN, Jacob, a native of Silesia, who, in the 16th century, founded the sect called the Bohemian or Moravian Brethren. These were the descendants of the Hussites, and appear to have given rise to the anabaptists. Hutten is supposed to have been burnt as a heretic at Innspruck.

HUTTON, James, hut'-ton, an English chemical Hirrox, James, hult-ton, an English chemical philosopher, who took the degree of doctor of medicine at Leyden, in 1749. He wrote many works after his return to England, principally on agriculture, mineralogy, mathematics, and chemistry. His "Dissertation on the Philosophy of Light and Heat," was first published in 1794. B. at Edinburgh, 1736; D. 1797. Hurrox, William, an ingenious and self-educated writer, was apprenticed to a stocking-weaver; and at the expiration of his time employed his leisure hours in bookbinding. In 1756 he armed a shorn for the sale of did books.

1750 he opened a shop for the sale of old books, to which he added a circulating library, at Birmingham; succeeded so well as to embark in the paper-making business; and by frugality and industry arrived at opulence. He wrote and industry arrived at opulence. He wrote several ingenious works, among which were Histories of "Birmingham," "Derby," "Black, "Bloom of Desworth Field," and the "Battle of Bosworth Field," "Tour to Scarborough," "Remarks on North Wales," "Pooms," &c. n. 1793; p. 1815. Hurroox, Charles, an English mathematician, who after prequiring some activation hearth.

who, after receiving some education, became teacher of a school at Jesmond, near Newcastleupon-Tyne. He afterwards removed to the latter place, and opened a school on his own account, meeting with considerable success in his undertaking. He published several mathe-matical works, and, in 1773, offered himself as a candidate for the professorship of mathematics at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. and passed his examination for the post in the and passed in the was made fellow of the Royal Society, and, a few years afterwards, foreign secretary to the same body. His mathenatical works were both numerous and valuable, He was made LL.D. of the university of Edin-burgh in 179, and is said to have received the sum of £6000 for condensing the "Philosophical Transactions." His "Course of Mathematics" is still one of the text-books of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. B. at New-castle-upon-Tyne, 1737; D. 1823.

HUNGENS, Constantine, hoi-gens, lord of Zuylichem, was secretary to the Prince of Orange, and president of the council, and is known by fourteen books of Latin poems, under the title of "Momenta Desultoria," consisting of epigrams and miscellaneous pieces. B. at the of epigrams and missellaneous pieces. B. at the Hague, 1586; b. 1687. HUVGENS, Christian, an eminent mathematician, son of the above, who, from his youth, evinced great aptitude for mathematical science, and in 1681 gave a specimen of his abilities in a book on the "Quadrature of Circles, Ellipscs, &c." Not long after, he published a treatise on horology, in which he described the model of a norther, in which he described the hold of a prewig-invented pendulum for clocks. In 1656 appeared his "System of Saturn," giving an account of the discovery which he made of a satellite attending that planet. In 1681 he account of the discovery which he made of a satellite attending that planet. In 1661 he visited England, and was chosen fellow of the Royal Society. He afterwards resided at Paris, Royal Society. He atterwards resulce at rears, on the invitation of Collect, who gave him a pension, and he was also admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences. His "Cosmothecros, or a Treatise on the Plurality of Worlds," was printing in 1895, the year of his death; and in 1700 appeared his "Opnscula Posthuma," in 1 vol. 4to. He wrote other works on geometry, reaching a stronger and cotter. In 1895, the works on geometry, and the stronger and cotter.

mechanics, astronomy, and optics. 2. 1020.
Huysum, John van, hoi'-sum, a Dutch painter of Mower and fruit pieces. His reputation was so great that he fixed immoderate prices on his works. He would never suffer any person to see, him while he was painting; so that his method of mixing his colours was an impene-trable secret. His flower-pieces are exquisitely beautiful, as are also his landscapes and animals. B. at Amsterdam, 1682; D. in England, 1749.

HYDE, Earl of Clarendon. (See CLARENDON.

Edward Hyde, Earl of.)

HYDE, Thomas, kide, a learned divine, who tudied at King's College, Cambridge, where he applied himself to the mastery of the Oriental languages. Dr. Walton employed him in his great work, the Polyglot Bible, and in the pre-ace greatefully acknowledged his assistance. In 1668 he was admitted of Queen's College, Oxford, where he took the degree of M.A., and was made under-keeper of the Bodleian Library. In 1665, he translated from the Persian, into Latin, Ulugh Beg's "Observations on the Longitude and Latitude of the Fixed Stars, with Notes," and soon after he obtained a probend in the thurch of Salisbury. In 1678, the archdeaconry of Gloucester was conferred on him; in 1682 he ook his degree of D.D.; in 1691 he was chosen Arabic professor; in 1700 appeared his most celebrated work, entitled "Veterum Persarum, celeorated work, entitled "Veterum Persarum, Magorum Religionis Historia," Besides the above preferments, he was made regius professor of Hebrew and canon of Christchurch. B. at Billingsley, Shropshire, 1636; p. at Oxford, 1703.

Hyder-Ali-Khan

HYDER-ALI-KHAN, hi'-der-a-lee-kan, a celebrated Indian chieftain, who became commander in-chief of the troops of the rajah of Mysore, and supplanted his master as ruler of this province in 1761. In 1767 he entered into an alliance with the Mahrattas against the British, but after concluding a peace with the latter in 1760, he turned his arms against his former allies. Once more obtaining their aid, after a contest which lasted about ten years, he suddenly invaded the presidency of Madras in 1750, and even threatened the annihilation of the British power in India. The war was carried on with great vigour, and the issue of the contest seemed doubtful, when, in 1782, Hyder died, leaving his territory to his son, Tippoo

Saib, who concluded a peace two years after.

B. about 1730. HYPATIA, hi-pai-she-a, an illustrious female, was the daughter of Theon, an eminent mathematician of Alexandria, whom she succeeded in the government of that school, had a number of disciples, and became very celebrated for her betures on Plato and Aristotle, both at Alex-andria and Athens. Synesus in particular, who afterwards became a Christian bishop, celebrated her praises in the most glowing terms. Orestes, the governor of Alexandria, had a high respect for Hypatia, and frequently mat a near respect for raypana, and frequently ensualted her on matters of importance. Between the governor and the patriarch Cyril there was a bitter enmity, which broke out into onen war, and the months siding with their chief, assembled in a riotous manner against Orestes, who was obliged to fly from the city. They then seized Hypatia, and having torn her in pieces, burnt her mangled limbs to ashes. She wrote a commentary on Diophantus, and other works, which have been lost. B. at Alexandria, between 370-380; killed at the same place, 415.

HYPERIDES, hi-per'-i-dees, an Athenian orator, the disciple of Isocrates and Plato, was for a long time the rival of Demosthenes, and distinguished himself by his eloquence, and the active part he took in the management of the Athenian republic. After the battle of Cranon, he was taken alive, and, that he might not be compelled to betray the secrets of his country, he cut out his tongue. Only two of his numerous orations remain, which are admired for the sweetness and elegance of their style. D. 322 B.C.

HYRCANUS, John, her-kai'-nus, high priest and prince of the Jews, succeeded (B.C. 135) his father Simon Maccabaus, who was murdered by his son-in-law Ptolemaus. The same traitor then invited Antiochus into Judæa, and that monarch accordingly laid siege to Jerusalem, which, however, held out against all his attempts. At length a peace was concluded on condition of the Jews becoming tributary to Autiochus, after whose death Hyrcanus restored his country to independence. p. 106 B.C. He was succeeded by his son, Aristobulus, who did not long survive him.

Hystaspes, his-tas-pees, a noble Persian, of the family of the Achæmonides. His son Darius reigned in Persia after the murder of the usurper Smerdis. Hystaspes was the first who intro-duced into Persia the mysteries of the Indian acquitted, several times, on the charge of fa-Brahmins; and to his researches in India the vouring the heresy of Nestorius, sciences were greatly indebted.

Thbetson

HYWEL AP OWAIN GWYNEDD, hoo-cl, a prince of North Wales, some of whose poems are in-cluded in the "Welsh Archwology." On the death of his father, in 1169, he endeavoured to ascend of his rather, in 1103, he endeavoured to ascend the throne in place of his brother, but was de-feated and wounded; on which he went to Ireland, where he died in 1171.

HYWEL AP MORGAN MAWE, prince of Glamorgan, in 1030, is represented as having been one of the wisest and best of the British princes. B. 913; D. 1043, at the great age of 130 years. In this line we have the following instances of longevity:-Morgan Mawr, aged 129; Hywel ab Rhys, 124; and Arthvael ab Rhys. 120.

HYWEL DHA, or Howel the Good, a cele-brated prince and legislator of Wales, who went to Rome with the purpose of revising the code of laws for the government of his country.

For names not found in I. look in J and Y Russian names in JE are sometimes begun with a simple E.7

IAMBLICHUS, i-am-ble'-kus, king of Arabia, who was deprived of his estates by Augustus, after the battle of Actium, for supporting the cause of Mare Antony; but his son was re-stored to the throne by the same emperor, D.C. 22.

BELICHUS, a Greek author, and a musician by profession, wrote several works in Greek; among others, one entitled "Babyloni-cus," preserved make library of the Escurial in Spain. Lived in the 2nd century.

IAMBLICAUS, a Platonic philosopher, who studied under Porphyry, and gained many dis-gainst Porphyry's letter on the Egyptian mysteries. Lived about 350.

IAMBLICHUS, a Greek author, was a native of Apamea, in Syria, and flourished in the reign of Constantine and Julian the Apostate. D. about 363.

IAROSLAV, George, yar'-os-laf, grand-duke of Russia, son of Vladimir I., dethroned his brother Swiatopolk in 1015, and reigned till 1054. He suppressed several insurrections, and defeated Bolesias, king of Poland, and the emperors of Constantinople. He encouraged architecture and painting, built schools, made many salutary laws, and rendered the Russian church independent. Henry L, king of France, married his daughter, Anne. Iaroslav founded the city which bears his name.

IBARRA, Joachim, e-bar'-ra, a Spanish printer, whose editions of the classical authors of his country are regarded as marvels of the typogra-phical art. B. at Saragossa, 1725; D. at Madrid, 1785.

IBAS, e'-bas, a bishop of Edessa, in Mesopotamia, in the 5th century, who is noted in ecclesiastical history on account of the opposite decisions of different councils, relative to the orthodoxy or heterodoxy of his opinions.

IBBLTSON, Julius Clesar, ilf-bet-son, a landduter, t England, from the su-cess with which he imi-tated the style of that painter. B. in Scarborough, Yorkshire; D. 1817.

IBBINISON, Agnes, a lady who devoted her attention to the study of astronomy, geology, and Lotany, particularly to that branch of the lastnamed scence which deals with the physiology of plants. She made many highly interesting interescopical observations on the structure of vegetables, which were published in the "Annals of Philosophy" and other periodicals. She was the daughter of A. Thompson, Esq., of London, and had been married to Mr. Ibbetson, a barrister, by whose death she was left a widow. D. 1523.

IDER, Cotheddin Ibek, i'-bek, the chief slave of Scheliabeddin, sultan of India, on whose death he usurped the throne, and added to his dominious many provinces of Hindostan. An account of his conquests was written in a volume entitled "Tage al Mather."

Chiling "lage a mather."

Inex, Azeddin Ibek, or Ibeg, first sultan of the Manneluke Turks in Egypt, had been an efficer in the court of Malek-al-Saleh, sultan of Egypt. On the latter's death, Ibek married his widow, and became partner with her in the in 1257.

IBBAUM, ib'-ra-hem, the son of the caliph Mahadi, brother of Haroun-al-Raschid, and uncle of Armi and Mamun. He was an excel-lent poet and musician, and the first orator of his time. He was proclaimed calibh at Bagdad. on the death of his nephew Amin, in 817; but with a powerful army, Ibrahim thought it prudent to abdicate the throne. D. at Samara, in 839.

IDRAHIM, the son of Massoud, eighth caliph of the dynasty of Gaznevides, succeeded his brother Ferokzad. He acquired great reputation as a just and pious prince, notwithstanding the frequent wars he made on the borders of Hindostan, in which he gained such advantages and letters. D. 1098.

M, emperor of the Turks, was the son of Achnet, and succeeded his brother Achmet IV. in 1640. He besieged and took the capital of Candia from the Venetians, in 1644; but his crucities and debaucheries were so great that the soldiers strangled him in 1649.

IBRAHIM IMAM, the chief priest of the Mohammedan religion, was a descendant of the illustrious house of the Abassides. His reputation and authority became so great, that Marvan, or Hemar, the last caliph of the Omniades, in of riemar, the has campin of the chimnaces, in Arabia, caused him to be put to death by thrust-ing his head into a bag of lime, a.d. 748. IBRAHIM EFFENDI, a native of Poland, who attained by his courage and talents to the highest dignities in the Ottoman empire. He established the first printing-press in Turkey, in 1728. The Count de Bonneval furnished him by West the Berghem of Strasburg. He had served in the French recess with which he imipublican hussars, but became so violent a punican nussins, but became so violent a royalist, that he was imprisoned. In 1802 he went to Constantinople, embraced Mohamme-danism, and instructed the Turkish troops in the European system of discipline. He subsequently travelled through the north of Europe, and, under the name of Medelshim, held & government office in Westphalia; afterwards was engineer to Ali Pacha; and, on quitting that employ, wandered through various parts of Asia. Africa, and America. He ultimately, being in a state of absolute destitution, shot himself at Paris, in 1826. He wrote a "Memoir of Greece and Albania during the Government of Ali Pacha."

IBBAHIM BEY, a famous Mameluke chieftain. who for some time governed Cairo, in conjunction with Mourad Bey, but afterwards became sole ruler, and head of the Mamelukes. The French, when they invaded Egypt, defeated him, in 1799, at Al-Arish. He escaped the general massacre of the Mamelukes in 1805, by refusing to accept Mehemet Ali's invitation to visit Cairo with the rest of his ill-fated followers, B. in Circassia, about 1735; D. in exile in Nubia.

1816.

IBRAHIM PACHA, vicercy of Egypt, step-son and successor of Mehemet Ali, was inured from infancy to the toils and turmoils of a camp, and at an early age displayed the adventurous spirit, high courage, and undaunted resolution, which distinguished his subsequent career. In 1919 he became generalissimo of the Egyptian army; and, charged with the task of remodelling and and, charged with the task of removering and disciplining it after the French fashion, pro-ceeded vigorously to work, and soon produced a marked change in the character of his troops. In the course of a few campaigns he completely defeated the Wahabees in Arabia, who from 1818 to 1824 had resisted all the efforts of the Egyptian forces to subdue them. During the struggle for Greek independence, Ibrahim was conspicuous as leader of the Turks. His army overran the whole of the Morea, and committed as to acquire the name of the "Conquerer" frightful devastations and cruefties; but the He reigned forty-two years, during which time battle of Navarino, October 20, 1827, when the creeted a number of cities, mosques, and hose combined British, Russian, and French navies, pitals, he was also a liberal encourager of arts, under the command of Admiral Codrington, under the command of Admiral Codrington, destroyed the Turco-Egyptian fleet, sent him back to Egypt, shorn of his conquests, and paved the way for the independence of Greece. In 1831 he marched to the conquest of Syria: and having completely routed the sultan's troops at Konich in 1832, was only restrained from Adding in 1832, was only restrained from marching to Constantinople by the intervention of Russia; but his subjugation of Syria was complete, and a few abortive attempts made by the population to throw off the Egyptian yoke only ended in riveting their chains more firmly than before. In 1839, the sultan having made another effort for the recovery of Syria, was completely overthrown by Ibrahim at Nizil. But the European powers now interfered. An English fleet, under the command of Admirals Stopford and Napier, was sent to the Syrian highest dignities in the Ottoman empire. He Stopford and Napier, was sent to the Syrian established the first printing-press in Turkey, coast, and having reduced Acre, forced Irabity, in 1728. The Count de Bonnevel furnished him to conclude a treaty, by which Syria was once with the types, the first work he produced being nor given up to the suitan. In 1846, Ibrahim a treatise on the military art. He afterwards visited England and France. On September published the account of an expectation against 1st, 1845, he was noninated vicercy of Egypt, the Afghans, a Turkish grammar, and a lustry in the room of Mehemet All, whom increasing of Turkey; D. 1744.

IBRAHIM AINSOUR EFFENDI, whose real name was Cerfbere, was the son of a Jew at

Thrahim of Schiraz

excesses, and unbounded indulgence in his ripe: years, cut Ibrahim off after a short reign of two months and ten days. B. in Albania, 1789 D. 1848.

IBRAHIM OF SCHIRAZ, a Mussulman doctor o law, who wrote several works on jurisprudence in Arabic.-There was another of the same name, surnamed Merouzi, some of whose works are extant.

ICILIUS, Lucius, i-sil'-e-us, a Roman tribune, to whom Virginia was betrothed. When the latter was carried off by the decemvir Appius-Claudius, Icilius raised an army against the De-cemvirs, and, having caused their fall, was created, by the people, tribune for the second time, B.C. 449. Sheridan Knowles has founded a tragedy, called "Virginius," upon these incidents; and Macaulay, in one of his ballads, commemorates the story of Virginius.

Ictinus, ik-ti'-nus, an Athenian architect, who lived in the 5th century B.C., and was employed by. Pericles in the erection of the Parthenon. He also built the temple of Ceres and Proserpine at Eleusis, and the temple of Apollo Epicurus in Arcadia.

IDRIS GAWR, i'-dris-gour, a Welsh astronomer, who is ranked with Gwidion ab Don and mer, who is ranked with Gwiddon at Don and Gwyn ab Nudd, as the three great astronomers of Britain. A high mountain in Wales is still called Cader Idris, or the "Seat of Idris," When he lived is unknown.

IERMAE, yer'-mak, hetman of the Cossacks of the Don, at the end of the 16th century, who, in 1580, undertook, at the head of six thousand men, the invasion of Siberia. After many fierce ongagements, he penetrated with 500 horsemen as far as Sibir, the capital, which he took; very soon afterwards, the khans of the neighbouring tribes tendered him their submission. Iermak fearing that he should not be able to retain his conquests, solicited the aid of Ivan IV., czar of Russia, promising to become his vassal. The czar sent him reinforcements, but he was slain by a Tartar chief, in 1583. IFFLAND, Augustus William, if'-fland, a German author and actor, who became the leading comedian of Germany. He subsequently pro-duced a great number of dramas, was appointed director of the theatre at Mannheim, and afterwards of the court spectacles at Berlin. He brought out several adaptations from the French, and from the Italian comedies of Gol-doni. B. at Hanover, 1759: D. 1814.

IGNATIUS, St., ig'-nai-she-us, a father of the Church, and martyr, was a native of Syria, and a disciple of St. John the Evangelist, by whom he was made bishop of Antioch, a.p. 63. After discharging the episcopal office with great zeal discharging die episcopia onee with great zear for forty years, the emperor Trajan, passing through Antioch, in his Parthian expedition, sent for him, and endeavoured to prevail upon him to renounce his religion. Ignatius continued inflexible; on which the emperor sent him under a guard of soldiers to Rome, where him under a guard of sources to the amphi-he was exposed to wild beasts in the amphimartyr joyfully heard his sentence, and endured harry formly heard in sentence, and control his sufferings with fortitude. Two plous deacons of his church gathered up his bones, and conveyed them to Antioch, where they were carefully preserved. Seven of his genuine opis-Oxford in 1645. Some others have been attri-buted to him: but these are generally accounted ties are stain, and were published by Usher at 100.1 B. 1/25, Some others have been attended to the stain to the search are been attended to their but these are generally accounted behalf on the stain the stain the search accounted by the stain t that they were genuine, and that the others were forgeries or abridgments. Suffered mar-tyrdom between 107 and 116.

Imperiali

IGNATIUS, patriarch of Constantinople, was son of the emperor Michael Curopalates, and of Procopia, daughter of the emperor Nicephorus. When his father was deposed by Leo the Armenian, he and his brother were confined in a man, he and his brother were commed in a monastery. Ignatius, whose original name was Nicetas, took the religious yows, and in 847 was raised to the patriarchate; but having rebuked Bardas, one of the principal lords of the court, he was banished to the isle of Terebinthos, and Photius appointed in his stead. A council was called at Constantinople to compel Ignatius to resign, which he refused to do for some time; but close confinement and rigorous usage in-duced him to yield. When Basil became emperor, he restored Ignatius to his dignity; upon which he immediately excommunicated Photius, and caused the eighth general council to be called at Constantinople. B. 799; D. 878. IGNATIUS-LOYOLA. (See LOYOLA.)

IGOB, e'-gor, grand-duke of Russia, succeeded his father Rurick, and, after making war a long time against his neighbours, proceeded to ravage the East, deluging with blood Pontus, Paphlagonia, and Bithynia. He left his throne

Taphagona, and haryna. He teet his throlle to his wife Olga, who, in her old age, embraced Christianity. p. 235. Latra, Jacob, Wite, an English printer and letter-founder, who published some singular pieces, such as appetended translation of the book of Jasher, an oration proving that this world is hell, that men are fallen spirits, and that the fire to destroy them at the day of judgment will be immaterial, &c. D. 1768.

ILLIYD VARCHOG, ill'-tud var'-chog, or, "Iltutus the Knight," a saint who accompanied Garmon to Britain, and was placed at the head of the Congregation of Theodosius, so called from being established by that emperor. He introduced an improved method of ploughing among the Welsh. p. about 480.

among the Weish. D. 20001480.

IMBERT, Bartholomew, im-bair, a French poet, who became a member of the Academy of Nismes, and cultivated literature, particularly poetry, with success. He wrote a poem entitled "The Judgment of Paris," and also published a volume of fables, which, though excellent, cannot be compared with La Fontinica. He was literated he author of Fontinica. He was literated he author of Fonexcellent, cannot be compared with La Fontaine's. He was likewise the author of a novel entitled "The Mistakes of Love," and some other pieces. n. at Nismes, 1747; n. at Paris, 790. IMPERT, Jean, an advocate, who published "Enchiridion Juris scripti Galliæ," 1559; "In-

"Enchiridion Juris scripti Gallie," 1559, "Institutiones Forense," 1541. D. about 1599.
Lunber, Joseph Gabriel, a French painter, who was instructed in his art by Yander Mellen and Le Brun. At the age of 34 he entered into eorder of 85. Bruno, but still continued to paint. n. at Marseilles, 1654; p. 1749.
Luntorg, James William, war-hofe, a celebrated genealogist, of a noble family. He published—1. "De Notitia Procerum Gormania;" 2 vols.; 2. "Historia Genealogica Italiae et Hispaniae;" 3. "Familiaram Italiae, Hispaniae, Gallie, et Portugallie;" 4. "Magna Britanniae oma appendice," 2 vols. folio; 5. "Recherches sur les Grandes d'Espagne." E. at Nuremberg, 1651; p. 1729. 1651; D. 1728.

important affairs, and in the conclave of 1730 was within one vote of being elected pope himself. Few excelled him in liberality, probity, and love of literature. B. 1651; D. 1737.

and love of literature. 2. 1651; p. 1737.

184, 1-na, king of the West-Saxons, one of the kingdoms of the Heptarchy, famous for the laws he instituted and for his expeditions against neighbouring princes. In 228 he went on a pilgriunge to Rome, where he is said to have regreted an English collect. I have a heart for the property of erected an English college. He was a benefactor

English authoress, who, at the age of 16, ran away from her home in Suffolk, and tried ineffectually to obtain an engagement as actress in a London theatre. She subsequently found employment on the provincial stage, and, after a varied career, married Mr. Inchbald, an actor, who died in 1779. In 1780 she obtained an engagement to play minor parts at Covent Garden Theatre, and remained in that position till 1789, when she retired from the stage. A few years before, she had written a faree, which, being successful, she continued to write for the theatre, and produced in succession 19 plays, receiving large sums for several of them. Between the years 1806 and 1809 she edited "The British" and "Modern" Theatres, and a "The british" and Modern Theatres, and a collection of farces, in all 42 vols. But the works which cause her name to be remembered are two novels—"A Simple Story," and "Nature and Art." She had written her autobiography, for which £1000 had been offered and refused by her, and which was destroyed at her request after her death. Her maiden name was Simpson. B. in Suffolk, 1753; D. 1821.

INCHOFFER, Melchior, inch'-hofe-er, a German Jesuit, who at first studied the law, but abandoned that profession and entered the Jesuits' college at Rome in 1607. In 1630 he wrote a book, entitled, "The Virgin Mary's Letter to the People of Messina Proved to be Genuine." Having quarrelled with his brethren, he wrote a satire against them, which was printed after his death, under the title of "Monarchia Folipsorum." He also wrote the "Ecclesiastical History of Hungary." B. at Vienna, 1594; D.

at Milan, 1648.

INCLEDON, Benjamin Charles, ink'-el-don, a INCLEDON, Benjamin Charles, xx*-t-t-don, a famous English singer, was born at 5t. Keverne, in Cornwall, where his father practised as a surgeon. When only eight years old, the astonishingly fine tones of his voice induced his parents to article him to Jackson of Exeter, under whose tuition he remained as a chorister in Excer cathedral until he was 15. Not liking the restraints to which he was there subject, he quitted Exeter in 1779, and entered as a common sailor on board the Formidable, of 98 common sattor on board the Formidolle, of 189 grus, and remained in the royal navy five years, during which time he went to the West Indies, and saw some service. His rocal abilities having attracted notice, he was advised to try his fortune on the stage. He accordingly joined a company at Southsampton, in 1783, and next year accepted an engagement at Bath, where the manager introduced him to the acquaintance of Rauzinui, who did much towards perfecting him in the vocal art. In 1790 he made his début at Covent Garden and an irregular mode of life, compelled him to quit the stage. His voice combined uncommon power, sweetness, and flexibility, both in the natural tones and in the falsetto, and his intonation was remarkably correct. His execution of "The Storm," "Black-eyed Susan," or any of the better sort of the old English ballads and hunting songs, was such as, once heard, was never forgotten. B. 1764; D. 1826.

INDIBILIS, in-dib'-i-lis, prince of the Hergetes of Spain, entered into an alliance with the or spann, entered into an attracted with the Carthaginians, and assisted to gain a victory over Publius Scipio, father of Scipio the Great, who was killed in the battle, 212 B.C. Subsequently, he became the ally of Scipio the Great (see Scipio), and fought under his banner against the Carthaginians, hoping thus to be allowed to retain his kingdom by the Romans. But being deceived in these expectations, he revolted, and, after various struggles, lost his life in battle, 205 B.C.

life in battle, 205 B.C.

INDULTRUS, in-dulfus, supposed to be the seventy-seventh king of Scotland, began his reign in 953. The first few years of his reign were peaceable: but afterwards his kingdom was several times invaded by the Danes, who were enraged against him for entering into an alliance with the English. On the Danes landing in great force in the north, Indulphus marched against them, and compelled them to fly to their ships; but, pursuing them too eagerly, he was slain by an arrow; p. 961.

eagenty, ne was sain by an arrow; b. 901. INZZ DE GASTRO, d'noisé aké af-tro, a noble lady of Castile, famous for her beauty and her misfortanes. Don Pedro, son of Alphonso IV., king of Portugal, fell in love with and secretly married her. The king, on discovering their union, desired his son to abandon her, but on his reflusing to do so, caused liner to be assasting. sinated, in 1355. On succeeding to the throne, in 1357, Don Pedro executed the most summary vengeance upon the murderers of his former wife, and causing her body to be disinterred, crowned her remains, and proclaimed her his queen. The Portuguese poet Camöens (see CAMÖENS) founded a tragedy upon this incident, and an excellent play has been written upon the same subject by Mrs. Hemans.

INGEMANN, Bernhard Severin, in -ger-man, a Danish poet and novelist, whose father, the Protestant pastor of Torkildstrup, in the island of Falster, died while his son was very young. His mother contrived, however, to send him to the university of Copenhagen, where, at the age of 23, he carried off the gold medal for his essay in answer to the question "What relation do poetry and eloquence bear to each other?" and dioquence bear to cach other?" A year previously he published a volume of lyrics, and, in 1814, produced "The Black Knights," an epical and allegorical poem, on the model of Spenser's "Faeric Queenz." Subsequently he wrote two tragedies, "Masaniello" and "Bianca," which became very popular on the Danish stage. A third drama, "The Shepherd of Tables." were represented by a deliberation of Calcars." of Tolosa," was unsuccessful; and, although he afterwards wrote several dramas, none were composed with a view to theatrical representation. After having travelled in Europe between the years 1818 and 1820, he wrote a volume of poems, and commenced a series of romances, embodying historical and traditional incidents Theatre, with great success, as Demot, in in the mediaval history of his native country, "The Poor Solder," and rose at once into These romances, several of which have been popularity, which he continued to enjoy till the translated into English, were written in imitalinfirmities consequent upon advancing years, tion of Sir Walter Segtt, and became exceedingly popular in Denmark. In 1822 he was nominated professor of the Danish language and literature at the college of Söröe, near Copenhagen, and, in 1842, was appointed director of the same institution, which may be called the Eton of Denmark. B. at Torkildstrup, island of Falster, 1789; D. 1862.

Ingenhouse

Ingrassia

INGERMOUSZ, Johann, ing-en-hoos, an eminent Dutch physician and chemist. Going early to England, and learning the Suttonian method of inoculation, he went to Vienna, on the recommendation of Sir John Pringle, to inoculate the mendation of Sir John Pringle, to inoculate the daughter of the emperon, for which he was made imperial physician, and obtained a pension. He was a fellow of the Royal Society. He wrote,—I. "Experiments upon Vegetables;" 2. A Latin Translation of Hulme's Treaties on the Stone, Scurry, and Gout; 3. Several Chemical Treatiess on Impregnating Water, e., with Find Air; 4. Papers in the "Philosophical Transactions," &c. n. at Breda, 1730; 7, 1750 1799.

INGHEN, William Van, ing-hen, a Dutch historical painter, who, after being the pupil of Anthony Grebber, studied in Italy, and, on his return, settled at Amsterdam, where his works are held in great esteem. B. at Utrecht, 1651 : D. about 1720.

INGHIRAMI, Cavaliere Francesco, in-ge-ra'-me, an eminent Italian archæologist, who applied himself assiduously to the study of ancient art. His great work, entitled "Monumenti Etruschi in six volumes, published in 1826, has been the source from which writers on Etruscan antiquities have derived their knowledge. He was also author of a number of other works on the art and remains of antiquity, and, for a long period, was keeper of the Laurentine library at Florence. B. at Volterra, in Tuscany, in 1772; D. 1846.

INGLIS, Sir James, in'-glis, author of a famous ork, entitled the "Complaint of Scotland." work, entitled the "Complaint of Scotland," published in 1548, was descended from an old family of Fifeshire. He was an adherent of the French faction against the English, the conten-tions of these two parties having distracted the Scottish councils of the period. He distinguished himself in some skirmishes which preceded the battle of Pinkey, and was knighted on the field. B. in the reign of James IV.; D. 1554. INGLIS, John, D.D., a Scottish divine, who, in 1796, succeeded Principal Robertson as minister of Grayfriars parish, Edinburgh, and was for about 30 years the leader of the moderate party in the Scottish Establishment. Besides minor publications, he wrote two works of conminor publications, he wrote two works of con-siderable importance, one being on the "Evi-dences of Christianity" and the other a "De-fence of Church Establishments." B. in Perth-

shire, 1763; D. 1834.

Inguis, Henry David, a writer of some eminence, whose earliest works were published in the name of Derwent Couway, was a native of Scotland, and, impelled by the ardent desire to visit foreign countries which distinguishes so many of his countrymen, and also by an eager love of literature, he travelled over most parts of the Continent, carefully recording his obser-vations. His first work was entitled "The Tales of Ardennes," which was followed by " Solitary Walks through many Lands;" after which appeared his "Travels in Norway and Sweden," "Spain in 1830," "The New Gil Blas," &c.
After his return from Spain, he made a tour through Ireland, the result of which was an excellent work entitled "Ireland in 1834." His literary labours impaired his constitution, and having been seized with a disease of the brain, he died in 1835. B. 1795.

INGLIS, Sir Robert Harry, an English poli-tician, who for a long period represented the University of Oxford in the House of Commons. After an educational career at Winchester and Christ Church, Oxford, he was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1808, and subsequently became private secretary to Viscount Sidmouth. In 1824 he was returned to Parliament as member for Dundalk, and, two years later, sat for Ripon. When Sir Robert Peel introduced the Roman Catholic Relief Bill, in 1829, he resigned his seat for Oxford University, which Inglis henceforth represented, till his retirement from public life, in 1853. He was a steady supporter of church and state, opposed the Reform Bill, the emancipation of Catholics and Jews, and, throughout his career, exhibited a perfect example of the thorough Conservative. B. in London, 1786; D. 1855.

INGLIS, Sir John Eardley Wilmot, K.C.B., the "Hero of Lucknow," a designation conferred upon him in consequence of his gallant defence of the British residency in that city against the insurgents in 1557, having succeeded to the command there on the death of Sir Henry Lawrence. Sir John was the son of the Rev. Dr. Inglis, bishop of Nova Scotia, and entered the army as ensign in the 32nd regiment, in 1833, and continued in the same corps, passing through every grade from ensign to full colonel, which latter rank he held in it at his death. He first saw active service in the Canadian rebellion of 1837, afterwards passed through the campaigns in the Punjab in 1848-49; succeeded to the command of one of the columns of attack at the siege of Mooltan, and was made brevet at the sigle of intofain, and was made brette of Goojerat. He was afterwards appointed assistant to Sir Henry Lawrence at Lucknow; and after that distinguished officer's death, held the post till relieved by Lord Clyde and Sir James Outram. He was created a baronet, and made brevet major-general for his conduct on this occasion, and was subsequently placed in command of the troops in the Ionian Islands. His health, however, had been shaken by the terrible anxieties, privations, and fatigues he had undergone in defending Lucknow; and, notwithstanding every attention was bestowed upon him, he never recovered, and died at Homburg, where he had gone in the hope of reinvi-gorating his exhausted system, on the 27th of September, 1892. B. in Nova Scotia, 1814. Sir John was married to a daughter of Frederick Thesiger, Lord Chelmsford; and in him the British nation lost one of its most able, honest, and distinguished officers.

INGRAM, Robert, in'-gram, an English divine, who entered at Corpus Christi College, Cam-bridge, of which he became fellow, and took there his degrees in arts. His first preferment was the perpetual curacy of Bridhurst, in Kent; after which he obtained, successively, the small vicarage of Orston, in Nottinghamshire, and the vicarages of Wormington and Boxted, in Esser. He wrote a work called "Accounts of the Ten Tribes of Israel being in America, ori-ginally published by Manasseh Ben Israel; with Observations thereon." This was published in country from the fury of the plague. B. 1511; D. 1581.

Observations thereon. 1792. B. 1727; D. 1804. John Philip, in-gras'-se-a, a phy-

INGERS, Jean Dominique Auguste, ängr, a distinguished French painter, whose father, a painter and musician, sought to inspire him with a love of the musical art. His predilection for painting was, however, so strong, that he was allowed to study it exclusively. After After having spent some years in the atcher of David, he won, in 1901, the second great prize for painting. In 1802 he produced one of his most celebrated works—"The Bather." In 1804 he painted a portrait of Napoleon as first consul, and again in 1806 as emperor. He resided for and again in 1909 as emperor. He resided for fifteen years at Rome, and four years at Flo-rence, in both of which cities he painted many of his best works. So great is the estimation o'Ingrès in France, that, in the great Exposition at Paris, in 1:55, an entire department was alletted to him for the exhibition of his numerous paintings. He was made chevalier of the Legion of Honour in 1831, and commander in 1845. p. at Montauban, 1781.

INGULPHUS, in-qul'-phus, abbot of Croyland in the 11th century, and favourite of William the Conqueror, to whom he was secretary. He rebuilt his monastery, and obtained for it many privileges. His supposed work, the "History of Croyland Abbey," has been translated from the Latin, and published in Bohn's Antiquarian Library. B. about 1030; D. 1109.

INMAN, Rev. James, in-man, an eminent mathematician, many years professor of mathematics at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth dockyard. He was the oldest of Cambridge senior wranglers, his degree dating as far back as 1300, and was long celebrated in naval circles for his application of science to navigation and shipbuilding. He laboured very many years un-obtrusively, but zealously, in his country's service. He sailed round the world with Flinders, as astronomer, was wrecked with him, and took part with the late Sir John Franklin in that celebrated action in which a fleet of British merchantmen beat off the French Admiral Linois. While professor of mathematics at the Royal Naval College, he reduced to system the previous ill-arranged methods of navigation, and published several valuable works now in general use in the naval service; but he was best known by his having been the first person in England who built ships on scientific principles, and by his having educated a class of men at whose hands the promised "reconstruction" of the British navy is to take place.
Dr. Inman's translation of "Chapman," with his valuable annotations, is the text-book on which all subsequent writers on naval architec-ture have proceeded. p. 1772; p. 1859.

INNOCENT I., in'-no-sent, pope, was a native of Albano, and elected to the pontifical chair in 402. He proceeded to Ravenna to request the emperor Honorius to make peace with Alaric; but during his absence the latter plundered

Rome. p. at Ravenna, 417.

INNOCENT II. ascended the throne in 1130. He was elected by part only of the conclave, the rest choosing Peter de Leon, the son of a Jew, who took the name of Anacletus II., and Jew, Who book the name to American I., and were acknowledged by the kings of Scoldand and elected for the princes of Europe. Being driven from I taly, and to the princes of Europe. Being driven from I taly, and to have die locils. On the death of his rival and the addies 2. 165: j. 1.724. 538 sician of Palerno, who, in 1575, delivered his tion of his successor, Victor III., he returned to Rome, and held the second Lateran council in 1139. D. at Rome, 1143.

INNOCENT III. (Lothario Conti) came of a On account of his learning he noble family. was made cardinal, and, in 1198, elected pope. He encouraged the crusades to the Holy Land. promoted one against the Albigenses, laid the kingdom of France under interdict, and excom-municated John, king of England. He greatly extended his temporal dominions, and raised the papal authority to its highest degree of power. B. at Anagni, 1160; D. at Perugia, power. 1216

INNOCENT IV. was a Genoese, and became chancellor of the Roman church. Gregory IX, created him a cardinal in 1227. He succeeded Celestine IV. in 1243, at which time the court of Rome was engaged in a contest with the emperor Frederick II. Innocent was obliged to retire to France, where he held the council of Lyons, in which Frederick was excommunicated. He is said to have been the first who gavered hats to the cardinals. p. at Naples, 1254.

Innocent V., a Dominican, became arch-bishop of Lyons, cardinal, and lastly pope, in 1276, but died five months after his election.

Some religious pieces of his have been printed.

INNOCENT VI., cardinal bishop of Ostia, was advanced to the papacy in 1352. He was a man of great learning and liberality, and some of his letters are extant. D. at Avignon, 1862. INNOCENT VII. was elected pope in 1404, but not without great opposition. B. at Abruzzo.

1336: p. 1406

INNOCENT VIII., a noble Genoese, of Greek extraction, obtained the tiara, in succession to Sixtus IV., in 1484. He endeavoured to organize another crusade, but without success. B. 1431; D. 1492.

INNOCENT IX. ascended the papal throne on the death of Gregory XIV., in 1591, but died two months afterwards. B. at Bologna, 1519;

Two months attended. In at Dologia, 1995, p. at Rome, 1591.

INNOCENTY. (John Baptist Pamfill), a Roman, succeeded Urban VIII., in 1614, at the age of 73. He condemned the doctrines of Jansonius, and prosecuted the Barberini family with great violence. B. 1571; D. 1655.

INNOCENT XI.—Innocent X. gave him a cardinal's hat and a bishopric. He was elected pope in 1678, and reformed many abuses in the ecclesiastical state. He had a contest with Louis XIV. of France about the right of disposing of benefices and church lands, claimed posing of senences and curren infas, claimed by that monarch, and confirmed to him by an assumbly of his dergy, which nearly terminated in a separation of the French church from the Roman communion. This pope effected a condition between Germany, Foliand, and Venice, against the Purks. n. at Comp. (ii) n. 1699.

Invocant XIII. (Antonio Fignatelli), a Nea-fivocant XIII.

politan of a noble family, succeeded Alexander VIII. in 1691. He abolished the extraordinary distinctions paid to the nephews of popes, and condemned the "Marins of the Saints," written by Fénélon. B. at Naples, 1614;

p. at Rome, 1700.

INNOCENT XIII. (Michael Angelo Conti), a Roman, and the eighth pope of his family, was elected to the papal chair in 1721. He gave a pension to the grandson of James II., and is said to have died of chagrin for having been persuaded to bestow a cardinal's hat on Du INTAPHERNES, in-ta-fer'-nees, one of the in business as publisher of illustrated books of seven lords of Persia who conspired to dethrone Smerdis the usurper, 521 B.C. He afterwards endeavoured to seize the crown, for which Darius condemned him to death, with all his family. The wite of Intaphernes presented her-self before Darius in a suppliant posture, and not only obtained a pardon for herself, but for any one of her relations whom she might name. She chose her brother, saying she might have another husband and other children, but that, as her father and mother were dead, she could not have another brother. On this, Darius par-doned her brother and son; but Intaphernes was executed.

INWOOD, William, in'-wood, an English surveyor and architect, who, with his sons, designed many churches and private buildings in London. He and his son Henry were the architects of St. Paneras church, Euston Road, London, the lower portion of which is an adaptation from an Ionic temple named the Erechtheion, at Athens. The tower is also a copy of the Tower of the Winds at Athens. The Westminster Hospital was his design, in which he was assisted by his son

Charles. B. about 1771; p. 1843.

lxwood, Henry William, was educated for the architectural profession, and spent several years copying and executing plans of the most cele-brated buildings at Athens, &c. The designs for St. Paneras church were prepared after some of these drawings. He published a splendid work, called "Fragments of Athenian Archi-tecture," and commenced a second work on tecture," Grecian and Egyptian architectural art; but, owing to his unexpected death, the work remained unfinished. n. 1791; lost at sea, 1843. Ixwood, Charles Frederick, brother of the above, assisted his father William in many of his works, and was himself architect of the church of All Saints, at Great Marlow, Buckinghamshire. B. 1798; D. 1810.

IOLO GOCH, e-o'-lo goch, a Welsh bard, who lived with Owen Glendower, by whom he was employed to compose warlike songs to rouse his countrymen against the English. Lived between 1370 and 1420.

IPHICEATES, i-fik'-ra-tees, a celebrated Athenian general, who, by introducing some novel improvements in warfare, defeated the Thebans and Spartans. He was the son of a shoemaker, and once, when reproached with the meanness of his origin, answered that he would be the first of his family, whilst his detractor would be the last of his own. He was at the height of his fame between 400 and 360 p.c.

IPHITUS, king of Elis, in Greece, if-e'-tus, memorable as the institutor of the famous Olympic games, about the year 884 B.c. These Olympic games, about the year SSIs.. These games, at first consisting only of athletic exercises, but afterwards including horse and charicating, and even the trials of skill among rival candidates in music, poetry, cloquence, &c., were celebrated every 4th year, in the month of July, near Olympia, a city of Elis.

Ilaria, Augustin Simon, e'-rail, a French ecclesiastic, who wrote a tragedy called "The Trumpet of Heroism," "Memoirs for a History of the Republic of Letters," and a "History of the Re-union of Brittany with France." 2. at Puy, Upper Loire, 1719; p. 1794.

Puy, Upper Loire, 1719; p. 1794.

LEBLAND, Samuel, ire-land, a miscellane-ous writer and publisher, was originally a mechanic in Spitalfields; but, having a taste for drawing and engraving, he established himself that his fortune should benefit both religion and home and continental travel. He produced "Picturesque Tours" in Holland, France, and on the Thames and Medway. But the affair which gained him notoriety was his publication of a volume purporting to contain letters and papers of Shakspeare. 'In e whole collection was a forgery by his son; and the exposure of the fraud is said to have hastened the old man's death, p. in London, 1800.

IRBLAND, Samuel William Henry, a novelist and miscellaneous writer, notorious for his forgeries of Shaksperian documents, and for producing a play purporting to be Shakspeare's, but which was soon discovered to be a gross forgery, was the son of the last-mentioned person. After receiving a fair education in London and in France, he was articled to a lawyer in New Inn. His father was an enthusiastic collector of Shaksperian relics; and it would seem that this first induced him to forge a legal document, to which the autograph of Shakspeare was attached. His simple-minded father was imposed upon; and he soon afterwards supplied him with several more papers, which were published in a volume. William Henry even went so far as to concoct a play called "Vortigern," and to palm it off upon the public as an original work of Shakspeare's. It was produced at Drury-lane Theatre, with John Kemble as Vortigern, and was most unequivocelly condemned, being sorry trash. The whole of the forgeries were soon afterwards exposed by Malone and others, and he was expelled his father's house. He subsequently gained a live-lihood by writing a number of indifferent novels and romances, and executing hack-work for booksellers. B. in London, 1777; p. 1835. IRELAND, John, an ingenious writer on works of art, was brought up to the watchmaking of art, was prought up to the watchmaking business, but afterwards became a dealer in paintings and prints. He was the author of "Hogarth Illustrated," 3 vols.; and the "Life and Letters of John Henderson," the actor. B.

at Wem, in Shropshire, in the same house as Wycherley the poet; D. 1808.

IRELAND, John, dean of Westminster, eminent for his learning and for his intimacy with some of the most distinguished men of his time, received the first rudiments of education at the free grammar-school of Ashburton, in Devon, along with Gifford, author of the "Mewiad" and "Baviad," and editor of the "Quarterly Review." Ireland completed his education at Oxford; and after holding a small curacy in Devonshire, travelled with the son of Sir James Wright, by whose interest he was in 1793 appointed to the vicarage of Croydon in Surrey. In 1802 he was made a prebend of Westminster, which promo-tion was followed by his succeeding to the deanery of Westminster on the death of Dr. Vincent in 1816. He was a voluminous author; besides writing some important papers in the earlier numbers of the "Quarterly Review," he published "Five Discourses containing certain Arguments for and against the Reception of Christianity by the ancient Jews and Greeks, "Vindicis Regise, a Defence of the Kingjy Office," "Paganism and Christianity compared," Mupting Scares, an Inquiry into the Scriptural Doctrine of Marriage and Divorce," and other works, exclusively theological. As his life had been distinguished by his patronage of litera-ture, so his will evidenced that he was desirous literature after his death. Besides many charitable bequests for the benefit of the various table bequests for the benefit of the various places with which he had been connected, he left £2000 to his college, Oriel, Oxford, for an exhibition; £5000 for a chapel in Westminster; and the munificent sum of £10,000 to the university of Oxford, for a "Professor of the button, Devon, 1762; D. 1842.

B. at Ash-

Exegesis of the Holy Scripture."

IRENÆUS, Sr., i-re-ne'-us, bishop of Lyons, and the disciple of Polycarp, by whom he is said to have been sent into Gaul. He was at first a priest in the church of Lyons; and on the mat-tyrdom of Pothinus, succeeded him in the bishopric, in 177. He had a disputation with Valentinus at Rome, and held a council at Lyons, in which the Gnostic heresy was condemned. Ircneus was a great lover of peace, and laboured to allay the controversy, which then raged with violence, respecting the time of celebrating Easter. B. in Asia Minor about 140; p. at Lyons, about 202.

IRENE, i-re'-ne, empress of Constantinople, and a saint of the Greek church, was the wife of Leo IV., after whose death she was acknowledged sovereign, in conjunction with her son, Constantine V. She displayed great talents, but committed some atrocious murders on the relatives of her husband; and, in order to insure her power, deprived her own son of sight. The people, irritated by her conduct, placed Nicephorus on the throne, who banished her to Lesbos. B. at Athens; D. at Lesbos, 803.

IBETON, Henry, ire'-ton, a republican general, and son-in-law of Cromwell, greatly distinguished himself in the civil war, on the side of the Parliament. He studied at Oxford, in which university he took the degree of B.A., and subsequently became a student of the Middle Temple. When the revolution broke out, he entered the parliamentary army, and soon rose to the rank of colonel. At the battle of Naseby, he, after fighting very bravely, was taken prisoner by the royalists, but escaped. He was appointed to command in Ireland, where he died. His to command in Francia, where he decl. List body was conveyed to England, and interred in Westminster Abbey; but, at the Restoration, it was taken up and hung at Tyburn, with those of Cromwell and Bradshaw. B. in Nottingham-of Cromwen and Brausnaw. B. In rotting man-shire, 1610; D. at Limerick, 1651. Inving, Rev. Edward, ir-ving, a minister of the Scottish church, and founder of the sect called Irvingites. After finishing his education the university of Edinburgh, where he took the degree of M.A., he is said to have led the life, for a short period, of a strolling player. In 1811 he became master of the mathematical school of Haddington, and, a year afterwards, was appointed head of the academy at Kirkcaldy, where he remained for seven years, being then ordained minister of the Scottish church. After having preached in several churches, he was appointed Dr. Chalmers's assistant at St. John's church, Glasgow, gaining so much reputation for eloquence that he was installed minister of the Scottish church in Hatton Garden, London. His tall figure, impressive style of preaching, and vigorous discourses, caused him to attain great popularity in this church; the most wealthy and Square, Grav's-Inn Road. This was opened in 1829, and he preached in this place with the same success as formerly. In November, 1830, he was charged with heresy by the presbytery of London. and a course of proceedings, extending over eighteen months, was instituted against him. About this time he introduced into his church what he termed "supernatural inspiration," but what he termed "supernatural inspiration," but which his opponents called "the extravagances of the unknown tongues." In 1932 the London presbytery pronounced him unfitted for his charge, and the trustees of his church declared that "the Rev. Edward Urving had rendered himself unfit to remain a minister, of the Caledonian church, Regent Square, and ought to be removed therefrom." On being suspended from his duties, he preached to small congregations in Gray's Inn Road, and in Newman Street, Oxford Street. In 1833 the presbytery of Annan sentenced him to be deposed from the ministry. by Mrs. Oliphant, published in 1862.)

Invine, Washington, a distinguished American author, whose parentage on both sides was British. His father, originally a petty officer in his Britannic majesty's naval service, was a native of Shapinsha, one of the Orkney Islands; and his mother, born at Falmouth, was grand-daughter of an English elergyman. The descent of the Orendian Irvings (or Irvines) has been traced, without a break, "through James the 'Lawman,' or chief judge of the Orkneys in 1560, and 'John off Erwyne' of 1438, mentioned 1860, and 'John off Erwyne' of 1435, mentioned in 'Wilson's Archeological and Prehistoric Annals of Scotland,' to the first Orkney Irvin, an inhabitant of Kirkwall in 1389, while the islands yet owned the sway of Magnus V., the last of the Norwegian carls," Win. Irving, having settled as a merchant in New York, where he was a deacon of the Presbyterian Church, became the father of eleven children of whom Washington (born in 1783) was the youngest. He was sent to school in his fourth youngest. He was sent to school in his fourth year, and at a very early age evinced a passion for reading. He was particularly fond of vorgages and travels, which produced such an effect on him that at the age of 14 he was on the point of eloping from home and engaging as a sailor. This predilection for the sea was probably inherited, as an inseparable part of his natural constitution, from his ancestors, the adventurous domizens of the "stormthe adventurous denizens of the "storm-swept Orcades," His father having died while Washington was still young, his education, which thenceforth took place at home, devolved upon his elder brothers, young cation, which thenecforth took place at home, devolved upon his elder brothers, young men of considerable attainments. His health, during youth and early manhood, was exceedingly delicate; and though his studies were retarded by this circumstance, his imagination and perceptive faculties gained by it; for, unable to sit dosely to his books, he spent a great deal of his time in wandering about Manhattan Island, observing the picturesque aspects of nature in that place, and listening to the odd traditions of the old Dutch and other settlers. It is to these first impressions of his youth, that so much of the quality liquancy of his popularity in this church; the most weathly and it is to these first impressions of his youth, accomplished Londoners crowing to hear him. that so much of the quaint piquancy of his Between the years 1823 and 1827 he published writings is due. His literary career was comseveral discourses, lectures, and sermons. His menced in 1802, with a number of sketchass church in Hatton Garden having been found too contributed to the "New York Morning Chromall for his congregation, a new building was nick;" entitled "Letters of Jonathan Oldstje," erected for him by subscription, in Regent His health was, however, so fruit that he was compelled to travel, with a view to its renova-tion. He crossed the Atlantic, and visited France, Italy, Switzerland, Holland, and England. On his return to New York, he, together land. On his return to New York, he together with Mr. Kirke Paulding, commenced a series of humorous and graphic sketches, which were published under the title of "Salmagundi." This work obtained a considerable degree of popularity, but was suddenly stopped at the end of 1807. After this he wrote a number of tales and essays for the magazines and newspapers, and about the same time began to study the law; but although he was admitted to the bar, he never practised as a barrister. In 1809 was published the humorous "History of New York, by Diedrich Knickerboeker," which instantly made Irving one of the most popular of American writers. On the breaking out of war between England and the United States, a few years afterwards, he was attached, with the rank of colonel, to the staff of General Tomkins, governor of New York. On the establishment of peace, he went to Liverpool to represent of peace, he went to Inverpost to represent the commercial house of Irving, Brothers, a firm which subsequently failed; whereupon Washington Irving occupied himself exclusively with literature. After having travelled over England, he commenced his "Sketch-Book," England, he commenced his "Sketch-book, forwarding his manuscript in instalments to New York, where it was published. The very favourable manner in which the London critics spoke of this work induced Irving to seek a publisher for it in England. He was for a long time unsuccessful in this attempt, and having already met with an hospitable reception at Abbotsford, by Sir Walter Scott, he now sought that gentleman's advice. Although Scott could that gentleman's advice. Although Scott could not help him to a publisher, he offered to procure him the post of editor for a periodical then about to be started in Edinburgh. Irving de-head this kind proposal. "Aly whole course of lite," he said, "has been desultory, and I am unfitted for any periodically-recurring task, or any stipulated labour of body or mind. I have no command of my talents, such as they are, and have to watch the varyings of my mind as I should those of a weathercock. Practice and training may bring me more into rule, but at present I am as useless for regular service as present I am as useress for regular service as one of my own country Indians, or a Don Cossack." He afterwards purposed to issue an English edition of his "Sketch-Book," at his own risk, but his publisher failed when the first volume only had been produced. The book became so rapidly popular, however, on both sides of the Atlantic, that Mr. Murray resolved to become its English publisher, and henceforth Irving's reputation was made. A second volume of the "Sketch-Book," "Bracebridge Hall," and the "Tales of a Traveller," succeeded, the last work appearing in 1824; the author's residence during the interval of their composition being at London and Paris. In 1826 he set out for Madrid, for the purpose of examining some important documents relative to Columbus, which had just been discovered in a Jesuit college in that city. His researches in the His researches in the Contege in the cary. In research as the symbol spanish archives, as well as his explorations of the old cities of Spain, resulted in the publication of several of his most popular books,—the "History of the Life and Voyages of Columbus," the "Voyages and Discoveries of the Companions of Columbus," "The Conquest of Granada," and "Tales of the Alhambra," In 1829 he was appointed secretary of the American legation in London, the Royal Society of Literature awarding him one of its gold medals, and the univer-sity of Oxford conferring upon him its honorary degree of LL.D. about the same time. In 1832, "after an absence of seventeen years, he saw again the blue line of his native land," as he has said, and on landing, a most enthusiastic reception awaited him. Leaving New York soon afterwards in company with Mr. Eilsworthy, atterwards in company with Mr. Lusworteny, the Indian commissioner, he travelled in the Far West, his knowledge of Indian and prairie life being reproduced in a series of entertaining works, the chief of which were "Tour on the Parlies;" Astoria, or Enterprise beyond the Rocky Mountains," and the "Adventures of Captain Bonneville." These were followed by a variety of sketches supplied to the American periodicals. In 1841 he was nominated minister plenipotentiary to the Court of Spain, representing his country with distinguished success at Madrid, till 1846, when he was, at his own wish, recalled. Washington Irving hereupon retired to his beautiful estate on the banks of the Hudson, about 25 miles from New York, which he had purchased a few years before. In this charming retreat he lived, engaged in literary labour, till his death; narrating the rise and progress of Mahometanism in his "Lives of Mahomet and his Successors," and the adventures of Oliver Goldsmith, in his biography of that poet and essayist. Besides these, he revised his complete works, and published a collected edition of them. His last productions collected edition of them. This last productions were "Chronicles of Woolfert's Roost," a series of sketches in the style of the old "Sketch-Book," and the "Life of Washington," the first volume of which was published in 1855; and this, as well as the concluding volumes, was hailed with an enthusiastic reception in America, while in England it became as popular as the previous efforts of its author. B. at New York, 1783; D. at Sunnyside, 1859. (See "Lite," by his nephew, published in 1862.)

Inwir, Eyle, or evis, a distinguished civil servant of the East India Company, was bron of Irish parents in Calcutta, and seeleved his education in England. He obtained an appointment in the E.I.C.'s civil service in 1767, but was suspended in 1777 for his adherence to Lord Pigot. He was afterwards reviously, however, and in 1799 was appointed superintending of the company's affairs in China, where he rout in the company's affairs in China, where he rout in the company's affairs in China, where he rout in the company's affairs in China, where he rout in the company's affairs in the was the author of "Adventures during a voyage up the Red Sea, and a journey scross the Desert." Eastern Eciogues, "Epistic to Mr. Hayley," An Inquiry into the Feasilility of Bompart's Expedication to the East," "Ode on the Death of Hyder Ali," "Napoleon on the Vanity of human Ambitton," &c. p. 1791; p. 1817.

Hyder All, "Asponent on the range of rammamolition," &c. B. 1743; D. 1817. III. I SALC COMNENUS, 44'-aik com'-ne-me, a Grece emperor, was proclaimed in 1657, in room of Michael Stratiotes, who was deposed. His conduct was marked by valour and prudence, till he meddled with the property of the ecclesiastics, who excited general discontent against him. He then retired to a monastery, and ceded the crown to Constantine Ducas in 1069, p. 1061.

ISAAO ANGELUS, aw'.jel-us, a Greek emperor, who obtained the erown after putting to death Andronicus Comneuus, in 1186. He was a voluptuous prince, and his brother, Alexius, having gained over his officers, seized the throne, and threw him into prison, where he was deprived of his eyes in 1195. After the death of Alexius. he was released from confinement, and again placed on the throne. B. 1154; D. in 1204.

ISAAC KARO, ka'-ro, a Spanish rabbi, who was forced to quit Spain in consequence of the edict of Ferdinand and Isabella, in 1499, which compelled the Jews to leave that country within four months, or turn Christians. He first went four months, or turn Christians. The hist went to Portugal, and thence to Jerusalem, where he led a retired life. He wrote a "Commentary on the Pentateuch," printed at Amsterdam, in ISABELLA, is a-bell-la, daughter of Philip le Bel, king of France, married in 1303, Edward II, king of England. Neglected by her husband, who gave himself up to the guidance of un-worthy favourites, Isabella sought assistance on the continent, and returning at the head of on the continent, and retaining a the head of 8000 men, took her husband prisoner, and confined him in Berkeley Castle, where he was shortly afterwards murdered. Isabella having given herself up to loose manners, her son, Edward III., seized and hanged her paramour, Mortimer, and committed his mother to a fortress, where she died in 1358. B. 1292. It was mainly in right of Isabella that Edward founded his pretensions to the French crown-a claim which led to the long and sanguinary wars of the Edwards and Henries in France.

ISABELLA OF CASTILE, queen of Spain, was the daughter of John II., and married, in 1469, for daughter of John 11, and married, in 1805, Ferdinand V, king of Aragon. The conquest of Granada, and the discovery of America by Columbus, distinguished their reign. She was a woman of great abilities. B. 1250; D. 1504.

(See FERDINAND.)

ISABELLA II., queen of Spain, succeeded to the crown in 1833, on the death of her father, Ferdinand VII., in accordance with a decree of the Cortes, made three years previously, by which the salic law, or law excluding females from the throne, was set aside. Her uncle Don Carlos, who would have succeeded to the throne had not the salie law been repealed, refused to had not the sale haw been repealed, refused to take the oath of allegiance, and a civil war broke out in consequence. This was terminated in 1810, the Carlists being totally defeated, and the chiefs of the party expelled the kingdom. She did not attain her majority till the year She did hot actum mer majorny the one year 1843, her mother having been appointed queen-regent meanwhile; but, in 1840, she was com-pelled to resign in favour of Espartero, who was nominated regent in her stead. In 1846 the queen married her cousin, Don Francisco de Assis, her younger sister becoming the wife of Assis, the younger sister becoming the wise the Duc de Montpensier, youngest son of the late Louis Philippe, king of the French. Her reign was troubled by repeated insurrections, and at last, in 1868, in consequence of the revolt of the army and navy, and a general rising of the people under Prim, Serrano, and Topete, she was compelled to quit Spain and retire to Paris. B. at Madrid, 1830.

I BLEELE, M. RE JABET C., 1850.

TARRELLA OF ALREON WAS the daughter of Alphonse, duke of Celabria, the son of Ferdinand, king of Naples. In 1489, she was esponde to John Galeazzo Storza, then a minor under the guardinaship of his unel, Luigi Sforza, who, on seeing Isabella, fell in love with her. The lovers having been married by proxy only, Luigi contrived by divers means to keep them asunder, and declared his passion to Isabella, who repulsed him, and exhorted her husband to shake off his uncle's yoke. Luigi soon after-wards married Alphonsina, daughter of the 542 duke of Ferrara, a woman of an ambitious and duke of regrars, a woman of an amotions and intriguing; spirit, and, by their contrivance, John Galcazzo was poisoned. Luigt then as-sumed the sovereignty, and Isabella sought refuge at Naples, which soon after was taken by the French, and she had to lament the loss of all her family. She then retired to a small town in the kingdom of Naples, which had been assigned her for a residence. D. 1524.

ISABELLA, queen of Hungary, was the sister of Sigismund Augustus, king of Poland, and in 1539 married John Zapolski, king of Hungary. In 1540 she was delivered of a son while her husband was besieving the castle of Forniras. and he was so delighted at the news, that he gave a splendid feast to his troops, and died of intemperance on the occasion. Isabella, unable to cope with the forces of Ferdinand of Austria. with whom her husband had engaged in war, called to her aid Solyman, sultan of the Turks. who treacherously seized the capital of her dominions, and obliged her to retire to Transylvania, which country she was afterwards forced to yield to Ferdmand. She was then obliged to retreat to Cassovia, and on the road wrote these Latin words on a tree, -Sic futa volunt,-" Su fate decrees." in 1556 she recovered Transylvania; but, when her son came of age, she refused him a share in the government, p. 1561.

ISEUS, i-se'-us, a Greek orator of Chalcis, who went to Athens and became the master of Demosthenes, who imitated his style in preference to that of Isocrates. Sir William Jones translated his ten orations in 1780, the remainder of his 64 great speeches having been lost, ISEUS, another Greek orator, who went to Rome about 97 A.D. Pliny the younger states him to have been a great master of eloquence and rhetoric.

and ractors. Iscarrs, Joseph of Exeter, is'-ki-Iscarrs, Josephus, or Joseph of Exeter, is'-ki-nus, a distinguished writer of Latin poetry, who accompanied Richard Courde Lion to Palestine, and was the author of an eple poem entitled "Antiocheis," or the deeds of Richard which the poet had himself witnessed. This is unfortunately lost; but another, on the Trojan war, is still extant. Warton styles Iscanus "the miracle of his age in classical composition." p. 1224, ISDEGERDES, is-de-ger-dess, king of Persia, succeeded his uncle Sapor, and was debanched, cruel, and avaricious. He made war on the Eastern emperors, who refused to pay him tribute, obliged Theodosius the younger to make peace, and persecuted the Christians with sewriter. All of the control of the control make peace, and persecuted the Christians with severity. D. 420. II. ish-ma-le, founder of the dynasty of the Sophis of Persia, was a descendant of Ali, son-in-law of Mohammed, and began his reign in 1605. He gained many victories, and established the Persian throne victories, and established the Persian throme upon a solid heals. D. 1523. Thamas on the Ishnake II. succeeded Thamas on the Ishnake II. succeeded Thamas on the Ishnake II. succeeded the to the brothers. He was poisoned, in 1579. by his sister, out of zeal for the Turkish religion, Ishnael being of a seet held heretical by the other Mohammedans.

ISIDOH, Sr., e'-se-dor, bishop of Seville, a celebrated Spanish prelate, and one of the most learned men of his time, wrote a number of books on biblical and classical subects, and some commentaries on the Old

ISABELLA OF CASTILE.

JEFFERIES, JUDGE.

JACKSON, STONEWALL,

JAMES I. OF ENGLAND.

Isidore

Iturbide

and New Testaments. B. at Carthagena, 566; sisting of members nominated by himself, and ISTDORE, St., surnamed of Pelusium, from his retiring to a cell near that place, was the disciple of St. Chrysostom, and, when young, embraced the monastic life. He wrote letters, and other pieces, some of which are extant. D. about 440.

ISIDORUS OF CHARAX, is'-i-dor'-us, a Greek historian and geographer, who wrote a "De-scription of the Parthian Empire." He is said to have lived during the reign of Ptolemy Lagus, three centuries before the Christian era.

ISINGRINIUS, Michael, i-sin-grin'-e-us, a celebrated printer of Bale, in the 16th century, who executed in Greek the works of Aristotle, with paper and types superior to those of Aldus Manutius. He published, also, with the same elegance and correctness, "The History of Plants," by Fuchs.

ISMENIAS, is-me'-ne-as, a Theban general, who was sent on an embassy to the king of Persia. No person being admitted to the ring of presence without prostration, Ismenias was resolved not to commit an action so degrading to his country. At his introduction, he dropped his ring on the ground, and the act of taking it up was mistaken for submissive homace, in consequence of which he was favourably received .- A Theban musician, who being taken prisoner by the Scythians, and playing before their king, the monarch observed that he liked the music of Ismenias better than the braying

ISOCRATES, i-sold-ra-tees, a celebrated Greek orator, who, although master of a sweet and graceful style, was prevented by a certain weakness of voice from haranguing in public. It was to his power as a teacher of oratory that his reputation was due. His orations, 21 of which are extant, were intrusted to others for delivery. The defeat of the Athenians at Cheronea, by Philip of Maccdon, so affected Isocrates' spirits that he refused to partake of food, and died after four days of fasting. B. at Athens, 436 B.c.: D.

338 в.с.

ITURBIDE, Augustin, e-toor'-be-de, emperor of Mexico, was a native of Valladolid, in New Spain, and entered the military service at the age of 17. In 1810 he was a lieutenant in the provincial regiment of his native city, but his military skill and valour becoming conspicuous, led to his further advancement; so that by 1816 he had risen to the command of the army which ne had rised to the command of the army which occupied the provinces of Guanaxuato and Valladolid. He was, however, accused of want of fidelity to the royal cause; and, though acquitted of the imputation, the disgust which he felt in consequence of the charge led him to retire for a time from active service. Events subsequently opened a new career for his ambition. He was invited to take the command amotion. He was invited to take the command of an army destined for the South, and marched to Acapulco, in the latter part of 1819. There he matured a plan, the professed object of which was the emancipation of Mexico from the yoke of Spain, the independence of the country, the protection of religion, and the union of the Spaniards and Mexicans. On the strength of this project, Iturbide continued his march to Queretaro, and was soon joined by Vittoria, the most devoted of the friends of liberty. The road to power was now fairly opened before Iturbide. He took possession of the capital in the name of the nation, and established a regency, con-wholly under his control. Finding that the republicans saw through his intentions, and were opposed to his domination, he resolved to were opposed to ms commutation, are resoured to preserve his authority by boldly usurping the crown, and accordingly, through the devotion of his troops, and with the concurrence of a portion of the deputies, he was pro-laimed emperor, May 18, 1822. It was decreed that the crown should be hereditary in the family of the community of the control of t Iturbide; that a million and a half of dollars should be his yearly dotation; the title of prince was conferred on his sons, and an order prince was conterved on his sons, and an order of knighthood and other accessories of a monarchy, were established. The friends of free institutions, overawed and kept down by the power of the usurper, fled to their wonted creteats, or acquiesced until a fitting season should arrive for resisting with union and success. But they did not long submit to a state of things so adverse to their wishes, Iturbide was driven by his necessities to make fresh exactions, which exasperated the minds of the people, already disgusted with successive usurnations. Defection became general among usurpations. Defection became general among the officers of the army, and in all the provinces, so that Iturbide saw that his cause was hopeless, and hastily assembling at the capital the dis-persed members of Congress, he tendered to them his abdication of the crown, March 20, 1823. them mission and of the rown, March 27, 1825. Congress agreed to grant him a large yearly pension, on condition of his leaving the Mexican territory for ever, and residing somewhere in Italy; they also made suitable provision for his Itary; they also made suitable provision for his family in case of his death. He proceeded to the coast, under the escort of General Bravo, and embarked, May 11, 1823, for Leghorn. He micht have lived comfortably in a beautiful villa in Tuseany, had he not been impelled by ambition to attempt the recovery of his empire. With this object he left Italy for England, and embarked for Mczice, May 11, 1824, precisely a year after his departure from it, and arrived in sight of the port of Soto la Marina, July 14. During Iturbile's absence, the Mexicans had established a republican constitution, and the ex-emperor found no adherents or friends in the nation. The government having been in-formed of his leaving Italy, suspected his design, and a decree was passed, dated April 28, 1824, declaring him to be proscribed as a traitor, and enacting that, in case he landed in the country, the mere fact should render him a public enemy. Deceived in regard to the reception which awaited him, Iturbide landed at Soto la Marina, accompanied only by his secre-tary, Beneski, and was immediately arrested by order of La Garza, commander of the province of New Santander, to whom he had applied for bassports, pretending that they were for persons who had visited Mexico on a mining speculation. La Garza conducted his prisoner to Padilla, the capital of the province, and demanded instructions how to act from the local legislature. Iturbide's fate was delayed only a short time; sentence of immediate death was pronounced; and while preparations for was pronounced; and while preparations for recenting the sentence were making, he addressed the assembled people, protesting his innocence of treasonable purposes, and chroting them to observe the duties of patriotism, religion, and civil subordination. This person is admitted to have possessed high military talents, and considerable force of character; and had he been less swayed by personal ambition, he might have won the fame of being the Washington of South America—a character and title which some were, at one time, inclined to accord to him. B. 1784; shot, July 19, 1824. IVANOF, Feodor Feodorovitch, e-van-ov, a Russian dramatist, first served in the army, from which he was afterwards removed to the commissariat department. He was the author of several comedies, and a tragedy called "Martha, or the Conquest of Novgorod." B. 1777; D. в. 1777; р.

Tyanof

IVAN (or JOHN) I., e'-ran, succeeded Jurie, or George II. in 1328, in the principalities of Viadimir, Moscow, and Novgorod, and reigned during twelve years, with the title of grand-duke of Moscow. He was succeeded by Simon, surnamed the Proud. D. 1310.

IVAN II. reigned between the years 1353-59. He was a mild and wise ruler, and warred with success against the Tartars.

Ivan III., Vasilivitch, reigned from 1462 to 1505. He delivered his country from the Tartars in 1481, brought all the provinces of Russia under his sway, and took possession of Novgorod after a seven years' siege. He introduced the arts of civilization into his dominions. His second wife was Sophia, niece of the last Byzantine emperor. Ivan was the first to adopt the title of czar, having for his arms the double-headed eagle of Constantinople.

IVAN IV., surnamed the Terrible, ascended the throne at the age of four years, 1533. His mother was appointed regent, and sustained, in his name, a great struggle against the nobles of the kingdom. He attained his majority in 1544, and made war against the Poles, the Swedes, and the Tartars, all of whom were in turn vanquished. He committed numberless cruelties upon these peoples, as well as upon his own subjects. He killed with his own hand his eldest son; but his reign was marked by a great advance in civilization. He definitely adopted the title of "czar," and added to it that of "autocrat," m. 1529, p. 1594.

IVAN V., Alexievitch, succeeded to the throne on the death of his brother, Feodor Alexievitch, in 1632; but being of weak intellect, he was placed in a monastery, and the sceptre given to his brother Peter. The Princess Sophia, hoping to reign in the room of Ivan, excited an insurrection, which ended by the appointment of Ivan and Peter as joint sovereigns, and Sophia as co-regent. This government lasted six years, when Sophia having projected the death of Peter, that she might reign alone, the conspiracy was discovered, and the princess confined in a convent. From that time Peter reigned sole monarch. B. 1661; D. 1696. IVAN VI., of Brunswick-Bevern, was declared czar when but three months old, after the death of his great-aunt, Anne Ivanovna, in 1740. Anne let him to the guardianship of the duke de Biren, who being deposed shortly after, the regency was transferred to the emperor's mother. In 1741 he was dethroned and conther. In 1741 he was dethroned and confined in a fortress, whence he was carried away by a monk; but was retaken and placed away by a monk; but was retaken and placed away by a monk; but was retaken and placed away by a monk; but was retaken and placed in prison, 1764 published, in addition to works on heraldry and antiquities, "Remarks on the Garianonum of the Romans, the Site and Remains fixed and described." in 1774. B, at Yarmouth, 1716; D. 1776.

Jablonski

IVETAUX, Nicholas Vauquelin, Seigneur de. evel-to, a French poet, who became preceptor to the duke de Vendôme, son of Gabrielle d'Estrées, and afterwards to Louis XIII, when dauphin; but his life was so irregular, that he was banished from court; on which he took a house in nished from cotts on when he took ahouse in the Faubourg Saint-Germain, where he lived in luxury and debauchery. He wrote "The Insti-tution of a Prince," and a number of stanza, sonnets, and other poetical pieces. B. at Fresnaye, 1559; D. at Paris, 1649. Ivory, James, i'-vo-re, an eminent mathematician, was the son of a watchmaker in Dundee. and was sent to the universities of St. Andrews and of Edinburgh, for the purpose of being educated for the Scottish church, but was enequated for the Souther turner, but was engaged in 1786, as teacher in an academy at Dundee, and was subsequently a partner in a flax-spinning factory in Forfarshire. His unwaried pursuit of science, however, enabled him to undertake the duties of professor of nim to undertake the dudes of professor of mathematics at the Royal Military College in Buckinghamshire; and when that institution removed to Sandhurst, in Berkshire, he was conreinvect to sandaust, in Berssine, he was con-tinued in his post, and remained in it till his retirement into private life, in 1819. While professor at Sandhurst, and afterwards, he wrote a great number of very valuable mathematical a great number of very valuation mathemater books, besides contributing fifteen papers to the "Transactions of the Royal Society of London." An edition of Euclid; "A New Series for the Rectification of the Cube;" "A New Method of resolving Cubic Equations;" and a host of mathematical and astronomical treatises, were the result of his laborious life. He was fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, a member of the Royal Irish Academy and of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and cor-responding member of the learned societies of Paris, Berlin, and Göttingen. He enjoyed a pension of £300 per annum, from the year 1831 till his death, and was invested by William IV. with the Hanoverian Guelphic order of knight-what the Hanoverine designe order of anight-hood. In at Dundee, 1765; D. in London, 1842, IZHACKS, Richard, '-zā'z, an English anti-quary, was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, and afterwards became chamberlain and townclerk of Exeter, his native city, the history and memorials of which he wrote. This work was continued by his son. p. about 1723.

AAPHAB-BBN-TOPHAIL, ja'-a-far-ebn-to-fail, an Arabian philosopher, supposed to have been an Araban Junosopher, supposed to have been the same with Averroes, who wrote a philosophical romance, called "The History of Hai-Ebn-Yokhdan," which was published in Latin by Pocock, at Oxford, in 1671, and in English by Ockley, in 1708. D. about Jablonski, Theodore, ya-blons'-ke, coun-sellor of the court of Prussia, and secretary of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Berlin, published.—"A French and German Dictionary," 1711; "A Course of Morality," 1713; and "A Universal Dictionary of Arts and Sciences." D. about 1740.

Jablonski, Daniel Ernest, a native of Dant-, after studying at several universities, among which was Oxford, eventually became an eccleendeavouring to promote a union between the Lutherans and the Calvinists. He wrote several theological works, and translated Bentley's "Boylean Lectures" into Latin. B. 1660; D.

1741. JABLONSKI, Paul Ernest, nephew to the preeeding, was the author of a very erudite treatise on the mythology of ancient Egypt, in 3 vols., and other able works, theological and antiquarian. p. 1757.

Jackson, Thomas, jak'-son, a learned divine, who became president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and dean of Peterborough. His chief work was a "Commentary on the Apostles' Creed." B. at Durham, 1573; D. 1610.

Creeu. H. at Jurinam, 1675; D. 1010.

JACKSON, Arthur, a nonconformist divine, who was ejected from the living of St. Faith's, in London, in 1662. He was fined £500 for refusing to give evidence against Christopher Love, and also imprisoned. At the Restoration Love, and also imprisoned. At the restoration he was chosen by the assembly of ministers to present a Bible to Charles II. He was also one of the commissioners at the Savoy conference. He wrote a judicious Commentary on the Dible. D. 1666.

statical counsellor at Berlin and president of became a prehendary of York, regius professor the Academy. He was an able divine, and of Greek at Oxford, preacher to the society, and inhoured carrestly, though without success, in Lincolvis Inn, canno in Christchurch, and, in Lincoln's Inn, canon of Christchurch, and, in 1812, bishop of Oxford. He translated a tract on the "Sieve" of Eratosthenes into Latin, published some sermons, and was a sound mathematician. B. 1750; D. 1815.

Jackson, Robert, a physician, who, while in Jamaica, applied with success the affusion of cold water in fevers. He subsequently served as a regimental surgeon in the army, and finally settled at Stockton, near Durham. He wrote several treatises on the treatment of fever, perticularly on the advantages of the application of cold water in that class of disorders. B. 1751; D. 1827.

JACKSON, John, an eminent English portrait painter, was apprenticed to his father, who was a tailor; but discovering a decided talent for the art in which he afterwards excelled, his abilities procured him the protection of Sir George Beaumont, through whose means he removed to London, and studied at the Royal Academy. At the time he entered the great theatre of art, Lawrence, Opie, Beechey, and other eminent masters, pre-occupied the par-ticular branch he had chosen, and for a time Jackson contented himself with painting por-JACKSON, John, an English divine, who traits in water-colours, in which he was very Arianish, and wrote some traces against the doctrine of the Trinity, and others against Collins and Tindal; but his best work is his "Chromological Antiquities," published in 2 vols. 400, 1752. p. at Lensey, Yorkshire, 1686; D. 1763.

JACKSON, William, a musical composer and ingenious writer, who, having received a liberal education, was placed under the tuition of the organist of Exeter Cathedral, and afterwards with Mr. Travers, an eminent musician in London. In 1777 he was appointed organist in the London, In 1777he was app intectorganists in the cathedral of his mutive city, Exeter. He published many excellent songs, canzonets, hymns, and sonatas, of his own composition. His chief literary productions were, "Thirty Letters on various Subjects," "On the Present State of Nusie," and "The Four Ages," Svo.—One of Mr. Jackson's sons was secretary to Lord Ma-cartney in his embassy to China; another was ambassador to the king of Sardinia, and afterwards at Paris and Berlin. B. at Exeter, 1780: D. at the same place, 1803.

JACKSON, William, an Irishman, and a clergyman of the established church, who became notorious for his intrigues against the government towards the end of the 1sth century. In early life he was chaplain to the duchess of Kingston, but going to France, became intimate with some of the revolutionary leaders, who sent him on a mission to revolutionize Britain. Failing in England, he went to Ireland, and was there detected in carrying on a treasonable correspondence with France. He was tried and convicted Wigston's Hospital, in Lancashire. He was an copied the works of the old masters surprised acute metaphysician, but a zealous advocate for his contemporaries. He was elected royal Arimism, and wrote some tracts against the academican in 1817; and in 1819 travelled his contemporaries. He was elected royal academician in 1817; and in 1819 travelled through Italy, visited Rome with Mr. Chantrey, and was chosen a member of the Academy of St. Luke. Jackson "had an uncommon readiness and skill of hand, a rapid felicity of finish, which enabled ham to dash off, at a few sitting. whatever he undertook; his colouring was deep, clear, and splendid; and in this he more resembled Reynolds than any artist since his day," B. in Yorkshire, 1778; p. 1831.

Jackson, Andrew, an American general and president, was the son of an Irishman, who emigrated to America in 1765. At the breaking out of the War of Independence, he was studyout the Waxhaw Academy; but this event made himself and his two Irothers soldiers. On the termination of the war with stoners. On the termination of the war wine the mother country, he resolved to study the law, but abandoned it after a short time to resume his military earer, tighting, on this occasion, against the Indians on the frontiers of the civilized settlements. In 1797 he was chosen senator, and shortly afterwards was ap-pointed by the legislature of Tennessee major-general of the forces of that state. Up to the year 1812 he resided upon his farm at Nashville. on the Cumberland River; but on the renewal of hostilities between England and America in that year, he put himself at the head of some three thousand volunteers, and took up a dedississippi. In 1314 the United States govern-ment conferred the rank of major-general upon him, and the next year he repulsed the British once with France. It was true and convicted inti, and the next year he repulsed the British on this charge, April 23, 1795; and on being forces in their attack on New Orleans. For brought up for indement on the 30th of the same several subsequent years he commanded expendent, the compact of the several subsequent years he commanded expendent, Carran and Ponsonby, were about to crucity and recklessness in some of his promove an arrest of judgment. On investigation, ecclings. In 1821 he was nominated governor it was found that Jackson had taken porson.

Jackson, Dr. William, bushop of Oxford, after holding it for a year, was again elected to $450.

represent the state of Tennessee in the senate. Jackson was elected president in 1828, and again in 1832. n. at Waxhaw, South Carolina, again in 1832. B. at Waxnaw, South Carolina, 1767; D. at Nashville, Tennessee, 1845. Jagssox, Thomas Jefferson, better known as "Stonewall" Jackson, a general in the army of the Confederate States of America, was born in Virginia. In 1842 he entered West Point Military Academy as a cadet, and was breveted second lieutenant in the 1st corps of Artillery in 1846. When the Mexican war com-menced he was attached to Magrader's Battery, and distinguished himself on several occasions. He obtained the rank of first lieutenaut in 1947, and was breveted captain for his gallant and meritorious conduct at Contreras and Cherubusco. He resigned his position in the national army in 1852, and subsequently offichied as professor of mathematics and military science in the State University of Virginia. When war broke out, in 1861, between the Federal and Confederate States, Jackson was appointed to a command in the Southern army, and proved himself an efficient and enterprising commander. He led the Southern troops at the battle of Ball's Bluff, where the Federals were completely defeated. He shortly afterwards made a dashing raid into the Shenandoah valley, then occupied by large numbers of Federal troops, carrying off considerable quantities of provisions and other stores, and completely building the efforts of General Frecompletely bealing the efforts of General Fro-mont and others to intercept his retreat. In the series of battles which led to General M'Clellau's retreat to Harrison's Lending in July, 1962, Jackson played a distinguished part; and shortly afterwards made a forced march, with 40,000 men, carrying provisions for a few days only, and placed himself on the flank of General Pope's army at Manassas, the result of which daring manœuvre was the complete defeat of the Federal army and its retreat to the lines around Washington. The Confederates now carried the war into Maryland, but not meeting with the support they expected were retreating into Virginia, when attacked first at South Mountain, and afterwards at Autictam, where desperate battles were fought. Jackson was not engaged in these encounters, having gone to attack Harner's Ferry, a mili-tary store-station of considerable importance, which he reduced, captured large quantities of stores, which he secured, and then rejoined the army in time to cover the retreat of General Lee across the Potomac, which was accom-plished under Jackson's direction without the slightest loss either of men or material. In suggest loss entrier of men of material. In suggestion operations he continued to play a prominent part until May 2, 1863, when, after the battle of Chancellorsville, he was fired on by his own men by mistake, and died in hospital a week after. B. 1826.

JACOB, Ben Naphthali, jai'-kob, a learned Jew of the 5th century, was educated in the school of Tiberias, in Palestine. The invention of the Masoretic points and accents is ascribed to him and Ben Aser.

JACOB, Al Bardai, a disciple of Severus, patri-

According to the Large and assigned severus, parti-arch of Constantinople, was one of the principal leaders of the Latychians; on which account that seet gained the name of Jacobites. Jacob, Ben Hajim, arabbi of the 18th century, who published a cellection of the Masorn at Venice, in 1825, in 4 vols., with the text of the Bible a work-central section. Bible, a work greatly esteemed by the Jews.

JACOB, a Cistercian monk of Hungary, who JACOB, a CHEUTCHIN MOINT OF TAILIGHTY, WHO quitted his order in 1212, under pretence of being called to deliver the Holy Land from the infidels. He gathered together a prodigious number of fanatics in Germany and France, who being chiefly peasants, obtained the name of the Shepherds. When St. Louis, king of France. was taken by the Saracens, Jacob pretended that the Holy Virgin had commanded him to preach a crusade for his deliverance. The queen for some time tolerated this extravagance, but at last caused the rabble to be dispersed, and Jacob was shortly afterwards slain by a butcher.

Jacob, Henry, jai'-kob, a learned divine, was educated at Oxford, where he took his degree of M.A., after which he obtained a living. He is said to have left the church, and to have esis said to have the the tunter, and to have es-tablished the first congregation of Independents in England. B. 1561; D. about 1625. Jacob, Henry, son of the above, was educated under Erpenius, and acquired a considerable knowledge of the Oriental languages. On his return to England, he entered at Merton College, Oxford, of which he became fellow, but was de-prived of this in the civil wars. He wrote some works, which were never printed; but Wood ascribes to him the "Delphi Phæniciantes," published by Dickenson, B. 1608; D. at Canterbury, 1652.

izrbury, 1682.

Jacon, Giles, an industrious English lawyer, who published, among a great variety of works, a Law Dictionary, and the "Lives and Characters of English Poets." n. 1690; n. 1744.

Jacon, John, the distinguished commander of the Scinde Horse. His first appointment was to the Bombay artillery, which he entered in 1827, and with this corps, composed not of natives, but of Europeans, he passed his first average ways of Service. At the symbolic of this seven years of service. At the expiration of this period, he was intrusted with a small detached command, comprising a company of native artillery and a field battery; after which essay of his powers, he proceeded, in the usual way of Indian promotion, to assume civil instead of military duties, and served for a short time in the provincial administration of Guzerat. From these employments, however, he was soon summoned by the outbreak of war; and participated, as an artillery officer, in the perils and lories of the Affghan campaign. He did not owever, accompany the expedition all the way to Cabul; for, before the disastrous retreat from that city had been consummated, he received his appointment in the peculiar sphere of duty with which his name was inseparably connected from that hour to the day of his death. In the year 1839, when all north-western India was in a ferment, it was determined to raise some squadrons of irregular horse for service in those sparts; and the idea had been so for developed, that some 500 swarthy cavallers stood enrolled, that some 500 swarthy cavallers stood enrolled, in 1841, as the Seinde Horse. This regiment was afterwards augmented, and Colonel Outram, perceiving Jacob's abilities, selected the young artillery lieutenant for the chief command. The ampaigns and conquest of Scinde officred, of course, the most admirable opportunities for further distinction; and, on the field of Meane, Jacob's Horse, and Jacob himself, established a name which was never afterwards sullied or obscured. After Scinde had been annexed, it became necessary to protect it as a frontier province, and in this service a prominent part was assigned to the Scinde Horse. Owing partly to the anomalous character of the territorial government, and partly, no doubt, to the confidence reposed in Jacob's personal abilities, the Seinde Horse were left almost entirely to themselves. The results soon became most remarkable. From a few troops, the force was gradually expanded till it included two strong regiments, and mustered 1600 of the best horsemen in India, the commander of the whole being Brigadier Jacob, assisted by four Europeans and a number of native officers. But, although formidable to those whose occupation was rapine and plunder, Jacob was a benefactor to the people over whom he virtually ruled. On the spot where his troops had encamped, which was a sterile waste for miles around, Jacob, in less than thirteen years, had built a town containing 30,000 people, and the district was transformed into one fertile garden. This city was called Jacobabad. It was here that he ruled, wrote, made experiments in gunnery, and invented the valuable rifle called after his name. invented the variable rine cancel titler its name. But, although still a young man, he, in the year 1958, gave sudden signs of a break-up of constitution. The ardent soldier had exhausted even his iron frame; a brain-fever ensued, and in a few days he was carried off. p. 1913; p. at Jacobabad, 1853.

Jacobens

JACOBEUS, Oliver, jū-ko-be'-us, a Danish physician, who became professor of philo-ophy and physic at Copenhagen. He wrote a compendum of medidine, and a number of Latin poems. B. in the isle of Jutland, 1650; D. at Copenhagen, 1747. JACON, Frederick Henry, we'-ko-be, a German metaplysical hillosopher, who occupied several distinguished pasts under the government of Dusseldorf, and, in 1504, became president of the Academy of Sciences at Munich. He published a great number of literary and philosophical works, in some of which he oembated the doctrines of Kant. His principal works or "Letters on the Doctrines of Spinoza," "Humes and Belief, or Idealism and Realism," and "Letter to Frinte," His complete work were published at Leipsic in 1820. B. at Dusseldorf, 1743; p. 1819.

JACONI, John George, a German poet, was a native of Dusseldorf; studied at Göttingen; was professor of philosophy and eloquence at Halle, and, subsequently, of the belief lettres at Friburg, which he retained during his life. The style of Jacobi was fermed on that of the lighter French poet, and possessed much ease metaphysical philosopher, who occupied several Interstited of account was refined out and of one lighter French poets, and possessed much ease and galety. E. 1749; D. 1814.

JACOB., Lucas, July-L. L., commonly called Lucas van Leyach, a painter, studied under his Indeas van Levuen, a panner, studiet under forselins father, Hugh Jacobs, and next under Cornelins Engelbrecht. Many of his pictures in cil and distemper are to be found on the continent; but he is now best known by his engravings.

but He is now best known by his engravings. H. at Leyden, 1191; D. 1533. JACOBS, Juriun, a painter of the Flemish school, was the disciple of Francis Soyders, whose manner he imitated. In his historical pieces he introduced animals painted in a mas-terly manner. p. in Switzerland, 1610; p. 1664.

Jacobs, Frederic, an eminent philological writer, became, in 1785, a teacher in the gymnasium of his native city, Gotha, in Saxony, where he published a number of excellent works, of which, besides those of a critical or philological character, may be noticed his "School for Women," 7 vols., and "Tales," 5 vols. B. 1761; D. 1847.

Jacquin

divine, who was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, and afterwards at Cambridge, where he became fellow of Trinity College. In 1617 he removed to London, and had the living of St. Martin, Ludgate, of which he was deprived for nonconformity in 1623. He was then taken into the family of the counters of Exeter. He wrote several theological works. B. in Leicestershire, 1622; p. 1637.

shire, 1822; D. 1897.

JACOPOWB, or Jacopo da Todi, ya'-co-po'-nai, an Italian poet, famous for his "Sacred Canticles," and for being the author of the "Stabat Mater." His canticles were printed at Venice Mater." 1118 can in 1617. D. 1306.

JACOTOT, Jean Joseph, zhak'-a-to, originally a captain of artillery in Napoleon's army, and subsequently sub-director of the Polytechnic subsequently sub-director of the Polyteonia, School, was deprived of his office at the Restoration for having been a member of the chamber during the "hundred dray." Estings to Belgium, he there conceived and put him partial practice a new system of education, on the principle that all intelligencessor count, the only difference between man and man being the result of circumstances more than of nature. He left several works upon the subject, which are inte-recting for ingenuity, if not for correctness. B. 1770; p. 1819.

Jacquand, Joseph Maris, MV-art. a celebrated mechanician, and inventor of the Jacquard loom, was the son of a poor weaver, and is said to have had no school education, having taught himself to read and write. From an early caugh evined a great and table for mechanical studies. After having inherited his father's looms and stock in trade, be, for some time, worked as a weaver; but was subsequently companied to the studies of the studies of the some time. pelled to sell all his working apparatus, having contracted many delets through his unfortunate contracted many dense through his anniversal experiments in weaving, cullery, and type-founding. He served with the republican army in the defence of Lyons and on the Rhine; but afterwards returned to his native city, and applied himself energetically to perfect the splendid piece of mechanism which bears his name, and which is now extensively employed, n. at Lyons, 1752; D. at Oullins, near Lyons, 1834.

JACQUELOT, Isaac, zhak-lo, a learned JACQUILOT, isaac, znak-to, a learned French Protestant, was the san of a minister at Vassy. At the age of 21 he became assistant to his father; but, on the revocation of the Edit of Nantes, he went to Heidelberg and thence to the Hague. The Heidelberg and thence to the Hague The king of Prussia invited him to his capital, where he became his unject's chaplain, and had a pension. He wrote "Dissertations on the Exist-nce of Gol," three pamphiets against "Dayle's Dictionary," "Dissertations on the Messiah," "A Treative on the Institution of the Surje-tures," "Letters to the Hishops of France," sormon, a work against Sociinaism, &c. B. 1447; D. 1708.

 Jacquet, Louis, zha'-kai, a French writer and ecclesiastic, who wrote an ingenious parallel between the Greek and French tragic poets, and some prize essays, which were rewarded by the Academy of Besançon. He was an enthusiastic admirer of Rousseau, whom in disposition and manners he greatly resembled. B. at Lyons. 1732 ; D. 1793.

which desides more of a criateat or pinion-cal character, may be noticed his "School State", Nicholas Joseph, ya'-quin, a cele-fromen, '7 vols., and "Tales," 5 vols. p. 1704; Thomas, jad'-komb, a nonconformist occurryman, Van Swicten, to visit Vicand, when the emperor Francis I. sent him to the West Indies to collect plants for the botanical gardens of Vienna and Schoenbrunn; and after an abor vienna and schoenorum; and are an access as sence of six years, he returned with a superb collection. Two years afterwards appeared his "Catalogue of Plants growing in the Neighbourhand of Vienna;" and in 1773 a magnificent work, entitled "Flora Austriaca," with 500 coloured eneravings. He was appointed to various effices, and was created a baron in 1806. B. at Leyden, 1727; D. 1817. Jappus, jad-dus, high priest of the Jews, who,

JADUS, Jau-aus, nign priest of the Jews, who, when Alexander the Great intended to pillage Jerusalem and the temple, went to meet him in his pontifical robes, and the sight so struck the victor, that he fell at the feet of Jaddus, declaring he had seen in a vision a man dressed in precisely the same garments, who had promised him the empire of Asia. This so altered Alexander's sentiments, that he offered sacrifices to the God of Israel.

JAPELOR, Nicolas, zhad'-lo, a French physician, who wrote "The Picture of Animal Economy," a "Complete Course of Anatomy," and a "Pharmacopeia for the Poor." B. at Nancy, 1736; D. same place, 1793.

JAEGER, John Wolfgang, yai-jer, a Lutheran divine, who became preacher of the cathedral in his native city, chancellor of the university, and provost of the church of Tubingen. He wrote several works, the chief of which are,—" Eccleseveral worse, in each of which are, eccusionated History compared with Profame; "A Compendium of Divinity;" "The Life of Spinoza." n. at Stuttgardt, 1647; p. 1720.

JAGELDOS, jú-gel-los, the name of an ancient dynasty of the grand-duchy of Lithu-and the state of the grand-ducty of Institution and which afterwards gave monarchs to Poland, Hungary, and Boh mia. Its founder was the grand-duke Jagellon, who, in 1336, married Hedwige, daughter of the king of Hungary and Poland. He subsequently embraced the and Poland. He subsequently embraced the Christian religion, and became king of Poland, under the title of Ladislas V. His descen-cauts reigned both in Lithuania and Poland, but Alexander Jagellon united both crowns in 1501.-Several Jagellons reigned at a later

Jago, Richard, Jai-go, an English poet, was clausted at University College, Oxford, entered into orders, and in 1724 Johnson of the vearage of Suittersfield, in Warwickshire. In 1771 he was presented to the living of Kilmcote, in Leiesstrahire. His "Elegy on the Black-birds," first published in the "Adventurer," was attributed to different writers. His prin-

"cpal performance is a descriptive poem, entitled
"Edgehili" z. in Warwickshire, 1715; p. 1781.
JAHN, Johann, yon, a learned German orientalist, who was professor of theology and of the Criental languages at the university of Vienna; wrote grammars of the Arabian, Hebrew, Syriac, and Chaldean tongues; and, in 1800, published an important work on Biblieal Archwology, which has been translated into English. B. at Taswitz, Moravia, 1750; p. at Vienna, 1815.

Jaun, Otho, a German writer and archæologist, who was born at Kiel, in the now Prussian duchy of Holstein, and studied under Lachmann and or Hoistein, and studied under Laciniania and Gerhardt, at Berlin. After lecturing in his na-tire own on ar heology and philology, he was made professor of the latter science at Leipsic, but was deprived of his office for the part he took in the attempts to sever Holstein from Denmark in 1813 and 1849. He has written a life of Mozart. B. 1913.

JAILLOT, Hubert Alexis, zhail'-lo, geographer to the French king, was at first a sculptor; but having married the daughter of a map-colourer, naving married the dadgater of a map-coourer, he turned his attention to geography. He engraved many maps and charts, particularly the great maps of France, that of Loraine being his best work. In 1669 he published a set of maps, drawn by Sanson, and engraved by himself. D. 1712.

Jamblichus, jum'-ble-cus, (see Iamblichus) a Platonic philosopher.

James, Sr., of Compostella, jaims, the patron saint of Spain. This is the name given by the Spanish Roman Catholics to St. James the Great, the inhabitants of Compostella, in Spain, pretending to possess his body enshrined in their cathedral.

SOVEREIGNS OF SCOTLAND.

JAMES I., king of Scotland, the son of Robert III., was taken by the English on his passage to France, and kept in confinement 18 years. In 1423 he obtained his liberty on marrying Joanna Beaufort, daughter of the earl of Somer-set, whom he had fallen in love with from seeing set, whom he had fallen in love with from seeing her walking in the royal gardens at Windsor while he was a prisoner there, and who is believed to be the lady alluded to in James's pleasing poem of the "King's Quhair." On his return to Scotland, he severely punished his uncle, the duke of Albany, and others, who had misgoverned the country in his absence, in consequence of the country in the absence, in consequence of which a conspiracy was formed, and he was murdered in his private apartments in 1437. B. 1394. James I. was a most accomplished gentleman, and a poet of no little merit. He invented a sort of plaintive melody, which was greatly admired and imitated in Italy, in which country he was, in consequence, long remembered with respect. He was one of the most skilful harpers of his time, and excelled all competitors in the use of that instrument. Three compositions of his have come down to us—"Chris's Kirk on the Green," the "King's Quhair," and "Peebles at the Play"—which exhibit no mean degree of intellectual power exhibit no mean degree of intellectual power and literary skill.

Jamas II., king of Scotland, succeeded the preceding king, his father, at the age of seven years. He assisted Charles VII. of France against the English, and punished rigorously those lords who had revolted against him. B. 1813; killed by the bursting of a gun at the circum of English.

siege of Roxburgh, 1460.

James III. was the son and successor of the above, and ascended the throne in 1460. He was a weak, priest-ridden king, and was charged with having committed so many cruelties, an I being so entirely guided by favourites, that his subjects revolted, and defeated the king at Sauchie-Burn, near Stirling. James fled from the field, but fell from his horse, and was nur-dered in a mill near the battle-field. Some historians maintain that the character of James has been greatly misrepresented by his contempo-raries, and consequently misunderstood by posterity. According to their view, James was more of a scholar and man of taste than was suited to the rude and turbulent times in which he lived, the rude and turbulent times in which he lived, and that his partonage of art, particularly architecture, and the favour he bestowed on its professors, provided the hostility of the barrons, and led to his melancholy fate. (See Counax, Robert; and Douglas, Archibald, "Bell-the-Cat.") n. about 1153; killed, 1493.

JAMES IV. succeeded his father, the last mentioned, at the age of about 15 years. He had been made a tool of by the discontented and turbulent barons, who, having levied an army, placed the prince at the head of it, and the result was the defeat and death of the king near Sauchie-Burn, as mentioned above. James IV. never forgave himself for his share in this transaction, and, it is said, wore an iron belt round his waist as a penance for his filial disobedience. He afterwards defeated the rebel-lious lords, induced the barons to relinquish the gloomy isolation in which they lived on their estates during the reign of his father, intro-duced order in the administration of the law, and greatly encouraged the development of the industry and commerce of the kingdom. Under the advice of Sir Andrew Wood, of Largo, he formed a navy, which even then proved itself formidable to that of England. With the ruler of that country, however, Henry VII., James cultivated amity, and married his daughter, the Princess Margaret. But after the death of the first Tudor king, the relations between of the first Tudor king, the relations servecine the two countries became loss cordial; and, on Honry VIII. invading France, James gave assistance to Louis XII., and having ruised an army, including almost every man capable of bearing arms, marched into England, but we defeated at Flodden Field, in 1513, by the earl of Surrey, and himself and nearly the whole of his army perished. B. about 1473. This monarch's character and tragic fate are strikingly depicted by Sir Walter Scott in "Marmion."

by Sir Watter Scott in "airmon.

James V., the son of the above, was only a year old at the time of his father's death. At the age of 17 he assumed the government, quelled the power, pride, and turbulence of the barons, particularly the Douglases, who had long held him in tutelage, and assisted Francis I. of France against the emperor Charles V., for which the French king gave him his daughter Which the French and gave him his daughter Margaret in marriage. On her decease, he married Mary of Loraine, daughter of Claude, duke of Guise. On his death, James left his crown to the beautiful and unhappy Mary queen of Scots, his daughter. B. 1512; D. 1522. James was of a romantic and adventure-seeking dispowas of a romand and accentive-seeking dispo-sition, which he indulged by wandering in dis-guise through the country, both to gratify his own inclination and to see for himself how the people were treated, for his care and protection of whom he was called the "Commons' King." Many songs, ballads, poems, and plays have been founded on the adventures of James V.— among which may be mentioned the "Lady of the Lake," by Sir Walter Scott; a drama called "The Laird of Pallangrich," in which the late Mr. Mackay used to perform with great applause on the Scottish stage; and a humorous but somewhat indelicate ballad, the "Jolly Beggar, or We'll gang nae mair a roving," which, pruned of its objectionable passages, was occasionally sung by the late popular vocalist, Mr. John Wilson.

James I, of England, and VI. of Scotland, and with the habit of the Cisterian was the son of Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley, by Mary queen of Scots, dangter of James V. N. 12.76. When only a year old, he was proclaimed king, on the forced resignation of his mother, and in 1903, succeeded Queen Elizabeth on the English throne. A pilot was soon after disco- and united Catalonia Secondary of the Company of the Comp

Lady Arabella Stuart, upon the English throne in his stead, for which Lords Cobham and Grey, and Sir Walter Raleigh, were indicted. But, in 1605, the more desperate attempt to blow up the king, the prince, and both houses of Par-liament, known as the Gunpowder Plot, was discovered, for which Guy Fawkes and many other persons were executed. In 1800 he established episcopacy in Scotland, and made peace with Spain. In 1612, his son, Prince Henry, by Anne of Denmark, died, and the same year his daughter was married to Frederick, the electorpalatine. One of the greatest blots of his rei; was the execution of Sir Walter Raleigh, fifteen years after sentence. James was a man of learning, and affected to be a profound scholar, particularly in theology, being not indifferently acquainted with polemics, of which he was so fond as to found Chelsea College for the maintenance of learned men, who were to employ themselves in managing controversies, especially with the church of Rome. Charles II., however, applied it to the better purpose of affording a home for soldiers worn out in the affording a nome for southers work out in the service of their country. James wrote, among other books, a "Commentary on the Revelation," in which he calls the pope Antichrist; Logi, 'in which he calls the pope Antichrist; Basilicon Doron; or, Advice to his Son;' 'Demonology; or, a Discourse on Witchcraft,' James I, held very strong opinions as to the "divine right of kings," with which he induced his son Charles II, a rigid adherence to which not only beauth the strong was a some control of the contro brought that unhappy monarch to the scaffold, but led to the expulsion of the Stuarts from the English throne. B. at the Castle of Edinburgh, 1506; D. in England, 1825.

James II., king of England, was the second JAMPS II., king of England, was the second son of Charles I., and was declared duke of York soon after his birth. During the civil war he resided in France, where he inhibed the principles of popery. At the Restoration he returned to England, and secretly married Anne Hyde, daughter of the Earl of Charendon, by whom he had two daughters, who afterwards became queens of England : viz., Mary and Anne. In the Dutch war he signalized himself as commander of the English fleet, and showed great skill and bravery. On the death of his first wife, he married Mary Beatrix of Modena. He succeeded to the throne on the death of Charles II., in 1635; but his zeal for his religion leading him into measures subversive of the constitution, the Prince of Orange, who had married his doughter Mary, was invited to England by several of the nobility; and the king, finding himself abandoned by his friends, withdrew to France, 1688. B. in London, 1633; b. at St. Germains, 1701.—His son James, commonly called the Old Pretender, died at Rome, in 1766.

JAMES I., king of Aragon, called the War-rior, succeeded his father, Peter the Catholic, in 1213. He conquered the islands of Majorca and Minorca, Valencia, and other provinces, from the Moors. Before he expired, he resigned the crown to his successor, and took the habit of the Cistercian monks, in accordance with a superstition of the age, B. 1206;

JAMES II., king of Aragon, succeeded his brother, Alphonso III., in 1291. He carried on a long war against Navarre and the Moors, and united Catalonia to his crown. n. about

JAMES DE VITRI, a cardinal in the 13th centurn, attended the crusaders to the Holy Land, and was made bishop of Ptolemais; after which Gregory IX. roked him to the purple, and employed him as legate. He wrote an "Eastern and Western History." n. at Vitri, near Paris; D. 1244.

JAMES OF VORAGINE, a Dominican and bishop, who became provincial of his order, and archibishop of Genoa, compiled a Golden Legend, full of pious fables, which has been many times reprinted. B. at Genoa, about 1330;

D. about 1398.

D. about 1898.

JAMES, Thomas, a learned divine, was educated first at Winchester school, and next at New College, Oxford, where he was chosen fellow, with the degree of D.D. He was chosen first keeper of the Bodleian Library, and made sub-dean of Wells. He collated MSS, of the unclear fathers, with a view to publish them, but failed in his design, for want of encourage-ment. He wrote several learned books, the chief of which is, "A Treatise of the Corruption of the Seriptares, Cometis, and Fattlers."

1. at Newport, Isle of Wight, 1571; D. at Oxford, 1633.

JAMPS, Richard, nephew of the above, was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, whence he removed to Corpus Christi, of which he became a fellow. He travelled in Russia, and published a narrative of his journey in 1619. He was of a narrative of its journey in 1919. He was of great service to Selden and Sir Robert Cotton, being a man of extensive learning, and profoundly acquainted with ancient MSS. He published several books in Latin. p. 1592; p. in London, 1631.

James, Thomas, an English navigator, who, in 1631 and 1632, attempted to discover a northwest passage. He wintered on Charleton Island. in Hudson's Bay, and next summer proceeded on his voyage, but was unable to penetrate far-ther than 65 decrees and a half north. He made some discoveries on the coast of Hudson's Bay; to the country on the western side of which he gave the name of New South Wales. On his return to England he published an account of his expedition, entitled "The Strange and Dangerous Voyage of Captain Thomas James, for the Discovery of a North-West Passage to the South Sea.

sage to the South Sea."

JAMES, Bobert, an English physician, who received his education at St. John's College, Oxford. After practising in the country, he removed to Loudon, and, in 1743, published his embedded to Loudon, and, in 1743, published his "Modical Dictionary," in 3 vols. 6016, in which he was assisted by Dr. Johnson—a work of considerable merit in its day. He also published other works in connexicn with his profession; but he is best known buy a valuable medicine unit. but he is best known by a valuable medicine, universally celebrated under the name of "James's powder," which gave a fortune to his family. B. at Kinverstone, Staffordshire, 1703; D. 1776.

B. 21 K. HIVETSTONE, STATOTISHITE, 1703; D. 1776.

JAMES, THOMBAS, a learned divine, who was educated at Elon, whence he was elected to King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and proceeded to his degree of D. D. in 1780. He was, for many years, a public tarter in that college. In 1776 he became master of Ingiby school, which station he filled, with great because master a striped on the second master of the process of the process of the second master of the process of the pr honour and satisfaction, till 1793, when he resigned. For his great services he was preferred to a prebend in Worcester cathedral, and the

550

the Fifth Book of Euclid by Algebra," and two Sermons. B. at St. Neots, in Huntingdonshire; D. at Harrington, Worcestershire, 1804.

James, William, was the author of a valuable work, entitled "The Naval History of Great Britain, from the Declaration of War by France, in 1793, to the Accession of George IV.," &c. Every accessible source of authentic informa-tion was made use of by Mr. James in writing this history, which has gone through several editions, and has now become a standard work on the history of the British navy. The freedom with which he criticised the conduct of some of those engaged in the occurrences he had to relate, however, involved him in litigation, which considerably impaired the pecuniary success of his work. D. 1827.

James, William, a land agent and surveyor. was the original projector of the Manchester and Liverpool railway; and may in some re-spects be regarded as the father of the railway system, having surveyed numerous lines at his own expense, and been an active promoter of these undertakings, at a time when they were considered to be mere speculative innovations, B. at Henley-in-Arden, Warwickshire, 1770; D.

1837.

James, John Thomas, D.D., bishop of Cal-cutta, was educated at Rugby School, and the Charterhouse, London; and, in 1804, entered at Christchurch College, Oxford, where he took his degrees, and for a time acted as a college tutor. In 1813 he left the university to make the tour of the north of Europe with Sir James Riddell and on his return published an account of his travels, with illustrative sketches of scenery, engraved and coloured by himself. In 1816 he visited Italy, to study the works of art in that country; and the result of his observations appeared in an account of the Italian school of painting, which was followed by another on the French, Dutch, and German schools. He took French, Dutch, and German schools. He took orders soon after returning from Haly; and in 1826 published a tract, entitled "The Senisceptic, or the Common Sense of Religion considered." At this time he only held the small vicange of Filtron, in Bediovalshire; but on the death of Bishop Heber, was nominated to the see of Calcutar, received the degree of D.D., and embarked for India in 1827, but did not long survived the delectrium similarogs of the climate survived the delectrium similarogs of the climate survive the deleterious influences of the climate and the anxieties attendant on his new position. B. 1786; D. 1829.

B. 1769; D. 1829.

JAMES, George Payne Rainsford, a modern English novelist, historian, and poct, received the rudiments of his education at a school in Greenwich; but was sent, about the age of 15, to Paris, where he remained several years. When only 17, he wrote several Eastern tales, which was a Governor's which does not have been appropriately and the positive of the property .thich were afterwards published for the benefit of the Literary Fund. From that period till the year 1825, he continued to contribute anonymously to the magazines and periodicals; but, encouraged by Sir Walter Scott and Washington Irving, he wrote and published an historical novel, in the style of the former, called "Richelieu." This met with a very decided success This met with a very decided success, and the young author rapidly produced a num-ber of other works of the same character. During the succeeding quarter of a century, he wrote with great industry; novels, fairy tales, poems, and historical works issuing in quick to a process in writesect cancerna, and one poems, and insorrem works assuing in quick living of Harrington, in the same county. He succession from his rapid and fertile pen. Of published a "Compendium of Geography for his novels, it will be sufficient to enumerate a the use of Rugby School," "An Explanation of few of the best: these are, "Darnley," "Henry

Jamesone

Jamieson

Masterman," "Philip Augustus," "The Gipsy," "The Smuggler," and "Morley Ernstein." The most successful of his historical works are,
"The Life of the Black Prince," "The History of Charlemagne," and the Lives of some Forcign Statesmen, which he contributed to Lardner's Cyclopedia. During the period of his greatest popularity, he had been appointed historiographer of England by William IV.; but soon resigned the office. Mr. James was appointed by the company of the co resigned the office. Mr. James was appointed British consul at Norfolk, Virginia, in 1852. He wrote and published several novels in America, besides sending three or four to be pro-duced in England. He was afterwards sent to Venice as the British consul-general for the Venice as the Bittins consul-general for the Adriatic ports. D. in London, 1801; D. in 1800, at Venice, where he was buried, and the follow-ing epitaph, written by Walter Savage Landor, placed upon his grave in 1802, "George Parue Rainsford James, British Consul-General in the Adriatic, died at Venice, agod sixty, on the 9th of June, 1800. His metric sas writter are known of oune, 1880. His merits as a writer are known wherever the English lauruage is, and as a man they rest on the hearts of many. A few friends have creeted this humble and perichable monument."

JAMESON, George, Jaim'-con, a Scotch pair ter, termed by Waipole the Vandyck of Scot-land, studied under Rubens, with Vandyck, at Antwerp, and, on his return to his native country, painted the portraits of many of the most distinguished Seatch noblemen then living, as well as one of the English king, Charles I. B.

at Aberdeen, 15:6; p. 1614.

JAMESON, Robert, one of the most eminent naturalists of his time, studied for the medical profession, but soon abandoned the pur-suit of the healing art, and devoted himself with ardour to geology, mineralogy, and the kindred sciences. In 1793 he published the "Geology of Arran and the Shetland Isles." This was followed in 1800 by the "Mineralogy of the Scottish Isles," in two volumes 4to; and shortly afterwards by the "Mineralogy of Dumfriesshire." With a spirit of enterprise rare at that time in Scotland, he went, in order to perfeet himself in his favourite studies, to Friburg, in Saxony, where the celebrated Werner had established a school which attracted pupils from all parts of Europe. Jameson remained at Friburg two years, and shortly after his return was appointed professor of natural history in the University of Edinburgh on the death of Dr. Walker in 1804. From this period death of Dr. Waiker in 1202. From this period his publications were numerous, and his class-books in particular rose specially into high reputation. We cannot afford space to give an entire list of his works, but the following will show the zeal and energy with which he devoted himself to the investigation of his favourite sciences: "The Characters of Minefavourite sciences: "The Characters of Mine-rals," 1805; "System of Mineralogy," two vols., 1806, to which a third volume was added it 1809, on Geology, then termed "Geognosy," "Notes to Black's Translation of Von Buch's Travels in Norway and Lapland," 1813; "System of Mineralogy," enlarged, without the Geognosy, three vols. 1816; "Characters of Minerals," new edition, 1816; "Manual of Minerals," and Description of Mountain Rocks," 1821, one vol. In 1819 he commenced the "Edinburch Philosonbieal Journal," which the "Edinburgh Philosophical Journal," which he continued till his death. It extends to seventy volumes, and has attained to a European reputation. B. in Leith, 1773; D. 1853.

JAMESON, Mrs. Anna, a modern English authoress, was eldest daughter of Mr. Murphy, an artist of Dublin, who afterwards became paintar-in-ordinary to the Princess Charlotte.
A distinguished disciple of art himself, he early inabued his talented daughter with its principles. As a young woman, Anna Murphy occupied the post of governoss in two or three families of distinction; but, at the age of 25, she married Mr. Robert J. meson, a barrister, who, several years afterwards, was appointed to an official post in Canada, Mrs. Jameson joined an online past in Canada. Ars, Jameson Johned her hu-band subsequently; but a separation eventually took place by mutual agreement; upon which she returned to London, and devoted herself henceforth to literature and the fine arts. She had already made her appearmes area. She had already made the appearance as an authoress, having published the "Diary of an Emuyée," in 1926, a work which was reprinted, with many additions, under the title "Visits and Sketchasat Home and Abroad."

title "Visits and skelchas at Homeanii Abroad." In 1820 appeared her "Loves of the series of imaginative skelches; after that, "Fernale Do rephy." Homanes of Biography." Boants of the Court of Charles H., "Formle Syceologis," and "Charesteristics of Women," awork similar to the "Loves of the Posts," but of a higher and more ambittons character. In 1829 site published "Winter Staties and Summer Randbles in Canada, which emissing a room of the visit to Canada. which contained a record of her visit to Canada; and, in 1810, she put forth a translation of In all her works of foreign travel hitherto published, social and artistic criticisms were to be found; but, about this time, she commenced writing books of an exclusively artistic character; the first of these being her "Handbook to the Public Galleries of Art in and near London, which was published in 1812. Akin to this production were her "Companion to the most production were her "Companion to the most Celebrated Private Gallerius of Art in London;" "Lives of the Early Italian Painters;" a colle-tion of casays, chiefly artistic, called "Memoirs and Essays;" "The Poetry of Sacred and Le-gendary Art," "The Legends of the Momattic Orders," and "The Legends of the Mad "," this last appearing in 1852. All these works displayed a profound acquaintance with the principles, and a refined appreciation of the great examples, of art. Indeed, her labours greate examples, of art. Indeed, her labours may be said to have been the precursor of that enlarged and discriminative fine-art criticism which has since sprung up in England. The "Handbook to the Courts of Modern Sculpture at the Crystal Palace" was written by her; but, in addition to her article criticisms, she was author of a few small works, in which she sought to ascertain "whether there was any sought to ascertain "whether there was any hope or possibility of organizing, into some wise and recognised system, the taleut and energy, the piety and tenderness of our women for the good of the whole community." For two years before her death she had been assiduously engaged upon "The Life of our Lord," and it was while prosecuting her researches for this purpose at the British Museum, that she caught a cold which caused her death. B. in Dublin about 1797; p. in London, 1860.

JAMIESON, John, D.D., jul'-me-son, a Scotch antiquarian and lexicographer, who was sent by his father, at the early age of nine years, to the university of Glasgow, and subsequently attended lectures at the university of Edinburgh. In 1779 he obtained a licence to preach from the Scotch claimets, authough without any appointment. After having writh, as several poems, sermons, theological works, and many autiquarian researches, he produced, in 1809, his "Etymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language," and in 1818, "An Abridgment of the Scottish Dictionary," which last are valuable on account of the very large collection of old words, theore and workers promptiles to his public to the contractions. idioms, and customs, peculiar to his native country, contained therein. He had, for several years before his death, been in receipt of a years before its death, been in receipt of pension, first from the Royal Society of Literature, and afterwards from the civil list. B. at Glasgow, 1759; p. at Edinburgh, 1838.

Jamen, Amadis, zha'-meen, a French poet, and secretary to Charles IX., who, besides his poetical works, wrote academical discourses in prose, and completed the translation of Ho-mer's "Iliad" into French verse, which was left imperfect by Salel. B. about 1530; D. about

1585.

JANEWAY, James, juin'-a-way, a noncon-formist divine, who was educated at Christchurch College, Oxford; and being deprived after the flestoration, opened a meeting-house at Rotherhithe, when the act of indulgence was passed. Among his works are, "Heaven upon Earth," "A Token for Children," which has gone through numerous editions; "The Saint's Encouragement to Diligence," and "A Legacy to my Friends." B. in Hertfordshire; D. 1674. JANET-L'ANGE. zhu'-net-lanzh, commonly so called, his real name being Ange Louis Janet, a modern French painter and designer on wood. After having studied for several years in the u'cl-ers of Ingrès and Collin, he afterwards became a pull of Hornec Vernet, whom he assisted in making the designs for the illustration of the history of Napoleon I. Between the years 1836-46, he painted several pictures, which were hung in the Paris exhibitions; but about the latter year he was engaged by the proprietors of the French "Illustration" to undertake the artistic direction of that journal. During the ten subsequent years he made a very large number of designs for illustrated newspapers, and for French peri-odicals, and even for English publishers; but odicais, and even for raights phonsiers; out afterwards, returned to his oil-painting; and executed several historical pieces, which ob-tained considerable success in his own country. n, at Paris, 1818.

JANICON, Francis Michael, zha'-ne-kawng, a French political writer, who settled in Holland, and was the author of "The present State of the Republic of the United Provinces and their Versellands". Dependencies." B. at Paris, 1674; D. at the Hague, 1730.

Janin, Jules-Gabriel, zha'-nă, a modern critic and author, who evinced in his earlier years a great aptitude for study, and acquitted himself to well at the college of St. Etienne, in the department of the Loire, that his father decided to send him to Paris, to finish, at the college Louis-le-Grand, an education thus asspiciously commenced. Shortly after leaving this college, the "Figaro," and continued to do so until that publication was suppressed by the government in 1825. His vivacious and fearless pen was next employed in the columns of the "Messager des Chambres," and so trenchant were his attacks upon the despotic Polignac ministry of following propositions extracted from it:—That Charles X., that, in 1829, the journal to which there are divine precepts which even good men 553

prosbytery of Glargow, after which he acted as he contributed was subjected to a heavy fine, postor to a number of congregations in many. In this year appeared his first novel, "The Dead Sectich districts, aithough without any appoint.

Donkey and the Guillotined Woman," which ment. After having written several poems, was nothing else than a satire upon the style of was nothing east than a starre agon the style of Victor Hugo, as head of the "romantie" school. So highly did his own party already esteen him, that, although only 25 years of age, he was styled by them "the Prince of Critics." During the three or four following years he published two novels,—"The Confession" and "Barnave," as well as a couple of volumes of short tales. In 1833 he commenced what has since proved to be the greatest of all his literary undertakings, -the dramatic notices and literary reviews for the "Journal des Débats." Every Monday morning, for upwards of a quarter of a century, morning, for upwards of a quarter of a century, appeared a witty, sparkling, and pointed criticism on dramatic literature and the stage. These feuilletons, or foot-articles (they being always inserted at the bottom of the newspaper columns), soon made a European reputation for their author, who throwing aside the dogmatic severity of his predecessors, quickly became a public favourite, by the grace, the polish, and the intuitive justice which characterized his articles. The monarch of critics met with one reverse, however: in 1841, on the occasion of reverse, nowever: in 1841, on the occasion of his marriage with a young and beautiful heiros, he, instead of his usual literary feuilleton, sup-plied to the "Journal des Débats" a most complete and minute narrative of his happiness. This imprudence brought upon his head a slashing article in the "National," and for a long time Janin was never mentioned in the French newspapers but as the "married critic."
He also wrote many introductions, biographics, and critical essays for republications of classic French authors. To the "Revue de Paris" he contributed two remarkable sketches, one of Mirabeau, the other of Lord Byron. He likewise composed, compiled, and edited more than a score of illustrated tours in France, novels, essays, and works of general in France, novels, essays, and works of general literature; bosides writing a sories of letters on the Great Exhibition of 1851. A collection of his dramatic fauiltons has been published, under the pretentions title of "Dramatic and Literary History." n. at St. Etienne, in the department Loire, 1904.

JANSENTUS, Cornelius, jan-sen-e-us, bishop of Ghent, took part in the Council of Trent, and became remarkable there for the modesty of his demeanour, as well as for his great learning. He was the author of a "Harmony of the Gospels," and other works. B. at Hulst, Flanders, 1510; D. at Ghent, 1576.

Jansen, or Jansenius, Cornelius, jan'-sen, a celebrated Roman Catholic prelate, was educated at Utrecht, whence he removed to Louvain, where he was chosen principal of the college of St. Pulcheria. Being deputed by his university to go on a mission to the king of Spain, that monarch employed him to write a book against France, for which he was rewarded, in 1635, with the bishopric of Ypres, in Flanders. He wrote several books; but that by which he is best known is his "Augustinus," which was published after his death, and occasioned a fierce contest among the divines of the Romish church, which even the papal bulls could not suppress. In 1841 the inquisitors prohibited the perusal of the book; Urban VIII, censured it as herotical; and Innocent X., in 1653, condemned the cannot obey without the assistance of God: set up by public subscription in St. Martin's That no man can resist the influence of divine church, at Bolsword, in 1823. B. at Bolsword, That no man can resist the influence of divine grace on his mind: That to render human actions meritorious, it is not necessary for them to be free from necessity but constraint: That the doctrine of free-will is a gross error: That Jesus Christ died not for all men, but only for the elect. These doctrines the pope declared heretical, and a violent persecution was excited against all who maintained them. Jansenism, notwithstanding, found numerous disciples in France and the Low Countries. B. near Leer-

Jansonius

Jasmin

JANSENS, Abraham, yans'sene, a Dutch painter, whose colouring was so superior, that a picture of his, representing the descent from the cross, in the church of Ghent, has been taken for the work of Rubens, and is scarcely inferior to the works of that painter. B. at Antwerp, 1509; n. 1631.

JANSENN, Victor Honorius, an historical painter, who was patronized by the duke of Holstein, who sent him to Rome for inprovement. On his return to his own country, he adorned the churches and convents with his works. D. at Brussels, 1064; D. 1739. JANSSENS, Cornelius, a Dutch painter, who resided in England many years, and, in several respects, was equal to Vandyek. He painted perfects, was edital by vandes. The parties of the English nobility. D. 1005.

JANGARUS, Sr., shan-air'-cas, bishop of Denevento, who was beh aded at Puzzuoli, in the persecution under Diocletian, about the end of the 3rd century. His body was removed to Nuples, where a beautiful chapd was erceted to his memory in the cathedral. What renders his name remarkable is a pretended miracle exhibited yearly by the priests, who have what they term his blood in a phial. On bringing out what is called the head of the saint, the blood, hitherto in a congealed state, liquifics. This mummery is always practised when Vesuvius shows signs of a convulsion, and the people devoutly believe that the influence of the propie devoluty believe that the inherice of the saint will prevent an earthquake.

Japix, or Japicks, Gysbert, jai-pix, a Frisian poet, of whose touching and simple lyries Dr. H. Habburgers, a distinctible. J. H. Halbertsma, a distinguished Frisian writer, says, "For any one who has a feeling for true poetry, it is worth the trouble to learn Frisian, to enjoy the beauties of Gysbert Japix." He was the son of a poor carpenter of Bolsword, in Friesland, his family name being Holekania, which the poet changed into Japix, that word signifying "son of Jacob," which was his father's Christian name. Little is known of the pret's life, except that he was a schoolmaster and parish-clerk in Bolsword. His chief poems in manuscript are to be found in the Bodleian library. Boswell, on obtaining for Dr. Johnson treatise of devotion, nor even any of the bal-lads and story-books which are so agreeable to country people." The literature of Friesland does not, even at the present time, include a translation of the Holy Scriptures: the "Merhowever, been reproduced in the Frisian tongue.

JASHIN, James, abas'-md, a Gaseon post of In 1889, Sir John Bowring translated and published some poems of Jajin in the "Foreign a tallor, and was himself early put to the trade Quarter Roylew." A bust of the poet was of a hairdresser, which, despite his successful tasks.

Friesland, 1603; p. at the same place, of the plague, 1666.

JARCHAS, Jur'-käs, the most learned of the Indian Brahmins, and a great astronomer according to Jerome. He is said to have given Apollonius Tyaneus seven magical rings called by the names of the planets.

JARCHI, Solomon-Ben-Isaac, Jur'-ki, a celebrated rabbi, who spent thirty years in travel-ling through Europe and the castern countries. He wrote "Commentaries on the Bible," which are highly esteemed by the Jews. B. at Troyes, France, 1104; D. 1180.

JARDYN, Karel de, yar'-dine, a Dutch landscape-painter, who studied and worked in Italy, where he acquired a great reputation; and so highly was he esteemed, that, though a Protestant, his remains were interred in consecrated ground. B. at Amsterdam, 1640; D. at Venice, 1678.

Jarnac, Guy de Chabot, lord of, zhar'-nak, a French gentleman of the chamber to Francis I. and Henry II., who fought a duel with a courtier named La Chateignerale, in 1547. His adver-Jamae gave him a mortal thrust under the hough. The title corps-de-Jamae has since been given to treacherous blows.

1570.

JARNOWICK, OF GIORNOVICHI, GIOVARDI Mane, yar'-no-vik, a celebrated violinist, the most accomplished pupil of Lulli, for several years resided in Paris, and was considered at the head of his profession; he afterwards went to England, where he was very popular; but on being invited to settle at Petersburg, he went thither. He was very irritable and eccentric, and many anecdotes illustrative of these traits are recorded of him. B. at Palermo, 1745; D. in St. Petersburg, 1804.

JABRY, Nicholas, zhar'-re, an eminent French caligraphist, who was appointed "Master Penemealigraphist, who was appointed "Master Peneman" to Louis XIV., and executed for that king, and for the chief lords of his court, many works which rank as masterpieces of the art of caligraphy. His "Garland of Julia," which he executed in 1811 for the duke of Montausier, executed in 101 for the duke of monadater, consisting of 30 follo leaves, was sold, in 1714, for the sum of £580. He also completed the "Hours of Nôtre Dame," in 120 leaves, in 1647.

B. at Paris, about 1620.

Jars, Gabriel, zhars, a French mineralogist, who visited, with Duhamel, the mines of Saxony, Bohemia, Austria, Hungary, and Carinthia, also those of England, and other countries. In 1768 he became a member of the French Academy of Sciences. His brother published his observa-tions, under the title of "Voyages Metallur-giques," in 3 vols. B. at Lyons, 1732; B. at Clermont, Auvergne, 1769.

JARVIS, John, jurious, an artist, whose paintings on glass were famous in their day, was a native of Dublin, where he practised his art for some time, and then removed to London, where he soon made himself a high reputation. The west window of New College, Oxford, which he painted from designs by Sir Joshua Reynolds, is his most celebrated performance. B. 1749;

D. 1801.

career as a poet, he always continued to praccareer as a poet, he always continued to practise. He wrote and published several collections of songs and poems, all of them written in the patois, or rural dialect, spoken on written in the paties, or thrist disease, spoker on the banks of the Garonne. Soon after the pub-lication of his collection of poems, "Les Papil-lotes,"—"the Curlpapers" he was elected member of the Academies of Agen and Bordeaux. Two of the most celebrated critics in France, Charles Nodier and Sainte-Beuve, have written critical comments upon Jasmin's productions, which they state to be full of feeling and joyous grace. The poet usually recited his poems in his native town, and, having a fine voice and manner, the delivery of these lyries, varying in dialect but little from those of the old troubadours of the 11th and 12th centuries, is said to have produced a very great effect upon his hearers. Jasmin received many presents; Louis Philippe and the duke and duchess of Orleans bestowed upon him handsome gratuities : Toubestowed upon him handsome gratuities; Tou-louse gave him a golden laurel-wreath; Pan marked its sense of his worth by sending him a service of china. When he began to write poetry, all his family, he says, laughed at him, but, afterwards, his wife, selecting the best pen and paper for his use, would observe, "Every verse you write, Jacques, puts a fresh tile on the rooft." B. th Agen, 1789; 1.1864. Javoovar, the chevalier Louis de, zho'-koor, member of the Royal Society of London, and of the Academies of Berlin and Stockholm, fur-nished the French Enverlowatia with articles nished the French Encyclopædia with articles on medicine and natural philosophy. He also compiled a "Universal Dictionary of Medicine," He also in 6 vols., but the MS. was lost on board a ship, no vois, but the abs. was 10st on board a sing, which foundered on her passage to Amsterdam.

n. at Paris, 1704; p. at Compilegne, 1779.

JAUDA, Auguste François, kolite, a French physician, and professor of Syriac in the Royal Collego of Paris, who translated into French, among other works, "Sharp's Surgery" "Ockley's History of the Saracens," and "Floyer on Asthma." p. 1707; p. 1707.

JAUBEGUY Y AGUILAR, cha'-oo-rai-goi e a-goo'-e'/-lar, a Spanish poet and painter, who resided for a long time at Rome, forming himself upon the best Italian models in both poetry and painting. On his return to his native land, he published some excellent translations of Tasso, and from the Latin. His pictures were distinguished for the Latin. His pictures were distinguished for their beautiful colour, for their fine gradations of light and shade, and for the beautiful flesh-tints in them. B. near Toledo, 1566; D. at Madrid,

JAY, Gui Michel Le, zhai, an advocate of the parliament of Paris, who printed a polyglot Bible at his own expense, and thereby impoverished himself. Subsequently entering into versined himself. Subsequently entering into holy orders, he was made dean of Vezeli. His polyglob Bible is elegantly printed in 10 vols., and has the Syriac and Arabic versions, which are not in that of Ximenes. p. 1675.

JAX, John, jai, an American jurist and statesman, who, after studying at Columbia (then King's) College, was admitted to the bar, and in 1774 was elected a delegate to the first American congress, at Philadelphia. In 1776 he was chosen president of the congress; in 1777 he was a member of the convention which peace with Great Britain. The definitive treater having been signed in September, 1783, he re-turned to the United States; and in 1784 was sent as envoy extraordinary to Great Britain. sent as envoy extraordinary to Great Britain, and concluded the frasty which has been called after his name. In 1795 he was elected governor of New York State; this post he continued to occupy till 1801, when he declined a re-election as well as a re-appointment to the office of chief-justice of the United States, and passed the remainder of his life in retirement. B. at New York, 1715; D. 1829.

JAY, William, son of the preceding, a cele-brated American slavery abolitionist, was designed for the profession of the law, but an affection of the eyes forced him to relinquish its study; whereupon he retired to his father's country seat at Bedford, Massachusetts. From the year 1819 he was one of the most active advocates of the abolition of slavery in the United States, and wrote several works in aid of the same cause. These were collected and published at Boston in a complete form, with the title, "Miscellaneous Writings on Slavery," in 1854. He was one of the founders of the American Diblical Society, and served as president of the Pence Society. In 1832 he edited his father's correspondence, and wrote a biography of him, publishing the work under the title of "The Life and Correspondence of John Jay." B. 1779; D. 1858.

Jax, Rev. William, an eminent Independent preacher, was the son of a stonecutter, at which trade he himself worked during his early years; but, while still young, was placed in the Marlborough Academy, with a view of being educated for the ministry. At sixteen years of age he commenced preaching, and, before he had age ne commenced preacting and, before the first reached his twentieth year, was appointed mi-nister of Argyle Chapel, Bath, where, for sixty-two years, he officiated. On completing the fiftieth year of his ministerial labours, in 1841, he was presented with a service of plate, and a purse containing £650, at a public meeting in Bath. His volumes of sermons met with considerable success, and passed through several editions. He wrote also an Essay on Marriage, "Lectures on Female Scripture Characters," and an Auto-biography, which was published in 1834. All his works have been issued in a complete form, in twelve volumes, Svo. B. at Tisbury, Wilts, 1769; D. 1853.

JAYADEVA, jai-a-de'-ra, a Hindon poet, of whose life or pursuits nothing certain is known. Only one of his poems is extant, this being the "Gita Govinda;" or, Poem in Honour of Govinda," one of the names of the Hindoo god vinda, one of the names of the Indiod government (Krishna, It is an amatory and voluptuous lyric, and Sir William Jones, Colebrooke, and other commentators, assert that it is only to be interpreted in an allegorical sense. Sir William Jones published a translation of the "(lita Go-vinda," in the 3rd vol. of the "Asiatic Re-searches."

searcnes."

Janookze, Caleb, jé-kek, a baker in High-street, St. Giles's, London, who for many years distinguished himself as president of a dis-puting society held at the "Robin Hood tavern," hear Temple-bar. He had considerable powers as a speaker and is said to have often op-posed with success the celebrated Burke, and framed the constitution of New York; and in posed with success the celebrated Burke, and the following was appointed chief-justice of the state. He was next sent as minister themselves at the bar and in the senante. Mr. plenipotenting to Spain; and in 1783 was appeliance one of the commissioners to negotiate a titled, "A Vindication of the Moral Character of the Apostle Paul from the Charge of Insincertiy and Hypocrisy brought against it by Lore Bolingbroke, Dr. Middleton, and others." He became a director of the Hand-in-Hand fireoffice, and was enabled to retire from his busi-once, and was enabled to retire from his dust-ness on a small fortune. D. 1796.

554

JEANNIN, Peter, zhan-nä, a French states-man, who was educated for the law, and be came president of the parliament of Paris, Henry IV. made him member of his council, and kept him at court, where no great enterprise was undertaken without consulting him. His memoirs were published in 1659. B. at Autun, 1540: p. 1622.

JEBB, Samuel, jeb, an English physician, was educated at Cambridge, and subsequently set-tled as physician at Stratford, in Essex, where he resided till a short time before his death. He edited an edition of Roger Bacon's works, and of several other learned authors. B. at and or several other fearmer authors. B. at Nottingham, 1809 p. 1772.

JEBB, John, a divine and physician, the son of Dr. John Jebb, dean of Cashel, studied at Trinity College, Dublin, and Peter-house, Cambridge; obtained church preferment, Cambridge; obtained church preferment, which, however, he resigned, and then commenced practice as a physician, in which he was very successful. He was a violent partisan in whatever he concerned as a characteristic partisan. whatever he engaged; and, though conscientious in his religious opinions, their peculiar complexion, and the freedom with which he indulged in the political squabbles of the day, obstructed his professional progress, and greatly impaired his usefulness. He was a fellow of the Royal Society, a contributor to the "Philosophical Transactions;" and his works, theological, political, and medical, form three vols. B. in London, 1736; D. 1786.

JEEJEEBHOY, Sir Jamsetjee, Bart., je'-jeeb-hoi, an eminent Parsee merchant of Bombay, was born of humble parents, and had to make his own way in the world; but by the time he was sixteen he was fully prepared to do so. That way was at first rough and hard; yet, undiscouraged, he went right on. The early life of the wealthy and honoured baronet was strongly in contrast with the calm which enveloped his later years. He made five mercantile voyages to China: in one of these, the ship in which he sailed formed one of the fleet which, under the command of Sir Nathaniel Dunce, beat off a French squadron under Admiral Linois. In another voyage, the vessel on board which were himself and his fortune, was captured by the French, and he was carried to the Cape of Good Hope, whence, with the loss of all his property, and after enduring many privations, he found his way in a Danish vessel to Calcutta. For tune smiled on him afterwards, however; and as his wealth increased, the tendency to share it with the needy, or to spend it for the benefit of the public, began to develope itself. In 1822 he released all the poor debtors confined by the Court of Requests from the Bombay gaol, by the simple process of paying their debts. From that time to the day of his death, the stream of his beneficence scarcely slacked in its flow. He dispensed in philanthropic services the vast sum of £300,000; his charity not being limited by the bounds of the community to which the munificent donor belonged. Parsee and Chrisvices, no less than for his philanthropic cilores. he was created a baronet, B. at Bombay, 1753; D. same place, 1859.

JEFFERIES, or JEFFREYS, George, Lord, jeffree, an English judge, notorious for his cruelty and injustice, was educated at Westminster school, after which he removed to the Inner Temple, where he studied the law with great application. By attaching himself to the duke of York, he obtained the appointment of Welsh judge, the honour of knighthood, and the chief-justiceship of Chester. In 1683 he was appointed chief-justice of the King's Etne's, and, in 1683, lord chancellor. His crudities on the western circuit towards the deluded followers of the duke of Monmouth were excessive; yet they gave great satisfaction to James II., who, with heartless mirth, called this "Jefferies's campaign." He supported all the arbitrary acts of the court, and rendered himself so obnoxious to the people, that, when James abdicated the throne, he attempted to leave the kingdom in the disguise of a sailor, but was recognised while drinking in a cellar in Wapping. Perceiving himself discovered, he feigned a cough, and turned to the wall with his pot of beer in his hand; but information of his presence being communicated to the mob, they rushed it, and carried him before the lord

Acton, Denbighshire, about 1610; D. in the Tower, 1689.

JEFFERSON, Thomas, jef-er-son, third president of the United States, after receiving his education at the college of William and Mary, at enteation as one conege or winding an anary, as Williamsburg, which, at the end of the 1sth century, was the capital of Virginia, he studied the law under Mr. Wythe, a celebrated barrister of that day, and, at the ago of twenty-four, began to practise at the General Court in 1767. In the stirring events that preceded the American revolution, he took a foremost and distinguished part, though he was never engaged in any military operations. He was governor of Virginia between 1779-81; three years afterwards, he was appointed minister to France, and remained at that post during five years. Shortly after his return to America, in 1789, he became secretary of state under the presidency of General Washington. He had lived some ime in retirement previous to the year 1790, when he was elected vice-president of the United States. In 1801 he became president, and after being elected a second time, refin d, in 1809, to his estate near Montheello, in friginia. Mr. Jefferson was author of a book alled "Notes on Virginia". Dat Shadwell, Jirginia, 1743: D. in Virginia, 1820. In Jurgary, 30th, jof-yie, an English divine, ducated at Catharine Hall, Cambridge. Archishop Thildson appointed him archiceacon of Norwich, in 1694. He published a volume of Cermons, and was the editor of "Christian dorals," a posthumous work, by Sir Thomas Bowne, and the sermons of Dr. Whicheota. Bowne, and the sermons of Dr. Whicheota. at Jurysch, 1647; D. 1730. ime in retirement previous to the year 1796, in diswind, 1647; D. 1720.

JEFFERNS, George, Jef-fres, a dramatic and miscellaneous writer, who was educated at Westminster school and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a followship. He drewwards studied the law, and was called to the lar, but never practised. His "Miscellanies" tian, Hindoo and Mussulman,—indeed, people bridge, where he obtained a followship. He of all classes and creeds, allike shared in his beneficence, the largest outlay being for the poor our, but never practised. His "Miscellanies" and for the public. For his great public ser- in prose and verse contain, among other pieces,

Jeffrey

Jehanghir

the tracedies of "Edwin" and "Merope." B. at Waldron, Northamptonshire, 1678; D. 1

Review," was the son of Mr. George Jeffrey, a clerk-depute of the Court of Session, and at eight years of age was sent to the High School of Edinburgh, where he was remembered by a fellow-pupil as "a little, clever, auxious boy, always near the top of his class, and who never lost a place without shedding tears." At fourteen years of age, he was sent to the university of Glasgow, where, in the debating societies of the college, he soon distinguished himself above his fellow-students by his fluent speech and severe criticisms on the efforts of his opponents. While at Glasgow, he formed a habit of making notes and abstracts from books, and writing essays, which had its advantage in his after-career. This practice was continued when he returned to Edinburgh, in 1759; and his biographer, Lord Cockburn, was a pupil in the law classes of the Ediuburgh was a pupi in the law classes of the Endodryn university, and attended them till 1791, when he went to Queen's College, Oxford, to finish his studies. He left the English college in has strates. He left the larginal conlege in the nondris, and very pleased to do so ne appears to have been; for, "except playing and drinking," he wrote, "I see nothing that it is possible to acquire in this place." On his roturn to his native city, his friends preceived a great change in hum: instead of speaking his thoughts in his broad native Doric, he had a new forthing a conference as high ministra way of uttering a sentence in a high mineing tone. Lord Holland said afterwards, "Jeffrey had lost his broad Scotch at Oxford; but he had only gained the narrow English." His great intellectual powers, however, and kindliness of heart, soon caused his friends to overlook what they had at first regarded as a piece of affectation. His father seems to have been, for some time, undecided whether to make a lawyer or merchant of his son. The former was eventually resolved on, and, in 1702, he was once more sent to the law classes of the was once more sent to the law chases of the Edinburgh university. In 1792 he became a member of the Speculative Society, and there formed the acquaintance of Scott, Brougham, Horner, and other young men who afterwards came to be distinguished. In 1794 he was called to the Scottish bar; but, being unknown, and, above all, a Whig, there was small chance of his obtaining briefs. About this time he began writing for the "Monthly Review" and other Magazines. His income in 1801 was other magazines. This medica in 1901 was about £300 per annun; he, however, entered into matrimonial bonds, and took an upper story in a house in Edinburgh, where, one eyoning, Sydney Smith suggested to Jeffrey and evening, sydney Smith suggested to Jeffrey and the other guests, Horner and Brougham, the idea of starting a new journal, to be called the Edinburgh Review." The first number ap-peared in October, 1802, under the editorship of Sydney Smith, but, after the third number, Jeffrey was placed at its head. During the subsequent twenty-six years, Jeffrey continued to edit and contribute to this celebrated review. It will be unnecessary to enter here into the many political and literary controversics which brated for her wit arese out of the criticisms of Jesirey and his the theme of nun colleagues in this organ. His contributions poems. D. 1627.

556

were unquestionably dictated by honesty; but many of them were eminently unjust—to Wordsworth and his kindred authors most especially. Throughout Jeffrey's editorship. he was the main support of the Review: but although his contributions, like those of Macaulay, Sydney Smith, Carlyle, and others, have been published, in four volumes, they have not obtained an equal success with those authors' productions. In the interval he had won for himself a place almost at the head of the Scottish bar. Once, when making a speech for the prosecution in a libel case, the defendant, pulling out his watch, said, Jeffrey "had actually spoken the English lauguage twice over in three hours." This was in aliusion to his m three hoars. And was in musson to mis rapid and fluent style of cloquence. His income had increased with his practice, and on the death of his tirst wife in 1805, he was in easy circumstances. In 1806 he visited London, and, while there, fought the famous duel with Moore, at Chalk Farm, which Byron, in his "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers," has hus munortalized :-

Can none remember that eventful day, That ever glorious, almost fatal fray, When Little's leadless pistol met his eve,

And Bow Street myrmidons stood laughing by?"

Though this meeting had arisen out of Jeffrey's severe treatment, in the Review, of some of Moore's early poems, both the criticism and the duel were afterwards forgotten, and the poet and essayist became the best of friends. In 1813 he went to America to marry Miss Charlotte Wilkes, an American lady, but the grandniege of the eclebrated English politician Wilkes, (See Wilkes.) Soon after his return. he took up his residence at Craigerook, a delightful little estate at the foot of the Corstorphine Hills, some two miles from Edinburgh, Here, till his death, he gave hospitable reception to every visitor to the Modern Athens who was distinguished in literature, in art, or in science. In 1821 he was chosen lord rector of the university of Glasgow, and, eight years afterwards dean of the Faculty of Advocates; upon which he resigned the ciliurship of the "Edinburgh Review." He was returned to "Edinburth Review." He was returned to Parliament for the Perth, Forar, and Dundee Farilament for the Fertin, Fortar, and Dunder burghs in 1850; but, Ioshig his seat the next year, he was, through the influence of Earl Fitzwilliam, chosen as the representative of the borough of Malton. He sat for this borough, and for his native city, till 183k, when he was made a Scotch judge, with the courtesy title of lord. He sat upon the Scottish bench until a short time before his death. The biography of Jeffrey, with his correspondence, was published by Lord Cockburn, in 1852. p. at Edinburgh, 1773; p. at Craigerook, 1850.

JEHANGHER, Abul Muzaffer Noureddin Mo-hammed, jun-jen, emperor of Hindostan, son of the famous Akbar, succeeded his father on the Delhi throne in 1605, and, unlike most the Deint throne in 1000, and, unince mose Eastern rulers, was affable, generous, and easy of access to his subjects; he was, besides, a liberal patron of learning and the arts. He composed memoirs of the first seventeen years of his reign, and made additions to the historical commentaries of the famous Sultan Baber. His wile, Nourjehan, was equally eclo-brated for her wit and her beauty, and has been the theme of numerous Oriental romances and

Jekvl Jenkins

JEKYL, Sir Joseph, je'-kil, an English lawyer and patriot, who distinguished himself in the reign of William III. by his attachment to the Whigs, and was one of the managers on the trial wings, and was one of the managers of the tale at a of Dr. Sacheverell. At the accession of George I. he was knighted, made master of the rolls, and a privy councillor. He successfully maintained the independence of his office against lord-chancellor King, in a pamphlet entitler "The Judicial Authority of the Master of the Rolls Stated and Vindicated." B. in Northamp-

Rois Stated and Windrated. B. In Normani-tenshire about 1664; p. 1738.

JENYL, Thomas, D.D., brother of the above, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and became vicar of Kowd, in Witshire, lecturer at Newland, in Gloucestershire, and minister of St. Margaret's chapel, Westminster. He wrote and published a number of sermons, all very popular in their day, and an Exposition of the Church Catechism.

JEKKL, Joseph, an eminent barrister, was the son of a captain in the navy, and a scion of the same family as the preceding. He was called to the bar in 1778; was returned as M.P. for Caine in 1787, and retained his seat during several successive Parliaments. He was curing several successive Farlaments. Re was appointed solitor-general tothe Prince of Wales in 1805; and, at the time of his death, was senior king's counsel, sonior bencher of the Imer Temple, F.R.S., and F.S.A. He erloyed a fair reputation for forensic power; but his fame was chiefly acquired by his ready talent in epigram and repartee, his bon-most often convulsing the bar with laughter, and his eversparkling wit delighting all who came within his convivial sphere, B. 1752; D. March S. 1837.

JELLACHICH VON BUZIM, Baron Joseph, jell-la-chik, the l'an, or military commander-in-chief of Croatia, was the son of an Austrian general, by whom he was sent to the military academy of Vienna, on leaving which he entered the Austrian army as sub-heutenant of dragoons, in 1819. Six years afterwards, he was a lieutenant, and occupied his leisure with the composition of a small volume of poems. which was printed for private circulation. In 1830, he went to Italy, as captain in a regiment of Hulans, and remained there four years; in 1837 he obtained the commission of major of infantry, and afterwards became, first, licutenant-colonel, and then colonel, of the 1st Banat frontier regiment. In 1848 the Court of Vienna secretly induced the Croatians, the Dalmatians, and the Servians to attack the Hungarians, whose constitutional form of government was distasteful both to the Austrian emperor and to the more despotically ruled Servians and Croats. These latter requested that Jellachich might be appointed their ban, and this being complied with by the Austrian emperor, an army of irregular, but well-armed troops, to the number of 40,000, was assembled. Jellachich, as ban, put himself at their head, and led them across the Drave, at Zegrad, in September, 1848. In less than a month he was met by the Hungarians and defeated; but, having arranged an armistice to Raab, and by this movement secured the high road to Vienna for his line of operations. Shortly afterwards, he went to reinforce, with 18,000 picked troops, Prince Windischgratz, who was then besiecing Vienna, which was defended by the insurgents. He then commanded the which the Hungarians were worsted. Throughout the remainder of the campaign he fought under General Haynau's orders, but did not exhibit any extraordinary talent for war. All illustrated edition of his poems was published at Vienna in 1857, the proceeds of which were applied towards an invalid fund he had founded in that capital. B. at Peterwardein, Austrian in time capital. B. at Peterwarden, Austran Slavonia, 1801; p. 1839.

Jellinger, Christopher, jel-lin-jer a Presbyterian divine, who studied at Bâle and Leyden, was some time a soldier; after which Leyden, was some time a sometry mean invited he went to Geneva, whence he was invited to England, where he acquired a perfect knowledge of the language, and obtained the knowledge of the language, and obtained the living of Brent, in Devonshire, of which he was deprived for nonconformity in 1683. He wrote, "Fifteen Conferences with Christ," "A New Way of Living and Dying," "The Spiritual Merchant," and other works of a like nature, JEMSITD, Jüm-shed a Persian sovereign, who reigned about 800 n.o., and is said to have founded to be a support of the provided with the christian conditions of the contraction of the c founded, or at least greatly embellished, the famous city of Istakhar, called by the Greeks Persepolis. He is also celebrated for instructing his subjects in astronomy, and the mystecies of Sabeism, or the worship of the heavenly bodies. Being unfortunate in war, he was dethroned by Zohak, an Arabian king, and spent the latter part of his life in obscurity.

JENISCHUS, Paul, jonis'kens, a learned Dutch author, who was persecuted and banished for writing a book entitled "Theatrum Animarum." B. at Antwerp, 1558; D. at Stuttgardt. 647.

JENKIN, Robert, jen'-kin, a learned English divine, educated at the king's school at Caudivine, educated at the king's school at Cau-terbury. In 1674 he was admitted to St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected 'cllow in 1680. In 1711 he became master o is college, and Lady Margaret professor of divinity. Dr. Jenkin wrote some theological works, the best known of which is entitled, he "Reasonableness and Certainty of the laristian Religion." n. in the isle of Thanct, 656; D. 1727.

JENKIN, William, a nonconformist divine, was the son of a puritan minister, and was eduwas the son or a perform market, and was con-cated at St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1641 he was chosen minister of Christ Church, near Newgate, London, of which he was deprived for nonconformity a year afterwards. He was sent to the Tower for being concerned in Love's plot, but was released on petitioning Cromwell. In 1684 he was committed to Newgate under the Conventiele Act, and died there four months afterwards. He wrote a great many theological works, and "An Exposition on the Epistic of Jude." B. at Sudbury, Suffolk, 1612; D. in London, 1685.

JENKINS, Henry, jen'-kins, an Englishman, remarkable for longevity, having lived to the age of 169 years. He remembered the buttle of Fludden Field, and gave evidence at the assizes to a circumstance within his recollec-Drace, a zegrada, are expendence, see a sessee of a creamstance wanth its recommendation than a month he was met by the fungarians iton which occurred one hundred and Sary and defeated; but, having arranged an armistice parts before. He retailed his faculties to like with his upponents, he made good his retreat last; but as he was born before parchal registers were kept, no parish would support him; so that he subsisted by begging. In the parish church of Bolton, Yorkshire, to which in reality he belonged, is a monument recording these particulars. B. in Yorkshire, 1501; D. 1670. JENKINS, Sir Leoline, an English statesman, Austrian regire at the battle of Schwechat, in who was educated at Cowbridge school, whose

he was sent to Jesus College, Oxford, where he continued till the death of King Charles I. He afterwards became tutor to a young gentleman, with whom he travelled through France, Holland, and Germany. At the Restoration he returned to hissollege, of which he was a surgeou's apprenties at storation he returned to hissollege, of which he was shosen fellow, and in 1602 elected principal. In 1668 she was appointed jadge of the third the Percegative Court of Canterbury, and in 1670 received the honour of knighthood. He had a principal share in negotiating the peace of Kimeguen, and, on his return to England, was chosen one of the representatives of the university of Oxford in Parliament, where he opposed the bill for the exclusion of the duke of York from the succession to the crown. He was soon after made several experiments, or youngloon. The bequeathed to charitable tusted the bill for the exclusion of the duke of York from the succession to the crown. He was soon after made several experiments, or youngloon. The bequeathed to charitable tusted in 1721, n. in Glamorganshire, 263, n. 1685.

January Anthony, jen'-kin-son, an English traveller in the 16th century, who, between the years 1545-70, travelled in linesia, and was one of the first Englishmen who penetrated into the interior of Asia, where he lived for some time with the Uzbeck Tartars. On his return, he was sent to represent Eitzberth, queen of England, at the court of the care of Russia. His travels are included in Purchas's collection; but the truth of many of his statements has been expertised. In 1554.

been questioned. D. 1584.

JENKINSON, Charles. (See LIVELPOOL, Earl of).

JINKINS, David, jen'-kinz, an English judge, who commenced his university education by being admitted a commoner of Edmund Hall, Oxford, in 1697. After taking his back-lot's degree, he removed to Gray's inn, and became eniment as a barrister. Charles I. appointed him a Welsh judge. In 1646 he was taken prisoner as Hereford for his activity in the royal cause, and sent to the Tower. Being brought to the bar of the House of Commons, he denied their authority, and refused to kneed; for which he was fined show, and remanded to prison. In 1890 an act was passed for his trial; but Harry Marlin, it is said, prevented the measure by a droll speech. Jenkyns, who cape to do be hanged, declared that he would die with the Bible under one arm and Magna Charta under the other. In 1656 he obtained his librty, n. at Hensol, Glamorgaushire, 1856; p. at Cowbridge, 1967.

JENNENS, Charles, jen'-nens, an Eurlish gentieman, who, being very rich and fond of display, was called by his irriudis "Solinam the Magnifreat." He affected to be though! Jearned, and wrote the works of some of Handel's oratorios, particularly the "Messiah," and published part of an intended cilition of Sonkspeare, D. al Gopsal, Leicestershire, 1773. JENNER, Edward, M.D., jen'-ner, a celebrated ANNAEL, KOWING, A. U., Jen-ner, a colourated English physician, who ranks among the great benefactors of the human race, as the discoverer and propagator of vaceination. He was the son of a vicar in (douestershire, and after receiving his school education in Chrecester, was appendiced to a surgeon at Sudbury. At the expiration of his apprenticeship, he went to London, and became a student of medicine at St. Goorge's Hospital, living for two years as pupil with the celebrated John Hunter. In 1773, he returned to Glouostershire, and established blinself as a surgeon in the village

558

Sudbury, Jenner was one day much struck at being fold by a milkmaid that she could not take the small-pox. He made inquiries, and discovered that this was a common belief in the district. When he went to London, he mentioned the circumstance to Hunter and many other dis-tinguished medical men, but they all regarded it as a popular error. Jenner, however, never forgot the subject, and when he set up as surgeon in Berkeley, made several experiments. which proved that in some instances it was impossible to give small-pox to persons who had had cow-pox : while in others, although certain individuals had lad cow-pox, they, nevertheless, took small-pox. The result of long study and took small-pox. The result of four study and careful experimentation, was that Jenner found that, while the udder of the cow was subject to several cruptions, there was but one true cowpox, which, further, could only be taken by the milkers at a paracular period of its course, About the year 1780 he conceived the idea of propagating the cow-pox, from the eow, in the first instance, and then from one person to another, and, consequently, secure to every individual so treated immunity from small-pox, For sixteen years he followed up this grand conception, and endravoured to enlist the sympathy and aid of the eminent practitioners of the healing art in its favour; but they only replied by ridiculing the idea as an absurdity, Jenner persevered, however, and, in 1796, had the good fortune to make an experiment which could not be gainsaid; he vaccinated a boy, cight years old, with the matter taken from a milkmaid's hand. The child recovered from the infection in a satisfactory manner, and was immediately afterwards inoculated for smallpox, without the slightest effect. Many similar experiments were subsequently made, all ending successfully; and, in 1798, Jenner put forth his first work on the discovery, "An Inquiry into the Causes and Effects of the Variolæ Vaccinæ (Cow-pox)." Although the author successfully demonstrated the soundness of his views, they met with great opposition from medical men at the outset. In about a year, however, some seventy leading physicians and surgeons signed a declaration stating their entire concurrence with him. An attempt was now made to rob Jenner of the merit of his discovery; but it proved signally abortive, and henceforth fame and fortune were within reach of the retired country surgeon; but Jenner refused every offer; and as a desire to benefit his fellowcreatures, and not an ambition of worldly honours, had been his endeavour, he would not quit his native village, where he practised as physician. "Shall I," he wrote to a friend, "who, even in the morning of my life, sought the lowly and sequestered path of life-the the lowly and sequestered path of line—the valley, and not the mountain—shall I, now my evening is fast appreaching, held myself up as an object for fortune and for fame? Aly fortune, with what flows from my profession, is amply sufficient to gratify my wishes." The grand discovery rapidly spread over England, France, and the other continental nations, and throughout the world. The House of Commons, by way of recompensing the long and disinterested labours of Jenner, voted him, in 1802, £10,000, and £20,000 in 1807. He wrote several works

Johnson, Dr. Samuel.

JENNER, DR. EDWARD.

Jones, Sir William.

Jones, Owen.

and papers on his discovery, on general medicine, and on natural history. B. at Berkeley, Gloucestershire, 1749; D. 1823.

JENNINGS, David, jen'-ings, a learned dissent-ing minister, was the author of "An Appeal to Reason and Common Sense for the Truth of the to iteason and commonsense for the Fruit of the Holy Scriptures, "An Introduction to the Use of the Globes and Orrery," "Introduction to the Knowledge of Medals," "Jewish Antiquities," 2 vols. 8vo. n. at Kibworth, Leicestershire;

D. 1762. JENNINGS, Henry Constantine, an antiquary and virtuoso of most eccentric habits and chequered fortune, was the only son of a gentleman of considerable property at Shiplake, in Oxfordshire. He was educated at Westminster School, and at seventeen became an ensign in the foot-guards; but resigned his commission, and travelled on the Continent, where he collected, while in Italy, a number of statues and other antiques, with which he decorated his scat at Shiplake. He now led the life of a man of fashion and fortune, indulging in the most expensive follies; the consequence of which was that he became an inmate of the King's Bench. Freed at length from his pecuniary embarrassments, he settled on an estate he had in Essex. where he gave himself up with enthusiasm to the collection of scarcebooks, pictures, and curiosities. He was, however, again unfortunate. Having borrowed a sum of money from a person who was indebted to the crown, his museum was hurriedly indetication count, his muscum was nurriedly sold for a small sum, to satisfy the claim of government. For many years afterwards, Jennings was a prisoner in Chelmsford gool; but on examining his foredom, resumed his former liabits, and settled at Chelsea; where, to use the words of a goutleman, who visited him in 1803, and who graphica'ly described his singular appearance, he sat "enthroned in all the majesty of virtue amidst his books, his pictures, and his shells." In consequence of fresh embarrassments, these precious relics were all sold in 1816, and Jennings was once more a prisoner within the rules of the Bench, where he died in or Jansonius, Nicholas, zhen'-sawng, a celebrated French printer and letterfounder in the 15th century. He was the first who fixed the form and proportion of the Roman character; and his editions of books, printed between the years 1470 and 1481, are highly valued on account of the beauty of the typo-graphy. The first book which came from his press was a volume in 4to, entitled "Decor Puellarum," 1471. D. about 1481. Jenyns, Soame, jou'-ins, an English writer on religions subjects, who was educated at a private religious subjects, who was educated at a private school, where he was sent to St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1728 he published a poem on the Art of Danieng. He was elected member of Parliament'in 1741, and sat in the House till 1780. In 1755 he was appointed one of the Lords of trade, which place he held till that loard was abolished. His works are,—"Poems," "A break Pounity that he Uniting of Full; "A Footh was aboushed. His works are,—"Poems," A Free Enquiry into the Origin of Evil," "A View of the Internal Evidence of the Christian Religion." B, in London, 1704; b. 1787.

1819. p. 1731.

JEPISON, Robert, 267-80n, a drematic writer, was an officer in the army, and many years master of the horse to the lord-lieutenant of Treland. He was also for some time a member of the Trieb Horse of Couragn. His description. of the Irish House of Commons. His first dramatic piece, "Braganza," was read with suc-cess at Drury-lane, and printed in 1775. "The acceding, he went to the Mauritius once more, 559

Law of Lombardy," a tragedy, was performed nine nights at Brury-lane, in 1779. "The Count Narbonne" was well received. He wrote also "The Campaign; or, Love in the East Indies," an opera; "Julia; or, the Italian Lover," a tragedy; "Two Strings to your Bow," a farce; "The Conspiracy;" and "Roman Portraits," a poem in heroic verse, with historical remarks and illustrations. n. in Ireland.

1736; p. in Dublin, 1803.

JERDAN, William, jer-dan, a modern English littérateur, was the son of a small land-owner of Kelso, in Roxburgh-hire, and was educated at a Scotch parochial school, afterwards receiving some instruction from Dr. Rutherford, author of the "View of Aucient History." His family designed him for the law; but, at his own request, he was allowed to go to London, where, in 1801, he entered a merchant's counting-house, at a salary of £50 per annum. He quitted this employment the next year, and went to Edinburgh to attend the law classes of that university; but abandoned this classes of that university; our adamonate and study in loss than a year, returning once more to London, where he became embarrassed by debts, was released by his uncle, a naval officer, and taken on board his ship at Portsmouth as surgeon's clerk. While serving in this capacity, some verses of his were inserted in a Portsmouth paper; upon which he borrowed a sum of money and went to the metropolis, resolved to push his fortunes as a literary man. In 1805 he push nisiorumes as a interary man. In 1900 no obtained an engagement on a nowly-started paper,—the "Annora;" and, after being employed as contributor to several journals, he, some years afterwards, joined the stail of the "Sum," of which he eventually became editor. In 1817 he was engaged by Mr. Colburn to edit the "Literary Gazetic," of which paper he was embeaned; but no now its he has embeaned; but no now its his most has been as the contributors. subsequently the proprietor, but ceased to have any connexion with it in the year 1850. Soon any connexion with it in the year 1850. Soon afterwards, a subscintion of nearly $2700 was raised for him, and Lord Aberdeen granted him a pension of 100 guineas a year. Mr. Jerdan published his autobiography in 1850, and "Men I have Known" in 1866. n. 1782; p. 1860. JERNEME, Sir John, jo'-t-e-mie, an entinent colonial judge and anti-slavery advocate, who, after receiving his deacation at Elimdell' grammar school, Tiverton, returned to Genensey, his mative place, and bogan to study the law, which he afterwards continued at Dijon, in France. In 1815 he attracted the notice of the government, by his evidence before the royal compisioners sent to Guernsey to investigate the missioners sent to Guernscy to investigate the administration of justice in that island. In 1824 he was nominated chief justice of St. Lucia, West Indies, and, from what he observed in that became an energetic advocate for the holition of slavery, and published his views in our essays on Colonial Slavery. In 1832 he was made advocate-general of the Mauritius; but his abolitionist views being known to the planters, his appointment was the signal for almost open insurrection, the colonial Assembly potilioning the governor not to allow him to land upon the island. The entire naval and force was required to protect him when he did so, after two days' delay. So general was the discontent during his short term of office, that the governor was compelled to order his return to England. On his arrival in London, he declared his willingness to return and

and remained, notwithstanding every opposi-tion, till 1835. This year he was appointed puisne judge of the supreme court of Ceylon, an collice he resigned to assume the governorship of Sierra Leone in 1840, in both of which countries he never ceased to labour for the amelioration of the condition of liberated negroes. He published several works against slavery. Guernsey, 1795; p. at Sierra Leone, 1841.

JERNINGHAM, Edward, jer-ning-ham, a poet and miscellaneous writer, descended from an ancient Roman Catholic family of Norfolk, was educated at Douay and at Paris, but on returning cducated at Donay and at Paris, but on roturning to England, abjured popery and entered the communion of the Anglican Church. He wrote the tragedy of "Margaret of Anjou," the "Siege of Berwick," and other plays and poems, in four volumes, besides an "Essay on the Mild Tenour of Christianity;" "The Dignity of Human Nature;" "The Alexandrian School," &c. z. 1727; p. 1812.

JEROME, S.R., jer'-ome. (Soe HISBONYAUS.)

JEROME, S.R., jer's ome. (Soe HISBONYAUS.)

ILLIUS, and a man of considerable learning. The Council of Constance etded him to appear before

Council of Constance cited him to appear before it with his master; but, finding that Huss was thrown into prison, he retired to Oberlingen, where he applied for a safe-conduct, which was refused. On his journey to his own country, he was arrested, and sent to Constance in chains. After being cruelly tortured, he was consigned to the flames, which he endured with great fortitude, in 1416. B. 1378.

titude, in 1416. B. 1878.

JEROME OF S. FATTI, a Spanish Jew, named, before his conversion to Christianity, Joshua Larchi, became physician to Peter de Runch the anti-pop Benedict XIII., in whose presence, and that of many cardinals and prelates, he discussed in the many cardinals and prelates, he discussed with came lawned withing at Top. he disputed with some learned rabbins at Tortova, in 1414. The result of that conference, and of a treatise on the errors of the Talmud by him, is said to have been so deeply felt, that about 5000 Jews were converted. Jerone's book was printed at Frankfort in 1602,

JUNEAUD, Douglas, jet-rold, a modern Eng-lish novelist, dramatist, and essayist, was the son of the manager of the Sheerness Theatre during the latter years of the war between Frame and England. Sheerness was, in those days, a very busy arsenal; ships of war were constantly arriving and departing, and young Jerrold was enabled to hear many a stirring "yarn" about the Nile and Trafalgar. On the other hand, there was the strange life of the strolling player, in the midst of which he was being reared. The drama and the sea were thus the two great circumstances of his earliest years; and with one or other of these his life was afterwards connected. While still a boy, his father obtained for him an appointment as midshipman in a ship of war com-manded by Captain Austen, brother of Miss Austen, the celebrated novelist. In this capacity he served till the termination of the war, when, coming ashore, he was sent to London, and apprenticed to a printer. For several years, while working as a compositor, he devoted his leisure hours to the task of intellectual improvement, acquired several languages, and the habit of expressing his thoughts in writing. One night, rifter he had witnessed a performance of "Der Freischutz," he sat down, wrote a criticism of the play, and inclosed it to the editor of the paper upon which he was working as a compo-500

sitor. The "copy" was handed over to him to be put into type, and further, an editorial notice was inserted, asking the anonymous corre-spondent to continue his contributions. This event fixed the vocation of Douglas Jerrold. Before he was twenty-one years of age, he had written his play of "Black-eyed Susan," the most popular of all modern nautical dramas, Mr. T. P. Cooke, the original William, having acted in it upwards of seven hundred times. This first success induced Jerrold to produce, during a quarter of a century, a succession of original, witty, and thoroughly English plays, which in these respects presented a marked contrast to the works of other English playwrights; they, the works of other fagnish playwrights; they, for the most part, depending upon the French for their plot, dialogue, and sentiment. The best of these dramas are,—"The Inter-day," "Nell Gwynne," "The Housekeeper," and "The Prisoner of War." "Time works Wonders," and "The Bubble of the bay" are two of his most popular comedies, and deservedly so, for they sparkle throughout with wit, humour, and keen satire. As a novelist, he gave to the pub-lie—"Clovernook," "St. tilles's and St. James's." "The Man made of Money," and "The Story of a Feather." He was intimately connected with that most successful of all humorous periodicals, "Punch," having regularly written for it, from its second number till within a year or two of his death; and nothing that ever anpeared therein, even in its best days, when Thackerny and Gilbert halle ket were among its contributors, was more popular than the famous contributors, was more popular main the names "Caudle Lectures" of Jerrold. In the same periodical also appeared "Pauch's Letters to his Son," besides a constant succession of terse, engrammatic, shorday. His novels, plays, and most important miscellaneous writings, were collected and published, in 8 vols., a few years since; "Men of Character," which originally appeared in "Blackwood's Magazine," being included in the number. During the last three or four years of his life, Jerrold had been the editor of "Lheyd's Weekly Newspaper," n. i.a London, 1803; p. at the same place, 1857.

Jenusalem, J. Frederick William, a Lutheran theologian and preacher, who was charged by the duke of Brunwick with the education of his son, and appointed preceder to his court. During his successful career as a teacher of youth, he founded the Caroline College, at Brunswick. He wrote "Letters on the Mosale Religion," "Considerations on the Truth of Religion," and a great number of sermons. B. at Osnabruck, 1709; D. 1789.—His son Charles William, a young man of great promise, killed himself in a fit of melancholy in 1773. He is said to have been the original of Göthe's "Werther."

Jervas, Charles, jer-vas, an English portrait-painter, who studied for a short time under Sir Godfrey Kneller. By the generosity of a friend, he was enabled to continue his studies at Paris and Rome. On his return, he obtained considerable employment, more, perhaps, from the friendship of Pope and other celebrated men then from his own merit. He published a translation of "Don Quixote," to which Dr. War-burton added an appendix on the "Origin of Romances and of Chivairy." B. in Ireland, about 1675; D. 1739.

JERVIS; John, Earl of St. Vincent. VINCENT, Earl St.)

TEESEY, Henry, jes'-se, a nonconformist

minister. He joined the Independents, for which minister. He joined the Independents, for which he was imprisoned in 1641, but was released by the Parliament. In the civil war he officiated at St. George's, Southwark, but was ejected at the Restoration, and sent to prison. He wrote "The Glory and Salvation of Judah and Israel," at Description of Jerusalem," and "The English Greek Lottoon." B. at West Rowton, Yorkshire, 1282. a. 1029.

1627: p. 1663.

JESTYN AB GWRGANT, jes'-tin, prince of Gla-morgan, who was rejected by his countrymen as their sovereign, on the death of his father, in 1030, in consequence of his violent temper, his uncle Howel being chosen in his stead; but, on the death of the latter, in 1043, he succeeded him. Having made war on Rhys-ap-Tudor, a neighbouring prince, he sent Einion, his ally, to invite the English to his assistance, who defeated Rhys; but Jestyn refusing to give his daughter to Einion, as he had promised, the latter applied to the English, who turned their arms against Jestyn, and obliged him to quit his do-minions, which they divided among themselves.

JESUA, Levita, chai-soo'-a, a Spanish rabbi in the 15th century, who wrote a curious book called "Halichot Olam;" or the Ways of Eternity, an edition of which, in Hebrew and Latin, appeared in Hanover in 1414. JEUFFROY, R. V., zhoo'-froi, an eminent gem and medal engraver, whose taste and genius for the art were such, that while he was at Rome, as an assistant to Pichler, his employer was in the habit of selling the productions of the young artist as antiques. On his return to Paris, he was made director of the school of gem engraving, at the institution of the deaf and graving, at the institution of the deaf and dumb. as though 1749, p. 1826.

JEWELL, John, ju'-d, a learned prolete, and a father of the English Protestant church. In the reign of Edward VI. he avowed the Protestant religion, and became an admired preacher; but, in the succeeding reign, his doctrines brought him into imminent danger. Evelogies the 19th the Horney was decisies more problems. Finding that Bishop Bonner was devising means to apprehend him, he went abroad, and resided with Peter Martyr at Strasburg, and afterwards at Zurich. On the death of Mary he returned home, and was appointed one of the sixteen Protestant divines to dispute with as many Romanists before Queen Elizabeth. In 1559 he was preferred to the bishopric of Salisbury, and, in 1565, received the degree of D.D. from the University of Oxford. His conduct as a bishop was exemplary, and he paid great attention to the work of reformation in his diocese. His application to study was so intense as to lay the foundation of an illness, which ultimately proved fatal. His learning and abilities were celebrated over Europe by his admirable "Apology for the Church of England," which was attacked by his countryman and schoolfollow, Thomas Harding, and defended by the author. His works were collected into one volume folio, and deemed of so much importance as to be placed in churches for the edification of the people. It is said these writings are sometimes to be met with, chained writings are sometimes to be met with chained to the pope to canonize him, but to the reading-desk in churches, even in the jeeped on account of some suppose. In the provided on account of some suppose present day. B. at Berryarbor, Devonshire, 1822; p. at Monkton Farleigh, 1871.

Jawsburn, juse-leve-g Miss Geraldine Endon, 1871.

Jawsburn, juse-leve-g Miss Geraldine Endon, 1872.

Jackfur, George, amathematic too was directed by Miss. Filetiene, herself an authoress of some mark. Miss Jewsbury's first authoress of some mark. Miss Jewsbury's first authories Cao, or the History of Two Lives, premiens. He was the author of a novel full of passion and finely-graduated nomical works. p. 1614; p. 1876.

character, the success of which fixed her vocation as an authoress. This work, which appeared in 1845, was followed by a second three years afterwards, called "The Hall-Sisters," a years atterwards, called "The Half-Sisters," a novel superior even to the first. In 1850 ap-peared her "Marian Withers," in 1832 the "History of an Adopted Child," and In 1856, the "Sorrows of Gentility," end. of which was an advance in art upon its predecessor. Indeed, this lady, by her steady progress towards a high standard of perfection as a novelist, established standard of perfection as a novelet, established for herself a sound and lasting reputation. B. at Measham, Warwickshire, about 1820. Jezin I., je'-zid, the seventh caliph, or successor of Mohammed, and the second of the race of Omor nonammed, and the second of the race of Orminades, began his reign in 650. The Arabs, in the second year of his reign, elected Hussein, son of Ali, to the caliphate; but Jezid caused him to be assessinated. He also persecuted the whole house of Ali, and put a number of persons to death. Jezid, though a cruel tyrant, had a taste for poetry, and wrote some amatory verses of merit. D. 653.

JEZZAB, jed-zar, surnamed The Butcher, whose JEZZAB.jed.zer, surnamod' The Buttener, wnose real name was the famous pacha of Saida and Aere, who defended the latter place-against Bonaparte. In his youth he was purchased by the celebrated All Bey, at that time master of Egypt; and from being a common mancluke, Ahmed, in a few years, became governor of Grand Cairo. In consequence of a variety of occurrences, which need not be detailed here, Jezzar was appointed pacha of Acre and Syria, on the death of Daher; and for his and syrin, on the death of Daner; and for mis zead in opposing a redoubtable shelk, who had long defied the power of the grand seignor, he was made a pacha of three tails, with the title of vizier. This advancement gave him an opportunity of extending the boundaries of his portunity of extending the boundaries of his government, and in spite of the efforts of the Turkish court to displace him, he retained his authority to the last. After Bonaparte had vanquished the mamelukes, he made friendly overtures to Jezzar, but they were indignantly rejected by him, and with the aid of the English squadron, under Sir Sidney Smith, he valiantly defended the city of St. Jean d'Acre against the incessant attempts of the French to take posnecessan attempts of the Fritten to thate pos-session of it; so that, after a siege of sixty-one days, the "conqueror of Egypt" was obliged to withdraw his forces, and leave Acre in undis-puted possession of its brave defenders. Jezzar died, at an advanced age, in 1804, possessed of immense treasures; and, it is said, particularly pleased with the sanguinary title which he had acquired by his numerous acts of ferocity.

JOACHIM. jo'-a-kim, a celebrated Italian monk, sunamed the Prophet, who went barefoot on a pilgrimage to the lioly Land, and, on his return, entered into the order of Cistorcians. He founded entercia mto the order of Cistereans. He founded several monasteries, which he governed with discretion. He wrote many predictions, which were printed in a book entitled "The Everlast-ing Gospel." His followers pretended that mracles were wrought at his tomb, and applied to the pope to canonize him, but this was re-jected on account of some supposed errors in his works. z. at Celleo, near Cosenza, 130; zo.

JOACHIM, George, a mathematician, otherwise named Rheticus, obtained the mathematical chair at Wittenberg, where he zealously esponsed and defended the astronomical system of Co-pernicus. He was the author of several astro-

JOAN OF ARC, properly Jeanne Darc, the Maid of Orleans, joan, a French heroine, whose pa-rents were peasants. She was servant at an inn, when she imagined that St. Michael, the tutelary angel of France, had commanded her to raise the siege of Orleans, then closely pressed by the English under the duke of Bedford. Her py one singuish arter the date of bettoot. Her pretended visions made a great noise, and she was introduced to Charles VII., whom she is said to have discovered amidst his courtiers, though he was drossed like them. She promised to relieve Orleans, and to procure the co-ronation of Charles at Rheims. Her offers were accepted, though the Parliament treated her as an impostor. Clad in armour, she headed the troops, who were animated by her professions and example. The siege of Orleans was raised, after which she marched to Rheims, and assisted at the coronation of the king, who ennobled her family, to which he gave the name of Du Sys, with large grants of land. Joan, after heading with large grains of land. Joan, after neading a sortic, was taken prisoner at the siegoof Complegne, by the English, who, to their disgrace, tried and condomned her for scorery. The story of Joan of Are's life has furnished a them to many writers. A large work, called the "History of Joan of Are," in four volumes, was a trible of the Dark the Jary Soldly has compared to the property of Joan of Are, in four volumes, was published in Paris in 1817. Schiller has composed a tragedy, Casimir Delavigue a touching elegy, Southey a fine poem on her life and death; Voltaire, with bad taste, wrote a burlesque and immoral poem on the heroine. B. at Domremy, in Loraine, 1412; burnt at Rouen in 1431.

JOAN, Pope, a fletitious character, though the John Yope, a neutrous canadary though the contrary is asserted by Platina, who calls this pope John VIII. There are several versions of the story. In one it is said that, about the middle of the 9th century, a woman named Joan, born at Mentz, and who had long worn men's clothing, obtained so great a reputation as a doctor, as to be elected to the papal chair on the death of Leo IV. It is further stated, that having become pregnant, she was taken in labour, as she was going in procession, between the Colosseum and the church of St. Clement, and died in the street. In order to avoid the like disgrace, it was said that every new pope was placed in a was said that every new pope was placed in a perforated chair to be examined. The whole of this riddeulous story, however, is now abandomed as fabulous by Catholies as well as Protestants. David Blondel, in particular, published, in 1649, David Biondel, in particular, published, in 16-19, an able rollutation of it in a work called "Familiar Explanation of the Question, Was a Woman seated on the Papal Throne, between Leo IV, and Benedict III. !"
JOAN I., queen of Naples, was the daughter of King Robert of Naples. At the ago of sixteen

she assumed the government, being at the time married to her cousin, Andreas of Hungary. She was a very handsome and accomplished young woman; but she evinced little sympathy with her husband's tastes and temper. She allowed a number of conspirators, who were all nobles of the court, to murder Andreas, in 1345. Soon after this event she married her relative, Prince Louis of Tarentum; where-upon Louis of Hungary, brother of Andreas, marched with an entry to avenge his brother's death. Joan's troops were worsted, and the queen fled to Avignon, where she appeared before Pope Clement VI., and protested her innocence of her husband's murder. The pope out soon after at Naples, Louis and his Hungarians fled; upon which Jean returned to her capital, where herself and husband were crowned in 1351. Up to the death of her second erowhed in 1801. Up to the death of her second husband, which took place in 1802, Joan reigned in peace over her subjects. In the same year she married the prince of Majorca, who died in 1370; after this she married her fourth husband, Otho, duke of Brunswick, Having no issue by any of these matrimonial unions, the queen gave her niece Margaret in wavering the Charles which of the Parkers. unions, the queen gave her nece stargares in marriage to Charles, duke of Durazzo, whom she further nominated to be her successor. A schism, between Clement VII. and Urban VI., breaking out soon after. Joan embraced the cause of the former; whereupon Urban excommunicated her, and proclaimed Charles Durazzo Charles, ungrateful to his benefactress. marched against, defeated, and took her primarched against, defeated, and took her pri-soner. After vainly endeavouring to induce Joan to abdicate in his favour, he slut her up in the eastle of Muro. Joan, notwithstaming, would not accede; but named Louis of Anjoa, brother of Charles V., king of France, as her successor on the throne of Naples. Shortly afterwards Charles caused her to be smothered in her prison. B. 1827; D. 1382.

Joan II., queen of Naples, was daughter of Charles Durazzo, and sister of Ladislaus, whom Charles Durazzo, and sister of Ladislaus, whom she succeeded in 141; being at the time forty-four years of age, and notorious for her scanda-lous life, which became still more open and disgraceful after her gaining the erown. She married James, count de la Marche, who, how-ever, was soon compelled to retire from the court, proceeding, it is stated, to France, where he took a religious habit and died. A succession of paramours next divided the throne with this weak and wicked queen; murders, court intrigues, and barefueed profligacy reigning supreme at the court. At her death, her kingdom was left in a most miscrable condition. в. 1370; р. 1435.

Joanes, or Juanes, Vicente, goo-a'-nes, a colorated Spanish painter, who studied in Italy, and, as appears by his works, principally followed the Roman school. He was one of the best artists Spain has produced, and is some-times termed the Spanish Rafaelle. His drawing is correct, and exhibits numerous instances of successful foreshortening; his draperies are well arranged; his colouring generally sombre (he was very fond of chocolate colour); and his expression mostly in perfect keeping with his themes, which were generally those of devotion or impassioned resignation, such as in his "Baptism of Christ," which is in the cathedral at Valencia. He painted religious subjects exclusively, and it is said was so pious that he always took the sacrament before beginning an altar-piece. His best works are in the cathedral of Valencia, where he principally resided, and had many pupils; some good specimens of his style, however, are in the Prade at Madrid.

B. in the province of Valencia, 1523; p. 1579.
Johan, Louis, sho-la, a French Jesuit, remarkable for his knowledge of ancient coins and medals, upon which subject he wrote an elaborate treatise, printed in 1739. B. 1617;

Jode, Pieter de, zhode, a celebrated engraver innocence of her husband's murder. The pope of Antwerp, was instructed in his art by and his cardinals acquitted her; and Joan, out Golzius, after which he studied in France and of gratitude, yresented the pointif with the see Italy. His engraving of Cousins "Last Judgand county of Avignon. A pestilence breaking ment" occupied twelve sheets, altogether about sixteen feet square. D. at Antwerp, 1634.—Pieter de, junior, was taught his art by the above, his father. He excelled him in som respects, and many of his prints, after portrait by Yandyek and Rubens, are regarded as very valuable by connoisseurs. D. at Antwerp, 1696 vacuation of commonsteries. B. at Antwerp, 1006 b. unknown when—Arnold de, son of the above, was also an engraver. He is said to have engraved a print, "Mercury instructing Cupid," for Charles I. D. at Antwerp about 1638; b. unknown when.

Jodelle, Stephen, sho'-del, lord of Lymo din, a French poet, was the first who wrote tragedies on the Greek model in the French language; but one of them was so long that it occupied ten mornings in its representation. He also wrote sonnets, elegies, odes, &c. B. af

Paris, 1532; D. 1573.

JOECHER, Christian Theophilus, zhe(r)'-ker, an crudite German lexicographer, who first an crudite German lexicographer, who first studied medicine, but subsequently applied him self to theology and the art of cratory, and delivered courses of lectures on rhetoric be-tween 1715 and 1720. He afterwards filled the chair of philosophy and of history at the univer-sity of Leipsic, and became, in 1742, librarian of the same institution. His principal work is the "Allgemeines Geleiter-Lexition" (Uni-versal Dictionary of Learned Men), which con-tained unwards of 60000 apress and was pubversal Dictionary or Learned aron, make tained upwards of 60,000 names, and was published in 4 vols. at Leipsic, in 1750. This dictionary has since been re-edited and enlarged on several occasions. B. at Leipsic, 1694: p. 1758.

JOFFERDY, GEOFFEOT, or JOUFFEOX, Car-dinal, choof-froi, a celebrated dignitary of the Romish church. At an early age he entered upon a religious vocation, and rapidly rose to the highest posts in his church. On the accession of Louis XI, to the throne of France, in 1461, he was bishop of Arras; but, desiring to obtain a cardinal's hat, Pope Pius II., who was anxious to procure the abolition of the "Pragmatic Sanction" promised him the cardinalship if he could induce Louis to repeal that act. He accomplished this task, and obtained the bishop-ric of Alby and was created cardinal, in recomrie of alby and was created cardinal, in recom-pence for so doing. He also filled many high political posts under Louis XI. n. at Franche Comté, about 1420; p. 1478.

JOPEND, 1947-Pid, abbot of Croyland, in the 12th century. In the continuation of Inculpit's account of Croyland, by Peter de Blois, he says that abbot Juffid sont a deputation of three larged Pumple and Pumple maybe named the learned French or Norman monks, named Odo, Terrick, and William, to his manor of Cottonham, near Cambridge, to teach the people in ham, near camoriage, to teach the people in that neighbourhood grammar, logic, and rheto-rio; and that these three monks went every day from Cottenham to Cambridge, where they lired a barn, in which they taught those sciences to a great number of scholars, who resorted to them from all the country round. If De Blois can be relied on, Joffrid may therefore be considered as the original founder of the university of Cambridge.

university of Cambridge.

JOHANNO, Alfred, &cho-lam'-no, a French painter, who designed many excellent pictures, and made a large number of sketches and drawings on wood, in illustration of books.
n. 1800; n. 1837—70ny, a French artist and designer of book-engravings. He was brother of the above, like whom, he also painted many superior pictures; the best of which are—"The Battle of Fontenoy," "The Siesta," and "The Pillage." His designs upon wood were marked Filiage." His designs upon wood wore marked by great skill, refinement, and fancy, and were all in correct drawing. His principal illustrations were to "Werther," "Manon Loseaut," "Jerome Paturet," the "Vicer of Wekefield," and the nevels of George Sand, many of which have been reproduced in England. B. at Offenbach, 1803; p. 1852.

John I., king of England, jon, surnamed Sansterre, or Lackland, was the fifth son of Henry II. He deprived his nephew Arthur of the throne, to which he was heir, and confined him in prison at Rouen, where he was mur-dered. The French Court of Peers demanded justice from Philip Augustus of France against his lands in that country. The pope also ex-communicated him, and absolved his subjects from their allegiance. He for some time re-sisted the papal authority, but in 1213 made his submission. The English barons invited over Louis, the son of Philip, and crowned him at London in 1216; but he did not continue long in England. John signed the great charter, confirming the national liberties, com-

ly called Magna Charta, in 1215 : his si

at Oxford, 1166; D. at Newark, 1216. John I., king of France and Navarre, was the posthumous son of Louis X. At his birth the postnumous son of Louis X. At his birth he was proclaimed king, but died when only a few days old, upon which the crown devolved upon his uncle, Philip V. n. 1316.

JORN II., surnamed the Good, king of France, succeeded his father, Philip of Valois, in 1350. He obtained a victory over the Engish in 1835; but the year following he was afetated and taken prisoner at Poittiers by Edward the Black Prince, who sent him to London, where he remained till the peace of Bretigny, in 1360. His ransom was three million crowns of gold and eight provinces; but, before the sum could be raised. John died suddenly in the Savoy in London, aged fortyfive. He was a prince of great courage and irvo. He was a prince of great courage and virtue. n. 1319; p. 1304.

Joun I., Pope, was a native of Tuscany, and scended the panal chair on the death of Horisidas, in 523. Theodoric, king of the Goths, violent Arian, threw him into prison at Racana, where he died in 536.

John II. was a Roman, and succeeded Boni-ace II. in 52. He opposed the Eutychians and Mestorians, and died in 535. John III., a Roman, succeeded Pelagius I. in

500. D. 574.

JOHN IV., a native of Dalmatia, was elected to succeed Severinus in 640. D. 642. JOHN V. was a native of Syria, and ascended the papal throne, in succession to Benedict 11.,

The paper arrone, at succession to School 12, 1555. D. the next year.

John VI., a Greek, succeeded Sergius I. in 701. He held a council at Rome, to consider the charges by the English clergy against Wil-fred, archbishop of York, who was acquitted.

D. 705.

D. 705.

JOHN VII. was also a Greek, and succeeded the above. p. 707.

JOHN VIII., a Roman, was elected to the pontificate on the death of Adrian II., in 872. He crowned the emperor Charles the Bald in 875, and, three years after, went to France, where he held a council at Troyes. In his time that was award by the Sexoner who obliged Italy was ravaged by the Saracens, who obliged the pope to pay tribute. He corresponded with 0 0 0 2

Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, who had driven Ignatius from his seat and usurped the dignity. John, imposed upon by the pretences of the intruder, acknowledged him patriarch; but, on discovering his error, excommuni-cated him. D. 882. This pope has been styled are extant

JOHN IX. became pope in 893. p. about 900.

John IX, became pope in 1983. Datout 1840.
John X, archibishop of Ravenna, was elected to the paper in 915. He was a turbulent pre-tie, and defeated the Saracens, who had deolated Italy a long time; but he was himself driven from Home by Guy, duke of Tussenty, who was supported by the Roman people. He was put to death in 927.

JOHN XI. was made pope at the age of twenty-five, in 931, through the influence of his twenty-nve, in 951, through the indicate of this mother Marozia, wife of Guy, duke of Tuscany; but his brother Alberico afterwards threw both him and her into the eastle of St. Angelo, where John died, in 936.

JOHN XII., a Roman of noble birth, named Octavianus, was elected pope in 956, and was the first who changed his name on that occasion. At that time Berenger tyrannized over Italy, and the pope implored the assistance of the emperor Otho I., who delivered the country. John crowned Otho at Rome, and promised him fidelity, which, however, was of short duration, for he united with the son of Berenger against his deliverer. Otho returned to Rome in 903, and called a council, in which the pope was accused of adultery, sacrilege, and other crimes, which, being proved, he was deposed. On the departure of the emperor, John entered Rome, and exercised dreadful crudities on his enemies. He was assassinated in 964, by a man whose bed he had defiled.

John XIII. was elected pope in 965, through the instrumentality of the emperor Otho, against the will of the Roman people. Peter, prefect of Rome, drove him thence in 966; but the emperor restored him, and Peter became an crite in his turn. D. 972.

John XIV., bishop of Pavia, and chancellor to the emperor Otho II., obtained the papal chair effor Bracklet XIV. after Benedict VII., in 983; but three months after his election he was sent to the castle of St. Angelo by the usurper, Pope Boniface. D.

of poison, 984.

John XV. became pope in 985. p. 996. This pope is styled XVI. by those that maintain he succeeded one of the same name who died a few days after his election.

JOHN XVII. was a Calabrian, and nominated to the papal chair by Crescentius, the Roman consul, in 997. Otho III., however, went to Rome, and put to death Crescentius, and imprisoned John.

John XVIII. was elected pope, in succession to Sylvester II., in 1003. D. four months after his election.

JOHN XIX, succeeded the above. D. about 1009.

JOHN XX., son of Count Gregory of Tuscany, became pope after his brother Benedict, in 1024.

John XXI. was a Portaguese, and the son of a physician. He became pope in 1277, but died cight months after his election. Some works of his on philosophy, medicine, and divinity, are extant.

Jour XXII, was elected pape, at Lyons in 1316. He founded several ableys and hishop-ries, but his pontificate was disturbed by urels with the emperer and the Cordeliers, ich order the pope endeavoured to suppress.

to order the pope endeavoured to suppress, y his works he seems to have been better little if or a physician than a pope. They are—"The aurus Pamperum;" or a Collection of Romelia sfor the Prosy, "Tre utice on Disorders of the Eyes;" "On the Formation of the tus;" "On the Gout;" "Addies for Proserving Health," no. at Avience, 1834.

Juny XXIII., Cardinal Cossa, a Nempolitan, studied at Bolerna, and hearm obrambacion to studied at Bologna, and became chamberlain to Boniface IX., who made him cardinal. He was selected pope in 11to, after the death of Alexander V., during the great schism, and mised to resounce the pontificate, if gory XII, and Peter de Luna would drop ir pretensions. Not fulfilling his engage-nts, he was deposed by the council of Constance, in 1415, and imprisoned at Heidelberg, where he remained three years, and was then released at the request of Martin V.

D. 1119

JOHN I., surnamed Zimisees, emperor of Constantinople, was of an illustrious family. He stabled the emperor Nicephorus Phoens, in 939, and obtained many victories over the Russians, Bulgarians, and Saracens. He was poisoned by Basil, the Eunuch, in 978.

John H. (Comnenus) succeeded Alexis Comnenus, his father, in 1118. He gained several battles over the Turks and Servians, and governed with great prudence and liberality. He died in 11-83, of a wound which he received from a poisoned arrow.

John 111. (Ducas) was crowned at Niccus, in 1222, at the time when the Latius were in possession of Constantinople. He was a prince of great virtue, gained many battles, defeated the Seythians, Tartars, and Bulgarians, and extended his empire on all sides. p. 1255. John IV. (LASCARIS) son of Theodore the Young, whom he succeeded in 1259, at the age of 6 years; but, in the same year, the despot Michael Pakeologus deprived him of his crown and his eyes, and imprisoned him for life.

D. 1254.

JOHN V. (PALEOLOGUS) succeeded his father, Andronicus the Younger, in 1341, but his throne was for a long period usurped by John Cantacuzenus, whose daughter he married, after recovering his throne. His son Andro-nicus revolted against him, the Geneese made themselves masters of the isle of Lesbos, and Amurath I, took the city of Adrianople. D. 1391.

JOHN VI. (CANTACUZENTS) was the minister and favourite of Andronicus Palasologus, who made him guardian of his children John and Emanuel, with whose mother, Jane of Savoy, he governed for some time with great wisdom he governed for some time with great wisdom and moderation. But, in 1815, he assumed the imperial title in Thrace, and, in 1317, took Constantinople, compelling John Palseologus, who had been crowned in 1841, and who had married his daughter, to retire to Salonica. The exiled monarch, however, with the help of the Genosee, defeated the lefest of the usurper, and obliged him to quit his throne and capital. It then retired to time monastery of Mount Athos, where he devoted himself to literary studies, and wrote a valuable history of the studies, and wrote a valuable history of the empire, and a defence of Christianity against the Mohammedans. D. 1411. John

John VII. (Palæologus) succeeded his father Emanuel, in 1425. His reign was ver unfortunate, and the Turks made such progres. in his dominions, as to reduce him to the necessity of imploring the succour of the Latins. He consented to a union between the two churches, which was performed at the council of Ferrara, in 1439, at which Joh

John I., king of Portugal, was the natural son of Peter, and, in 1383, ascended the throne, son to Peter, and, in 1995, ascended the throng, to the prejudice of Beatrice, daughter of Ferdinand I., his brother. John I., king of Casille, the husband of that princess, disputed the crown, but was defeated at the battle of Aljubarota, in 1385. He then turned his arms against the Moors of Africa, and took Ceuts and other places. D. 1433.

John II, succeeded his father, Alphonso V., in 1481. He discovered several plots that were formed against him at the beginning of his reign, and put the principal conspirators to death. He gained some places in Africa, and distinguished himself in the battle of Toro, and distinguished himself in the batile of Toro, against the Castillans, in 1476. His acts procured him the titles of the Gract and the Perfect. He encouraged newigation; and it was during his reien that Bernal Diaz sailed round the Cape of Good Hope; he also despatched colonies to India. p. 1455; p.1495. JOHN III, succeeded his father Emanuel on the throne of Portugal in 1521. He greatly en-couraged navigation, commerce, and the arts. His navigators discovered Japan; and he sent Francis Xavier to India as a missionary. Francis Xavier to India as a missionary, During his reign a terrible earthquake oc-curred at Lisbon, by which 30,000 persons perished. D. 1557.

John IV., called the Fortunate. The Spaniards rendered themselves masters of Portugal in 1580, and kept possession of it till 1640, in 1894, and kept possession of it till 1640, when the Portuguese revolted, and placed the crown on the head of the duke of Braganza, John IV., who held it till his death, in 1656. John V., successor of Peter II., was crowned king of Portugal in 1706. He entered into an alliance with Charles of Austria, who laid claim to the crown of Spain, and fought against Louis

XIV. D. 1750.

JOHN VI., second son of Peter III., was appointed regent when his mother, Maria I, lost her reason, in 1799. In 1807 he was driven by the French from Portugal; whereupon he took up his residence in Brazil, with the title of emperor. On the death of his mother, in 1816, he was proclaimed king, but did not return to Portugal till 1821. D. 1826.

John I., king of Castile and Leon, succeeded his father, Honry II., in 1879, at the age of twenty-one years. He made war in Portugal, for the purpose of placing his son on the throne of that country, but was unsuccessful. He was surnamed "father of his country," for his generous and just rule of his kingdom. D.

1390.

JOHN II., king of Castile and Leon, was son of Henry III., and was proclaimed king when of Henry III., and was proclamed sing when less than two years of ag, his uncle Ferdinand being appointed regent. He made war successfully against the kingdoms of Aragon and Navarre, and the Moors of Granada, He greatly assisted in the restoration of Spanish iterature, and was futher of the celebrated Labella and of Henry IV. n. 1405; p. 150. LOWN. I have of Aragon suppossible that the control of the celebrated supports the support of the celebrated supports John I., king of Aragon, succeeded his John father, Peter IV., in 1387. Throughout his reign he was continually at hostilities with his subjects, whom he governed with great in-

Justice and severity.

John II., king of Aragon and Navarre, was son of Ferdinand the Just, and ascended the son of Fernman the Just, and ascenared the throne of Kavarre on marrying Blanche, daughter of Charles the Noble, in 1425, and that of Aragon in 1459, after the death of Alphenso, his brother. He was for a long time at war with his son Don Carlos, to whom Blanche, his mother, had left the crown of Navarre at her death, in 1441. He died in 1479, leaving the kingdom to his son, Ferdinand the Catholic.

JOHN I., king of Navarre. (See John I., king of France.)

John II., king of Navarre, (See John II.,

king of Aragon.) JOHN III., king of Navarre, married, in 1484, Catherine of Navarre, the heiress to the grown, Catalerine of Nature, and nerves a frie drown, and through this marriage he obtained the crown of that kingdom in 1494; but being a prince without any energy, but all his jossessions with the exception of Bearm. He died in France, in 1616, leaving a son, Henry II., titular king of Nature, whose dampite, Jenne Calbrick, was mother of Henry IV. of Prance.

John, king of Bohemia, the son of the emperor Henry VII., was elected to the throne in 1310, at the age of fifteen. He was a warlike prince, and, after defeating the Lithuanians, assumed the title of king of Poland. He lost an eye in that expedition, and a Jew doctor, who pretended to be able to restore him to sight, deprived him of the other. His military spirit, prived him of the other. His military spirit, however, continued unabated, and he necompanied Philip of France, in 1346, to the battle of Cressy, where he was guided between two brave knights, each holding his bridle. He full in that action, and was buried at Luxembourg. He was succeeded in his kingdom of Bohemia

He was succeeded in his kingdom of Domenia, by one of his sons, who became emperor under the title of Charles I.

John I., king of Poland, was the second son of Casimir I.Y, whom he succeeded in 1492. He was the friend of letters and of peace, and during nis reign there were few military events of im-portance. He was succeeded by his son Alexinder, grand-duke of Lithuania. B. 1450; D.

JOHN II., OF JOHN CASIMIR. (See Ca-

HMIE V.)
JOHN III., John Sobieski, king of Poland, vas youngest son of James Sobieski, gov ruor of Cracow, and was educated at Paris. In 1665 he vas made grand marshal and general of the Polish armies, after which he was appointed naster of the royal house, and prelate of Cra-ovia. He retook several cities from the robellious Cossacks of the Ukraine, and disinguished himself in many gallant actions. In 673 he gained the memorable battle of Cheezim, pon the Dniester, in which the Turks lost 28,000 aen. The year following he was elected king of Poland, on the death of Michael, and likewiso ompelled the Turks to sue for peace. In 16:25 be forced them to raise the siege of Vienna, which otherwise would inevitably have been aken. D. at Warsaw, 1896. John I., or Joanics, king of Bulgaria, usurped the throne to the prejudice of his brother's son. Che emperor, Baldwin I., having refused the illiance of John, he marched against, defeated, d took him prisoner at Adrianople. Baldwin was kept in close confinement, and shortly afterwards died. John subsequently turned his arms against Boniface, marquis of Monferrat, and king of Thessalonica, but was compelled to beat a retreat. He again resorted to arms on the death of Boniface, in 1207, and had almost reached Thessalonica, when he was assassinated by one of his generals, in 1207.

John John

John I., king of Sweden, was son of Swerker II., and successor of Eric II. He organized, with small success, an expedition into Esthonia, for

He was the last of the royal race of Swerker.

the propagation of Christianity in that country. D. 1222

John II., king of Sweden and Denmark. (8.e John I, king of Denmark.) John III., king of Sweden, was son of Gus-tavus Vasa. He dethroned his brother, Eric XIV., in 1568, on account of his tyranny and crucities. He terminated the war against Denmark that had been commenced under the previous reign, and endeavoured, but unsuccessfully, to banish Lutheranism from his dominions. between the years 1570 and 1580. He afterwards made war against Ivan Vasilivitch, and gained over him many advantages, but signed a peace over him hindy accordance on the signed a peace in 1533. He named Signsmund, his son, king of Poland, in 1587. p. 1597; p. 1592.

John I., king of Denmark and Sweden, succeeded, on the throne of Denmark, Christian I., his father, in 1481, dividing the duchy of Holstein with Frederick, his brother. He became king of Sweden in 1483, but the Swedes revolted against him in 1501. He reigned in Denmark till 1513.

JOHN I., duke of Brittany, reigned between the years 1237 and 1286.

John IJ, was successor of the above, and ruled from 1286 to 1305. Jorn III., called the Good, reigned from 1312 till 1341. Being without issue, he nominated, to the prejudice of his own brother, John de Montfort, Charles de Blois, to whom he gave his niece in marriage, an act which led to many sanguinary conflicts.

Joun IV., more commonly known as John de Montfort, was brother of the preceding. He had already secured from his rival, Charles de Montfort, was brother of the preceding. He had already secured from his rival, Charles de Blois, the greatest part of Brittany, when the Court of Peres of France adjudged the duchy to his rival, Charles, in 1341. John surrendered to the duke of Normandy, whom Philip de Valois had sent against him at the head of an army. He was confined for four years at the Louve. At the end of that time he contrived to make his escape, and rejoined Joan of Flanders, his wife, who had continued the war with heroic ocurage. He, however, died a few months afterwards, leaving Brittany under the rule of Charles. In 1346.

Jonn V., sumanued the Valiant, termed John IV. by those who exclude de Montfort from the dukes of Brittany. He was son of the preceding, and hrought up at the court of Edward III. of England, whose daughter had had supposessed his father of the duchy a Brittuny, and defeated him, at Auray in 1844, whereupon Charles asknowledged him to be the rightful duke. In 1389.

rightful duke. D. 1399.

rightiu duke. D. 1000.

JOHN VI. was son of the above, and attained his majority in 1414, being then only fourteen years of age. He assisted the English in their expeditions against the French king, and, in return, Charles VII. aided his rival, the duke de Penthièvre, who, in 1419, drew John into an an buseade, and kept him personer for the years, when he was released by his barons. Inconstant and feeble, he allied himself in turn with Charles VII, and with Henry VI. of England, who, at that period, was master of almost the whole of France. D. 1112.

JOHN, duke of Burgundy and count of Nevers.

meceded his father in 1404, at the are of thirtythree. The houses of Burgundy and Orleans at that period disputed the government of France, during the insanity of Charles VI. In 1407 he caused the assassination of the duke of Orleans. and, by that act, became absolute master in Paris: but it was also the commencement of the fearful internal struggle between the Burgundians and the Armagnaes. He was driven from Paris, but re-entered it in 11% committed many horrible massacres, possessed himself of the king's person, usurped all authority, and favoured, by the troubles he excited, the con-quests of the English in France. He was invited by the dauphin, afterwards Charles VII., to a conference on the bridge of Montereau, and there assassinated by a favourite of Charles, in revenge of the assassination of the duke of Orleans, in 1419.

John, secretary to the emperor Honorius, usurped the empire of the West, on the death of his master, in 423, and overram Italy, Gaul, and Spain. Valentinian III., to whom the throne belonged, attacked him, at the head of a large army, and defeated him: he was afterwards taken by treason at Ravenna, where he was put to death, in 425.

JOHN, surnamed Philoponas, "the lover of study," a learned grammarian of Alexandria, in stary, a reamen grammarian of Aresandria, in the 7th century. It is said he was appointed conservator of the celebrated Alexandrian library, and he retained the post till Omar ordered the destruction of the whole by fire, He wrote a treatise on the creation of the world. and edited several of Aristotle's works. D. about 660

JOHN OF ARBAS, secretary of the duke de Berry, composed, in 1387, by order of Charles V., and for the amusement of the duchess de Bar, the romance of "Melusine," which was printed for the first time in 1500.

JOHN OF AUSTRIA, DON, natural son of the emperor Charles V., was brought up without the knowledge of his birth till his father, on the death-led, had revealed the secret to his son Philip III, king of Spain, who caused John to be brought to his court, and publicly acknowledged the his court, and publicly acknowledged to the secret of the son. brought to his court, and jubility acknowledged him as his brother. In 1570 he was sent into Granada against the Moors, where he terminated the war with great glow. The year following, he was appointed by the Christian princes commander of the fleet against the Turks, and gained the eclobrated battle of Lepanto, where the Turks is 30,000 mm and 200 versels. The 1573 he took Tunis, and in 1576 was made governor of the Low Countries, then in a state of revolt. After taking Namur, Charlemont, and Marienburg, he was vigcrously opposed by the archduke Matthias and the prince of Orange.

'Rise of the Dutch Republic.') Casimir Delavigne, the celebrated French anthor, has written a beautiful play on the incidents of Don John's early career. u. at Ratisbon, 1545.

John of Bologna, a French sculptor, who studying the Michael Angelo a statue, finished with all the care of which he was capable, the latter destroyed it, saying that he should learn to carve before he finished. This caused John to work with redoubled ardour, and soon he became one of the best sculptors in Italy. He took up his residence at Bologna, and there took up his residence as bologia, and tated executed a great number of works, one of the most celebrated of which is the group, "Rape of the Subines," exhibited at Florence. The bronze horse in the statue of Henry IV., on the brouze horse in the statue of Henry IV, on the Pont Neuf, at Paris, is also his work. B. at Dugai about 1520; D. 1008.

John of Brugas, (See Ercs, John van John of Galvas, or Ghravt, duke of Lacester, was the fourth son of Edward III, single of England. He took, for his second wife, Constance, a natural daughter of Peter the Cruel, king of Castile and Leon, and, on the death of that monarch, laid claim to the throne in right of his wife, in opposition to Henry of Transtamare, but without success. He served with great glory in France, with his brother the Black Prince, and, on the latter's death, had the management of affairs during the life of his father. On the accession of Richard II., he retired; but the envy of the courtiers, particularly the ecclesiastics, who hated him for protecting Wickliffe, followed him with false accusations of a design to usurp the throne, from which he satisfactorily cleared himself. In 1386 his only daughter was married to the heir-apparent of the king of Castile, and John renounced his claim to that erown, in consideration of a considerable sum and a pension. He took for his third wife, Catharine Swynford, sister to the wife of his friend Chaucer, the poot. John of Gaunt was a man of great valour, prudence, and generosity. His son afterwards became king, by the tide of Henry IV. B. at Ghent, 1340; D.

1399.

John of Leyden. (See Boccold.) John of Paris, a learned professor of theo-John OF PARIS, a tearned profession of theo-logy in the 13th century. In the dispute be-tween Pope Boniface VIII. and Philip the Fair, king of France, he took the part of the latter, and defended his cause with zeal and ability. He also started objections to the doctrine of transubstantiation, for which he was cited to Rome. He wrote,—"De Regia Potestate et Papuli;" "De Mode existendi Corporis Christi Papuli; "De Modo existenti Corporis Unriti in Sucramento Marisi," D. 1394. Joun ov Salisburx, a learned English monk of the 12th century, became bishop of Chartres in France, about 1164. He studied at Oxford, but also visited Paris, where he ai-tended the lectures of Abelard. He likewise went to Italy, and, at Rome, lived some time under the patronage of Pope Adrian IV. On his return to England, he became secretary to Thomas à Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas à Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, whom he accompanied in his exile to France. After the tragical death of a Becket, he became bishop of Chartes. In learning he is said to have had no living superior, and wrote several valuable works on theology, politics, and philosophy. n. at Salisbury, about 1110; n. at Chartes, 1128.

Jounn, Sr., Chuxusorsom. (See Churusorsom, Journey, Thomas, Jons, and Baglish gentleman distinguished for his attachment to literary meanits was columed at his chip and Jesus College.)

for Cardigan, and afterwards for Radnorshire. At an estate he possessed at Hafed, in Cardi-ganshire, he built a splendid mansion, furnishing canshire, he built asplendid mansion, furnishing it with a magnificent library, and a complete typographical establishment, where his literary works were printed. He translated the Chronicles of Froissart and Monstreit, "ion-nicles of Froissart and Monstreit, "ion-nicles in Factoria of Louis, and France" in Factoria of Louis, "Bertrand de la Broquiero's Travels in Palesting," and St. Palay's "Life of Proissart," His original writings were not numerous commontant as I Lulliw Stronshire 1738. or important. B. at Ludlow, Shropshire, 1748; p. 1816.

JOHNSON. Thomas, jon'-son, an English botanist. became an apothecary in London, and, according to Wood, was the best herbalist of his age. the wrote the first local catalogue of plants pub-lished in England. But his great work was an improved edition of Gerard's "Herbal." In the civil wars be entered the royalist army, and the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of M.D. At the siege of Basing House, he received a wound of which he died. Besides the above, he wrote a treatise on the hot springs of Bath, and other pieces. B. at Selby, Yorkshire, 1561; D. 1644.

Johnson, Samuel, an English divine, who was educated at St. Paul's School, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1670, he obtained the living of Corring ham, in Essex, but resided in London, where he made himself conspicuous in opposing the succession of the duke of York, afterwards James II., and the measures of 1 ors, atterwards dames 11., and the measures of the court. Having written a book against the doctrine of passive obedience, under the title of "Julian the Apostate," in which the duke was attacked, he was condemned to pay a fine of five hundred marks. When the army was encamped on Hounslow Heath, he published a remonstrance to the soldiers in behalf ished a remonstrance to the soldiers in behalf of the Protestant religion, for which he was sentenced to stand twice in the pillory, to pay a heavy fine, to be degraded from his function, and whipped from Newgate to Tyburn. This sentence was rigorously inflicted, but at the Revolution the Parlament declared the proceedings illegal. He was also rewarded with a pension, and was offered the deanery of Durham, which he considered as inadequate to his merits.

which he considered as intacquate to his merits, b, in Warwickshire, 1640; n. 1703. Johnson, Martin, alandscape-painter of great merit in the reign of James II., whose views in England being scarce and valuable, are only to be found in the collections of connoisseurs.

Johnson, Richard, an English grammarian. Motingham from 1707 to 1720. He published, "Noctes Nottinghamies," and "Grammatical Commentaries." He was a Master of Arts, but of what university does not appear. He drowned himself in a fit of despondency in a rivulet near Jourson, John, a learned divine, was odu-cated at Cambridge, where he became fellow of Corpus Christi College. Archbishop Sancroft gave him two livings in Kent, and archbishop Tenison presented him to that of Margate. He had also the vicarage of Cranbrook. He was twice chosen proctor in convocation for the sopay. B. at Sanssury, Bout 1119 Jb. at twose chosen proctor in convocation for the Chartres, 1828.

John, Str., Christostom, (See Chiptosotom).

Googo I, he refused to take the oaths, but Johnes, Thomas, Jones, an English gentleman afterwards submitted. He wrote,—"The Clergy-distinguished for his attachment to literary man's Vade-Mecum;" "A Collection of Ecclesi-parsuits, was educated at Elon and Jesus Collection attack Laws, Canons, &c.;" "The unbloody lege, Oxford; and was member of parliament Sacrifice and Altar unveiled and supported;"

"A Paraphrase on the Psalms in the Lituray."

A raraphrase on the reads in the heargy.

B. near Rochester, 1662; D. 1725.

Johnson, Charles, a lawyer and dramatic writer, who acquired some wealth by his plays, writer, who acquired some weathin by his plays, and having married a wealthy widow, set up a tavern in Bow Street, Covent Garden. Pope ridiculed him in his "Dunciad," on account of his unusual size. B. 1679; D. 1748.

Johnson, Thomas, a learned Englishman, who for some time was engaged at Eton, and afterwards set up a school at Brentford. He produced editions of Sophocles and other an-

Johnson, Maurice, an English antiquary, who was educated as a barrister. He established a literary society at Spalding, in 1712, and, in 1717, was one of the revivers of the Antiquarian Sowas one of one reviews of the Antiquarian So-ciety, to which he sent numerous contributions. B. at Spalding, Lincolnshire, about 1687; D. 1755. Jourson, Samuel, first president of King's College, New York, was educated at the college oblego, New Tork, was encauted as the contege of Saybrook; first preached at West Haven, then became an episcopalian, and went to England to obtain ordination. On his return to America he obtain ordination. On his return to America he settled at Stratford, where he preached to an episcopalian congregation; received the degree of D.D. From Oxford, in 1743; and was chosen president of the college at New York on its establishment in 1754. He held this situation with much credit, until 1763, when he resigned with much credit, until 1763, when he resigned was at time of the best reached places at Stratford. and returned to his pastoral charge at Stratford, where he continued till his death. B. at Guildford, Connecticut; D. 1772.

JOHNSON, Samuel, a dramatic writer and performer of eccentric character, was the author of "Hurlothrumbo, or the Supernatural," and various other laughable extravaganzas. D.

1773.

Jourson, Samuel, a learned English critic. lexicographer, and miscellaneous writer, was the son of a bookseller at Lichfield. His edu-cation was commenced at the free school of Lichfield, and in 1728, he was admitted of Pembroke College, Oxford; but being too poor to remain at the university, he, in 1731, quitted it without a degree. He soon afterwards lost his father, who left him in such poor circumhis father, who left him in such poor circum-stances that he sought the post of usher of a school at Market-Bosworth, Leicestershire, where, however, he did not continue long. He next resided with a printer at Birmingham, where he translated Lobo's account of Abys-siona. In 1735 he married Mrs. Porter, a wildow lady of that fown, who was possessed of the sum of £800; and with this capital he the the sum of $500; and with this capital he the same year opened a school at Édial, near Lich-field; but he obtained only three scholars, one of whom was David Garrick. About this time he began his tragedy of "frene." In 1787 he set out for the metropolis, accompanied by Garrick. On fixing his residence in Londou, he formed a connection with Cave, the publisher of the "Gentleman's Magazine," for which was the award during serveral way his variety. of the "Gentleman's Magazine," for which work herwote during several years, his principal employment being an account of the partiamentary debutes. At this period he contracted an intimacy with Richard Savage, whose name he has immortalized by one of the finest pieces of biography ever written. In 1749 appeared his "Vanity of Human Wishes," an imitation of Jurenal's tenth Sathre. Two years previously, he had printed proposals for an elition of Shakspeare, and the plan of his English dictionary addressed to Lord Chestorfield. The price agreed upon between himself and the hookprice agreed upon between himself and the book-

rick produced his friend's tragedy upon the stage of Drury Lane Theatre, but it was unsuc-cessful. In 1750 he commenced his "Rambler," cossful. In 1750 be commenced his "Rambler," a periodical paper, which was continued: "Il 1752. In this work only five papers were the production of other writers. About the period of his relinquishing the "Rambler," he lost his wife, a circumstance which greatly affected him, as appears from his "Meditations," and the sermon which he wrote on her death. In 1754, he visited Usford. The next year appeared his dictionary, which, instead of three, had occupied eight years. Lord Unbestiful undexyment. eight years. Lord Chesterfield endeavoured to assist it by writing two papers in its favour in the "World;" but, as he had hitherto neglected the author, Johnson treated him with contempt, The publication of his great work did not relieve him from his embarrassments, for the price of his labour had been consumed in the progress of its compilation, and the year fol-lowing we find him under an arrest for five guineas, from which he was released by Richardson, the printer. In 1758 he began the "Idler," which was published in a weekly newspaper. On the death of his mother, in 1759, he wrote the romance of "Rasselas," to defray the expenses of her funeral, and to pay her debts. In 1702, George III. granted him a pension of £300 per annum. In 1703, Beswell, his future biographer, was introduced to him, a circumstance to which we owe the most minute account of a man's life and character that has ever been or a man's line and character that has ever bown written. Boswell, though a very ordinary mer-tal, has immortalized himself by this perform-ance. In his book, everything about Johnson is supplied to us; in Lord Macanlay's words, we have "his coat, his wig, his fluer, his face, his secrotula, his St. Vitus's dance, his rolling walk, his blinking eye, the outward signs which too clearly marked the approbation of his dimer, his insatiable appetite for fish-sauce and veal pie, with plums; his inextinguishable thirst for tea; his trick of touching the posts as he walked; his mysterious practice of treasuring up scraps of orange-peel; his morning slumbers; his midnight disputations: his contortions; his matterings; his gruntings; his puffings; his vigorous, acute, and ready eloquence; his sarcastic wit; his vehemence; his insolence; his fits of tempestuous range; his queer inmates— old Mr. Levett and blind Mrs. Williams, the eat Hodge, and the negro Frank—all are as familiar to us as the objects by which we have been surrounded from childhood." Johnson had the honour of a conversation with the king in the royal library, in 1765, when his majesty asked if he intended to publish any more works. To this he answered, that he thought he had written enough; on which the king said, "So should I too, if you had not written so well." About this time he instituted the Literary Club, consisting of some of the most celebrated men of the age. In 1773 he went on a tour with Boswell to the western islands of Scotland, of which journey he shortly afterwards published an account, which occasioned a controversy between him and Macpherson, relative to the poems of Ossian. In 1775 to university of Oxford sent him the degree of LL.D., which diploma, ten years before, had been conferred on him by the university of Dublin. In 1779 he began his "Lives of the English Poets," which was the last of his literary labours. After a long illness, during part of which ho had fearful apprehensions of death, his min became calm, composed, and resigned, and he died full of that faith which he had so vigorously defended and inculcated in his writings. Hie remains were interred in Westminster Abbey and a statue, with an appropriate inscription and a stance, with an appropriate inscription has been erected to his memory in St. Paul'. Cathedral. A complete list of his works is prefixed to Boswell's "Lih!". As a writer, fou have done such essential service to his country, by fixing its language and regulating its morality. In his person he was large, robust, and unwieldy; in his dress he was singular and slovenly, in correspondent continuous distribution of distributions of the standard control of th slovenly; in conversation positive, and impatien of contradiction. But with all his singularities he had an excellent heart, full of tenderness and compassion, and his actions were the result o. principle. He was a stout advocate for truth, and a zealous champion of the Church of Eng land. B. at Lichfield, 1709; D. in London, 1784. Johnson, Andrew, a self-educated man, who became president of the United States from April, 1865, to March, 1869, served his apprenticeship to a tailor in early years, and worked as a journeyman for a long period of his life. After holding various offices of minor importance, he was returned to Congress for Tennessee in 1843, becoming governor of this state in 1855 and 1857, and a member of the United States Senate in 1863. In 1864, when Abraham Lincoln was elected president for the second time. he was chosen vice-president, and succeeded to the presidency on the murder of Lincoln in

1865. B. 1909.

JOHNSON, Reverdy, a distinguished American statesman, and member of the American bar, who succeeded Mr. C. F. Adams as United States ambassador to England in 1868, and arranged ambiassator to Engano in 1995, and arrangea with Lord Stanley a treaty for the settlement of the "Alabama" claims, B. shout 1900, Joinston, George, a modern English naturalist, commenced his medical education as the apprentice of Dr. Abercrombie; and subsequently practised as surgoon at Berwick upon-Tweed. While at Edinburgh he was an attactive at the state of patients before and constitution of the state of patients before and constitution of the state of patients. attentive student of natural history, and continued afterwards to follow up the pursuit. In 1838 he published his "History of British Zoo-1393 no published his "History of British Zoo-phytes," and four years afterwards his "History of British Sponges" appeared. He contributed many valuable articles, chiefy on the lower forms of animal life, to the Transactions of various provincial scientific societies, to the "Magazine of Zoolozy and Botany," and to the "Annals of Natural History." In 1850 he pro-duced one of his best work—the "Introduction" to Conchology, or Elements of the Natural History of Molluscous Animals," and soon after-wards put forth an interesting work "On the Botany of the Eastern Borders." The latter portion of his life was visited with some severe trials, under which his mind gave way. B. 1798; D. 1855.

D. 1850.

JOHNSON, Or JOHNSON, Charles, an ingenious writer, and a native of Ireland, was bred to the bar, and went over to England to practise; but being afflicted with deafness, was compelled to quit that profession. It is first literary teampt was the famous "Chrysal, or the Advantares of a Guines," a political romance, in which the leading characters were drawn from real life, and from their being generally known, produced a great sensation. This work having been exceedingly well received, the author produced others of a similar class, viz., "The Reverie, or a Flight to the Paradise of Fools," 2 vols.; "The History of Arbaces, Prince of Bedlis," 2 vols.; "The Pligrim, or a Picture of Life," 2 vols.; and the "listory of John Juni-per, Esq., alias Juniper Jack," 3 vols. In 1732 he went to India, where he engaged in literary and other speculations, and obtained considerable wealth. D. 1800. Johnston, Jas. J. F. W., an eminent modern chemist. Under circumstances by no means favourable, he succeeded in obtaining an education that enabled him to gain his livelihood by giving private instruction to pupils of the university of Glasgow. Removing to Durham, in 1825, he opened a school there. Five years later he married a young lady, whereby his circumstances were so much improved that he was enabled to retire from teaching, and give himself up entirely to chemistry, in pursuit of which intention he went to Sweden, where he became the pupil of the great chemist Berzelius. In 1833, upon the establishment of the Durham University, he was invited from abroad, to oniversity, he was invited from abroad, to assume the readership of chemistry and mino-ralogy in the new seat of learning. Shortly afterwards he went to Edinburgh, and was appointed chemist to the Agricultural Society of Scotland, but eventually resided exclusively at Durham, where he commenced a series of works on chemistry as applied to agriculture, which have become famous throughout the world. His "Catchism of Agricultural Chemistry" has passed through thirty-six editions, and has has passed through thirty-six editions, and has been translated into every European language. A similar work was his "Lectures on Agricultural Chemistry and Geology." Having travelled in the New Word, he published 'Notes on North America," in which much valuable information is given as to the agricultural of that country. He was peculiarly qualified to make scientific 'knowledge attractive to the variance of the country. He was preclienced by the vasticulation of his 'Chemistry of Common Life," me of his latest works. He also wrote scientific articles for the "Edinburgh Review," and contributed to the Transactions of many clearned societies. He was fellow of the Koral Soci. 15. and member of many other learned bodies. B. at Paisley, 1796; D. at Durham, 1853.

Jounston, Alexander Keith, an eminent modern geographer, whose first studies were lirected towards fitting him for the pursuit threetest towards utting him for the pursuit of medicine; but a strong predilection for delign caused him to become apprenticed to an agraver. From early youth he was an attentive student of geography, and, in order to make thimself master of all that was to be learned with espect to it, he acquired, in succession, French, within Shanish and German. The result of within Shanish and German. italian, Spanish, and German. The result of o much well-directed industry, was the publiation, in 1848, of his first great geographical vork, "The National Atlas," in folio, which procured for him election as fellow of the Royal Focured for him electron as renow of the Anyland Scographical Society, and the appointment of geographer to the queen in Scotland. A close study of the writings of Humboldt, and other great German and French writers on his avouritie art, enabledhim to produce, in 1813, his avouritie art, enabledhim to produce, in 1813, his woutre art, enabled nim to produce, in 1813, his Physical Atlas," a splendid work, characterized by the "Bulletin of the Paris Geographical ociety," as "one of the most magnificent octety, as one or the moss magnitude to numents which the scientific genius of the 9th century has raised." He was soon after-rards made honorary member of the Geogra-hical Societies of Paris and Berlin, He was likewise elected fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, to whose papers he contributed "An Historical Notice of the Survey of Sectland." The "Dictionary of Geography" was his next work, first published in 1851, and since produced in an enlarged and corrected form.

James over, George a naval commander, was the som of a Stotch humone, and duvozed himself to the seasorvice. After passing through the subordinate ranks, he was, in 1769, made master and commander, and, in 1762, post-capitain. He was subsequently appointed governor of West Florica, and, on his return to England, took an active part in the affairs of the East India Company, particularly in opposition to Lord Clive. In 1771 he worto "Thoughts on our Aequisitions in the East Indias." He sat in Parliament first for Cockermouth and afterwards for Appleby, and had a duel with Lord George Germaine, through some reflections which field from him in the House respecting his lordship. He was one of the commissioners sent to treat with the Americans. p. 1787.

JOINSTONE, Chroniler de, an adherent of the Preteuder, was the son of a merchant at Edinburgh, and having at an early age owinced an inclination for a military life, and having been brought up in Jacobite principles, be left Edinburgh privately on the breaking out of the robellion in 1745, and joined the insurgents. Its was appointed aide-de-camp to Prince Charles Edward; fought at the battle of Preston Pans; and raised an independent company, with which he served throughout the campaign. After the battle of Culoleden, he sought safety in light; and, disguised as a pediar, travelled through the battle of Culoleden, he sought safety in light; and, disguised as a pediar, travelled through the prejand, and at lengthe second to the Continent. He subsequently entered into the service of France, and acted in the spacety of aide-decamp in Canada; on the conquest of which the British he returned to France, and did there at an advanced age. a. 1720. His "Methoccupied his latter years, is a very interesting work."

JOHNSTONE, James, a physician and physiological writer, studied at Edinburgh, where he took the degree of M.D. in 1750; and settled at Kidderminster, where he acquired considerable reputation by his successful treatment of a malignant fover then raging there, and by having discovered the good effects arising from the use of mineral acids, in counteracting contained, in the ment of this discovery, however, has been disputed. Dr. Johnstone subsequently removed to Worcester. He was the author of "Medical Essays and Observations," Disquisitions relating to the Nervous System," and also several medical papers in the "Philosophical Transactions." n. at Anaan, Dumffreshire, 1730: n. at Worcester, 1892.

"Philosophical Transactions." n. at Annan, Dumfrieshire, 1730; n. at Worcester, 1962.

Joinstone, Dr. Bryce, an eminent Sected, divine, was a son of John Johnstone, Esta, a highly respectable magistrate of Annan in Dumfrieshire. He entered the university of Edinburgh in 1762; in 1771 he was appointed minister of Holywood; and in 1786 the degree of D.D. was conferred on him. He was the author of a "Commentary on the Revelation of St. John the Divine," 2 vols. 8vo; an "Essay on the Indiance of Religion on Civil Society and Civil Government," and some valuable someons. He also assisted Sir John Shedar in drawing up the statistical account of Scotland; and greatly contributed towards the improvement of the agricultural and sonial multilon of his native country. n. 1747; n. 1805.

Johnstone, John Henry, a celebrated comic actor and vocalist, was born in Tipperary, Ireland, where his father was a small farmer. At the age of eighteen he culisted in a regiment of Irish dragoons, and soon attracted the notice of arisa uragious, and soon attracted the notice of his comrades by his fine voice and good-hamoured liveliness. The colonel of the regiment having had proofs of Johnstone's yound powers, and hearing that he had an inclination for the and hearing that he had an incimation for each stage, granted him his discharge, and gave him a recommendatory letter to Mr. Ryder, then manager of the Dublin theatre, who engaged him for three years, at two guineas per week, which was soon raised to four. His fame as a vocalist increased rapidly; and having married a Miss Poitier, who possessed a thorough knowledge of the science of music, he profited by her instructions, and soon became a finished singer. Macklin, the famous actor, advised him to try the London boards, and wrote a letter to Mr. Harris, of Covent Garden, so strongly in his favour, that he engaged Johnstone and his wife, for three years, at a salary of £14, £16, and £18 per week. He accordingly made his appearance at Covent Garden Theatre. in October, 1783. There were, however, other aspirants for vocal fame at that time on the stage; and though Johnstone continued to sing for several seasons with undiminished success, he perceived that a better field was open for him in the personation of Irish characters. His utmost efforts were therefore directed to that end; and it was soon found that his native humour, rich brogue, and fine voice carried him to a pitch of excellence in the path he had chosen which of excellence in the path he had chosen which clife overy competitor far behind. He quitted Covent Garden for Drury Lane, in 1803, and in the summer of that year visited Dublin, where, martial law being then in force, the company performed in the duytine. On his roturn from Ireland his wife died; and he married Miss Doulton, by whom he had a daughter, who afterwards became Mrs. Wallack. Few public porformers have passed a long career with such uninterrupted success as John Henry Johnstone. As an actor. he stood alone in his reculling ratch. As an actor, he stood alone in his peculiar path, personating his buoyant and blundering country.

Joinville

men, both patrician and plebeian, with a degree of fidelity quite unequalled. He was of prudent habits, and acquired a considerable fortune, which enabled him to enjoy life in a free, frank, and generous sociability with his friends. B

JOHNSTONE, John, M.D., a distinguished physician of Birmingham, who acquired a high reputation for his success in treating fevers, 750; D. 1828. reputation for his success in treating fevers, and for the sparing use he made of modicine. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, was the intimate friend of Dr. Parr, whose life hewrote, a performance which shows that Dr. Johnstone was as distinguished for literary ability and fearloss advocacy of what he believe to be truth as he was for his professional stell. He also wrote several treatises on medical subto be truth as he was for his professional skill. He also wrote several treatises on medical subjects; was a member of the Royal College of Physicians, and was held in high estimation for his professional ability, general acquirements, and amiable character. Ho was the son of Dr. James Johnstone of Worcester, in which city he was hown in 1882 - 1822 he was born, in 1768; p 1836.

JOINVILLE, John, Sire or Lord de, teel, a French historian, was counsellor and friend to Louis IX. king of France, whom he accompanied in his first crusade in 1248, sharing his captivity after the battle of Massoura, in which Louis and his army were taken prisoners. On the king's return to France, Joinville received a pension, and was constantly retained near his majesty's person. His "History of St. Louis IX, King of France," is a valuable and interesting work, wherein the simple grandeur of the mg work, wherent the sample grandent of the good king's character is minutely painted. The best French edition is that by Ducange, which was translated into English by Johnes, in 1807.

was translated into English by Jonnes, in 1897.
n. about 122½; n. about 1319.
JONYLLE, François Ferdinand Philippe
Louis Mario d'Orleans, Prince de, was third son of the late king of the French, Louis Philippe.
When he had completed his education, he was appointed to the French navy, and voy son the coasts of France a nt a public

f Brest. In 1837 joined at Constanti

Jomini

ral sketches on the French navy, besides a rai sections on the French may, besides a pamphlet on the feasibility of invading Eng-land, which caused considerable sensation at land, which caused considerable sensation at the time. At Neuliy, 1819. Journary, Jean Raphiste Moyes, Count de, Journary, Jean Raphiste Moyes, Count de, Nobles Previous fot the great French revolution as an advocate, and having been cleated to the Lordinite Assembly, he, in 1792, 184 thou to Lordinite Assembly, he, in 1792, 184 thou for the count oncough to escape the perils of that dangerous spooth. He was made a member of the Countie of State after the rise of Napoleon, and was charged with the organization of twu new denartments created on the 18th bank four new departments created on the left bank of the Rhine. Having successfully performed this duty, he was, on his return to Paris, made a commandant of the Lerion of Honour, and continued to hold the office of Councillor of State till 1814. He was the author of several works on statistics and finance. B. 1754; p. 1818.

zho'-le, a French political D. 1818.

Joly, Claude, zho'-le, a French political writer, was at first a lawyer; but was afterwards made precenter of the cathedral at Paris. He wrote a book entitled "Maxims for rais. He wrote a pook entitled "Maxims for the Education of a Prince," which, speaking too boldly of the rights of the people, was burnt by the hangman, in 1655. n. at Paris, 1607; n. at the hangman in 1655, n. at Paris, 1607; p. at the same place, 1700.

JOIN, GUN, 1700.

JOIN, GUN, 1900 and preceding, was, for some time, the location of the preceding with for Cardinal Boltz; but, quarrelling with him, attact Historical Memoirs" about 1865, which were intended to give the opposite view of the Cardinal Paris.

de Retz.

Joux, Mare Antoine, a French comic author, JOLX, Mare Antoine, a French comic author, who became, in 1753, censor-royal. He wrote, among other plays, the "School of Lovers," and "The Jealous Wife." B. at Paris, 1672; D.

1758.

menced her career on the stage attained an eminent position She especially excelled in soubrettes of the French mprisoned, among other po-batteries of St. Jean d'Ulioa, with the Créole; and, shortly afterwards, at the head of his sailors, stormed the gate of Vera Cruz, or ms sanors, stormed the gale of vert cruz, and took prisoner General Arista; for which he received the cross of the Legion of Honour, and was appointed post-captain. In 1841 he brought to France from St. Helena the remains years. B. at Versailles, 1761; D. 1 JOHELEI, Nicolo, yo'-mel-le, an sical composer, who produced his f Naples, when twenty-three years brought him so much fame, that afterwards summoned to Rome, where he became the especial favourite of the cardinal duke of York. He afterwards visited Venice and brought to France from St. Heiena unterlained st. Apoleon I. In 1835 he married, at Rio Angoleon I. In 1835 he married, at Rio Angoleon I. and was the same year leading the Princess Francesca of Bragauza, of York. He afterwards visited Venice and Jameiro, the Princess Francesca of Bragauza, of York. The after yeleo being engaged as sister of Don Pedro II., and was the same year viewing at the latter place being engaged as sister of Don Pedro II., and was the same year viewing the property of the property which are the Mogad Durin e Algica l his ublicans, t, and l America ephews, rires, to

Catholic French

appointments on the stait of Guinea as tailan after the battles on the Chickshominy in 1882, colonel at 20; but, on the French invasion after the battles on the Chickshominy in 1882, colonel at 20; but, on the French invasion after the battles on the Chickshominy in 1882, colonel at 20; but, on the French invasion after the battles on the Stain and t

had already established himself as a stockbroker in Paris, when he became acquainted with General Ney, who, discovering his great qualifications for military study, obtained for him an appointment which allowed him leisure to pursue it. When only 25, he wrote the early portion of his "Traité des Grandes Opérations Militaires," upon which Ney obtained a post for him in the army, and soon afterwards apfor him in the army, and soon atterwards appointed him his adic-de-camp, and he accompanied his patron through his campaints during the few ensuing years, distinguishing himself by his bravery and skill. At the battle of Jena, in particular, he rendered good service to Ney, for which he was made a baron. In 1938 he marched with Ney into Spain, but fell under the displeasure of that general in the fell-mider the displeasure of that general in the felllowing year, and was superseded. Intending to enter the Russian army, he now applied to be discharged; but Napoleon refused, and made him a brigadier instead. Soon afterwards, he was appointed to write the history of the grand | army then about to invade Russia, and throughout the campaign exhibited such great talent, that Ney, after the battle of Bautzen, requested the emperor to make him general of division; but Napoleon found some cause for displeasure in his conduct, and again superseded him. Mortified at this treatment, Jonnini resolved to enter the Russian service, and soon afterwards was made lieutenant-general therein, but wards was made licutenant-general therein, but never took an active purt against Knyodeen, Mennwhile, he was tried by court-martial, and, in his absence, condemned to death by the French. In 1815 he went to Paris, where he strove, by every possible means, to prevent the execution of his old benefactor, Marsinal Ney. He subsequently went to reside in Russia, and occupied himself with the composition of milioccupied himself with the composition of military works, which have since become great text-books of the science of war. The care for Russia allowed Jomini to settle in Brussels in 1855. His chief works are, "History of the Wars of Proderick II," "Principles of Strategy," "Political and Millitary Life of Napoleon," "Tractisco on the Art of War," and "The Millitary Atlas." n. at Payerne, in the canton of Vand. 1797, p. 1849.

A a rayen, in the cannot have of Iceland, and a writer of some philosophical and historical works, was coadjutor to Gundelvand, bishop of Holum, who was a disciple of Tychu Irahe. Jonas refased the see of Holum after the death of his friend. n. 1545; n. 1640.

Jonas, Justus, a learned Protestant, who became principal of the college of Wittenberg, assisted Melanethon at Marpurg, and zealously defended the doctrines of Luther. n. in Thuringia 1493; n. 1555.

Jones John, Jones an English physician, who wrote "The Dial of Agues," 1556; "A Discourse of the Natural Beginning of all Growing and Living Things;" and translated Galen's four books of Elements. D. shout 1589.

course of the Natural Beginning of all Growing and Living Things;" and translated Galen's four books of Elements. D. about 1850.

JONES, John, a Welsh antiquary, who continued transcribing old manuscripts for about forty years, as appears from some of his volumes dated from 1890 to 1800. Of his collection above fifty large volumes are still in existence.

nity large volumes are used in eastence.

Joxus, Richard, a Welsh divine, who compiled, in his native language, a curious work, cailed "Germa Cambricum," containing a summary of all the books and chapters of the Bible. He matriculated at Jesus College, Oxford, in 1621.

b. 10 in Ireland, about 1652,

Joses, Inica, a famous English architect, of whose youth very little is known, till he attracted, by his skill in drawing, the notice of William, earl of Fembrode, who sent him to Haly, where he negated a great knowledge of architecture, Janes I, appoint a limb surveyor general of the works, and, in the succeeding releas, he had charge of the polation of Paul's embeddind. He was also made manage of the masqu's and incritates at court, which bought upon him the after of Ben Jonson, who rifleuded it in it has centrely of "Barthachead. He saftered co., ider. by for his loady in the fine of the great evit war. In 165 he words "A biscourse of Stee heave," in which he attempted to prove that it had he, the Bonan temple of C he. He designed he palace of Whitchell and the hampeting-load place of which held and the hampeting-load other haddings. It is designed the 1127, John, and other safety, and other safety, and other safety, and other safety, and other safety.

in 172, 1010, that can be a considered to the landom about 1573 by 16. Joseph Sandom about 1573 by 16. Joseph Sandom about 1573 by 16. Joseph Sandom Pleas in the release of Charles II, and James II. When it is lest monarch consulted him on his dispon in a power, and said that he could soon have twelve jude as of his ophion, Sir Thomas artweet, "Twelve judges touring possibly find, sire, but not tack by larges?"

Joses, Wiliam, an Furil in mathematican, settled in London as a schoolmaster, and, having instructed Lord Macchischol's son in mathematics, that moldenam made him his secretary, and appointed him depart-feller of the Exchequer. He was very intinate with Sr. Isaa-Kwetton, and was chosen as filow of the loyal Society. He wrote "A Comp nation of the Art Of Navigation," "A New Introduction to Mathematics," some papers in the "Philosophical Transactions," and an analysis of several of Sr. Isaaco Newton's papers. Ir. In the Isle of Antelesa, 1680; p. 1749.

Joseph Germanda, a learned dissenting divine, Joseph

JONES Jorenniah, a learned diss nting divine, who became minister of a congregation at Avening, in Glonestershire. He wrote, in 1710, "A Vindication of St. Matthew's Gospel," "A new and full Method of settling the Canonical Authority of the Oid Testament," which works were reprinted at the Clarendon press, Oxford.

JONES, Henry, a dramatic writer, was originally a bricklayer. Some of this proctical attempts attracting the notice of Lord Chesterfield, then lord-lieutenant of Ireland, he took him under his patronage, and brought him to Londen, where he published his poems by subscription, and produced his tragedy of the "Earl of Essex," which gained him wealth and reputation. B. in Ireland, about 1720 p. 1770.

5001. B. In Irestia, about 1739, p. 1770.

JONES, Griffilth, w.s. namy jears editor of the "London Chronicle," and other papers, the was proprietor of the "Literary Magazine," and, with his brother, projected those useful publications for children, which were os successfully printed by that Mr. Newberry to whom Dp. Johnson introduced Goldsmith. 1721; p. 1786.

JONES David a Wolsh most who edited two

Jones, David, a Welsh poet, who edited two volumes of Welsh poetry, and collected a large number of ancient MSS, in that language. D. about 1785.

JONES, Paul, a naval adventurer, who had been a common sailor in some vessels that left the port of Kirkembright, but settled in Jones

Jones

America in 1773, and subsequently obtained the As a judge he was indefatigable and im-command of an American ship under Commo-tore Hopkins, and distinguished hinself in country, and became so versed in the Sanserit several engagements, for which he received his and the codes of the Brahmins, as to gain the command of an American sinp under Commodore Hopkins, and distinguished himself in several engagements, for which he received his commission as captain of the marine. He then commission as captain of the manue. He then sailed to France, and being well acquainted with the Scotch coast and the northern part of England, he conceived the design of effecting a descent. He accordingly landed at Whitelatern and, having dismantled a fort, set fire to some shipping in the harbour. Thence he sailed for the opposite coast of Scotland, where he landed on the estate of the earl of Selkirk, and plunon the estate of the eart of Senirr, and plant dered his lordship's house of all the plant. He next took the Druke sloop of war, with which he returned to Brest. He afterwards sailed round Ireland to the North Sea, with three ships—the Richard, Pallas, and Venpeanes. Having committed great mischief on that coast, well with the coast. he fell in with the Ballic fleet, convoyed by the Scrapis frigate and the Countess of Scarborough armed ship, both which, after a severe action, he captured off Flamborough Head. For these services the king of France conferred on him the order of Merit, and gave him a gold-hilted sword. His active career finished with the American war, and some private affairs calling him to Europe, he resided at Paris till his death.

Jones, Sir William, an Indian judge and learned Oriental writer. Losing his father in his infancy, his education devolved on his mother, a woman of great virtue and under-standing, from whom he learned the rudi-ments of knowledge, and was then removed to Harrow school, where he made such great to Harrow sensor, where he made such great progress in his studies, that Dr. Sumner, the master, affirmed that his pupil knew more freek than himself; a previous master hav-ing said, "If Jones were left naked on Salisbury plain, he would nevertheless find the road to fame," In 1764 he was entered at road to fame." In 1763 he was entered at University College, Oxford, where to his classical pursuits he added the study of the Persian and Arabic languages, also the Spanish, Italian, and Portugueso. At the age of nineteen he became tutor to Lord Althorp, and, during his residence at Wimbledon, in Earl Spencer's family, he greatly enlarged his acquirements in Oriental literature. In 1760 he made a tour in France, and about the same time undertook, at the request of the high of Darwark, by translate. request of the king of Denmark, to translate the history of Nadir Shah from Persian into French. In 1770 he entered on the study of the law at the Temple, but continued his ap-plication to Oriental learning and general literature. In 1774 he published his "Commentaries on Asiatic Poetry," dedicated to the University of Oxford. In 1783 he obtained the appointment of a judge of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, a post which had been the object of his anxious wishes. The honour of knightof his anxious wishes. An about a sample hood was on this occasion conferred on him, and he soon after married a daughter of the bishop of St. Asayh. In April of that year he embarked for India, from which he was destined never to return. On the voyage his active mind projected the establishment of a society in Bengal for the purpose of illustrating Oriental antiquities and literature. This scheme he saw antiquities and interactive. This scheme he saw carried into effect; and under his auspices, and by his direction, the society acquired a high reputation. The volumes of its "Transactions" admiration of the most learned men in that country. In 1799 his works were collected and published in 6 vols., and his life written by Lord Teignmouth, in one volume, 1804. A beautiful monument has been creeted to his memory in St. Paul's Cathedral by the East India Company. 1794. B. in London, 1746; D. at Calcutta, JONES, Rice, an eminent Welsh poet, who in 1770 published a "Welsh Anthology," in quarto, containing selections from the poets of different periods. B. in Wales, 1716; D. 1801.

JONES. William, an English divine, received his education at the Charterhouse, whence he removed to University College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and, in 1749, entered into orders. He wrote an answer to Bisher. Clayton's "Essay on Spirit," "The Catholic Doutrine of the Trinity," "Ssay on the First Principles of Natural Philosophy," in which he espoused the Hutchinsonian system. This work be completed in 1781, by his "Physiological Disquisitions; or, Discourses of the Natural Philosophy of the Elements." When Dr. Horne became bishop of Norwich, he appointed Mr. Jones his domestic chaplain, and he embalmed Johns and the employer and the chromators the memory of his patron by an excellent memoir of his life. When the French revolution bruke out, and democratic principles began to spread in England, he wrote some pamphlets, and published a collection of tracts, entitled "The Scholar Armed." D. 1726; D. 1800.

JONES, Ernest, was educated in Germany, and having kept his terms as a law-student of the Middle Temple, was called to the bar in 1844. In the following year he joined the Chartist movement, and soon became one of the most con-spicuous and active leaders of the party, re-maining so until Chartism expired in 1858. During this period he edited the "People's Paper," and other Chartist periodicals. In 1848 he was tried for making seditious speech, and condemned to two years' imprisonment. He stood for Halifax in 1847, and Nottingham in 1833 and 1857, without success. In January, 1889, when it was supposed that Mr. Hugh Birley would lose his seat for Manchester. through being a Government contractor at the time of his election, Mr. Jones was chosen by ballot to fill the expected vacancy against Mr. Milner Gibson, but died a few days after. He was an honest politician, for he refused a large fortune rather than give up his principles. He wrote the "Revolt of Hindostan," "The Battle ' and other poems. B. about 1820.

JONES, John Gale, was by profession an apothecary, but is far better known as a political At the breaking out of the French orator. revolution he became a leading member of the London Corresponding Society; and, until a few years before his death, was known as a low years before an equal, was snown as a popular declaimer at the various political meeting held in the metropolis. The part he took in advocating republican decrines subjected him to a trial at the Warwick assizes, when he obtained a verific of acquitital, mainly through the skillul advocacy of his counsel, Sir Samuel Decoults University surfaces himself the part of the property was a subject of the property was a subjec by his direction, the society acquired a high [konilly, Having subsequently rendered him-reputation. The volumes of its "Transactions" self obnoxious to the government by his vioral near inestimable, and are enriched by several cluse, and impugned the proceedings of the valuable productions from Sir William's pen. [House of Commons, he was committed to New-573] gate in February, 1810, and there remained till his liberation was effected by the prorogation of Parliament, June 21. As a public speaker Jones was fluent, energetic, and impressive; in private life he is said to have been an unassum-ing and instructive companion. B. 1771: D. 1838.

JONES. Colonel Leslie Grove, was, in early life, a midshipman; but having humanely, though very insubordinately, interfered respecting the punishment of one of the seamen, he was so severely consured, that he guitted the was so severely construct that he dutted the navy in disgust. Shortly afterwards he was presented with an ensign's commission in the 1st Foot Guards, served throughout the Peninsular war, and was a favourite aide-de-camp of the Duke of Wellington, an idea of whose high opinion of his zeal, discretion, and gal-lantry may be formed from the fact that, previous to the battle of Waterloo, the honourable and responsible office of commandant of Brusand responsible onice of commandant of Brussels was intrusted to him. Being put on half-pay at the peace, Colonel Jones engaged in lite-rary composition, and occasionally produced some essays, &c. In the great struggle for the Reform Bill he appeared before the world as a political writor, and contributed a series of letters to the "Times," which had all the vio-lence of those of Junius, without being always characterized by their redeeming vigour, sar-casm, and eloquence. B. 1779; D. 1839.

JONES, Owen, a modern English architect, distinguished for his skill as an ornamental decorator, who, after studying under Mr. Valliamy, an architect of some celebrity as an ornamental designer, travelled for four years in Egypt, Turkey, and Spain, where, in conjunction with M. Jules Goury, a French artist, he made numerous designs from the Alhambra. On his numerous designs from the Amaniora. On his return to London, he, after considerable pains and expense, succeeded in producing an elabo-rate work, in lithography and colours, on the rate work, in innography and colours, on the Alhambra. This great work was published in parts, and concluded in 1842, from which time Mr. Owen Jones was an authority on the subject of chromatic decoration. A work on "Mosaic Pavements" was next published by "Mosaic Pavements" was next published by him. Upon the organization of the official staff of the Great Exhibition of 1851, he was ap-pointed one of the superintendents of the works, being charged with the internal decoration of the structure. The plan he pursued was a novel one, and though generally admitted to be supcessful, was, nevertheless, opposed in principle by other architects and decorators. In advocating his own views, Mr. Jones gave loctures on decoration at the London Institution, the Society of Arts, and other places, besides having source of a ris, and other places, besides naving published a number of works on the subject. When the Crystal Palace Company was formed, he was appointed, with Mr. Digby Wyatt, to select, on the continent, the valuable collection of casts and works of art, for which the People's Palace at Sydenham is so deservedly celebrated. The Egyptian, Greek, Roman, and Alhambra courts of the same structure were completed under his superintendence. But, in the case of the Egyptian and Greek departments, some controversy was aroused by his mode of

Hall, completed in 1858, was built after his do-

Hall, completed in 1853, was built after his designs. n. in Wales, about 1800.

JONES, Thomas Rymer, an eminent English anatomiss and writer on medicine, was educated for the profession of surgery in London and Paris, and passed at the College of Surgons in 1833; but an adliction of dealness manifesting itself, he resolved to abundon the practical for the theoretical departments of medical science. He began his literary career by architacture of the wavefullings of the Vaulogue of the College of contributing to the proceedings of the Zoological Society some papers on comparative anatomy. In 1838 he produced "A General Outline of the Animal Kingdom," which was the first com-plete treatise on the subject in the English language. Subsequently he was appointed Fullanguage. Subsequently no was appointed rulerian professor of physiology in the Royal Institution of Great Britain, and examiner in comparative anatomy and physiology in the London University. His "Natural History of Animals" was commenced in 1845; he also lectured, and contributed articles to scientific publications, on natural history, with considerable success. In 1811 he was elected fellow of the Royal Society. Jonson, Benjamin, jon'-son, commonly known as Ben Jonson, an English poet and dramatist. His father was a elergyman, and died about a month before the birth of the poet, who received his education at Westminster school; but his mother marrying again, his father-in-law, who was a bricklayer, compelled him to work at his business. On this, he collisted for a soldier, and went to the Netherlands, where he distinguished himself by his courage. After his return, he went to St. John's College, Cambridge, but did not remain there long, owing to his extremo not remain there long, owing to his extreme proverty. He then turned his attention to the stage, and became a player and dramatic write, with indifferent success. During this part of his career, he was so unfortunate as to kill a man in a duel. His first printed play was the comedy of "Every Man in his Humour," after which he produced a new piece annually for several years. He engaged with Chapman and several years. In engaged with Chapman and Marston in writing a comedy commonly called "Eastward Hoe," which being deemed a satire on the Scotch nation, had nearly brought its authors to the pillory. At the accession of James I. Jonson superintended a spectacle for his entertainment in his passage from the Tower to Westminster Abbey, and continued to have the management of all the massages and public shows during that and the succeeding reign. In 1619 he was made poet laureate; the reign. In 1049 he was made poet naticacy the salary of which, during his term of office, was raised from a hundred marks to as many pounds, with a butt of Canary wine. In 1617 the University of Oxford conferred on him the degree of M.A. Notwithstanding his pension and the profits of his plays, he was generally poor, and was frequently relieved by the king's bounty. He was buried in Westmuster Abbey; on his gravestone is the following inscription:— "O rare Hen Jonson."

Mr. Gifford's edition of his works is the best, on account of the rich store of clucidatory notes which it contains. B. at Westminster, 1574; D. 1637.

"Holy Family" by him in the National Gallery, royal father. Shortly after this she retired to B. at Antwerp, 1594; D. at the same place, JORDAN, Thomas, jor'-dan, a dramatic writer in the reign of Charles I. He wrote two comedies and a masque, mentioned by Langbaine with respect. Jordan, Sir Joseph, a gallant English admiral, who, by his presence of mind and valour, gained the battle of Solebay, in 1672. The advantage was long on the side of the Dutch fleet, the English being overpowered by numbers; but Sir Joseph dashed into the midst of the enemy, and throwing them into confusion, the fortune of the day was reversed, and the Eng-

Jordan, John Christopher, an antiquary, was privy conneillor to the king of Bohemia. He wrote several chronological works, and annotated some of the audent historians. p. 1749.

Jordan, Charles Stephen, yor'-dan, a Prussian writer, of French origin, became vice-president of the Academy of Sciences at Berlin. Frederick the Great caused a monument to be creeted to his memory with this inscription: "Here lies JORDAN, the friend of the muses and of the king." That monarch also composed a culogy upon him, in which he bestowed a great encomium upon his talents and virtues. He wrote, "Travels in France, England, and Holiand, with Satirical Ancedotes;" a "Miscellany of Liferature, Philosophy, and History," and the "Life of De la Croze." n. at Berlin, 1790; p.

"Lite of Do is Croze." B. at Levin, 1730 f. at the same place, 1746, Johnn, Dorothea, or Dorothy Bland
(Jordan being only an assumed name), jor-dan, an actress, and mistress of the duke of Clarence, afterwards William IV., made her theatrical début on the Dublin stage, in 1777, in the part of Phabe, in "As You Like It." In the following season she appeared at Cork, where she was much admired for her archness and sportive much admired for her archness and sportive simplicity. In 1782 she went to England, and first appeared at the Leeds Theatre as Calista, in "The Fair Penitent." From Leeds she pro-ceeded to York, where she first played under the name of Mrs. Jordan, by which, though nover married, she was subsequently known. In 1785 she made her first appearance before a London andience at Drury Lane, as Peggs in "The Country Girl," and immediately became and a decided fearwrite that her salars was such a decided favourite, that her salary was doubled, and she was allowed two benefits. At the close of the season, she made a provincial tour, and visited nearly all the large towns in England, everywhere receiving the most enthusiastic welcome. When the duke of Clarence first made overtures to her, she was the mistress of a Mr. Ford; who refused to make her his wife, through fear of offending his father. Mrs. Jordan then entered into that connexion with the duke, which continued in an almost uninterrupted state of domestic harmony, until it was suddenly broken off in 1811. She was the mother of 10 children by his royal highness. A yearly allowance of £1100 was settled on her for the maintenance of herself and daughters; with a provision that if Mrs. Jordan should resume her profession, the care of the duke's four daughters, together with £1500 per annum allowed for them, should revert to his royal highness. In a few months afterwards she expressed a wish to return to the stage; and the four children, with the specified allowance for their maintenance, were surrendered to their royal father. Shortry after this she retured to France, under circumstances of great embarrassment. She gradually sank under the weight of ner afflictions; and, in a state of extreme mental misery, died at St. Cloud, July 3, 1816. B. at Waterford about 1762. Hazilit, speaking of Mrs. Jordan's attractions on the stage, says: "Her face, her tones, her manner, were irre-sistible. Her smile had the effect of sunshine, and her laugh did one good to hear it. Her voice was cloquence itself; it seemed as if her heart was always at her mouth. She was all gaiety, openness, and good-nature. She rioted in her fine animal spirits, and gave more plea-sure than any other actress, because she had the greatest spirit of enjoyment in herself." The last surviving daughter of Mrs. Jordan and William IV. was Lady Augusta Gordon Hally-burton, who died at Hallyburton House, Cupar-Angus, Scotland, at the age of 62, in 1865. Sinc-held for some years the post of state house keeper at Kensington Palace.

JORDAN, Camille, zhor'-di, a brave French-man, who was one of the leaders in the rising of Lyons during the Reign of Terror. He was exiled. but subsequently returned to France, where he wrote several valuable works on religious and political questions. p. at Lyons, 1771; p. 1821.

JORDANO, Luca. (See Giordano.)
JORDEN, Edward, jor-den, an English physician, who took his doctor's degree at Padua, and afterwards settled in London, whence he removed to Bath. He wrote "A Brief Discourse removed to Bath. He wrote "A Brief Discourse of a Discase called the Sufficiation of the Mother," and "Discourse of Natural Baths and Mineral Waters." B. in Kent, 1569; D. at Bath, 1633.

JORGENSON, Jorgen, yor -gen-sone, a Dane, who, for a time, usurped the protectorship of Iceland. He was the son of a watchmaker, and is said to have served as midshipman in the is said to have served as midshipman in the English navy during his early years. In 1809 he sailed in an English ship to Iceland, and forthwith proceeded, by proclamation and va-rious extraordinary measures, to assume the position of protector. After a life fall of adven-ture, he was at length confined in Newgato for ture, he was at length comment in Aewigace for robbling his lodgings, and, in 1923, was sent to New South Wales, dying, it is supposed, soon after his arrival. D. at Copenhagen, 1770. Johnandes, jor-nän'-dees, a Goth, who em-braced Christianity, and became bishop of Ravenna about 552. He wrote the "History of the Goths."

JOETTS, John, jor'-tin, an eminent English divine, who, while undergraduate of Jesus College, Cambridge, translated for Pope some of Eustathius's notes on Homer. In 1727, he of Eustahlus's notes on Homer. In '127' he published Latin poems, in 4to, under the titte of "Lusus Poetiel," which went through three editions. In 1730 he published four sermons on the truth of the Christian religion, and, the year following, "Miscelaneous Observations upon Authors, Andest and Modern." In 1734 appeared his "Romarks on Sponser's Poems, and on Milton." In 1731 he produced the first volume of his "Remarks on Ecclesia-tiell History," which he continued to 5 vols. His "Life of Erasmus" was published in 1758, in London, 1693: p. at the same place, 1770. B. in London, 1698; D. at the same place, 1770.

JOSEPH, Ben Gorion, jo-sef, a Jewish historian, whom the rabbins falsely confound with Josephus. He lived in the 5th century, and wrote, in Hebrew, a history of the Jews which bears evident marks of being an abridgment a Latin version by Gagnier, at Oxford, in 1706, and in Hebrew and Latin, at Gotha, in 1707.

JOSEPH OF PARIS, a famous Capuchin, commonly called Father Joseph, who was employed by Cardinal Richelieu in most of his political intrigues, Louis XIII. procured him a cardi-nal's hat, but he died of apoplexy before he nat's int, but he ded of appliexy before he received it, in 1639.

JOSHPH, FATHER, an apostate monk of Hungary, who, about 1678, headed a numerous bunditti, whom he called the people of God, assuming to himself the name of Joshua. He entered the Austrian dominions, where he comentered the Austran dominions, where he con-nitted dreadful outrages, burning churches, putting priests to death, and deilling nuns, under pretence of zeal for true religion. The motley crew were at last dispersed, on the sudden death of their leader.

Joseph I., twelfth emperor of Germany, of the house of Austria, was the son of the emperor Leopold I., and ascended the imperial throne on the death of his father in 1705. He engaged in his interests Savoy, England, and Holland against France, in support of the claim of the archduke Charles to the crown of Spain. In the war which ensued, the allies, under Eugene the war which ensued, the allies, under Eugene and Mariborough, were successful, gaining the britles of Ramilies, Oudcnarde, and Mariplauet. He made himself master of Italy, and levied contributions on Manta, Parma, Modena, Lucca, Genoe, and other places. His armies also defeated the revolted Hungarlans, headed by Prince Bagofski, who was forced to take refuge in Turkey. In the midst of these suc-cesses Joseph was taken off by the small-pox, in 1711.

Josuph II., emperor of Germany, was the son of Maria Theresa, queen of Hungary, and archduches of Austria, and Francis of Loraine. He was crowned king of the Romans in 164, and the year following became emperor. He and the year following became emperor. He carly displayed great talents and activity, by remodelling the army and reforming all the departments of government. He also travelled through his dominions, and visited Prussia, Italy, France, and Russia. Among other excellent regulations which be adomined. cellent regulations which he adopted, was the setting apart one day every week to receive petitions and to hear complaints. In 1780, on the death of his mother, he succeeded to the erown of Hungary and Bohemia. The year following he issued a decree in favour of the liberty of the press, which was followed by others equally liberal, particularly one of religious toleration; he also abolished the system of vassalage. This measure was followed by an imperial edict, disclaiming all secular subjection to the court of Rome, the suppression of or the course of Robbs, the suppression of many monasteries, and the regulation of others. On this occasion Pope Pius VI. made a journey to Vienna, to induce the emperor to after his designs; but, though pompously received, he was completely unsuccessful. In 1786 the wis completely unsuccessful. In 1786 the princes at Ratiston, in which it was resolved to withdraw from the jurisdiction of the authority by an assembly of the ecclesiastical quities of the Jews," in which it is supposed are princes at Ratisbon, in which it was resolved some interpolations by modern transcribers, to withdraw from the jurisdiction of the proper in 1886 acclearation of var was issued saviour. He wrote likewise two books in deagainst the Turks, and the same year the ence of the Jews against Apion, and his own emperor in person reduced Schabatz: but this life, n. at Jerusalem, A.D. 37; n. at Rome, blondly buttle was fought between the Imperialists and the Turks, on the heights of flunds, e-cs-ka, a distinguished Illudania, in which neither could claim the Austrian army, and taking part in the campaign 576 of Josephus's larger work. It was published in victory. Joseph next made an attempt to posvictory. Joseph next made an accompt to pos-sess himself of Belgrade, but without success. Marshal Laudohn, however, assumed the com-mand of the army, took Dubieza and Novi, and, in 1789, reduced Belgrade. Soon after, a peace was concluded, chiefly occasioned by the peace was contented, emeily occasioned by the discontented spirit in Germany, at such a waste of men and trensure. Joseph was succeeded by his brollen, Peter Leopold, grand-duke of Tuscany, n. 1741, p. 1790.

JOSEPH EMAUUEL, king of Portugal, was son and successor of Charles V., and ascended the and successor to Charles v, and ascended the throne in 1750. The great earthquake at Lisbon, in 1755, and the expulsion of the Jesuits from the kingdom in 1759, were the principal events of this rolen, during which Joseph was assisted by his clever minister the marquis de Pombal. Learning was encouraged, commerce and in-dustry received a fresh impulse, and the power of the Inquisition was diminished. B. 1715; D.

jo'-sc-feen, empress of France, OSEPHINE, s the daughter of Count Tascher de la Pagerie, and was married, at the age of 15 years, to the viscount de Beanharnais, by whom she had two children,—Eugene and Hortense de Beauharnais, After her husband had fallen by the guillotine, she was herself imprisoned, but was released through the intervention of Tallien. She was subsequently introduced to General became her husband in 1796. She shared the high destinies of her husband, ascended the throne with him, and received the title of empress, in which dignity she gained universal attachment; but, being childless, Napoleon divorced her. Josephine retired to Malmaison in 1809, where she died in 1814, soon after the fall of the emperor. B. at the island of Martinique, 1763. JOSEPHUS, Flavius, jo-se'-fus, a Jewish historian, who came of distinguished ancestors, and received a liberal education among the Pharisees, after which he went to Rome, where he cultivated his talents to great advantage. On returning to his own country, he commanded the troops employed to defend Jotapata against Vespasian and Titus, and maintained the place bravely during seven weeks. Vespasian took Dravely during seven weeks. Vespeasan cos-him into his favour, and he was held in great esteem by Titus, whom he accompanied to the stege of Jerusalem, at the taking of which, Titus told him to ask for anything he wished. Ite requested that the sacred books might be given to him, and that the lives of his brother and flity of his friends might be spared. When Vespasian became emperor, he gave Josephus a palace, with a pension, the freedom of the city, and a grant of lands in Judea. Titus added to and a grant of lands in Judne. Titus added to these favours, and Josephus, out of gratitude, assumed the name of Flavius. During his resi-dence at Rome he wrote his "History of the Wars of the Jows," first in Syrinc, and after-wards in Greck. Its style approaches nearest to that of Livy. He also wrote the "Anti-quities of the Jows," in which it is supposed are some htempletime, by modern, theseculors.

Josephus.

Keats, John.

JOSEPHINE (EMPRESS OF FRANCE).

JUXON, ARCHBISHOP.

Kember, John Philip.

Josquin

of 1814-15, retired, in 1816, to his estate in sucd with such success, that the office of adjuterature. He wrote "Abafi," a national and such secretary of the School of Oriental Lanistorical tule; "The Last Batori," "The Bohemian in Hungary," "Zrinyi the Poet," "Biographic luiverselle," and other extensive and "Stephen Josika." He also translated in publications; and author of "La Perse, on Hungarian the English novel, "A Marriage in Tableau de l'Histoire, du Gouvernement, de la High Life." After the revolution in Hungary, Religion, de la Litterature, &c., dec et Campire;" in 1818, he resided at Brussels. B. at Torda,

In 1815, no restated at Britisets. B. at Toran, Transylvania, 1796; D. 1865. Josepur, Deprez, zho'-quene, a native of Bel-gium, an ecclesiastic, and called the father of grain, an economical and cancer the father of modern harmony, from his great ability as a composer, was a singer in the pontifical chapel in the time of Sixtus IV., but afterwards went to France, and was appointed chapel-master to Louis XII. The king having promised Josquin a benefice, but forgetting to give it, the chapel-master, on being commanded to compose a march, chose a portion of the 119th Psalm, "Memor esto verbi tui servo tuo," the setting of which was greatly admired by the king, who soon after granted Josquin's petition; on which the latter composed a hymn of thanksgiving from the same Psalm, "Bonitatem feelsti cum servo tuo, Domine." He was a giant among the musicians of his time, and was universally esteemed. B. about 1450; the date of his death is unknown.

JOUBERT, Laurence, zhoo'-bair, physician to Henry III., king of France. On the death of Rondelet, in 1562, he became regius professor of physic at Montpellier. B. 1529; D. 1583.

on payse at Montpellier. B. 1529; p. 1583.
JOHERT, Bartholomew Catherine, a French republican general, who was educated for the law, but quitted it for the army, and in 1789 commenced his military course as a greenadier, and rose by degrees to the rank of general. He was segend in commond to Democratic Me. was second in command to Bonaparte in the conquest of Italy, and signalized himself at Millesimo, Montebaldo, and Rivoli, and in the Tyrol. He was opposed to General Suwarrow, but was slain at the battle of Novi, in 1790, at a time when the Directory was about to offer him the supreme power. B. 1769.

JOUFFROY, Marquis de, zhoo'froi, who dis-putes with Fulton and others the honour of having been the first to apply steam to the purposes of navigation, made his first attempt on the Doubs in 1776, and renewed it with more su cess on the Saone in 1783; but failed to carry it out, through want of means and support. He was equally unsuccessful at Paris in 1816: but the Academy of Sciences acknowledged his claim to the discovery in 1840; a distinction with which, whether merited or otherwise, he could not full to be gratified. B. in Franche-Comté, 1751; D. 1832. Journov, Theodore, a distinguished writer on philosophical subjects, and professor of philosophy at Paris, was the author of numerous orisophy at Fairs, which are in great repute for clearness and depth, and elso translated into French the writings of Reid and Dugald Stewart. His "Cours du Droit Nature!" is an excellent work, and deserving of attentive perusal. p. 1796; p. 1842.

JOURDAIN, Amable Louis Michel Brechillet. zhoor'-duin, a distinguished orientalist, was the son of a surgeon-dentist at Paris. He was designed for the law, but hearing the splendid eulogies bestowed on Anquetil du Perron, the orientalist, he determined on cultivating the same branches of learning for which that scholar had been distinguished. This he pur-

Rolligion, de la Littérature, &c., de cet Empire; besides some others. n. 1788; p. 1818.

JOURDAN, Jean-Baptiste, zhoor'-dd, marshal of France, served in the war of American of France, served in the war of American independence at the age of 16 years, and in 1731 was appointed to the command of a battalin of volunteers. He fought under Dumourier in Belgrium, and became a general of division in 1738. He greatly distinguished himself at the battle of Hondschoote, and two days afterwards are according to the comment of the was named general-in-chief, but was deprived of his command by the Committee of Public Safety. Subsequently he was placed at the head of the army of the Moselle. He took Durant and Charleroi, and gained the celebrated battle of Fleurus, in 1794. Opposed by the Archduke Charles, he crossed the Rhine a second time; but, being defeated, was superseded in 1790. Named a member of the Council of Five Hun-dred, he proposed the law of conscription. dred, he proposed the naw of consentation, as sincere republican, he opposed the usurpation of Bonaparte, and, after the 18th Brumaire, was excluded from the Legislative Corps. He was, bowever, nominated by Napoleon marshal of France in 1804; but he was never again employed in any important capacity. He accompanied Joseph Bonaparte to Spain, in command of the 7th military corps. B. at Limoges, 1762; p. in Paris, 1833.

Jousse, Daniel, choosee, a French lawyer, who

Jesuit, who published an apology, in which he defended Chastel, who attempted to assassinate Henry IV., and called him a martyr. He continued the "History of the Jesuits," and wrote some other works. B. at Paris, 1643; D. at Rome, 1719.

JOUVENET, Jean, shoore'-nai, a French painter, was descended from an Italian family of that profession. His first instructions were derived from his father, but he improved him-self under Le Brun. He passed through all the offices of the Academy, and became one of the perpetual rectors. B. at Rouen, 1644; p. 1717.

Joux, Joseph Etienno de, 2800-01, a facile and graceful writer, served in the French army in America and India, and took part in the first campaign of the Revolution. But he soon abandoned the sword for the pen; and ross to great popularity by his vaudevilles and the librettes which he wrote for Spontini, Chera-bini, and Rossini. He was also distinguished as a political writer; but is best known in England by his amusing and satirical work called the "Hermit of the Chaussée d'Antin," called the "Hermit of the Chaussee d'Anta," translated into English many years aga. In 1879, Louis Philippe appointed him librarian at the Louvre. B. 1764; p. 1846.

SOVILLANOS, Don Gaspar Melebior de, yould and the control of the acquired, while at college, an extensive know-ledge of jurisprudence, his more especial object, but also made great progress in archmology, languages, and the belies lettres. He became a member of the criminal branch of the audiencia memoer of the criminal branch of the authority in Seville; and advancing rapidly in his profes-sional career, was appointed to the dignified station of member of the council of the military orders at Madrid. About the same time he was orders as matrix. About one same affairs, and nominated counsellor of state, by Charles III. When, in 1994, Spain found herself loaded with debt, Joyellanes proposed, for the relief of the national difficulties, a tax on the property of the higher order of the clergy; for which he was exiled to the mountains of Asturias, though his project was afterwards carried into execution. In 1799 he was recalled, and made minister of justice for the interior; but before twelve months had passed, he was dismissed, and banished to the island of Majorca, where he was confined in the convent of the Carthusians. After the fall of Godoy, the Prince of Peace, in 1808, he recovered Goody, the Prince of Peace, in 1808, he recovered this Hberty, and subsequently became a member of the Supreme Junta. He was, however, suspected of favouring the French; and at length, being denounced as a traitor for endeavouring being denounced as a tratter for endeavouring to promote their plans for the subipgration of Spain, he was put to death in 1812, during a popular insurrection. p. 1744. He wrote "Lyric Poems;" "Polayo," a tragedy; "The Honourable Delinquent," a comedy; several works on subjects commetced with political converse of the property of th nomy; and translated Milton's "Paradise Lost

Lost."

JOYLANUS, Flavius Claudius, jo-ve-ai'-nus, a Roman emperor, was elected by the Roman soldiers, after the death of Julian, but refused the dignity unless they turned Christians, to which they consented. He made a disadvantageous peace with Persis, abut up the heathen temples, and recalled the banished clergy. He disadvanced the company of the control of t died, after reigning seven months, owing to the sufficiently vapour of burning charcoal in his room, 364. p. 331.

JOVINIAN, jo-vin'-i-an, a monk of Milan in the 4th century, who, after leading a life of great austerity, debauched a number of women, and procured many disciples. He held that the body of our Saviour was not real flesh, but a phan-tom, and that it was lawful to indulge in sensual pleasures, with other tenets equally offensive to good morals; on which account the emperor Honorius ordered him and his followers to be scourged and banished. He wrote several books, which were refuted by Jerome. D. in Dalmatia. 406.

Joyrus, Paul, jo'-vi-us, an eminent historian of the 16th century, who received a pension from Francis I, king of France, and Clement VII. gave him the bishopric of Nocera, which vil. gave min the bisnopric of Nocera, which disprised by his ourse of life. His greatest work is a "History of his Own Time," in folio.—He also wrote the "Lives of Illustrious Men." n. at Como, 1488; n. at Florence, 1552. His brother Benedict wrote the "History of Switzerland."

Jowert, Rev. Benjamin, M.A., jou'-et, Regius professor of Greek in (xford university, was educated at St. Paul's school, and was elected to a scholarship in Bulliol college, Ox. ford, in 1835, and to a fellowship in 1838. In 1855 he was appointed to the Regius professorship on the recommendation of Lord Palmerston. Professor Jowett wrote a "Commentary on the Enistics of Paul to the Thessalonians, Galatians, and Romans," and subsequently contributed an "Essay on the Interpretation of Scripture" to the well-known volume entitled "Essays and the well-known volume entitled "Essays and Reviews," in comexion with which his name made a great noise. B. 1817.

Joy, Right Hon. Henry, an eminent Frish judge, was called to the bar in 1783, and after acquiring great fame as a counsel, filled the office of attorney-general, and in 1831 succeeded Lord Guillanore as chief baron. Among the "sayings" of Lord Norbury, the following is related:—Being once requested by Mr. Hope, an attorney, to wait a few minutes for Mr. Joy, the leading commel in a risis wine case just called. leading counsel in a nisi prius case just called, his lordship did so until his small stock of mis lordship and so until his small stock of patience was exhausted; and, then, exclaiming "Hope told a flattering tale, that Joy would soon return," ordered the next case in rotation soon return," ordered the nest case in rotation to be proceeded with. B. 1767; D. 1832. Joros, Jeremiah, joice, an ingenious and industrious writer, who was by profession a dis-senting minister, first attracted public notice as one of the persons included in the state prosecu-tion with Hardy, Horne Tooke, Thelwall, and others for treason. He was the coadjutor of Dr. Gregory in the compilation of his "Cyclo-Dr. Gregory in the compnation of ms "cyclo-pædia," and subsequently produced another on a similar plan, which goes by the name of Nicholson. He was also the author of "Scien-tific Dialogues," "Dialogues on Chemistry." "Letters on Natural Philosophy," &c. B. 1761; D. 1816

JOEUSE, Anne de, zhwoi-e-(r)se, a French duke, favourite of Henry III., and admiral of France, who distinguished himself by many gallant exploits. He was killed in an expedition against the Huguenots in 1557. B. in France.

1861.

JOXYER, William, joi'-uer, otherwise Lyde, became fellow of Magralen College, but, on turning Roman Catholic, west abroad. He returned at the Restoration, and retired to a village in Buckinghamshire, where he led a life of devotion. He wrote the "Roman Empress," a cemedy, 1879; "beservations on the Life of Cardinal Pole," and "Miscellaneous Poems, baglish and Latin." n. at Oxford, 1822; n. 1706.

JUAN, Don, a natural son of Philip IV. of Spatin, and of Maria Calderona, an actress, was made grand prior of Castille; commanded the Spanish and of Maria Canderona, an accress, was made grand prior of Castile; commanded the Spanish army in Italy in 1647, and took the city of Naples; subjugated Barcelona in 1652, but being afterwards unsuccessful, was exiled, Under Charles II. he was recalled to Madrid, and made prime minister. n. 1629; p. 1679.

JUAN Y SANTACILIA, Don George, juan e santa-seel-ya, a learned Spanish mathematician and navalofficer, whose progress in mathematics was so great that, while a student in Cartha-gena, he obtained the appellation of Euclid; and, entering the naval service early, his repu-tation as a scientific man occasioned his appointment, with Antonio de Ulloa, to accompany Bouguer and Condamine to Peru, in 1735, to measure a degree of the meridian at the equator. He afterwards directed much of his attention to marine architecture, and his exertions to inprove the Spanish navy were highly successful. He published his "Observations on Astronomy and Physics, made in Peru," and treatises on navigation and ship-building. B. 1712; D. 1774.

JULEEZ, Benito, ju-ar'-ez, a Mexican, whose ancestors belonged to one of the many Indian tribes of Mexico, born near Oaxea, in 1802, at the village of Ixtlan. After filling various offices, he became governor of Caxaca from 1848 till 1852, when he was banished by Santa Anna.

Joining in the insurrection which overthrew and accomplishments were very great, on which SantaAnna's government in 1555, belocame first accounts she was her father's favourite, till be minister of justice, then secretary of state and licentious conduct allenated his affections. She minister of justice, then secretary of state and president of the high court of justice, and finally president of the republic in 1858. A protracted civil war ensued, but ultimately the French entered Mexico, caused Juarezto withdraw from the capital, and placed the Austrian archduke Maximilian on the throne, after proclaiming the empire. On the withdrawal of the French troops in 1866, Juarez, who had used every means to resist foreign invasion, renewed his attempts against the government of Maximilian, and having captured this unfortunate prince, by the aid of treachery, at Queretaro, in 1867, ordered him to be shot. On his return to power, he put to death hundreds of his opponents.

JUEL, Nicholas, joo'-al, a Danish admiral,

JUEL, Nicholas, joo'-al, a Danish admiral, who received his professional training in the Dutch navy under Van Tromp and De Ruyter. He then returned to Demmark; and, in 1689, greatly distinguished himself at the siege of Copenhagen. He captured Gothland in 1676, and again, in 1677, he defeated the Sweder sweet engagements. He was a brave and callent of figure and was a way a stranger.

severate engagements. He was a first and gallant officer, and was as much esteemed for his modesty as for his naval skill. D. 1697.

JURETHA, ju-quu'-tha, the illegitimate son of Manastabal, the brother of Micipsa. Micipsa and Manastabal were the sons of Massinissa, king of Numidia. Micipsa, who had inherited hing of Admidia. Sheljsa, who had interted his father's kingdom, educated his nephew with his two sons, Adherbal and Hiempsal; but, as Jugurtha was of an aspiring disposition, he sent lim with a body of troops to the assistance of Sciplo, who was besieging Numantia, hoping to lose a youth whose ambition seemed to threaten the tranquillity of his children. His designs were the tranquinity of in scatteria. This designs were and active, and endeared himself to the Roman general. Micipsa appointed him successor to his kingdom with his two sons; but the kindness of the father proved fatal to the children. Jugurtha

Adherbal, but Jugurtha's gold prevailed among the senators. Cæcilius Metellus was at last sent against Jugurtha, and his firmness soon obliged him to fly among his savage neighbours onigen min to hy among in savage neighbours for support. Marius and Sylla succeeded Me-tellus, and fought with equal success. Jugurtha was at last betrayed by his father-in-law, Boc-chus, and was delivered into the hands of Sylla, after a war of five years. He was exposed to the view of the Roman people, and dragged in chains to adorn the triumph of Marius. He was afterwards put in a prison, where he died six days after of hunger, 106 B.C.

Juigne Broissiniere, De, sieur de Molière zhween brois-sin'-c-air, a French gentleman, and an advocate in parliament, who wrote, in 1947, a "Theological, Historical, Poetical, and Chronological Dictionary."

Julia, ju'-li-a, a virgin martyr of Carthage. When that place was taken by Genserie, she

Julia, the daughter of Casar and Cornelia, was one of the most virtuous of the Roman ladies. She married first Cornelius Capio, and was successively the wife of Marcellus, Agrippa, and Tiberius. Augustus sent her into banish-ment, and when Tiberius came to the throne, he suffered her to perish of want. She had a daughter of the same name, who was as vicious as her mother.

Julia Domna, a native of Syria, and the wife of Severus, emperor of Home, was a woman of great accomplishments, and well acquainted with philosophy and the sciences. On the death of Severus, her sons Caracalla and Geta succeeded to the imperial throne; the latter of whom was murdered by his brother in the arms of his mother, who was wounded in de-fending him. After the death of Caracalla, she s said to have starved herself to death on findng that Macrinus had assumed the imperial title, 217.

JULIAN, Sr., archbishop of Toledo, ju'-li-an, was a man of learning and picty. He wrote a treatise against the Jews. D. 690.

JULIAN, Cardinal, was deputed by Pope Eugene IV. to counsel Ladislas, king of Hungary to break the peace concluded with Amarath II. A long and disastrous war was the result, during which the Christian army was in the reign of Edward III., who assumed the prophetical character. She was the author of a singular book, entitled, "Sixteen Revelations of Divine Love, showed to a Devout Servant of our Lord, called Mother Juliana, an Anchoret of Norwich, who lived in the days of King Edward III.," published by F. R. S. Cressy, 1610. She led a life of remarkable austerity, immuring herself between four walls during many years.

JULINUS, Flavius Claudius, ju'-li-ain-us, emperor of Rome, surnamed "the Apostate," was peror of Home, surnamed "the Apostate," was the younger son of Julius Constantius, brother of Constantine the Great. In the massarer of his family by the sons of Constantine, he and his brother Gallus narrowly escaped. The two princes were educated in the principles of Christianity, under Mardonius, a learned cunuch, but with different effects; for, though Gallus pos-

sent to Athens at the age of twenty-four, he evinced this disposition by his application to evined this disposition of his application of astrology, marie, and other illusions. He attached himself particularly to a philosopher named Maximus, who flattered his ambition by promising him the empire. He commanded promising him the empire. He commanded with reputation in Gaul during the reign of Constantins, who, jealous of his success and popularity, recalled him. This gave so much effect to his soldiers, that they proclaimed him emperor, and, on the death of Constantins, in 301, he found himself in full possession of the When that place was taken by Genserie, she imperial throne. He afterwards marched to the was sold to a heathen merchant, and carried East, where his title was recognised as readily into Syria. Refusing to take part in some of his it had been in the West. He then threw off the festivals instituted in honour of the female the mask, publicly renounced Christianity, and deities, she was put to death about 440. opened the temples of the gods, in which he offered sacrifices; on this account he is called the Apostate. Soon after his accession, he resolved to chastise the Persians, who had freafterwards Pompey. D. about 53 n.c. quently made inroads on the empire in the pre-Julia, the daughter of Augustus. Her beauty ceding reigns. When he crossed the Tigris, he burned his ships, that his soldiers might pro-ceed with firmness and resolution. On his re-theories. He is ranked by Leibnitz as the equal turn, after marching through Assyria without of Copernieus and Gallice, and as little interior opposition, his army encountered that of Sapor, king of Persia, and Julian was mortally wounded. Theodoret asserts that he took some of the blood from his wound, and, casting it towards heaven, exclaimed, "Thou hast conquered, Galilean" a story which is hardly credible. Julian was virtuous and modest in his manners, and liberal in his disposition. He abolished the luxurious and indecent practices of the court of Constantinople, and was averse to public amusements. His "History of the Commercial Cassars' is the most colorated of inswirings, though it is very partial. His own lite has been many times written, but on no occasion so well as by Gibbon, in the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," B, at Constantinople, 331; D. 363.

JULIEN, Pierre, zhoo'-le-ain, a distinguished French sculptor, many of whose productions adorn the metropolis of France and whose chefd'auvre is "The Dying Gladiator." B. 1731; D. 1804.

JULIUS I., ju'-li-us, pope and saint of the Roman calendar, succeeded Marcus in 337. He strenuously supported the cause of Athanasius, and was a man of great learning and piety.

Julius II. (Julian della Rovere) succeeded Pope Pius III. in 1503. Sixtus IV., his uncle, made him cardinal and commander of his troops, a post which suited his enterprising genius. The emperor Maximilian, with the genius. The emperor Maximilian, with the kings of France and Aragon, endeavoured to de-pose him; but he frustrated their design, and formed an alliance with them at Cambrai in 1508. He then demanded from the Venetians the territories of Faenza and Rimini, which had been originally taken from them by Alexander VI., and on the death of that pontiff recovered v. in an on the death of that pointh recovered by the Venetians, who, for refusing Julius's unjust claim, were put under an interdiet. At last, being reduced to the greatest extremities, the state of Venice was obliged to submit. The pope then turned his arms against France, and besieged La Mirandola, which he entered in triumph in 1511; but, fortune turning, he was driven to Rome, and the council of Pisa declared him suspended. He was the patron of Michael Angelo, Raphael, and Bramante. D. 1513.

JULIUS III., an Italian, obtained the tiara in succession to Paul III. in 1550. He had formerly presided at the council of Trent under Paul 111. and, on being elected to the papacy, joined the emperor against Octavius Farnese, duke of

Parma. B. 1487; D. 1555.

JUNCTIN, or GIUNTINO, Francis, joon-le'-no, n mathematician of Florence, was for some time a Carmelite, but quitted his order, went to France, and abjured the Roman Catholic reli-gion. He became a corrector of the press, and gion. He became a corrector of the press, and differwards a manufacturer of paper and a banker, by which means he gained a large fortune. He wrote some arithmetical works, commentaries on the Sphere of Sacrobosco, on the Reformation of the Calendar, and on the Age of the Loves of Petrarch. D. about 1859.

JUNGE, Josehim, yoong, a philosopher of the 17th century, who distinguished himself by his opposition to the Aristotelian philosophy, and, Like his famous contemporary, Bacon, substi-5.30 to Descartes. Among other works he wrote "Geometria Empirica," "Doxoscopia Physica Minores," and "Isagoge Phytoscope," from the latter of which it is believed that Linneus and Ray derived some useful hints, B. at Luand they derived some useful films. B. at Lu-beck, 1587; D.1657. Juna, ju-ni-a, a nicee of Calo of Utica, who married Cassius, and died sixty-four years after her husband had killed himself at the battle of Philippi.

JUNILIUS, St., ju-nil'-i-us, bishop of Africa, in the 6th century. He wrote two books on the Divine Law.

Junius, Adrian, ju'-ni-us, a learned Dutchman, who studied physic, and took his doctor's degree at Bologna, after which he went to England, where he wrote several works, particularly a Greek and Latin lexicon, which he dedicated to Edward VI. He afterwards returned to his own country, and practised physic. He wrote "Commentaries on various Latin Authors," "A Poem on the Marriage of Philip II., king of Spain, with Mary, Queen of England;" "Translatious from the Greek," &c, England "" translations from the Greek, &c. b. at Hoorn, 1512; b. 1515.

Junius, Francis, professor of divinity at Leyden. He studied at Geneva, and, in 1505, became minister of the Walloon church at Antwerp, and afterwards chaplain to the prince of Orange; at last, he was made theological professor at Leyden. He is chiefly known by a Latin version of the Bible, with notes, in which he was assisted by Tremellius. B. 1545; p. at Leyden, 1602, Leyden, 1602.

JUNIUS, Francis, son of the preceding, in 1620 visited England, and was taken into the family of Thomas, earl of Arundel. There he studied the northern languages, in which he attained to considerable proficiency. He left a valuable collection of MSS, to the library of Control was the Highlighton, 1504, not Window. Oxford. B. at Heidelberg, 1589; D. at Windsor.

1678.

JUNIUS BRUTUS. (See BRITUS, L. Junius.)
JUNIUS BRUTUS. (See BRITUS, L. Junius.)
JUNIUS, Andocho, duke of Abrantes, zhoe'no, a French general, entered the army as a volunteer during the Revolution, and attracted the attantion of Bonaparte at the siege of Prolou, in 1783. This was the origin of his fortune. he was appointed aide-de-camp, and went with the army to Egypt, where he so greatly dis-tinguished himself that, on his return, he became general of division, and, in 1804, governor of Paris. In 1805 he was appointed ambassador to Lisbon, and two years afterwards assumed the command of the army sent into Portugal. Junot rapidly made himself master of that kingdom, and was created governor, with the title of duke of Abrantes, but the next year he was defeated at Vimiera by the duke of Wellington, and compelled to sign the capitulation of Cintra, and obliged to abandon his conquest. This reverse brought him under the conquest. This reverse brought and undertheless took part, in 1810, in the Spanish campaign, and inta of Russia in 1812, becoming governor of the Hlyrian provinces. His reason suddenly failing, he was compelled to return to France. n. in France, 1771; n. 1813.—His widow, a woman of great accomplishments, wrote some "Memoirs on the Empire," which are full of interest. D. 1839.

, joon'-tu, Philip and Bernard, Italian printers in the 15th and 16th centuries. They in the Environs of Paris," and was the author printed, at Lyons, the "Letters of Leo X. by of a book entitled "The Priend of Humanity, Benbo," and the works of Sante Paguno, or, the Advice of a Good Citizen to the Nation." and Florence. Phillip began printing at Geno, in 1497. D. about 5159. Bernard was either his brother or cousin. Phillip printed sentence was also a member of the Academy of Sciences on the Paris, and accompanded Condamine to Peru Canadam Authoritheast and accompanded Condamine to Peru 1735. He was not only a good naturalist and research and the properties of the Academy of Sciences. Eachern commins of Greek authors, as Pintarch, Xenophon, Aristophanes, Sophoeles, and Homer. Junya, Thomas, a Venetian physician, who published, in 1554, a learned book on the Battles of the Ancients.

JURIEU, Peter, zhoó-re-e(r), a French Protestant divine, was the son of Daniel Jurieu, pastor of the reformed church at Mer, in the diocese of Blois. His mother was sister to the famous Peter du Moulin. He received his education partly in Holland and partly in Eng-land, and while there received episcopal ordina-On his return home, he became assistant to his father, and professor of divinity and Hebrew at Sedan, where he gained great reputation by his lectures and preaching. He wrote against Hossnet's "Exposition of the Doctrine of the Catholic Church," and defended the moral character of his sect against the accusations of Arnauld. On the revocation of the Edict of Nantes he retired to Holland, and was chosen pastor of the Walloon church at Rotterdam. He there applied so assiduously to the study of the Revelation, as to fancy he had discovered most of the mysteries therein; and particularly with regard to Antichrist. He addressed William III., king of England, as the instrument appointed to destroy the kingdom of the beast. He embroiled himself in controversy with Bayle and others, who had objected to the extravagance of his opinions. Ilis chief works are, "The History of Calvinism and Popery, with a Parallel between them;" "Pastoral Letters," "On the Unity of the Church," "Treatise of Nature and Grace," and "Critical History of the Doctrines and Worship of the Church, and those of the Pagnas." B. at Mer, in France, 1937; b. at Botterdam, 1713. most of the mysteries therein; and particularly in France, 1637; D. at Rotterdam, 1713.

